Dopson said applications from merchants will be handled as quickly as possible, but that applicants should allow a day or two for the time it takes to handle applications.

"We have been directing our efforts to have everything in readiness for June 1, when the first food coupons will be issued by the office set up by the Floyd fiscal court in the Town Center building," Dopson said. "This office will be supervised by Carl Horn, who formerly directed the distribution of USDA-donated foods to needy persons in Floyd county. The food coupons, in 25-cent and $1 denominations, will be issued only to those persons who have been certified as eligible by the local office of the State Department of Economic Security."

BILLION WASTED

U. S. Senator Stephen M. Young, of Ohio, believes the survival of 180 million Americans depends not on civil defense but peace and the office of Civil and Defense Mobilization should be abolished. He explains his views in a June Reader's Digest article, "Civil Defense: Billion-Dollar Boondoggle."

ENDRIN INSECTICIDE

Lexington, Ky.—The insecticide Endrin was the most satisfactory for control of the European corn borer in sweet corn crops in a University of Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station test last season. Endrin was one of several materials used in the research. The project had a dual purpose. One was to find the best ranular insecticide against European corn borer. The other was to get an index on the resistance of sweet corn varieties to the European corn borer.

FOOD-FACTORY MARVEL

Lexington, Ky.—The milk cow is inextricably tied up with the migrations and progress of man—and small wonder, as she has been called a food-factory marvel. For instance, says the Kentucky Cooperative Extension Service, marking June Dairy Month, the milk cow consumes grasses and grains of the fields and converts them into a perfect single food, milk.

PASTURED CATTLE

Lexington, Ky.—Here are a few tips for feeding cattle on pasture, says George D. Pendergrass, University of Kentucky Cooperative Extension Service Beef Cattle Specialist. Feeding shelled corn or corn and cob meal depends on the pasture. Shelled or cracked corn is preferred if cattle are on straight grass pasture. Ground ear corn is recommended if the pasture contains 40 to 50 per cent legumes; the cobs will help prevent bloat and scours.

There's Work To Be Done On Public Waters

Hapless anglers have, on occasion, alibied their bad luck with the claim that there are more fishermen than there are fish. Now, harried anglers also are contending there are more boats than there is room for their operation. Floyd county's own Dewey Lake has its problems as fishermen seek quiet waters and as boaters and skiing enthusiasts want room in which to operate. All have their rights, but self-appropriated rights often infringe on those of others. And more than the convenience and pleasure of these people is involved—there also is the matter of safety and human lives to be given top consideration.

If Kentucky's new boating law with its increased fees and the employment of water patrols are to be worth anything to the public, more than a mere word of caution will be necessary in many instances. The reckless, the uncaring and the plain selfish will need to be shown that thus far they can go and no further.

Restricted areas for skiing and speed-boating is only a part of the answer. It may be that a timetable will have to be established for both fishermen and boaters; fishing, say, till an established hour in the morning and beginning again well along in the afternoon, with those hours between left to the boaters and skiers.

We do not presume to know the answer in every detail. But we do know there is much work to be done if public waters are to be enjoyed by the public and not simply by the fellow who can get there fustest with the mostest horsepower.

Who Was Really Shocked?

Reports of irregularities in the procuring and voting of absentee ballots shocked many Floyd countians. The allegations heard added perjury to vote-buying and vote-selling, and many good citizens who abhor such practices honestly resented this compromise of the so-called sanctity of the ballot.

But there were others who professed to be shocked who were unjarred by the news, we would guess. For those who over the years have bought and sold votes are too calloused for the addition of a mere "new wrinkle" to the game to be horrified to any great extent.

Indeed, The Times is not too sympathetic with those who quiver with righteous indignation at the news that absentee ballots and absentee-voting are attended by fraud but who scoff at every argument against plain, low-down vote-buying and vote-selling, and go on, year after year, trafficking in human rights.

