miles of the 414 eligible for federal funding under the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965.

Right of way has been secured on 114 miles of road with progress being made on another 24 miles.

Open to traffic are 218 miles of the Appalachian system, including 55 miles improved with federal aid and 163 miles already considered adequate on the basis of 20-year traffic projections.

Advance planning made it possible for Kentucky to achieve steady progress on Ky 15. Design plans from Hazard to Jackson were complete when the Appalachian program began.

Army Engineers also helped with plans for road improvements connected with the building of the Carr Fork Reservoir.

KY 14 now is complete from Campton to Hazard and the stretch from Hazard to Whitesburg is under construction.

Sections of highway to be improved under the Appalachian act are U.S. 23 from the Ohio line to the Tennessee border; U.S. 119 from Pineville to the West Virginia line; KY 15 from Campton to Whitesburg and U.S. 25-E from Pineville to the Tennessee line.

Also included are KY 61 from the Tennessee line to Burkesville, KY 90 from Burkesville to Somerset and KY 80 from Somerset to London where it connects with Interstate 75.

Although not covered by the Appalachian act, construction of the Daniel Boone Parkway is expected to increase accessibility to this region.

The parkway will connect I-75 at London with Manchester, Hyde and Hazard. Right-of-way acquisition for the parkway has started.

Mine Bill Protest Meet Slated Sunday at Park

Operators of all small mines south of the Ohio river have been invited to attend a meeting at 2:30 p.m. Sunday at Jenny Wiley State Park's amphitheatre to protest proposed federal mine-safety legislation.

Senators Cooper and Cook and Congressman Carl D. Perkins are expected to attend the meeting.

Urging attendance at the meeting, B. F. Reed, treasurer of the Turner Elkhorn Mining Co., Drift, wrote operators:

"It is hard to believe, but I am told that it will be a miracle if we can avoid new federal mining laws that will class every coal mine as 'gassy.' Our small drift mines would be placed in the same class as the deep, shaft mines of neighboring states and would be forced to comply with the same rules that apply to these deep shaft mines. This would mean that all of the present equipment would have to be replaced with permissible equipment . . . that you could not shoot coal from the solid except through the use of electric exploders. In short, I see no possibility that these small mines could continue to operate."

BUSH BROOKE STANDS QUIZ

Former Floyd Man Near Reappointment To $38,000-Year Job

Former Floyd countian Bush Brooke, Jr., weathered a barrage of questions at a Senate committee hearing last Friday and apparently was on his way to reappointment to the Federal Power Commission.

The grilling was inspired by an article in the Washington Daily News, which claimed Brooke worked only 2½ hours a day at the $38,000-a-year post. But Brooke, a former newspaperman and for 10 years administrative assistant to Ex-Senator Thurston B. Morton, with support from John A. Carver, Jr., a fellow FPC member, made a favorable impression on the committee.

The Daily News article alleged that Brooke had missed 10 consecutive FPC meetings just prior to his re-appointment in June by President Nixon, that he voted on only four of 16 "major cases" handled by the FPC since he became a member of the commission last fall, and that during oral arguments of some 14 hours' duration before the commission Brooke had asked only one question of a witness.

Explaining his absence from meetings, Brooke told the Senate committee that the 10 meetings he missed in May and June followed a suspected recurrence of a heart condition. He said his doctor was concerned "about some changes in the tracing" on his electrocardiogram and had instructed him to "take it easy" until he determined what was wrong. Mr. Brooke is a son of the late A. B. Brooke, Sr., and formerly resided with his parents at Wayland.

SR. SERVICE WINS OKEH

Project for Aging Financed 2nd Year In Big Sandy Area

William C. Fitch, executive director of the National Council on Aging, has announced approval of a second year of operation of the Senior Community Service Project headquartered in Paintsville and serving Big Sandy area counties.

One senior service center operated by this project is located at West Prestonsburg in the former Happy Hollow school building.

Administered by the Big Sandy Area Community Action Program, it is directed by Harry Eastburn, the project is funded by the National Council on Aging under a U. S. Department of Labor grant. Its purpose is to employ low-income persons, age 55 or above, in community service jobs.

Coordinated by John Burton, service positions were developed in the six-county rural area encompassed by the Big Sandy Area Community Action Program. The National Council on Aging grant pays wages for part-time work to the senior aides, some of whom are providing supervision and carpentry skills services in a home repair project for the older indigent residents of the area.

"The Senior Community Service Project is one of the most dramatic we have seen in a long time," Mr. Fitch said. "Uniting the need of the older person for income with the need of the community for service can only result in strengthening our commitment to return to productive jobs those older persons whose talents and skills are desperately needed in all communities."

TIDITS of KENTUCKY FOLKLORE

By GORDON WILSON, Ph. D.

Folklore in Certain Professions

In 1967 I decided to interview several people, each one of a different profession, and set down, on tape, some of his experiences with folklore as it has been brought to light in his years of experience. The completed series will appear in full in the "Tennessee Folklore Society Bulletin;" five articles have been completed, and three more interviews are set up.

The first article deals with folklore that is common to Shakespeare and the people in my area of folklore study. Many people would say at first that the people around Mammoth Cave had read their Shakespeare and were quoting him, somewhat freely. That is a great compliment on the literacy of my friends there, but it is hardly true. Actually, the ancestors of the Mammoth Cave-region people came from Great Britain very soon after Shakespeare's own time. The similarity of their beliefs and those in Shakespeare are from the same source, the traditional beliefs and sayings of the 1600's and 1700's. If Shakespeare says a horse's hairs are still just hairs and not venomous serpents, he is just setting down what millions of people have been told, for countless generations. If he associates owls and howling dogs with scary times and places, so did his and our ancestors long before Shakespeare and Mammoth Cave had been heard of. Dr. Addie Hilliard, of the English department of Western, has been my collaborator in this Shakespeare article. She wrote her doctor's thesis on Shakespeare's use of botanical imagery; naturally, she also found plenty of other traditional imagery. We limited ourselves to a single fairly long article, but we could have written a good-sized book without setting down a single belief that was not common to both the author and the pioneers who came to the high country of south-central Kentucky.

In a similar way each collaborator has enumerated various traditional and often quaint beliefs that run counter to actual facts, in biology, in weather, in medicine, in ornithology, in pharmacy, in English classes in college, and in customs in fishing and hunting. I am no coward, but I am glad that the articles will appear in a learned journal, whose readers are willing to accept modern scientific investigations. If such articles as the ones on biology and on ornithology appeared in some newspaper, I am afraid that I might be attacked in the courts. But my collaborators and I took great pains to authenticate every item put down, some of them highly controversial around the country-store. Fortunately, we have also kept open minds by evaluating some of the folk beliefs, as about coming "falling weather," for the folk belief often is based on some sound meteorological observations.

But beliefs have a way, in my collection, at least, of appearing just as they used to be believed, the perfectly sane ones, the half-way truths, and the pure nonsense. In medicine, for instance, some folk remedies were good, some fair, some actually harmful, according to my doctor-colaborator. It seems a bit pathetic that more a actual prejudice against pure science in biology can be found in any other of the fields investigated. Some of this comes from poor observation, some from inadequate observation, and much of it from ancient tradition, oral or written.

In fact, less than a century and a half ago the most learned scientists in our New England colleges were teaching as proved facts such ideas as that swallows hibernate in the mud at the bottom of ponds. To me the funniest bit of folklore about animals is that crows have one kind of front teeth and sheep another; once I asked a recent high-school graduate about this and got the traditional answer. A few days later we were driving by the farm of a friend of mine who raised both sheep and cattle. I stopped my car and told the boy that we were going to settle that matter by a bit of observation. We went into the barnyard and opened mouths to see what was true, not what had been handed down.

Nature Trails

By RUFUS M. REED

The neighborhood service station is ready to close when I arrive, almost panting. The man tells me there's something else in the neighborhood of the steering column that has to do with blinkers, and I assure him this one lever controls both. He finally ousts me from the seat, gets in, peers around a minute — and, click! the lights obediently go out. "See this button?" he says. "That's the Panic Button, and you somehow touched it. It gets all lights going to signal emergency."

