to do with the war effort, war contracts, or any other business affecting the United States government," he said.

It was an involved transaction. May and some others had, in his own words, "gone broke" trying to mine manganese in Greenbrier county, W. Va. Murray Garsson and Joseph Freeman, a fourth defendant, dismissed by the court on Wednesday, offered to buy the property and organize a new firm.

May said he signed three notes in April, 1941, on which Murray Garsson borrowed $10,000. Garsson and Freeman signed a document acknowledging that they were the real debtors, even though the money was borrowed over May's signature. Apparently this is a fairly common device in which May played the part of "accommodation maker" of the note.

May was to receive $7,500 to repay his prior losses in the company and the stockholders of the old company were to receive 48 per cent of the stock of the new company as part of the deal.
Thus, he contended, when Garsson paid off the two $2,500 notes in New York in June, 1942, he was simply paying back money which had been borrowed in May's name, but which Garsson had received originally. The other $5,000 note still is outstanding against May's name, but constitutes an obligation of Murray Garsson.

May identified all of the documents involved in the deal and his attorney, Wayne Magee, read them to the jury.
Similarly, May explained, the $2,500 check from Murray was part payment for his interest in the manganese mining venture.
This was as far as he got in answering the charges before Federal Judge Henry A. Schweinhart called a halt.

Earlier, he had gone into detail about himself and his career on examination by Magee. He told how he was appointed to the House Military Affairs Committee in 1931, served on no other committee and became its chairman in 1938.

MONDAY—Most of his testimony today was devoted to an attempt to refute the government's central allegation—that the Garssons set May up in business as the Cumberland Lumber Company, Whitesburg, Ky. The Garssons paid the bills, and Henry Garsson was the president, but the prosecution alleged that May held beneficial control of the 2,100-acre lumber tract.
"My principal reason for interesting myself in the matter was to aid Mr. Garsson to get lumber," May said. "Another interest was to get a lumber industry started in my district. Also, I was friendly with Mr. Fields and wanted to help him out. I understood he would get some sort of commission if the land was sold. I never drew any salary, never did draw any commission from the job."

May said his frequent use of "I" and "we" and "our" in reference to the lumber deal was in the capacity of agent for the Garssons.
Here are a few quotations from his letters to Leroy Fields or A. C. Brown, Whitesburg, who succeeded Fields as resident manager of the firm, and May's explanations:
The quote: "My idea is that if we determine we are certainly going to buy the property that we ought . . . to get to market as rapidly as possible."
The explanation: "I was speaking as agent for Henry Garsson and the idea was to get the lumber for war production as soon as possible."
The quote: "I am in a position to lose more money than anybody, as a matter of fact, I am the only one that is scheduled to lose if the job is not a success . . ."
The explanation: "The reason I wrote that was this: He (Fields) was lying down on the job. I wanted to make him think his friend was going to lose if it wasn't successful. Another was that I had induced Henry Garsson to buy and felt morally obligated and if he lost I'd feel responsible."
The quote: "Unless you get going I'm going to have to shut down the job. I can't afford to get broken up at my time of life . . ."
The explanation: "I was referring to the money put up by Henry Garsson. I did not then, never did, and don't now own any interest in Cumberland Lumber Company. I never had any agreement to give Fields any stock and he knew I didn't."
May said both Fields and Brown knew that Henry Garsson was the owner of Cumberland although both testified they had not known it, and although May, in explaining one of his statements, said he wanted Fields to think he, May, would lose if the job were a failure.

TUESDAY—Andrew J. May today said he posed as the owner of a Leitch county lumber firm because of alleged reluctance of residents to work for out-of-town employers.
"I hesitate to inject this answer into the case," he told Attorney Warren Magee, who was questioning him about his reasons for cloaking the Garssons' interest in the Cumberland Lumber Company, "but if it were known that an outside corporation, owned by people from Chicago who were Jews, was in control they couldn't have hired anybody. A man from right across the river in West Virginia couldn't get anyone and had to leave timber standing. I regret to say that, but it's a fact."
The situation was aggravated by the pressing labor shortage in the mountain district, where 35,000 men had gone to the armed forces and most of the remaining able-bodied men were in the mines, he said.
May's statement was the second reference to anti-Semitism by the defense. Charles J. Margiotti, counsel for the Garssons, claimed in opening arguments that anti-Jewish feeling in the Chicago Ordinance District office hampered the Garssons in their production effort and drove them to May for help.
May dwelt today on the effort he made to get the Garssons out of the lumber business without loss because he had recommended they invest in it. Both L. W. Fields and A. C. Brown, of Whitesburg, had been hired by May to run the mill profitably and both had failed, he said.
Further, Brown had asserted claim to an interest in the land, based on an alleged agreement with May, and blocked the sale to Virginia men for $50,000. So, in January, 1946, May wrote Attorney J. W. "Jack" Howard, Prestonsburg, former State Senator, instructing him to sue Brown for possession of the land and $8,000 profit Brown had deposited in his wife's account.
May identified the letter, in which he said:
"Not being financially interested in the company, my grievance is on the ground that I induced these men to put money in the property and it is my duty to help them get it out and when I was responsible for getting them in this mess by securing the wrong man for them I feel obligated to help get them out . . ."