The misuse of absentee ballots can be stopped dead by enactment of a law restricting absentee-voting only to members of the armed forces. But there are not enough heroes in Harlem to plug the leaky dike when the vote-buyers and the vote-sellers get together.

Horrified by absentee-ballot fraud? There's more to be shocked about than only a few hundred absentee ballots when thousands of voters go on the block at every election.

SAVES MONEY The Wage Earners' Plan, a little known piece of legislation passed in 1938, enables insolvent families to pay off their debts, keep their self respect and avoid bankruptcy. Its workings are explained by Murrey Teigh Bloom in a June Reader's Digest article, "Ready Help for People in Debt." Between July 1, 1959 and June 30 of last year, 13,600 debt-entangled families took advantage of the plan. The figure may be 20,000 for the fiscal year ending this June 30.

AREA GARDEN IMPROVEMENT TO AID EASTERN KENTUCKY

Home gardens mean healthier families and lower food bills, many Kentucky families have found. And many families in Eastern Kentucky are taking part in the Family Garden Improvement program to learn about raising better gardens and to compete for awards, according to Hubert Davis, University of Kentucky Extension horticulturist.

The purpose of the program is to encourage more families to grow home gardens and to raise the foods that will provide a more balanced diet for family members. Those enrolled in the program are given help and advice on better gardening methods.

The University of Kentucky Cooperative Extension Service is one of the sponsors of the Family Garden Improvement program; other sponsors include many agricultural, educational, industrial and commercial organizations in the state.

Nearly 2,000 family gardens in 38 Eastern Kentucky counties were involved in the program last year, Davis reports. He expects between 3,000 and 4,000 gardens to be enrolled this year with at least 29 counties continuing through this year's program. More interest is being shown this year in garden planning as to size, crop management, and cultivation than last year, he points out.

Section "B" of Region VI, Kentucky Association of Future Homemakers of America, held its annual spring meeting at Prestonsburg high school, May 13.

Mike Sloan, Baptist Student Union director at Morehead State College, spoke on the topic, "Dating Customs."

One hundred seventy-five girls from Belfry, Oil Springs, Meade Memorial, John's Creek, Fed's Creek, McDowell, Sandy Hook, Louisa and Prestonsburg, attended the day's program.

"Future Homemaker Map, Stronger Districts," was the theme of the meeting. The Prestonsburg chapter members provided the meeting place, prepared their own name tags and supplied a member of the Group II nominating committee.

Miss Shelby Jean Prater, district president, presided. The district officers gave their reports of the year's activities. In the afternoon, Miss Maurine Collins, assistant state supervisor of Home Economics, explained the new districts of the F.H.A. and explained that the "success of the new F.H.A. districts depends on you."

Other features of the meeting were reports on two state projects, "Cleanup-Don't Litter up" and the State F.H.A. Scholarship Fund.

The following girls were elected to serve as district officers for 1961-1962:

BEEF-PASTURE TOUR

The Floyd County Livestock Improvement Association is sponsoring a beef-pasture tour, Saturday, May 27. The tour will consist of visits to the following farms: W. W. Burchett, Cow Creek; Harve Spears, Buffalo Creek; H. B. Patrick, Abbott Creek; and Billy Merritt, Bonanza. The tour will start at the courthouse at 8:30 a.m. Anyone interested in livestock and pasture production is invited to attend. Those attending will see improved pastures, purebred beef herd, good grade beef herds and a sheep flock.

Charles Martin, will be with us on the tour to discuss livestock and pasture management and to answer questions.

For the farmer that is interested in improving his farming operations, the tour should be a must.

STRAWBERRY TOUR

On May 29, 30 and 31, a carload of strawberry growers and businessmen will visit the strawberry processing area of Tennessee. The purpose of the tour will be to find out more how the processing market functions in preparation for the processing plant to be in operation here next year.

