WAKE UP, CHEER UP! BABSON SAYS, "FORGET '29, MAKE HAY"

By ROGER W. BABSON
Special to The Times

Babson Park, Fla., Feb. 21—I wish that readers of my column—and this includes some of my Republican friends—would quit writing me about "Good Old 1929." Ninety per cent of our businessmen, bankers, and investors can make a better record in 1941 if they first will take a damp cloth and wipe 1929 from the blackboard of memory. Ninety per cent of our employes, too, can to their welfare this year if they will quit hankering for the "Grand Old Times." Let us debunk the myth that the 1929 era was an economic heaven on earth, instead of just the opposite. That bedtime story is dangerous fiction because the fake glamour of 1929 still tempts some of us to underrate the expanding possibilities of 1941 and to overdiscount its potential opportunities. It is well to be realists, and today that means to be optimists.

Rip Van Winkle In Reverse

Suppose that some of these people who are neglecting 1941 in futile yearning for the "Good Old Days" could get their wish and wake up back in 1929. Their first feeling would be that the country had been blasted by a bombing raid. Hundreds of miles of today's sleek highways would be reduced to their original rocks or rutted mud. Every 1929 automobile—to anybody accustomed to the appearance and performance of today's models—would be a bunch of junk. Nobody of today could tolerate the ancient radios and phonographs.

In the agricultural regions, a Rip Van Winkle who fell asleep in 1941 and awoke in 1929 would be aghast at the loss of lightweight combines and tractors for the smaller farms. He would see farm equipment stripped of its rubber tires. Stores everywhere would be bare of today's beautiful new fabrics. Manufacturers in dozens of lines would be handicapped by lack of modern plastics and plywoods. Engineers' talents would be blighted without today's alloys.

Today's Unsurpassed Riches

The trouble is that when we think of the "Good Old Days," we see them through a rosy tint that blurs reality. We assume that we could go back to the free-and-easy ways and the get-rich-quickness of the '20's, and still have the new inventions, the modern comforts and the other novel riches which we now enjoy. It is human nature to glamorize the past and grumble at the present. Everybody, therefore, who is falling short of his best efforts today because of a vague, nostalgic longing to be back in 1929, may well take stock of current progress.

What glory of 1929, for instance, would compensate us for erasing the network of air transport routes, grounding our planes, and thereby slowing up traffic in passengers, mails, and express? The modern, compact, mechanized and insulated home makes the old-time cumbersome residence seem like a barn. Where is the woman today who willingly would surrender 1941 heating equipment, washing machines, and refrigerators? Who wants to give up air conditioning and streamline trains? Be sensible about present conditions.

Cure For Grouches

Any man or woman in business today who is gloomy and discontented because of illusions about former years is failing to face the facts. It is all too true that here-and-there somebody personally may not be so well off—but that is life. The country as a whole has achieved a progress that cannot be matched in all history. Population growth alone has given business concerns nine million new customers since 1929. Electric power production has risen to all-time heights. Taller charts are now needed to plot the fresh peaks being reared in output of petroleum, steel, and machine tools. Technology was never so triumphant and we see 1929 completely dwarfed by today's advances in invention and discovery. Hence, I say that the forgetting of 1929 is the first step in the go-getting of 1941. Now is the time to "make hay."

When we become realists and admit these truths, how many people—including Republicans—would really want to go back to the conditions of a decade ago? Even statistics show that the nation has got some worthwhile things from the increased national debt. May not our point of view be wrong and unnecessarily selfish and local, when we withhold wholeheartedly energy and enthusiasm today because of homesickness for a period that actually was one of the most cockeyed on record? Remember that for every adventurer who rode high and handsome in 1929, hundreds of preachers, teachers, and parents were heartbroken at the epidemic of irreligion and the collapse of character.

Novel Products, New Jobs

New industries, unknown in 1900, have made jobs for 12,000,000 people, and the future outlook is even brighter. In showing my copy for this column to a famous engineer, he said: "You have omitted many new things such as textiles made of glass, clothing made of skimmed milk, foods derived from grasses, not to mention heatless stoves and household appliances operated by radio. Cotton and other products of the farm will be used to produce paving blocks, building materials, and furniture of all kinds. Messages and music will be carried by simple light waves, while luxuries now purchasable by only the rich will be enjoyed by all."

If we must look back to 1929, at least we can heed its lesson. It taught us that the need of 1941 is a modernized viewpoint that is unselfish instead of personal, and national instead of local. This applies alike to defense efforts and to normal production. CONSIDER THE HUGE AMOUNT OF FUNDS AVAILABLE FOR INVESTMENT WHEN BUSINESSMEN SUDDENLY GET THIS NEW VIEWPOINT! THE MORE THOROUGHLY THIS SITUATION IS ANALYZED, THE MORE TREMENDOUS LOOM THE POSSIBILITIES. THE PEAKS OF A DOZEN YEARS AGO MAY COME TO LOOK LIKE FOOTHILLS. THOSE WHO FAIL TO DEVELOP THIS NEW VIEWPOINT IN TIME WILL SURELY SOMEDAY REGRET THIS ATTITUDE. (Copyright)

'Three-Day Measles' Outbreak Here In Schools

Several cases of German measles were reported this week in Prestonsburg, particularly in the schools. The following statement by Dr. Marvin Ransdell, director of the Floyd County Health Department, describes the disease, its symptoms and duration:

"French measles, Little Red Measles, Three-Day measles—all are a few of the different synonyms of German measles.

"The disease, an acute infectious one, occurs most often among children from five to 15 years of age, but adults and younger children are frequently attacked.

"The incubation period is usually about two weeks, but may be as short as five days. The prodromal symptoms may be absent or insignificant. When present they may consist of mild congestion of the eyes and nose, malaise, enlargement of the superficial lymph glands and slight fever, these lasting not more than 12 to 24 hours.

"The rash may appear without warning. It is not uncommon to find the child in the morning covered with the characteristic rash. This rash appears first upon the face and spreads rapidly over the entire body within a few hours or a day, and sometimes involves the soles and palms. Usually, the rash passes like a wave over the body, having almost faded from the face, neck and trunk by the time the extremities are involved. The rash reaches its greatest development everywhere by the second day, after which it fades with great rapidity. The total duration of the rash may not be over two to four days, and may be even shorter.

"During the eruptive stage the temperature may reach 101 to 102 degrees and usually falls suddenly about the second day of the rash.

"The complications are rare. Those oftenest seen are respiratory. A severe bronchitis has been seen and pneumonia may develop as a complication or sequel.

"Relapses seldom occur and recurrence is rare, one attack fully protecting from another. The prognosis is almost always good, but the literature reports a few virulent epidemics where the mortality rates have reached from 5 to 9 percent.

"The contagiousness of German measles and the fact that it is communicated to others before it is recognized renders prophylaxis exceedingly difficult. It is certainly not communicable for more than eight days after its onset and probably for not more than two or three days. All cases should be isolated on the appearance of the first symptoms and kept away from other children for a period of three or four days. The treatment is symptomatic."