"If he (Brown) claims I made certain promises or wrote a certain letter, he was dealing with me as an individual and not with the company (Cumberland) and furthermore, all that I said to him was contingent upon the acquisition by me and I of the property which we were never able to do . . ."
Suit was filed in federal court and dismissed when Brown bought the land, mill, and all assets of Cumberland for $40,000. Henry Garsson got this money.
In all, May identified a score of letters and documents relating to these transactions introduced to strengthen the defense theory that May acted only as the Garssons' agent, motivated solely to help the war effort.
May also denied statements of a prosecution witness that he was a participant in a Miami conference at which Murray Garsson and several others cut up the expected profits of a government contract for tent poles.
He attended the conference in an attorney's office, merely to pass the time while waiting to see an old friend who had offices in the building, he said. He paid no attention to the subject matter and was surprised when his son, Robert V. May, told him he, the son, had been given a contract for 50 per cent of the profits.
"I told him to have nothing to do with it," May said. "He said he'd already signed the contract but said he'd get it back."
It was testified earlier that young May withdrew from the deal.

youngsters are all down front, the very smallest in the first row of seats and so on back to the oldest in the seats farthest back. After the minister, pointer in hand, has told the story depicted by his drawings, pointing to each separate scene, he gives the youngsters a quiz. After seeing names and places and Biblical characters appear before them on the blackboard and almost come to life before their eyes, the children readily answer questions that would sorely test the Biblical knowledge of many of their elders.

From Sunday to Sunday, a small child is picked at random from the audience to go to the blackboard and explain the lesson. For example:

Sunday, May 11, the Bible lesson told of Elijah the prophet of God and the prophets of Baal. For that lesson the minister had sketched, in color, on the 4 by 8-foot blackboard these scenes: the Israelites bowing to the god of Baal; Elijah in the mountains, the ravens bringing him food; the top of Mount Carmel, the altar of Baal and the altar built by Elijah of 12 stones, and Elijah standing by his altar, arms uplifted in prayer and the fire falling on his flaming altar.

After the pastor had made his "illustrated lecture," he called on six-year-old Christine Whitaker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Whitaker. Unabashed, the little girl took the pointer and for the next five minutes explained every detail of the lesson, pointing out to the others each individual scene.

"It sounds almost unbelievable that a child that young could do this, but I have no doubt that there were 50 or more children there that day who could have done the same thing," the Reverend Durham said.

After the children have held the stage for 25 to 30 minutes, the various classes have their individual teaching period in separate classrooms. But, by and large, the Sunday School is what the pastor calls it—"the Sunday School of Childhood."

Emphasis on teaching of youngsters has paid off in results. The Reverend Durham attributes high interest in the Sunday School almost exclusively to the blackboard lessons and the prominent part the children play. When he went to David on Nellis, W. Va., in January, 1945, Sunday School attendance at David averaged 35. During the past winter, he said, the average attendance was 130. This in a town of around 500 population.

Besides his work as minister, Sunday School leader and Scoutmaster at David, the 36-year veteran of the pulpit is no mean shakes of a printer. With the tall, angular minister there came to David his printing press and fonts of type. On the press, which he has used for 20 years, the Reverend Durham publishes a weekly "Bulletin" for the church and the community. The publication of 700 (free) not only covers David to the saturation point but also extends to outlying territory, into Prestonsburg and several out-of-state cities.

Maybe the David Sunday School is different because its genial, soft-spoken leader is different.

ADVISES VETS ON INSURANCE

McKinney Points Out Settlement Options Veterans May Use

The Veterans Administration again this week urged veterans who have national service life insurance to give careful consideration to the settlement provisions of their policies.

Estel L. McKinney, of the VA office here, explained that the Insurance Act of 1946 opened a large field of new settlement options designed to provide for the various needs and circumstances of veterans' benefits.

The new optional settlements range from lump sum payments to monthly installments during the life of the first beneficiary. Under the original law, the only settlements authorized were monthly income and annuity payments.

