ANOTHER TAX INCREASE! HOW HIGH DO THEY INTEND TO GO?

DARBY

Representative

H.B. 1—Special session pertaining to ad valorem tax structure. Our 95th Representative voted YES.

This hodge-podge piece of tax legislation is a masterpiece of confusion. It does everything but rhyme. It permits a 20 percent increase over and above the 100 percent assessment for this year. It doesn't specify any limitations for next year. This law is responsible for the delay in your tax bills. They are figuring out how much to increase them now.

No need to offer a reward. This law has the best legal brains in Kentucky confused. Your tax bill will prove my statement.

Hams 99 percent of Kentucky ham-eat-aged under natural conditions "The idea that hams could be eight months. cured in a matter of months was suggested to me by Sam Guard, DOLLARS AND of Louisville, a former editor of the 'Breeders Gazette'," Dr. Kemp recalled. "We applied for a grant and got it." "Old sayings and adages are often more truth than fiction," said Dr. Kemp as he and his associates discussed the necessity of the "June sweat" for a tender, moist ham. They questioned the fact that it had to be that

"No ham is worth its salt un-particular month. "Changes in the quality of the meat are brought about by enzymes-organic compounds which act upon proteins and fat in the meat, creating a change," Dr. Kemp explained. By injecting the ham with additional enzymes, the researchers found they could bring about changes more quick-

Enzymes go into action during higher temperatures, he added. After killing the hogs in the fall of the year, the traditional process was to cure the meat with a mixture of salt, sugar and saltpeter. Often, molasses, pepper, and other seasonings were added.

Winter weather was ideal for keeping the pork fresh and allowing the salt to penetrate the meat. Then with the arrival of warm, humid weather, the ham would "sweat" and shrink.

"A ham has to lose moisture before the best quality of taste is reached." Dr. Kemp said. "A 20 pound ham will shrink to about 15 pounds before it has completed the aging process."

The UK scientist has found that using a 75-degree heat throughout the entire aging process and 38 to 40 degrees in the curing process generally produces the best results. By controlling the heat in the aging room, the process is speeded up by four to five months with less chances of sourness, saltiness or general spoilage.

These findings have been reported to the University's extension workers and outlines of the quicker "country-style" process are now available. "Kentucky has approximately a dozen country ham processors currently in operation - a three million dollar industry," Dr. Kemp said. We predict this figure will double in size in the next few years." One Western Kentucky producer, who now markets around 35,000 hams a year, is expanding his operations to produce 75,000 hams each year. The price of old country hams always has been high, Dr. Kemp added, but the mass production of country-styled hams will lower the price per pound. "Country-styled hams are slightly milder in taste than old country hams," the UK professor said, "but most young people and 'city' people prefer the milder taste.' The fourth annual Kentucky Country Ham Show was a feature this year of the state fair in Louisville, and all hams entered in the competition were cured and aged in Kentucky by residents of the state. The Kentucky Department of Agriculture has a special stamp or label for hams they consider "best" in quality. Minimum do with an ordinary onion and a carrot, except eat them?

Onion and a Carrot For Viewing, Not Eating, Pay Morehead Printer

William Hough, a Morehead printer, pondered that question for several weeks as he looked at two paintings, one of a carrot and one of an onion, done by Mrs. Arla Alexander, a Grayson Besides being good paintings, Hough thought, they should have greater possibilities. There began a success story which has State Area Development officials pleasantly surprised.

According to Cliff Gordon, of the Governor's Office of Area Development, this is what de-

Hough, who owns a four-color press, began experimenting with reproductions of the paintings. and finally successfully reproduced them on laminated wood. He brought the finished product to officials in the Area Development Office, who, along with representatives from the State Department of Commerce. directed him to marketing consultants and distributors of such crafts in New York.

Given the go-ahead, Hough reproduced the paintings on plaques for kitchens, using laminated wood he obtained from a wood-use center at Quicksand.

The plaques, which sell for $1.50 and $2, caught on.

The first national sales in June totaled 600. In July sales climbed to 2,500 and in August they were 5,600. Sales are expected to go 10,000 this month. Also ready to go into production are plaques for children's rooms. They will be illustrations of nursery songs.

A display of both types of plaques is on exhibit in the State Capitol rotunda in cases facing the front entrance. They join several other Kentucky produced craft items shown there.

The plaques are also being sold at four state parks: Natural Bridge near Slade; Kentucky Dam Village at Gilbertsville; Jenny Wiley near Prestonsburg and Pine Mountain at Pineville.

Hough also plans, according to Gordon, to build a shop to produce his own laminated wood. This, Gordon estimates, will employ about eight people
