HISTORICAL SOCIETY ACQUIRES HARKINS LAW OFFICE PAPERS

The Harkins law offices papers, a vast accumulation of memorabilia of nearly a century, have been acquired by the Kentucky Historical Society, Frankfort.

The acquisition was negotiated by Col. George Chinn, of the Society, and Mrs. Iley B. Browning, of Henderson, daughter of the late Walter S. Harkins. The papers have been transferred for temporary storage to the Regional Library here where they will be sorted and evaluated for future microfilming by the Society.

The Harkins law office building, said to be the finest private office in the United States, was sold recently to a group here which will install insurance agency offices in it.

The Harkins law firm history begins with Hugh Harkins, pioneer founder of the family, but it was Walter S. Harkins, his grandson, who laid the basis for the firm's professional prominence. Hugh Harkins, an uncle, was for several years associated in the practice. Joseph D. Harkins and his sons continued the practice until a few years ago.

It will require several months to properly evaluate the papers, it is said.

GRADE, DRAIN CONTRACT LET

On East Ky. Toll Road; State Engineers Think Road To Open, Dec., '62

Grade and drain contracts on the entire 43 miles and surfacing contracts on three sections of the Eastern Kentucky Toll Road have been awarded, L. Felix Joyner, executive director of the Kentucky Turnpike Authority, reports.

Right-of-way acquisition by the Department of Highways is "substantially complete," Joyner said in a report to underwriters and holders of the $39 million in revenue bonds issued to pay for the toll road.

The report, which covers only the toll road section of the highway into the Mountains, said construction contracts awarded to date total $19,987,897. "Award of contracts for the remaining surfacing and incidental construction will occur in the early winter months of 1961," depending upon the rate of grading and draining, the report added.

It is estimated that the toll road, upon which work began last February, will be opened to traffic Dec. 1, 1962, with all construction completed by the following Jan. 1.

To expedite construction, contracts on three sections were awarded for surfacing as well as grading and draining. The report said this procedure permits a contractor to schedule his work so that surfacing can be started in advance of completion of grading and draining.

All grade and drain work is scheduled for completion by May 30, 1962, the report said.

Although advertising and award of contracts for grading, drainage and structures have progressed about two months ahead of the initial schedule, grading operations were impeded during the spring by snow and wet weather, the report pointed out. But it added that a dry summer and fall would enable the contractors to catch up on this work. Award of paving contracts this fall will permit contractors to stockpile materials this winter to meet requirements during peak surfacing operations, the report said.

Contracts for relocation of gas, electricity, telephone and other utility lines along the toll road route have been entered into by the Department of Highways with most of the companies affected, Joyner said.

SPORTS AFIELD

By TED KESTING

Bass won't take your lures unless they come close. Therefore it is most important for the angler to know where bass are located, says Jason Lucas, Angling Editor of Sports Afield Magazine.

Generally bass lie on the bottom or in the shade of surface plants. In the spring they are found in water from two to eight feet deep; largemouths usually stay in heavy weeds and smallmouths are more often found in open water. In the summer bass spend most daylight hours in water up to 25 feet deep. In the fall they move back to shallower water and are often found along shore lines.

What type of tackle to use for bass fishing depends on the individual. Spincasting is a favorite with anglers who fish seldom. It's easy to learn to use and to care for. The open, under-rod spinning reel necessitates only a little training. Casting tackle is the most efficient and pleasant to use for those who take their fishing seriously. When bass will take surface or shallow-running lures, fly tackle is the best.

The choice of lures depends upon what depth the bass are located and upon what seems to be their preference for the day. If you're doing no good with one type of lure, try something quite different.

The speed and action with which the angler retrieves his lure is far more important than the type of lure. A very slow, erratic retrieve will nearly always get more bass than a fast or even one.

In playing a bass the first principle is to set the hook securely in his mouth. Try to keep your rod roughly at right angles to the direction of the fish. The wise bass angler will attempt to exhaust his fish before bringing it up to the boat.

Most patients recover from tuberculosis of the lungs, provided their illness has been detected and treated before it is too far advanced.

Boat License Renewals Few Despite Nearness Of July 1st Deadline

Frankfort, June 24 (Spl.)—With the July 1 deadline for renewing motorboat registrations approaching, only about 1,000 have been renewed, according to Boating Division Director Scott Barbour.

About 30,000 motorboats are registered with the Division in the Kentucky Department of Public Safety, Barbour said.

He warned that Division safety inspectors will issue citations to owners or operators of boats that are unregistered or do not carry proper registration numbers. Wherever its work touches navigable streams, the Division coordinates its activities with the U. S. Coast Guard.