As I say, those space people are a special breed. Bold, mechanical, mathematical, scientific geniuses. One in Mission Control can tell another, a quarter of a million miles up there, somewhere, to turn a gadget so many degrees, and everything zooms in. . . . And I, the other kind of breed, can't find a button, a foot from my nose, that will turn off the lights.

Betty Roberts came reasonably close to hitting the nail on the head when she told me, the other day, that what I need in my office now is a wall-to-wall ash-tray.

Don't know which is the more unpleasant, a creditor in hot pursuit or a debtor who no longer speaks.

Oliver C. Hall, 72, Floyd Residents' Kin, Is Claimed July 30

THE INEVITABLE CONCLUSION

The action taken by the state's Department of Public Information this week, closing the Public Information Center here and turning the $150,000 structure into quarters for the Highway Department's resident engineer, is one which naturally arouses the ire of Floyd countians, particularly residents of Prestonsburg.

They could accept the blow with better grace if the avowed intention to economize and get value-received were carried on from this one information center to all the other departments of government where political drones hold sinecures, pulling down big salaries for little or nothing in return.

They also could be more amenable to this drastic change, were it not another in a succession of blows, some of which are alleged to have been strictly punitive in nature. These included:

1. The transfer of the Forestry Department from this county to Johnson county — not to Paintsville, the county-seat, but miles on farther out to satisfy a political cry.

2. The removal of the resident engineer from adequate quarters which were costing the state a reported $80 a month in rent to the new Information Center which had been built especially to render service to tourists and to encourage tourism.

3. The removal of Former Governor Combs' portrait from the walls of May Lodge at Jenny Wiley State Park.

Surely no man of the calibre needed to handle the complexities of government in this complex age would be guilty of such vandalism, but the fact remains that now it is discovered that the plaques at either end of the Bert Combs Bridge here have been removed.

Officials in Frankfort say they know nothing of this matter. And we accept their word for it. It could have been some individual's spiteful act, or an act of simple vandalism. Yet it serves to fan the flames.

Looking back down the line of events of the last two years, we cannot escape the conclusion that somebody down there (at Frankfort) doesn't like us.

Sports Afield

By TED KESTING

Remember spring when the fishing was easy? Well, hot weather fishing separates the men from the boys, the pros from the neophytes and the skillful from the lucky. Fish don't like hot weather either, and although they don't have to sweat it out, they do sit it out where the temperature is more compatible.

The trick is finding them and giving them what they want.

During the spring months the water is well mixed and in average-depth lakes the temperature variance from top to bottom is slight. So, fish are found everywhere because their food is everywhere.

When hot weather bears down, water stratification sets in. In simple words, the water in most lakes settles itself into three essential layers. Let's call them upper, middle and lower layers.

If you want to sound erudite, you can call them, starting at the top, the epilimnion, the thermocline and the hypolimnion. The upper layer is warmer because of wind and air influence — getting as warm as bath water in many states.

The middle layer is cooler, has greater oxygen content, and therefore is more comfortable for fish to live in. The lower layer is colder and has less oxygen which makes it less desirable for most fishes. The wise fisherman will at least probe the thermocline layer because the odds are best for finding Big John. Locating this middle layer is fairly simple.

Lower a thermometer on a string marked off in one-foot intervals. Normally, you will note the temperature drops about one-half a degree for each foot of descent — until the middle layer is reached. Here the temperature drops rapidly — a result of the middle layer remaining fairly stationary while the upper layer circulates because of wind action and lake contours.

In deep lakes the middle layer might be as much as 50 to 70 feet down. But, in most lakes it will be located from 10 to 17 feet below the surface. The middle layer's depth varies, also, averaging about five to eight feet in typical lakes.

Finding the middle layer and fishing in it makes sense because fish are definitely motivated by water temperature.

Homer Circle, Angling Editor of Sports Afield Magazine, speeds up this process by using a Vexilar electronic thermometer. It has a tiny sensor that he keeps overboard at all times.

The thermometer is necessary in conjunction with the depth reader because the middle layer varies considerably as you move from deeper mid-lake water to sheltered coves.

THE BOOKMOBILE IS COMING!

COUNTLESS HOURS OF ENJOYMENT are provided year-round by the bookmobile's stock of over 2000 books on subjects ranging from Bach to nursery rhymes.

Kentucky's library system on wheels has the distinction of being the most extensive state bookmobile service in the United States.

Gov. Louie B. Nunn authorized the purchase of 11 new bookmobiles last year, to replace older models no longer practical for highway use.

In Kentucky old bookmobiles never die, they just lose their wheels. The 11 replaced bookmobiles were refurbished and placed in communities as branch libraries of existing state facilities.

THERE IS NO AGE LIMIT on those who utilize the services of the traveling libraries. The bookmobile takes book requests from patrons and fills them on the next trip to the outlying rural community.

"CHILDHOOD shows the man, as morning shows the day." (Milton)

Sometimes a prehistoric fish may be found imprinted in the shale, and I have had reports of reptiles being found also. Once in a coal seam in Kentucky the jawbone of an ancient shark was found, perfectly preserved.

Once I was digging up layers of blue shale over a coal seam when I found large beds of brachiopods, and I concluded that there had been multiplied millions of them living in the ancient sea that once covered the land. It appeared to me that the sea had receded rapidly, leaving these small animals to perish by the millions in the blue mud at the bottom. As their bodies disintegrated in the mud, they were gradually filled with mud which was later hardened into shale, making a perfect imprint of the brachiopod's shell.

One may hope to find the beautifully spiraled shells of gastropods in shale or slate formations; these were ancient sea snails that lived millions of years ago. They were like the "Chambered Nautilus" which Homes wrote about in his famous poem.

Here in our region we are living on the bed of an ancient sea that once stood over land for eons. This sea deposited beds of sand, silt, clay and mud over the coal seams. When the sea receded, these deposits were exposed to heat and sun and were literally baked into concrete. A large sandstone cliff is a good example of nature's method of making concrete. The layer of blue mud over the coal seam was hardened into shale or slate; the thick deposits of lime were hardened into limestone. Limestone deposits are rich in fossils of many kinds.

Fossils tell us much about the sweeping climatic changes of the earth. Fossils of semi-tropical plants like fig trees have been found in Greenland, indicating that country once had a mild climate.

Fossils and their study are also a big aid to oil and gas drilling companies, as they tell them much about the formation of the rocks and which ones are likely to contain rich deposits of oil or natural gas.

PLAY, A VITAL PART OF OUR LIFE

Man, and the lower animals, too, need to play, and most all creatures do. Play is one of the strongest instincts of animals as well as man. To engage in play fulfills the need for recreation and fun. The old saying, "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," is trite but true.

The young of the larger animals daily engage in play; it helps them to develop and grow faster.

Polar bear cubs in company with their mother engage in coasting games, such as boys do on their bob sleds. They climb atop the Arctic snowdrifts and coast down, then climb up and coast down, time after time, apparently deriving much fun from this sport.

Lion whelps engage in mock battles, growling, pawing and biting one another; puppies that play a lot keep healthy and happy. Young jaguars often engage in rough play, biting one another and rolling over as they cuff one another and growl. This sort of play is the training they need to be swift hunters.

Young beavers play water games with sticks; they place a stick on the water and shove it with the nose while chasing it. A young beaver also likes to hitch a ride on his mother's flat tail and seems to enjoy this sort of "water skiing."

Even grown dogs like to play with their master. I have watched dogs for hours retrieving sticks tossed into the water, a sport they seem to regard as great fun.

Kittens love to play with one another or chase a ball or a moving string. Adult cats sometimes engage in a cruel kind of play. When they capture a mouse they often release the victim to let it run in a desperate effort to escape. But the cat always overtakes it and plops a paw over it. Cats seem to derive pleasure from this form of cruel play, so we have the saying, "like a cat playing with a mouse," in which there is always some innocent victim.

Even grown-up horses like to play as much as the colts do. I've watched horses and mules playing in a field, biting one another and chasing the others across the field.