The group will visit the plant of Carl Abbott, Portland, Tennessee. Mr. Abbott will operate the plan here in Prestonsburg next year. The growers shipping to the plant will also be visited to find out how they operate and what problems they may have. A detailed report will be made following the trip.

RED STELE

The wet-cool weather has been ideal for the spread of red stele in the producing strawberry fields. Eight fields have been visited where this disease will cut yields approximately one-half. Red stele is caused by a fungus. It attacks the stele or core of the roots. The disease appears about blooming time, causing the leaves to roll, wilt and become dull in color. Some plants may die and the crop will be cut on the other.

The only control known is to avoid infected and poorly drained soil, and to use a variety resistant to the disease. Once a field is infected there is no cure available.

FLEA BEETLES

All the potato patches that have been examined are heavily infected with flea beetles. Because the flea beetles don't eat the leaves, they are not considered with much alarm by most gardeners. The beetles actually destroy a large part of a leaf, by sucking the sap from the leaf. Flea beetle damage can be found by holding a leaf up to the sun, and looking for small pin holes in the leaves.

Flea beetles are easily controlled with D.D.T. Use three tablespoons of 50% wettable D.D.T. to each gallon of water. Dust can also be used but it isn't as effective.

Aphids or plant lice are also damaging gardens now, the same D.D.T. spray can be used to control them.

PASTURE MANAGEMENT

One of the management practices most often neglected by farmers is mowing. If pasture grasses are allowed to form seeds, they will become dormant and growth will almost stop until fall. The first mowing should be in the spring just before the seed about formation, which is now. Other regular mowing should be done to control weeds and to destroy over ripe growth.

Pastures also need a top dressing with fertilizer in spring. If legume is in pasture use a fertilizer without nitrogen. For straight grass pastures either renovate to put back a legume or use a complete fertilizer with nitrogen. The reason for this is that legumes will supply the nitrogen for the pasture if inoculated properly.

4-H DISTRICT RALLY DAY

Esta Lou Adkins and the Maytown club act both received blue ribbons in the talent show.

Other counties participating in the event were Pike, Johnson, Martin, Lawrence, Magoffin and Morgan.

The senior winners, Randolph Hicks, Delbert Ousley, Linda Layne, Joan Hicks and Clara Allen will represent the Big Sandy district in the state contests to be held as a part of the State Fair activities.

The Old State House at Frankfort is an architectural gem, the work of Kentucky's greatest architect, Gideon Shroyock, who also designed Morrison Chapel on the Transylvania College campus at Lexington and the Jefferson county courthouse at Louisville.

Windows and doorways will soon need protection from the hot summer sun. Research shows that cotton canvas awnings, used for shading windows, can reduce room temperatures from eight to fifteen degrees.

Keep cheese refrigerated. To maintain its own flavor and not mix the flavor with other foods, keep cheese covered, wrapped in foil or cello paper or in its original tight paper wrapping.

THOUSANDS GO TO RETREATS FOR SPIRITUAL LIFE RENEWAL

Religious retreats for meditation and spiritual renewal have become a nationwide movement crossing all sectarian lines, according to "Retreat — To Go Forward," by John Kord Lagemann in the May Reader's Digest. More than 50,000 Protestants made first retreats last year and double that number are expected this year. Before World War I there was only one Roman Catholic retreat center open to laymen; now there are 376.

The modern retreat is not just a week-end get-together with religious overtones. The modern trend is toward the basic disciplines

Says Army Providing Technical Training

Sgt. Marvin E. Craft said this week that the U. S. Army uses more machines and more technical devices than any other army in the world. But machines alone, without skilled and highly trained men to use them, are of no value to anyone. It takes weeks and months (sometimes years) of technical schooling and training to teach men to operate, repair and maintain modern weapons and machines.

According to Sgt. Craft, the technical schools are chosen by the high school graduate and approved before enlistment, thereby assuring the graduate of getting the type training he desires, the beginning of a vocation that will carry him through a profitable life. For complete information on the Army's school training program, see Sgt. Craft at the postoffice, Prestonsburg.