Barbour urged renewal of registrations as soon as possible to prevent a heavy work load on circuit clerks when the deadline comes. During this period the Division "will welcome more frequent reports from clerks than the monthly ones required by law," Barbour said.

BOB STRAMPE, 'KING OF THE HILL' ON MILTON BERLE'S T-V SHOW, TO APPEAR AT CROWN LANES

SEE BOB STRAMPE AT CROWN LANES SATURDAY, JULY 8TH

How does it feel to play straightman to comedian Milton Berle?

Bowling fans will have the chance to ask Brunswick Advisory Staff bowler Bob Strampe this question and many more when he appears at Crown Bowling Lanes, Prestonsburg, on Saturday, July 8th.

According to M. R. Daniel, of the recreation center, Strampe will bowl in an exhibition match and offer bowling instruction similar to the type he presented over NBC-TV during his long reign as "king of the hill" on the Brunswick-Phillies Jackpot Bowling program with Milton Berle as MC.

In addition to his television bowling, Bob has made headlines with his competitive tournament bowling and strong league performances. He bowled a 833 series for a national ABC high of 1961 and in 1960 rolled 16 series of 700 or better.

Bob also won the Ten Pin Lanes Singles Tournament, the Hudson Valley Classic and the Midwest Doubles in 1960, and placed high in several other tournaments.

As a member of the Brunswick Advisory Staff, Bob is one of more than 115 bowlers who promote the sport at exhibitions and instruction sessions similar to the program at Crown Lanes, Saturday, July 8th.

MAYO SCHOOL TO GET $400,000 BUILDING

ARCHITECTS' DRAWING of the proposed new $400,000 science building at Mayo State Vocational-Technical School at Paintsville shows the modern design of the new structure.

Frankfort, Ky., June 19 (Spl.)—A $400,000 science building, to be erected soon at the Mayo State Vocational-Technical School at Paintsville, will permit the school to offer a broader training program in various scientific fields than is possible at present.

The contract for the new structure will be let as soon as final details are completed by the Lexington architectural firm of Mc-Loney, Tune & Clark, designers of the building. Funds for the building were included in the present state budget when it was approved by the legislature.

The new building will house the physics, tool and die design, chemistry, industrial electronics and communications electronics laboratories, plus an assembly hall, classrooms and an industrial, trade and technical library.

George L. Ramey, director of the Mayo School, said the new building will permit a much more comprehensive training program in the fields of science and will also permit the school to accept additional students.

Mayo serves primarily a 15-county area in Eastern Kentucky, but Ramey pointed out that over 30 counties are represented in the total enrollment of 500 students. About 60 students live on the campus.

"The library will be a new and welcome addition," Ramey said, "and will fill a big gap for this entire area. The books we now have are scattered all over the campus or in our various laboratories. We will be able to gather them in one place, and in addition, make them available to the general public. We will hire a full-time qualified librarian and keep the library open, probably till around 10 at night, so the people of this area will have access to our books."

AKERS' DOZEN TESTS SPACE AGE MISSILES

BY HENRY P. SCALE

Military specialization of the Space Age requires brawn, brains and courage. A Dwale man, Archie E. Akers, contributes quite a bit to making America safe from the holocaust of a modern war.

In the first few minutes of Space Age war intercontinental missiles with nuclear warheads would blast off for American cities. If they were to come in on target without being intercepted incalculable destruction would result.

Part of the job to prevent such vast potential injury to our country has been assigned to Ryan Aeronautical Company, San Diego, California, and the management of the firm entrusts the development of one phase of the work to a group of highly-trained technicians known as Akers' Dozen.

To simulate nuclear missile interception work, the company developed the Ryan Firebee. It is a target that roars from its launching pad high into the sky and it is the job of the range missile system men to bring it down, just like they would want to do if it was an enemy missile.

Ryan sent "Art" Akers with a crew of 12 down to White Sands Proving Ground in New Mexico to develop what the company called "Ground Launch Systems and Techniques for the Firebee." He was told that the firm believed 32 Firebee jet-powered targets would have to be fired from a rail launching pad to test the missile, and, if it survived, an average of two flights 66 missiles would be expended at them.

November 30, 1959, Akers' Dozen launched the first XM-21, the technical name for the Firebee. The missile climbed to 2,000 feet and was recovered without damage. On December 7 they put it up again, and after that they launched a whole series of targets without mishaps.

September 16, last year, Akers' Dozen, still testing the Firebee, launched a target for 84,000 feet at an average altitude of 700 feet above the terrain. It roared out over the proving grounds, banked sharply to turn and headed back. The range missile system brought it down.

Launching a target missile is hard, grueling work and if a crew gets up one a day it is doing a good job. But Akers' men have put up three in one day!