The need for play seems strong in most of the birds and they play many highly interesting games. Crows will perch on a log floating downstream and ride it for the fun of doing so. Then they fly back upstream to find another log to ride.

Goldfinches play a game much like children riding a roller-coaster at the park. They fly up, then down, then up again, in a bounding flight, crying joyously as they bound up and down. Hummingbirds like to ride on running water if it is not too deep. They ride the flowing water a short distance, then fly back to ride it again. Eider ducks like to ride the whirlpools in a bay or inlet. When they find water swirling around and around, they get in it and let the current whirl them around.

Ravens play aerial game with sticks. The one with the stick is chased through the air by the others until he drops it. Then the others try to seize the falling stick in their beaks. Tree swallows play the same kind of a game, but they use a feather in lieu of a stick. They pass the feather from beak to beak and when one of the birds misses catching it, the others make a wild scramble to catch the falling feather. Geese often play a hilarious game when swimming in a pond. All of a sudden, a member of the flock will give a loud cry and beat the air with his wings; they then begin scooting across the water with loud cries of joy.

The pelicans play an aerial game high in the sky, which is a magnificent spectacle to watch, as they circle and execute brilliant maneuvers on the wing.

Many of the insects also engage in various kinds of play and dances. The whirligig beetle whirls around and around on the water for hours at the time. Other beetles swim on their backs for the sheer fun of it and these are called "backswimmers." The crane flies dance wildly along the brooks; the dragonflies chase one another in a swift aerial game; butterflies play courtship games in the air.

But the most brilliant spectacle is the game played by the fireflies on a warm summer night. Hundreds of them may be seen darting across the sky, their bluish-green lights flashing on and off like neon signs. So it would seem that most all creatures like to play and that it is a necessary part of their existence it keeps them strong, healthy and happy.

it was said, but nothing had been said about it publicly. Explaining the state action in closing the center, Mr. Host said a full analysis of the tourist flow at the center was made last year, and that it was discovered that the center was costing the state $1.46 for each tourist who called at the center. He said this study showed that 4,800 persons visited the center during the year.

Yet, said Host, the state agreed to continue operation of the center this year as far as the budget would permit.

Host added that the state is now committed to the policy of operating information centers only on parkways or interstate highways where the daily traffic load is heavy. One such center, at Florence, Ky., he said has "close to 2,000 visitors a day," because an average of 37,000 cars pass it every 24 hours.

An information center on I-64, near Ashland, is planned, he said. It will be used, he added, to "direct tourists your way."

One information center that is not located on a main traffic artery is being operated at Pineville, but Host said it is open only during the summer run of "The Book of Job" at nearby Pine Mountain State Park. "We're taking a hard look at Pineville," the department head said.

Mr. Host said his department expects to meet with the Matching Funds Committee and that the results of that meeting would be of importance to the center here. This committee deals with community-state financing of projects, with the state matching funds provided locally. He said that the state will match funds raised here for operation of the center, and that if it is reopened by this means the center would be operated by personnel employed by the sponsoring agency, not by the state.

Board Tells Clark To Check County's Supply of Teachers

The Floyd County Board of Education last Saturday directed County Superintendent Charles Clark to make a check of the county's teaching staff after the first two days of the school term, which will open this month, and if he finds an excess of teachers to trim down the number of teachers to fit requirements.

As of now, the county has available 82 more qualified teachers than are needed. The number of pupils enrolled will, of course, govern the number of teachers required, it was pointed out.

The school term will begin Monday, Aug. 18. The board adopted the year's school calendar at the meeting.

Eastern Kentucky Had Big Part In Colorado Gold Field Drama

By HENRY P. SCALF

It was an Eastern Kentuckian who discovered the incredibly rich Cripple Creek gold field in Colorado. It was the husband of a Prestonsburg-born woman who built the nearby city of Colorado Springs. It was a relative of the Eastern Kentucky Strattons who exploited the discovery on Cripple Creek and extracted one of the world's great fortunes.

Bob Womack, the discoverer, cared more for bourbon whiskey, poker playing and a good time than riches, and died penniless. Gen. William J. Palmer, Union Army veteran and railway builder, founded Colorado Springs as a sort of "Newport in the Rockies" to satisfy and content his snobbish wife. Palmer fell from a horse, suffered a broken neck, lived a long time afterward in pain, spending his wealth in a vain effort to regain his health. Winfield Scott Stratton, carpenter, prospector and finally multi-millionaire, died alone and embittered, cursed with money.

Of the trio who contributed so greatly to the Cripple Creek area, only Robert W. Womack lived and died happily, perhaps because he cared so little for money. He once took the last few thousand dollars he owned, changed it into one dollar bills, stood on a street corner and gave it away, bill by bill.

All three had gone west to seek their fortunes, but the trails for two from back East had been winding, marked by pauses, plagued with indications for both Womack and Stratton. Only for Gen. Palmer was the road straight ahead to the West and what he wanted.

Womack's people were from out of Virginia to Kentucky. They were in Greenup county by 1815, around Oldtown. Bob's parents, Samuel and Crissilla Booker Womack, cared little for Greenup county, moved on over into Central Kentucky for awhile, finally, in 1861, trekking across the continent to Colorado and locating a ranch, settled down at Idaho to raise cattle. Bob was 17, wild, friendly and ever smiling. In his late teens he was one of the region's most accomplished horsemen. He could ride in a lope, lean over and pick up a bourbon bottle from the ground with his teeth.

Idaho Springs was nearly 100 miles north of Cripple Creek and the future site of Colorado Springs, which was founded in the early '70's. Samuel Womack decided to sell his ranch near Idaho Springs and move south to the new city that was booming under the promotion of Gen. Palmer. Not liking the rough-and-tumble town, he moved out a few miles and started ranching again. Bob had a sister, Lida, who wanted to make a cowboy out of him, and every day she insisted he ride the ranch to help her father. Bob seemingly acquiesced but managed to steal off and prospect for gold. His favorite panning stream was Fountain Creek. At this time he hadn't heard of Cripple Creek.

Bob hadn't heard of Cripple Creek because it was still unnamed and was not to be named until Levi Welty, of Ohio, brought his family to the rugged valley and initiated ranching. Welty and his three sons were covering a spring house one day when a log got away, caused Welty's gun to go off and injure a hand. A calf frightened by the burst of gunfire, tried to jump the creek and broke its leg. Levi Welty, nursing his injury and regretting the loss of the calf, exclaimed: "Boys, this is sure some cripple creek." And ever after it was so called.

Bob Womack and the Welty's became fast friends. Bob liked to ride over to Cripple Creek and pan in a desultory way for gold.

It was about this time that he became interested in the geological facets of gold-bearing rocks and studied every book on geology he could beg or borrow. Cripple Creek looked promising, he concluded. The valley was of volcanic origin, Bob knew, and it was in such places that gold was found.

However, under his sister, Lida's prodding he pretended to ride on the Womack cows, secretly, he stole out to pan the nearby creeks. It was at this time that a domestic rift in the Womack household changed Bob's life. William, a brother, went back to Kentucky to claim a boyhood sweetheart and when he brought her back to the Womack ranch as his wife the newly-weds collided with the domineering Lida. William located a ranch near the Welty's on Cripple Creek and took Bob with him. Bob wasn't hard to induce to change residences. Prospecting began in earnest now. Bob Womack, reading his genealogical tomes and literature when he could find any, became more and more convinced that Cripple Creek just had to have gold within its bowels. William Womack soon resigned himself to doing things on the ranch himself, for Bob strayed away, day after day, with a pan and shovel.

While Bob Womack was prowling around Cripple Creek, Gen. Palmer was building Colorado railways and the city of Colorado Springs. Queen Mellen Palmer, his wife, although born at Prestonsburg March 26, 1850 when the town had fewer than 100 inhabitants, was a product not of her native Eastern Kentucky hills but of fashionable Flushing, N. Y. and Newport, R. I. Her father, William Proctor Mellen, had operated the Peach Orchard Coal Company for years. Her mother, Isabel Clark, was a daughter of a career soldier, Major Nathan Clarke, and Ellen Seymour Clarke, onetime stationed at Louisa, Lawrence county. Queen, whose actual name was Mary Lincoln, was the only daughter of this union of William P. Mellen and Isabel Clark. When Isabel Clarke Mellen died, her widowed husband married her sister, Ellen, at Louisa, May 21, 1856. To them were born six children. Mellen took his family east when the Civil War erupted and Queen grew up on Long Island, a highly sophisticated girl with education, fashionable clothes and a bit of snobbery.