HE WANTED A MULE

Paul Gearheart, president of the Harold Telephone Company, contributes this week's column. It is a good "piece of writing" and a good story. It is offered here as submitted. He entitled it, "One Against A Throng."

One evening, late in the spring of 1899, the foreman of a sawmill approached one of his teamsters with a rather unexpected enquiry: "Jim, which one of the mules is the best traveler?"

"Old Kate, I guess," came the reply, "why?"

"No particular reason, just admiring your team," the foreman complimented.

After a few minutes it dawned on the teamster what was being planned.

The foreman was a big grizzled mountaineer named Buckley, who was a benchman and sawmill overseer for Devil Anse Hatfield, undisputed leader of the feuding Hatfield clan of Island Creek, West Virginia.

Buckley's trademark was a wide gun-belt glistening with small reflectors and shiny cartridges, bagging down on the right side from the weight of a heavy revolver. He always wore leather riding leggings and carried a Long Tom rifle across his shoulder when he walked, and used it to lean on when he stood.

It was generally understood that the feud with the McCoy family, who lived in Pike county, had ended nine years earlier. But the Hatfields had kept a constant vigil, lest a new outbreak should catch them off guard.

The dividing line between the two feuding clans was the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River. Twenty miles to the northeast lay Island Creek, the home of Devil Anse's adherents. The McCoy's lived south of the river in Pike county, Kentucky.

Over the years it had been a weekly task for a Hatfield sentry to make the long trip to Matewan, on the Tug Fork to get the news of any maneuver of the enemy.

The round-trip usually required a full night's hard ride, an almost unbearable task for a work animal.

James Roberts had brought the fine team, his young wife and their 13-month-old daughter from Floyd county, Ky., to seek employment in the sawmill industry which was then thriving on Island Creek. He prized his work animals highly, and was rather reluctant to have a member of the clan steal one of his mules for making the long journey to Matewan.

After work was finished for the day, Roberts went home with a troubled mind. He told his wife of the incident at the mill and together they planned their strategy in the event the suspicion materialized.

The Roberts family occupied a small two room log house on Cob Fork, about a mile from the mill. The tramroad ran close by the hut and on into the virgin timber.

The mules were kept in a little barn, about 100 yards down the branch and about 200 feet to the right of the tramroad.

At dusk Jim took his .38 caliber pistol, for which he had only one cartridge, and went to the barn where he had planned to lie and wait. Climbing into the corn crib, he gathered a bed of shucks under him and lay still. The muffled snort and shift of the mules behind him and the occasional report from an owl on the hillside prevented complete silence.

A thousand thoughts ran through the mind of the 24-year-old mill hand.

"Do you suppose they think I am a spy for the McCoy's?" he wondered.

After all his home land lay close to the arch enemies of the Hatfields.

Hardly an hour had passed when he heard faint footsteps coming up the tramroad. Very shortly whispering voices became audible. Maybe it was someone coming to visit his home, he hoped.

His hopes vanished quickly when two shadowy forms turned off the tramroad and headed straight for the barn. Roberts' heart leaped within him when he recognized the approaching voices as that of Buckley and Devil Anse. He leveled his revolver through a crack in the crib, hoping to get the two men in position, one behind the other. This was the only chance of getting both men with his only shot. As fate would have it, the two men remained separated.

When the visitors reached the crib door, the young watchman lurched forward and shouted, "Throw your hands up, boys," an order readily obeyed by the surprised intruders.

Jim talked fast and nervously. "Somebody's been stealing my corn and I've been watching it," he said.

"Is that so?" Devil Anse was quick to inquire. "Buckley and me was down at the mill and thought we'd come up and spend the night with you," Hatfield added.

Eager to smooth out a rather embarrassing and probably a dangerous situation, Roberts welcomed the two men to spend the night at his home.