Ryan Aeronautical management recognizes that Akers and his dozen are doing a great job. The firm magazine carries a recent article, "Akers Dozen . . . The Man Behind America's No. 1 Jet Target." The article asks and answers how the group does the job.

"By working in the pre-dawn wind of the desert with tools so cold that they stick to the bare skin," the Ryan Reporter says.

"By working from first light until long after dark. By living, breathing, thinking, jet targets 24 hours a day.

"They had to be the kind of men who could take the unheard of and make it a fact," the writer adds. "They had to throw away the rule books and improvise."

Akers tell of an incident in which he had to improvise.

"A few weeks ago we were preparing to launch a target missile and this particular bird had been so reliable that we didn't bother to have a standby for it.

"Count-down had gone to X minus four seconds, at which time a series of events happened which we turned into a good thing. First, the target missile developed a short circuit and burned up the Generator-On relay, and at the same time some one drove a large truck through the 2,300 volt power lines which supplied power to the target missile launching station and missile system complexes. Instantly, communications were lost at B station so we had no way of knowing what happened.

"After going back to B station I found out from Bud Miller what the story was. We were told it would be at least one and a half hours before the missile people could get any power and at least three hours before we could get our power restored. Miller and I both knew that the Gen-On relay shorted and would take three hours to replace.

"We hooked up the emergency systems, wheeled target missile number 0027 out of the ready hanger, gave it a quick weight and balance check, installed Jato (a 11,000 pound target) and fired it under emergency conditions. The range never knew that had this fellow not driven the truck through the high voltage lines, we would have had to cancel the mission."

Akers' job is not one for the faint-hearted, for danger is routine.

"A prelaunch malfunction could instantly turn a launching pad into a seething caustic inferno," the Ryan Reporter says. "After launch, any one of many natural or man-made interferences could zero-in tons of shattering death anywhere in the range. There is no charmed circle of safety on a missile range. No day is a holiday from the threat of death."

Akers, who is a son of J. E. Akers, of Dwale, served aboard a U. S. submarine during World War II.

WILDERNESS ROAD

The Kentucky Legislature in 1797 appropriated 500 pounds sterling for the repair of Wilderness Road and erection of a tollgate at the Narrows, a gap in Pine Mountain in Bell county. This tollgate, around which the city of Pineville developed, was the first established in the state and the first to be abandoned (1830).

100 YEARS AGO THIS WEEK

The Civil War in Kentucky

By JOE JORDAN
(Kentucky Civil War Commission)

One hundred years ago this week, Kentuckians elected ten representatives to the lower house of the U. S. Congress, which President Lincoln had called to meet in extraordinary session July 4, and of the ten winners, nine were Union men. Adding up the votes cast for the ten Union candidates in their respective districts, and subtracting from the sum the total votes cast for their ten opponents, showed a statewide Union majority of 54,756.

The result, as Kerr's "History of Kentucky" was to point out from the vantage point of 1922, "did not mean an endorsement of the Union at any price," but it was "decisive against the state seceding." The winning Union candidates had NOT campaigned for helping the North subdue the South and force the seceding states back into the Union, but had supported the widely popular policy of armed neutrality and the theory that Kentucky by remaining friendly to both sides might yet act as mediator and bring about a peaceful settlement. To secede from the Union would be definitely to take sides and plunge into the war, but to remain within the framework of the Union by not taking any step toward leaving it, at the same time deploring the North's use of force against Kentucky's "sister Southern states," appeared at the time to be compatible with the Commonwealth's officially proclaimed position of neutrality.

sensitive Kentuckians could be and how angrily they might resent any attempt to dictate to them, had served the Union cause well by being extremely careful not to offend the citizens of the Commonwealth. Indeed, he had chosen rather to endure harsh criticism from Northern critics, who belabored him for permitting neutral Kentucky to be the gap through which supplies and even munitions purchased in the North were flowing into the Confederacy. The Cincinnati Daily Gazette said in an editorial: "The 'neutrality' of Kentucky seems to consist in perfect freedom to furnish our enemies the wherewith to make war upon us, and the Government knowingly permits this nefarious business to go on..."

Lincoln patiently endured a storm of such criticism rather than antagonize Kentucky. The Confederacy, on the other hand, disappointed because Kentucky had not seceded, interfered with the state's free navigation of the Mississippi River, which Kentuckians had been willing to fight for since the early days when Spain had offended in the same manner. Thus the Southerners impatiently played into Lincoln's hands.

Simon B. Buckner, inspector general of the Kentucky State Guard, reported to Governor Magoffin that Major General George B. McClellan, commander of U. S. troops north of the Ohio River, had agreed to respect Kentucky's neutrality.