Gen. Palmer met Queen Mellen on an eastbound train while discussing finances with her father. He was in love at first sight. Almost immediately began the clashing of two ways of life -- the general wanted to develop the central Rockies, his fiancée wanted pleasure at the fashionable resorts of the east and in Europe. Palmer finally convinced her he would create a Newport in the Rockies. They were married Nov. 7, 1870, in Flushing and honeymooned in Europe. They came back from Europe and the general rushed off to Colorado to build a city. He was in a hurry, for he must fulfill his promise to Queen. Colorado Springs was already one year old and while the new town was taking shape under the guidance of lieutenants he would build a castle, fit for a queen, fit for his bride, Queen Palmer.

Out of Colorado Springs was a valley, renamed Queen's Canyon by Palmer. Here, under the shadow of towering Pike's Peak, the general selected a site for Glen Eyrie, his future home. It had no permanent inhabitants except numerous rattlesnakes, and hogs were imported en masse and turned loose to root the snakes out. Glen Eyrie got under way but before anything was finished Queen Palmer came to inspect her new home. When she departed from her husband's Denver & Rio Grande Railway at Colorado Springs the old pioneers, prospectors, mule skippers, miners, gamblers and bordello floozies stared, aghast. Queen Palmer had arrived in a flutter of Parisian lace and fashionable European clothes. Her luggage was mountainous and exhibited the sheen of tooled leather. Gen. Palmer rescued his wife from the stares of the populace and spirited her off to Queen's Canyon.

Queen was shocked with the fledgling town of Colorado Springs with its log railway station and 12 log houses, but her shock turned to disgust with Queen's Canyon. Glen Eyrie was yet but a dream of her empire-building husband. The only accommodation for her was a hayloft over a stable. Her brother and sister, who accompanied her, took refuge in a two-room shack they had hastily thrown up. A few days of the hayloft, and the Palmers retreated to town and took up abode in an unfinished hotel, built to house railroaders and prospectors.

Glen Eyrie began to take shape, reaching upward in the shadow of Pike's Peak to four stories, furnished in all the opulence that wealth could muster. Queen taught school for five weeks, riding to and from school. In mid-December she deserted Colorado Springs, went to Denver for the holidays. She returned to Queen's Canyon after Christmas but decided not to resume teaching and hired a lady friend out of her own funds to continue the instruction.

One day Queen told her husband that she was pregnant, and Gen. Palmer was enthused. The child, he said, could be born in Glen Eyrie. Queen thought otherwise. She took off for New York where her first born was delivered, amid fussing nurses and highly specialized medicos that money buys. Her stay at Glen Eyrie had lasted four months. Subsequent visits became fewer and far between. She and her husband were still deeply in love but between them were vast reaches of two kinds of life, one typified by Newport and New York, the other by the primitive and brawny bustle of Colorado Springs. She came to opulent Glen Eyrie in 1874 but stayed only a short while. She was to return twice more, in 1878 and 1880. After that she took up residence in London, and Gen. Palmer stripped Glen Eyrie down and dedicated his energies to building up Colorado Springs and his railway system.

She and the general were not to forget the 1878 visit, although at the time there seemed little to them that they would recall in after years. They were being driven in their carriage through Colorado Springs when a cowboy came hurtling down the street, (Continued on Page 5)

Well-Designed Engineer

DIANNA LYONS CAME TO WORK AS A CIVIL ENGINEER with the Highway Department, Division of Design in 1967 after graduating from the University of Kentucky, where she majored in civil engineering. Dianna is presently involved in working on the plans for the completion of Interstate 64.

Frankfort. — Paintsville-born Dianna Lyons is a pretty, blue-eyed, 24-year old blond, but she's also a civil engineer associate with the Highway Department Division of Design, and all the men in the division are happy with the lovely scenery.

After graduation from the University of Kentucky in 1967 where she majored in civil engineering, Dianna came to work with the highway department. She chose state government work because she had enjoyed working summers in the department and thought it would be quite interesting to have a full time job in such work.

Dianna's present project is that of working on plans for the completion of Interstate 64. The division is responsible for preparing plans for the state's highways.

"Being an engineering major is hard at first," she says, "but, after awhile the guys accept you. It's really interesting and fun. They don't really think of me as just a girl, but as a fellow engineer."

Dianna's boy-friend, who is a lieutenant with the Air Force in Virginia, likes her career. "He thinks it's fun to tell everyone he is dating a civil engineer."

"My unofficial title around here is Social Director. Whenever there is a birthday or going away party, I wind up planning it. Men just lack that creative touch!"

She still finds time for hobbies. Her favorites include sewing, skiing and travel.

ODDS ON DEATH OR INJURY AT HANDS OF DRUNK DRIVER BY END OF YEAR ARE 4 TO 1

By LEONARD KIMBALL
Frankfort, Ky. — According to a study recently completed by the Kentucky State Police, the number of persons killed in highway accidents involving a drunk or drinking driver during 1968 was down seven per cent from the previous year's total.

Year-end statistics show that the intoxicated driver figured in 189 highway deaths during 1967. In 1968, the fatality count dropped to 176.

"But," said Public Safety Commissioner William O. Newman, "before we all decide that our chances of meeting a drunken driver head-on have lessened, it should be noted that injury rates in drunk driving accidents were way up last year."

"During 1967," he pointed out, "accidents involving an intoxicated driver injured 2403 persons. Last year, the figure climbed to 2470."

"And," he added, "our laboratory technicians processed 2153 blood-alcohol examinations for an increase of 66 per cent over the 1967 total."

"Most of those examinations," he said, "came about as a result of arrests which had nothing to do with an accident, and we don't know how many more of those examinations were conducted by local law enforcement agencies throughout the state."

"Add to that," he said, "still more drivers who appeared in court last year only to have a drunk charge amended to something else — and, unfortunately, we don't have accurate figures in that area, either — and the number of drunks on the highways grows larger still."

"We know," he said, "that at least half of all the auto accidents which happened on our nation's highways last year were caused by a drunk at the wheel. In our own state, your odds on being killed or injured by a drunken driver before this year's end are about four to one."

"There's only one sure way to eliminate the problem, and that's to get the drunk off the road. Revoke his driving, pick up his license plates and let him walk or take a bus."

The state has the machinery and the laws to do it, Newman said, "but it remains for the public to encourage the type of enforcement at local levels, both in the police cruiser and the courts, to get the convictions needed to set that machinery in motion."

"Many good police officers, when discussing the issue of public support," Newman said, "will tell you that if they didn't have to worry about enforcing traffic laws, and could concern themselves only with the solving of crimes, they would then enjoy the greatest of public support."

"I think," he observed, "that the end result here, in many instances, sees the law enforcement agency trying to avoid — as much as possible — taking strict action against traffic violators. And that, in turn, leads to some wishy-washy programs in terms of traffic enforcement efforts.

"And the courts haven't helped the situation," he said. "Certainly, amending a drunk charge to something else which permits the driver to remain behind the wheel is not the way to handle the situation."

We're not telling the courts who should be convicted. Certainly, they're the ones who must weigh the evidence and make that judgment," he said, "but I think that every court should be conscientious about what they're doing, and here the public can help by letting their local judges know what they really want in terms of effective enforcement."

You know, sometimes I wonder if the public really wants highway safety. We all talk about it and we all agree that something very significant should be done about it — until we are the ones being arrested."

"One thing is certain," Newman concluded, "before our present enforcement programs can be enlarged or even made wholly effective, the individual citizen has got to decide just what sort of a price tag he is going to put on a traffic death and all the other injuries and property damage which occurs almost daily on our roads."