The Spanish American War had stimulated business generally all over the country. Island Creek's lumber industry flourished. The coming of the railroad to the Guyan River valley provided an outlet for the rough lumber produced here.

The conversation casually shifted to the war and the general economy as Roberts and his guests went to the house and prepared to retire. A bed was made ready for Buckley and Hatfield in one room while Jim, his wife and young child occupied the other. Buckley carefully placed his rifle and revolver within easy reach from his bed. Even though the host did not sleep any at all, the night passed without incident.

A few nights later while the Roberts family was preparing for bed, a loud thump on the back door echoed through the house, immediately followed by a loud whoopee. In a flash hoofbeats rushing by the house carried the interloper swiftly away.

Fearing that he was only one against a multitude, the young Kentuckian's mind reflected on the massacre of the McCoy family which occurred a few years before, and only a few miles away. Reason taught him that to stand against such odds was not courage but suicide.

Early the following morning he piled all his belongings on his shabby buckboard and headed south toward his native Floyd county.

MARTIN

MOTHER-DAUGHTER DINNER HELD

The Allen-Martin Woman's Club held its annual Mother-Daughter dinner, May 16, entertaining the Lackey-Garrett-Wayland and Drift Woman's Clubs.

The guest speaker of the evening was Floyd County Superintendent of Schools Charles F. Clark. His topic was "The Future of Floyd County Schools." He spoke of the condition of many of the rural schools and how badly they needed new buildings and sanitary facilities. The proposed Middle Creek consolidation, he said, would eliminate 19 rural schools and the Mud Creek building would provide the desperate need of new buildings in the Mud Creek section. He also spoke of the consolidation of the Martin-Maytown-Garrett and Wayland schools.

The serving table and individual tables were decorated with spring flowers. Each guest received a gift from the First Guaranty Bank. The door prize, which was a table centerpiece, was won by Mrs. Beatrice Collins.

Members of the three clubs present were:

Fitts gave a timely talk on juvenile delinquency as its problems pertain to religion. The final part of the program was a film, "Bible on the Table," which emphasized Christianity in the home.

Kiwanis Lt.-Gov. Thurman Hibblitts attended the meeting for his third visit here this year. He complimented the club and its officers on their activities, functions and services.

Sonny Phillips, local football player who has signed for a scholarship at the University of Tennessee, was the Key Club representative. EACH $1 FEDERAL AID
NETTED FLOYD-CO. 42¢

Special to The Times
New York, May 15—Are the numerous federal-aid programs that are available for the benefit of state and local governments a barge-in or an expensive luxury as far as Floyd county is concerned?

How much does it cost residents of the county in taxes for every dollar that comes back in the form of federal aid?

On the basis of data gathered from the Tax Foundation, from the Treasury Department and other agencies, the cost locally is less than the grants-in-aid that are provided.

Of the total collected in taxes in Floyd county in the past fiscal year, approximately $879,000 went to Washington for the federal-aid program. What came back in the way of grants was an estimated $1,509,000.

The figures are a breakdown of national data on a state-by-state basis. They show tax payments of $85,900,000 going to the federal government from the state of Kentucky for the various aid projects.

What did Kentucky taxpayers get in return for that expenditure? A total of $147,400,000 in grants-in-aid, states the Tax Foundation.

These consisted of slum clearance projects, aid to veterans, hospital and health services, farm crop subsidies, sewage treatment construction and many others.

In effect, every $1 in federal-aid cost local taxpayers 58 cents, the figures show.

This ratio varied widely from state to state, with allotments to some states proportionately greater than those to others. New Jersey fared worst, having to pay $2.14 for every $1 it got back in aid. Alaska, on the other hand, paid only 16 cents per $1.

Some 160 types of aid are available to state and local governments, reports the Tax Foundation. In fact the government has published a 34-page booklet listing them. The foreword to it states:

"For communities with federal programs under way, it will serve as a checklist by which they can make certain that all available sources of assistance . . . have been considered."