If death occurs before the insured veteran has selected one of the optional settlements, the insurance is paid in 36 monthly installments to his beneficiary. Mr. McKinney said the beneficiary may elect to receive installments over a longer period. Under no circumstances, however, may a beneficiary receive a lump sum settlement unless the insured selected that type of option before he died.

One of the main advantages of the new settlement provisions, Mr. McKinney said, is that the veteran may now select a combination of payments. For instance, he may specify that a certain amount of his insurance be paid to the beneficiary in a lump sum at time of death and that the remainder be paid in monthly installments over a given period or during the lifetime of his beneficiary.

When electing a settlement option for G. I. insurance, the veteran should consider what his beneficiary's future circumstances may be, Mr. McKinney said.

Veterans who have allowed G. I. term insurance to lapse were reminded they can now reinstate their policies at little cost and minimum requirements.

Special distinction came to Edward D. Holbrook, Salyersville, last week when he was in Louisville attending the 30th anniversary of the Federal Land Bank of Louisville.

As secretary-treasurer of the Eastern Kentucky National Farm Loan Association, Holbrook was presented a new business achievement award for "being a quota-buster, that is, one of the few Kentucky secretary-treasurers who last year exceeded his quota for new business." In the picture (above) Holbrook is shown holding his award, presented by John A. Moore, vice-president and secretary of the bank. Shown with him is Noah Mann, of Ebon, who is a director of the association.

Mr. Holbrook is well-known in this county as a result of his years of farm loan work.

NOTICE TO VOTERS

June 3 is the last day of registration for voters who wish to vote in the primary election and who have not previously registered. Registration will be closed from above date until 10 days after said primary election.

I urge all persons qualified to vote to be sure you are registered, and you who have moved from one precinct to another since the last election to have your registration changed so that your names will not be purged.

Last year, a number of people had trouble voting since their names were not on the list, and since that time they have done nothing about it. Won't you please come in and register or give me your names, so I can get you straightened out?

KENTUCKY ON THE MARCH

By EWING GALLOWAY

Kentucky is probably the only state with two governmental agencies with the same objectives that co-operate not at all.

For a good many years the state Department of Agriculture and the Kentucky Experiment Station have been co-operating no better than if one were in Iceland and the other in Little America.

The result right now is that our Agriculture Department is little more than a name. Its appropriations have been curtailed for so long and so much of its work taken over by the Experiment Station that the general public, which includes most of the farming population, hardly knows it exists.

In reporting something the Committee for Kentucky's report on agriculture omitted, I am putting personal blame on nobody connected with either agency. Maybe all the work of the two agencies should have been consolidated and the Agriculture Department job taken over by the Experiment Station. That would have eliminated conflicting interests, particularly in pressure campaigns for funds every time the Legislature has to appropriate operating money.

Also it would have eliminated all the departmental jealousies that have helped to make co-operation next to impossible.

A state Senator told me recently that he believed the two agencies could be made to function together, and that a majority of the General Assembly was in favor of whatever legislation that may be needed to get the best results.

If the two departments could not work together, they should be consolidated, perhaps with the Experiment Station taking over.

The Experiment Station has one very important advantage. It is farther removed than the Department of Agriculture from the whims of politics, from changes in its higher personnel every four years.

The present set-up is bad. That we know. How to remedy it is something for a committee in the Assembly to find out and report upon, then for the Legislature to act upon. After enabling legislation is enacted, then it will be up to public officials of the right sort to do the rest. It can be done.

NEW 1947 CHEVROLET

600 M.P.H. AND.

ONLY THE BEGINNING!

This sleek, new craft is the P-84 Thunderjet. But—look quickly—it's on its way up! Once it leaves the runway, the sound of its engines begins to lag behind, and roaring jet power flashes it out of sight almost before your eyes can focus on its course. The Thunderjet gives you a fleeting look at the future.

Developed by the Army Air Forces, the Thunderjet is another step in the unceasing search for greater speeds in the air. The barrier separating man from speeds as fast as sound is mysterious and formidable—but the problem is being met with traditional ingenuity and competence.

The Army's work in the field of jet power benefits every American citizen in two ways. First, it helps keep our Nation a first-rate air power during this trying period of international readjustment. Second, it hastens the day when jet power will whisk civilian cargoes from Coast to Coast, from continent to continent, in a fraction of the present time and at a fraction of the present cost.

In these times of sweeping change, the entire new Regular Army is continuing to mould the shape of things to come. Today, in huge laboratories and testing stations all over the country, it is carrying on the work that keeps the nation strong. Science and industry join with the Army in many of the projects that eventually find their way into the uses of peacetime.

Many of America's finest young men are now a part of the new Regular Army. They are building their own futures while serving their country in these vitally important times.