"And, if he decides that our accident rate has to be cut, then he's got to get up on his hind legs and sound off — loud, clear and often."

Right or Wrong

By Henry A. Buchanan

Once upon a time there was a cave man named Zog. Now this Zog was a funny sort of guy. He would sit at the entrance to his cave all day, inventing a wheel. While saber-toothed tigers prowled around, threatening the peace and security of the cave dwellers. And Zog's family didn't even have a saber-toothed tiger steak to eat. Not even a tiger skin to keep them warm. They were that poor. Because Zog had hocked all the family's tiger skins to buy round rocks for making wheels.

"Why doesn't Zog do something practical?" Zog's neighbors said. "Like hunting saber-toothed tigers to feed and clothe his family. Instead of sitting around working on wheels all the time. Everybody knows there is no earthly use for a wheel."

"It's the biggest waste of saber-toothed tiger skins I've ever seen," said the chairman of the Committee for Aid to Distressed Cave Dwellers. "Why we could feed and clothe half the underprivileged cave dwellers for what Zog has spent on that wheel."

"Well," said the Chief of the Cave Dwellers, "it's quite an honor to have the first wheel. But I think we had better stop right where we are. No sense in carrying this thing to absurd extremes. After all, nobody needs more than one wheel."

But Zog couldn't seem to get worked up over the dangers of prowling saber-toothed tigers. And he didn't feel disturbed by the absence of tiger skins on the backs of his fellow cave-dwellers. All he was interested in was inventing a wheel.

At last the Committee for Aid to Distressed Cave Dwellers came over to Zog's cave and the chairman of the Committee said: "Now see here, Zog. You've gone far enough with this foolishness. You're going to bankrupt us all. Just why do you have to invent a wheel anyway?"

"I don't know," said Zog. "But I'm going to invent this darned wheel, even if it costs 24 billion saber-toothed tiger skins to do it."

And he did. Thank Zog.

Jenny Wiley Park
No. 3 in Kentucky

Frankfort, July 25—Kentuckians have every reason to be proud of their state parks. They have been admired, envied and studied by other states, and they are generally acknowledged to comprise the best state park system in the country.

There are 35 Kentucky state parks and shrines ranging in size from Constitution Square's one acre in Danville to Pennyriple Forest's 15,000 acres. This doesn't include Kentucky's three national parks, Breaks Interstate that the state shares with Virginia, or the vast TVA development known as Land Between the Lakes.

In 1968 the state parks (including shrines) were visited by some 19.5 million people. Robert Gable, Kentucky's commissioner of parks, says that this year will be even bigger in attendance than 1968.

Twelve of the state's parks are complete vacation resorts and are known as state resort parks. They offer top grade accommodations, excellent food, outstanding scenic beauty and all manner of diversions and recreation for vacationers of all ages and tastes.

There were 738,500 overnight guests in the state parks in 1968. Just under 364,000 of them stayed in lodge rooms and cottages. Around 374,400 stayed in the campgrounds.

By far the most popular is Kentucky Dam Village State Resort Park. Visitors to the park during 1968 totaled just under six million. Overnight guests in the lodges and cottages added up to 88,128 and there were 46,000 campers. So more than 134,000 people spent the night there during the year.

Next in popularity was Cumberland Falls State Resort Park with more than 1.5 million visitors and just over 65,000 overnighters. General Butler State Resort Park had more overnighters (68,135) than Cumberland Falls, but only 748,480 total visitation. Kenlake's picture is similar. It had 65,064 overnighters out of 765,000 park visitors. And Lake Cumberland State Resort Park registered 64,000 park visitors. And Lake Cumberland State Resort Park registered 64,200 overnight guests from its 301,000 visitors. There were 983,208 visitors at Rough River Dam State Resort Park, but only 29,500 of them stayed overnight.

Two outstandingly popular parks that have neither lodges or cottages are Fort Boonesborough, near Richmond, and Levi Jackson, near London. Some 869,600 people spent days at Levi Jackson and 40,500 of them camped at night. And of the 828,650 who spent the days at Fort Boonesborough, 32,300 camped at night.

Jenny Wiley State Resort Park, near Prestonsburg, is the third most popular in the system. It had a visitation of 1,482,000 in 1968, but its overnight guests totaled only 34,500. That's because it has no improved camping area and they do not register the people who use the primitive camp sites.

The national parks in Kentucky draw a tremendous number of people also. Mammoth Cave had 1,540,000 visitors in 1968, 527,000 of them actually taking a cave trip. There were 59,281 overnight guests under roof and 129,500 campers; a total of 188,871.

Cumberland Gap National Historical Park had 246,500 visitors in 1968 and 25,700 of them camped out.

Land Between the Lakes was visited by more than a million people in 1968 and there were 211,000 registered campers. Officials say that a conservative estimate of the people who camped in the wilds and were not registered will run around 200,000. So they actually had more than 400,000 campers during the year.

NOTICE

The Floyd County Board of Education has developed a uniform policy for identifying children eligible to receive free or reduced price meals. The policy was approved August 6, 1969 by the State Department of Education. The policy will be employed system-wide. The policy provides that a uniform application will be used by all schools which can be obtained by interested parents at school.

Each school will have a committee with the Principal as chairman to evaluate each application for free or reduced price meals.

Consideration is given to the size of the family, the number of children in school, the economic condition of the family, and other factors including illness, etc.

Each committee will use a uniform scale compatible with accepted scales used in Welfare Programs in judging economic conditions of families applying for assistance.

Interested parents may review the complete policy at the Principal's office.

Colorado Gold Drama

shooting wildly from two revolvers as his bronc bounced and plunged in the spring mud. He passed the carriage, yelling that he had discovered gold. Queen had the coachman to turn in at the curb.

"Who is that man?" she asked a lounge on the boardwalk. "Oh, that's Bob Womack, from out on Cripple Creek," the man replied. "He thinks he has discovered gold and is celebrating. What he's found is probably just another salted mine."

In 1875 the U. S. Geological and Geographical Survey mapped the area around Pike's Peak and showed Cripple Creek as having been formed from a volcanic eruption. Bob Womack got a copy of the map, threw away his pen and went to work with pick and shovel. He had read enough to know that somewhere in the area lay veins of gold.

In May, 1878, he drew on his bronc's reins to allow the animal to drink. Down under him was the spring of water that the Welty's had covered and had the two crippling accidents. Suddenly, he came to attention. Lying on the ground was a nine-inch piece of rock, almost as light as wood. He dismounted and hefted it up and down. He knew that what he had was a "float," a chunk that had broken off from a rock outcropping, buried in the nearby earth. If it contained gold, then the mother rock contained gold.

Bob sent the rock to a friend in Colorado Springs, asked him to have the "float" assayed. The assayer took the stone in his hands, looked at it without interest. Finally, with the comment that 35-cent charge would be wasted, he told Bob's friend to come back in an hour. When the man returned he found the assayer all smiles and interest. The rock had assayed out $200 per ton. That evening Bob was sitting on the porch of his cabin, gazing off into the creeping darkness, when his friend came riding up on a lathered horse. "Gold!" he cried. "Rock that'll bring $200 a ton."

Bob went to Colorado Springs, tried vainly to induce friends and businessmen in staking him with money to find the mother lode. Most of those he intercepted thought that Bob only wanted money to buy more bourbon. They shook their heads. Bob came to Colorado Springs, day after day, and after filling up with bourbon made the rounds again. Horace W. Bennett took the "float" to Denver to have it assayed. The assayer threw it away, said it couldn't possibly be worth anything.

For eight years Bob searched for the mother lode and in 1886 he staked out his first claim, the Grand View. He worked it for a year, found no gold. In 1889 he went to Colorado Springs and talked to a dentist, John P. Grannis. They went to the basement of the Palmer Hotel, examined a map that showed the Cripple Creek area as having been formed by a volcano. Gold and silver were found in volcanic outcrops, Grannis knew, Bob had convinced him that there was gold on Cripple Creek. He borrowed $500 and grubstaked Bob. For a year Bob dug and sweated. He opened a new claim, the El Paso. The hole he dug was ten feet deep with shafts radiating out in three directions. The shafts showed color.