Among the lesser-known on the list are college housing construction loans, loans for commercial fisheries, aerial photographs of harbors and industrial areas, agricultural educational programs and small reclamation projects.

DISTINCTIVE SEASONS

This spring we have often done some queer things to adjust to the weather. My daughter, who lives in Oregon, has written that her children have had to go back to winter clothes twice since their first days of wearing summer clothes. And it frosted three times at my home town after May came in. In my bird study I found many strange things, too, such as species that were still hanging around here when they should have been in Canada. All of this has made me wonder at the folkish habits we used to have, in spite of the seasons.

Regardless of the actual day, we pulled off our home-knit yarn stockings on the day we sheared sheep. Both we and the sheep often had to be pretty tough to endure the various "winters" that came right along, then as now. Dogwoods and blackberries and all such had to have their special winters, and our feet could just take them or leave them. I remember how cold the sheep, stripped of their warm wool, would look some morning when "winter lingering chilled the lap of May," to slightly misquote Shakespeare. But no boy who was a real boy would have admitted that he, too, was chilly when he bounded about in the dripping grass on cold mornings or even kicked some frost from a plant or two.

There used to be a day on which you changed from winter to summer underwear, again regardless of the temperature. This was more violent than the method, often described, of tearing a bit of one's heavy winter underwear each day until all had been removed. I never tried this or saw it tried, but I heard of it. Like "pulling off bare-footed," we changed violently, and that was that. To have gone back to the heavies after they had been discarded would have been to acknowledge that one was a sissy, and no boy ever liked to be called that ugly name.

And there used to be exact times to plant certain things. Good Friday was "bean day," again regardless of weather. I have seen many a glistening bean go into the ground as hopefully as any previous or later beans, only to lie and rot, as the weather zigzagged between winter and spring. In 1960 if any beans got into the ground on Good Friday, they must have been hardy ones, especially if they are still alive and kicking. Two and a half weeks after Good Friday, in our part of the world, there was white frost in the early morning.

Corn was to be planted when oak (species not specified) leaves were as large as a mouse's ear. Again I have known many a corn grain to lie and rot where it was placed a bit too early for our uncertain climate. I am always reminded, each spring, of the people of North Carolina stuck at Fidelity who planted corn, at least once, according to the way Grandpap planted it back in the Old Country, considerably farther south and on the other side of the Appalachians from Fidelity. It took many years to convince our ex-North Carolinians that they lived in Kentucky rather than in North Carolina.

THE BATTLE OF MIDDLE CREEK, JAN. 10, 1862

The Battle of Middle Creek, fought January 10, 1862, a few miles from Prestonsburg, was the second attempt of the Union to permanently drive the Confederates from the Big Sandy valley. Col. James A. Garfield, later President of the United States, commanded the Eighteenth Brigade, Union forces, and the Confederates were commanded by Gen. Humphrey Marshall. It was the first significant victory of Union arms.

Shown here is an old print of an artist's conception of the battle. Garfield is shown on horseback, directing the victorious Unionists.

The First National Bank presents these pictures of our past in recognition of Eastern Kentucky's rich historical heritage.

'Medical Revolution' Lifesaver, Says Speaker

A "medical revolution" during the last 30 years has resulted in the saving of more than three million lives in the United States while increasing the life span 10 years," Ray L. Frazier, representative of Smith Kline & French Laboratories, Philadelphia pharmaceutical firm, told the Prestonsburg Kiwanis Club at its meeting last Thursday evening.

Through the discovery and development of antibiotics, tranquilizers and drugs for tuberculosis, "the pharmaceutical industry has made fundamental contributions of major importance," he said. "And in other areas as well, pharmaceutical companies have given us a host of drugs that bring comfort and relief from pain to millions—preparations such as antihistamines, drugs for the treatment of ulcers, the sedatives, and the steroid hormones."

The home of Confederate Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston at Maysville is open as a shrine.