Bob took samples to Grannis who wrote Prof. Harry Lamb, of Denver, to come out and see. He did, and after careful assays told Bob and Grannis the gold would assay to $250 per ton.

Beginning now for Bob and Grannis was a long period of frustration. Bob took his samples, put them in the window of a feed store. No one appeared interested. Bob got roaring drunk, shot out several street lights and landed in jail. Two friendly carpenters, James Doyle and James F. Burns, bailed him out. Bob told his friends he would soon be so rich that nobody would dare put him in jail. The two carpenters believed Bob's story and spread the word. The story caught on now. County officials and businessmen questioned him. Dr. Grannis hooked his dental tools at the bank and gave Bob another $500. He was to receive one-half of what Bob found. It was early in 1891 and after several days of strenuous labor Bob remembered a man he had met back in Colorado Springs. It might be that Winfield Scott Stratton, building contractor, could help with finances. Bob rode out to Colorado Springs, bought a bottle of bourbon outside the corporate limits of the town and went on a search for "Old Man Stratton," as he was called.

Winfield Scott Stratton, born in 1848 in Jeffersonville, Indiana, left home as a young man because he disliked, and quarrelled with, his father, Myron, and hated his stepmother. He did not know anything of his antecedents, in fact, did not know the name of his grandfather until he became a multi-millionaire and fawning newspapermen dug it up. He had heard a few vague traditions about the Strattons, one being that back in the ancestral line there was a Solomon, called King Solomon because he had so many sons. This was an old tradition, one that was still being recalled in the first decade of the century by the Floyd county, Kentucky Strattons for the genealogist, Harriett R. Stratton, of Chattanooga, when she visited the area.

He had heard a few vague traditions about the Strattons, one being that back in the ancestral line there was a Solomon, called King Solomon because he had so many sons. This was an old tradition, one that was still being recalled in the first decade of the century by the Floyd county, Kentucky Strattons for the genealogist, Harriett R. Stratton, of Chattanooga, when she visited the area.

Slowly, Stratton eased out west, plying his trade as carpenter. He heard of the booming new town of Colorado Springs and went there in 1872 and with various co-partners built some of the better wooden structures. When he worked for others he charged $3 per day. Unschoolled and almost illiterate, he was, however, quick with figures and had a ready grasp of business.

When carpentry was slack or he had accumulated a few dollars, he would take a burro and slip away to the mountains to search for gold. He would be gone for days, sometimes weeks. He had been prospecting long before he came to the Pike's Peak country. For 17 years the lure of gold had been the one great passion of his life.

Bob Womack found him at home in a cabin on the outside environs of Colorado Springs. They had known each other, distantly, for months. In fact, nearly everybody knew Bob Womack. He had caroused too many times in Colorado, shot out too many street lights not to become a celebrity. Stratton had heard that Bob was trying to convince businessmen that there was gold on Cripple Creek.

Old Man Stratton, yielding to Bob's importunity, finally agreed to inspect the Cripple Creek valley. They took a whole week, looked at Bob's El Paso and Grand View diggings, found little to interest him. Bob pointed to the assay results but Stratton argued that many assays had been wrong. In Stratton's view, there just wasn't any gold worthwhile in Cripple Creek. To satisfy Bob Womack he staked out a claim, July 4, 1891, named it Independence, and both returned to Colorado Springs. Bob got drunk again that night but nobody called the law. People were beginning to feel that maybe, just maybe, Bob was on the road to riches.

That year 1891 the gold-rushers fell upon the Colorado Springs region like a swarm of locusts. In April a group of miners, businessmen and promoters met at a nearby ranch and organized a mining district. Cripple Creek had gold, they felt, and mining laws were needed. Some wanted to call the six-mile wide area being laid out as the Bob Womack Mining District. Others suggested Cripple Creek Mining District. Bob Womack lost his chance to have his name tagged on it by six votes.

Prospectors swarming into Colorado Springs found that Bob Womack would take a bottle of bourbon and show them the best sites to stake out claims. Drunk or sober, he held on to his El Paso, for awhile. Then, one day, he went back into the hills and marked out the Womack Placer. He didn't like to mine, however. He liked better to drink and carouse around Colorado Springs and losing heavily in a poker game one night, he hunted up Dr. Grannis and sold his half of El Paso for $300. Grannis sold four-fifths of it for $8,000. Soon, one tenth of it went for $10,000.

Cripple Creek soon became a town, a roaring, lusty, rich town, teeming with prospectors, tenderfeet, gamblers, crooks, and easy women. It became Bob Womack's town. He liked to walk down the street and be pointed out as the discoverer of Cripple Creek gold. Instead of digging for gold, however, he spent days at poker playing, and general hell-raising while drunk. Someone told him that Old Man Stratton had sold his Independence mine for $10,000,000. "Poor old Stratton," Bob said, "all that money to worry about. I don't envy him a bit."

One day he was walking down the street when a prospector accosted him, sought to buy a certain claim that Bob had staked and almost forgotten. Bob had been told that morning that he had tuberculosis and perhaps didn't have long to live. What was the use of holding on to a claim on Cripple Creek when you were going to die? He sold the claim for $300, changed the money into one-dollar bills, picked a favorite street corner and started to give the money away, bill by bill.

Bob was now destitute except for the Womack Placer, a doubtful digging that hadn't been exploited. One day he was going down the street in the direction of the Red Light Saloon when he saw Old Man Stratton sitting on a garbage can on the sidewalk. Stratton's wealth had now soared to $16,000,000, Bob had been told.

Stratton saw Bob, jumped up and slapped him on the shoulder, asked how much he would take for the Womack Placer. Bob said $5,000. Stratton nodded his head in agreement and they went into a bank where the multi-millionaire wrote a check. Bob cashed it in small bills. He wanted to drink a bit, play some poker. Big bills were a nuisance, he said.

Playing poker for as long as three days at a time and consuming great quantities of alcohol, Bob found, was not conducive to holding a roll intact. Slowly, the roll decreased. He gave part of it to his sister with whom he was boarding. One way to have fun with a roll, he found, was to hunt up little boys and girls and give everyone he could find a dollar bill.

When the money was all gone from the Womack Placer he went home to bed, lingering on for months, his strength drained away by tuberculosis. His sister worried what they were going to do for money. A newspaper editor, in an unaware moment of slip-ing lucidity, thought he could raise $10,000 for Bob's care. He gave up in disgust when he gathered only $991. "For a man who gave Colorado incalculable millions in a new gold field there was only $891 worth of gratitude," the editor snorted.

Bob lingered, deserted by everyone but his sister. Two years before he died, his friend Stratton remembered and on Christmas sent a check for $5,000. It was the last gesture of the town he had made possible, but it was sufficient for his needs. His sister husbanded the money and it lasted the remaining years.

Queen Palmer, the Prestonsburg-born wife of Gen. Palmer, could remember her fellow Kentuckian only as a drunken cowboy, racing wildly through the streets in Colorado Springs, firing away in his alcoholic exuberance at the few lights. She died three days after Christmas, 1894, having spent the last years as a social moth fluttering around the bright lights of European resorts and salons. Gen. Palmer, driven by ambition and engaging in reckless activity, fell from a horse and lived with a broken neck and spine until 1909, Stratton, "worrying about all that money," as Womack said, lived an austere life in a small house, trying vainly to spend or invest the influx of money that engulfed him. At last, beset by lawsuits, he resorted to whiskey as his only solace and destroyed his health. He died in 1902, morose, taciturn, embittered at the world that gave him so much trouble.

Only Bob Womack, unlike the other participants in the drama of Cripple Creek, had escaped the burden of great wealth and then only because he cared nothing for it.

KNOW THE TRUTH

1. If We Increase the Number of Outlets for Alcoholic Beverages, We Multiply the Crime and Lawlessness Which Drinking Incites.

In Knoxville, Tenn., the year after the city voted wet, this is what happened: traffic deaths due to drinking rose 312%; bootlegging rose 250%; murder rose 37%; robbery rose 97%; rape rose 315%; assault rose 86%; larceny rose 49%; and teen-age drinking rose unbelievably high. (Information supplied by the American Business Men's Research Foundation, Chicago, Ill.)

2. If We Increase the Number of Outlets for Alcoholic Beverages, We Make Drinks Available to More People — Young and Old.

If you think it is bad now with the bootlegger, just think what it will be like when both the tavern keeper and the boot legger work together to push their products.

3. If We Increase the Number of Drinking Places, We Will Increase the Number of Drinkers [Most of Whom Will Be Young People].

Also, all the dangers of drinking will be increased and it will be necessary to increase the number of policemen and deputy sheriffs. When Post, Texas, went wet drunkenness increased 483%; driving while intoxicated increased 1000%; convictions for possession, transportation, and sale of alcoholic beverages (bootlegging) increased 210%; disturbing the peace increased 566%; murders increased 300% and death on the highway increased 600%.

4. If Whiskey, Wine, Beer and Other Alcoholic Beverages Are Displayed Publicly, Our Children and Young People Will Assume that These Are Wholesome, Harmless, and Socially Acceptable Products — Which They Are Not.

As a result, teen-age drinking, along with alcohol addiction and crime, will increase.

5. If We Increase the Number of Outlets for Alcoholic Beverages, Every Other Business Will Suffer Loss, in Direct Proportion as the Alcoholic Beverage Business Prospers.

The Federal Reserve System's Sixth District of Retail Store Sales show that Knoxville's retail sales increased 9% the year before legal liquor came in, but the year after legal liquor sales began, the retail sales DECREASED 4%. (Good for business — whose business? Not the retail merchant's)

Let Floyd County Progress...

Legal Control
 Means Progress
 For Floyd County

The issue of the local option election this month is not wet or dry. We are already wet, illegally. The real issue is whether legal control or outlaw control will best bring progress to Floyd county.

THINK OVER THESE THINGS:

1. Floyd county, with its tourist attractions, has possibilities of being a convention center for the state. Legal control will encourage conventions to return more than once. Compare our own difference with that of the number of convention repeats in the Owensboro and Paducah area.
2. Counties of Kentucky having legal control of alcoholic beverages have over 75% of the industrial development in the state.
3. Industry prefers Law and Order in new locations and frowns on illegal traffic of anything, including alcoholic beverages.
4. Alcoholic beverages brought $10,220,104.00 revenue into the state treasury during fiscal year '68-'69. Under legal control, Floyd county, by law, can double state license fees on each outlet, plus adding to its property tax assessment. Our two 4th class cities will also benefit, taxwise, under local control.
5. Legal control can be effective in Floyd county. Our citizens are better educated than they were 23 years ago. We now have a high-class, educated State Police force which did not exist 23 years ago. The Alcoholic Beverage Control Board itself has one or more agents operating in this county—not so 23 years ago.

For Greater Progress for Floyd County --
 For Better Law Enforcement in Floyd County --
 For Sane, Sensible Handling of Alcoholic Beverages in Floyd County ...

HEWLETT'S GRANDSON PLAYS WITH UNUSUAL DANCE BAND

Mr. and Mrs. Horton D. Hewlett, of Prestonsburg, have a grandson who is a member of an unusual musical organization. The 18-piece band of which he is a member, the Sounds of Tyme, is hailed by the Columbus (O.) Dispatch Magazine as a "New Band with the Old Sound."

What makes the group of youngsters unusual, in addition to their musical talent, is the fact that all are high school boys who play the old songs in a way that holds audiences spellbound. And there's not a hippie-type boy in the group, not even one who smokes.

They have had the advantage of retired professional musicians as directors, and they lend the "big band sound" to old favorites such as "Stardust," "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes," "Sentimental Journey" and other numbers made famous by Artie Shaw, Woody Herman, Tommy Dorsey, Les Brown and others.

Dale Groves, one of the two musicians who formed the group in Columbus, says:

"To be in this band a young man must be able to read music. He must be well-groomed, with hair neatly trimmed, and he must be compatible with the rest of the group. None of our boys smoke. In fact, we turned down one who did. We are not reformers, but we want good kids, and we want to keep them that way."

The band-member with Prestonsburg antecedents is Pat Fridley, son of Mr. and Mrs. Mike Fridley, of Columbus. His mother is the former Virginia Ann Hewlett.

The University of Kentucky maintains a cooperative project with Thailand in the development of a regional Agricultural Center in Tha Phra, Northeast Thailand.

FLOYD COUNTY COURT

In Re:
Petition For Local Option Election In Floyd County.

ORDER

Court convened at 10 o'clock A. M. on this July 10, 1969, pursuant to an order entered June 23, 1969, at the regular term of this court, and thereupon the following proceeding was had:

A petition for a local option election, pursuant to KRS. 242.020, having been filed with the clerk of this court on the 11 day of June, 1969, which petition contained the signatures of voters of Floyd County in excess of 25% of the votes cast in Floyd County at the last preceding general election held in this county, and which petition is as required by law, and the court having considered all of the same and being sufficiently advised, is of the opinion that it is the duty of this court, this being an adjourned session of the regular June 23, 1969 term of court following the filing of said petition, to order the holding of a local option election in Floyd County, Kentucky, as more particularly set forth hereinafter.

It is, therefore, ordered by the court that a local option election shall be held in Floyd County, Kentucky, on the 23 day of August, 1969, between the hours of 6 o'clock A.M., Eastern Daylight Saving Time, and 6 o'clock P.M., Eastern Daylight Saving Time, consistent with the election laws provided by the Kentucky Revised Statutes, and said election shall be conducted as follows:

(a) There shall be held an election in Floyd County, Kentucky, in all precincts of said county, and the question to be placed upon the ballots for said election as follows:

"Are you in favor of the sale of alcoholic beverages in Floyd County, Kentucky?"

The County Court Clerk shall issue such notices, as are required by the filing of this order and shall prepare all ballots consistent with this order, and do all other things necessary and incidental to, as required by the Kentucky Revised Statutes, in the preparation for and the carrying out of this election.

There shall be ballots printed and issued in accordance with the above order, and said voting by the regular voters in the respective voting precincts of Floyd County, designated above, shall be tabulated in accordance with the general election laws and the results of said election shall be tabulated as to determine the results of said voting precincts, as set out above.

ORDERED THAT COURT BE ADJOURNED.

This 17th day of July, 1969.
HENRY STUMBO,
County Judge

Nunnery and Son Racing Opponents

A rare father-son driver combination, composed of former Floyd countians, figured prominently July 19 in a racing feature at the Atomic Speedway, near Portsmouth, Ohio, and at the finish it was the father who wound up with his first main-event win at the track.

Al Nunnery, of South Point, O., a former motorcycle racer, took the lead at the midway point in the race after his son, Tucker, had spun out between the first and second turns. The elder Nunnery was the only duplicate winner of the night by taking the helmet dash for the four fastest cars and also placing third in the fast heat. His son won the first heat.

The elder Nunnery is the son of Mrs. Ethel Hall, of Prestonsburg.

The Floyd County Conference

Free Will Baptists

Adopted a resolution, at its meeting on April 5, 1969, to oppose the sale, in any fashion, of alcoholic beverages in Floyd county. It further resolved to do everything in its power to defeat the Wet forces in the coming local option election.

LEWIS H. DOTSON, Clerk

KNOW the TRUTH

Many people in Floyd County are asking sincere questions about the wet-dry election coming up August, 23rd.

The Floyd County Christian Dry League will attempt to answer as many of these questions as possible in our ads in this newspaper before the election. Our answers will be based upon the best information we can secure from lawyers, The Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, The Temperance League of Kentucky, trustworthy citizens and other reliable sources.

This is no time for guesswork. You want facts and figures, not opinions. We will do our best to answer your questions with the facts.

QUESTION 1:

WHY ARE WE HAVING ANOTHER WET-DRY ELECTION IN FLOYD COUNTY WHEN THE DRYS WON A SIMILAR ELECTION JUST THREE YEARS AGO?

ANSWER:

We are having another wet-dry election because a small group of greedy men in Floyd County got up petitions with a sufficient number of signatures on them to ask for another election. This is not a mass or popular movement among the people of Floyd County to vote the county wet—they had a hard time getting enough signatures. We are having another wet-dry election because this small group of greedy men are hungry for those 'whiskey dollars' and are not concerned about how many people are killed on our highways by drunken drivers or how many children have to go hungry. Their only concern is for the money they make out of other people's misfortune and misery.

QUESTION 2:

WHAT ARE THE ISSUES OF THIS WET-DRY ELECTION IN FLOYD COUNTY?

ANSWER:

There is only one issue in this election—the question is: Will Floyd County remain dry or will it become wet. (We are not voting for any kind of controlled sale of alcoholic beverages, such as city owned or state owned 'package' stores or a few 'nice' cocktail lounges.) We are voting on whether Floyd County will remain dry, or whether Floyd County will be 'wide open' with many beer halls and 'honky tonks' and many saloons or package stores.

QUESTION 3:

WHY WAS THE WET-DRY ELECTION CONTESTED BY THE WETS, THREE YEARS AGO, WHEN THE DRYS WON?

ANSWER:

The election was contested three years ago because this small group of men thought they could win in the courts (and behind closed doors) what they could not win in an open election. The dries won the election by the vote of the people. The dries won the Contest Suit because the wets violated The Corrupt Practices Act.

QUESTION 4:

IF FLOYD COUNTY GOES WET, WILL TAXES BE LOWERED AND WILL FLOYD COUNTY RECEIVE ANY REVENUE FROM THE SALE OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES?

ANSWER:

No, taxes in Floyd County would not be lowered if the county went wet. Our county would receive NOTHING from the sale of beer, whiskey and other alcoholic beverages. All the taxes on alcoholic beverages go to the State and Federal Governments—and you know that when tax money from Eastern Kentucky goes to Frankfort, it is used in and around Louisville and Lexington and very little, if any, of it ever gets back to the mountains. The ONLY REVENUE Floyd County would receive directly would be from the sale of licenses to the retailers of alcoholic beverages. This would possibly amount to from 8 to 10 thousand dollars a year. But when you consider the fact that more policemen and deputy sheriffs would be required to patrol the highways and control the drunks, it would cost the people of Floyd County in excess of $60,000 a year to go wet. (Information obtained from Joe Wheeler Lewis, Sheriff of Floyd County.) RESULT: Net loss to the county of at least $50,000 in law enforcement alone.

QUESTION 5:

WOULD VOTING FLOYD COUNTY WET GET RID OF BOOTLEGGERS AND SOLVE THE BOOTLEGGING PROBLEM?

ANSWER:

No. Voting Floyd County wet would only increase and complicate the problem of bootlegging. It would give the bootlegger more cover and make it impossible to apprehend him. The Floyd County Christian Dry League is opposed to the sale of alcoholic beverages, legal or illegal — by the tavern keeper as well as by the bootlegger. Let us remember that vile as the bootlegger is, he is not more vile than the tavern keeper, who under license, sells exactly the same beverage alcohol. It is not the bootlegger that kills on the highway; it is not the bootlegger that destroys the home or causes the alcoholic — it is the beverage alcohol that he sells, which is the same beverage alcohol that would be sold by the tavern keeper. Beverage alcohol is the killer, whether it is bought in the back alley from a bootlegger or from a tavern keeper on main street. Bootlegging actually becomes worse in wet territory. On July 16, 1969, a petition was presented in the Perry County Court asking for a Local Option Election in the Buckhorn precinct. Perry County is wet, but this precinct wants to vote dry. WHY? Because bootlegging has become intolerable and cannot be controlled. (And this is 'legal control' wet territory). To say that you can get rid of the bootlegger by voting the county wet and thus solve the bootlegging problem is like saying that if you have a leak in your house, just take the whole roof off and it will solve your problem. How mixed-up can you get? You know, as well as I do, that that kind of solution would leave the whole county 'all wet' and allow the bootlegger to come out of hiding and have free run of the whole county.

QUESTION 6:

WHERE DO THE DRYS GET THE MONEY TO FINANCE THE WORK OF THE FLOYD COUNTY CHRISTIAN DRY LEAGUE?

ANSWER:

The dries get their money by donations from churches, concerned business men, Christian laymen and people who do not want to see Floyd County like it was when it was wet before. Wonder where the wets are getting all their money?

LADDER-BACK CHAIR BROUGHT TO STATE BY DANIEL BOONE NOW OWNED BY UK MUSEUM

A ladder-back chair, made in Pennsylvania about 244 years ago and brought to Kentucky from North Carolina by Daniel Boone 190 years ago, now is in the possession of the University of Kentucky.

It is one of the most popular tourist attractions at historic Waveland mansion, which houses the Kentucky Life Museum on Higbee Mill Road in Fayette county.

Dr. Hambleton Tapp explains that the chair was brought over the mountains in 1779. The museum's director-curator and former professor of history at UK says the chair was donated by the late Miss Stella LaMond of Dallas, Texas. It was the donor's sister, Miss Lila K. LaMond, who noted in a letter to Dr. Tapp "there is a chair exactly like it, with the exception of the arms, in the Detroit Museum of Arts, dated 1725 and listed as a Pennsylvania type of chair." The LaMond sisters had been visitors to Waveland and the former owner designated in her will that the chair be given to the museum. Miss Stella LaMond died in November, 1968, and the chair was sent soon thereafter to Waveland by her sister.

A documented history of the chair had been carefully prepared by Dr. Tapp who explains that the first known owner of the chair was Elizabeth Boone, sister of the famed explorer. According to family tradition, the walnut and hickory chair was made in Pennsylvania and taken by the Boones to North Carolina when they migrated to the Yadkin River country in 1751-52.

It was given by Elizabeth Boone, wife of William Grant, to her daughter Rebecca Boone Grant as a wedding present when Rebecca married James LaMond, April 10, 1793, in Fayette county, Kentucky. William Grant was one of the founders of Bryan Station.

One of the LaMond family accounts states that "Rebecca Boone Grant was only two and one-half years old when she came to Kentucky with her parents, her sisters and brothers, the Boones, the Byrans, the Callows and others who settled at Boonesborough. Later she moved with this group of intrepid pioneers to Bryan's Station (Fayette county).

"On the trip over the mountains from Rowan county, North Carolina, the young Rebecca rode in the chair balanced on the side of the pack animal by a similar chair in which rested an anvil."

At Rebecca's death on Nov. 7, 1858, the chair went to her son, J. J. LaMond I, and from him to his son, J. J. LaMond II, who was Stella Lamond's father.

A newspaper article in the January 3, 1935, issue of the Union county (Ky.) Advocate stated that the chair originally "had two sets of arms but the pack ropes cut so deeply into the upper pair that they were later removed. About the year 1850 the bottom of the chair succumbed to many years of wear and was replaced by a corn-shuck twine bottom, made by Uncle Frank, a family Negro slave. Despite the chair's constant use since that time, the bottom is still in good condition."

Although it is beginning to show signs of wear, it presently can support the weight of an adult without any apparent strain. There is no record of what became of the identical chair that held the anvil on the trip across the mountains, as Daniel Boone lead his family and relatives to Kentucky for the second time. His wife and children had returned to North Carolina in 1778 when they thought he was dead. He had been taken prisoner by the Indians and forced to accompany them to Detroit.

It is believed the chair went through the siege of Bryan Station in August, 1782, when Indian war parties repeatedly attacked the settlers there. Elizabeth Boone Grant and her eight-year-old daughter, Rebecca, were among the heroines who carried water from a spring to Bryan Station during the siege. The women went out to get the water during a lull in the fighting even though the attackers were still in the vicinity. William Bryan, principal founder of the station, was the patriarch of a family that prospered in Central Kentucky and his descendants built Waveland, headquarters of the museum, in 1847. He was a brother-in-law of Daniel Boone, having married Mary Boone. The large migration of Boones, Bryans and Grants from North Carolina to Kentucky occurred in October, 1779, Dr. Tapp notes. It was during this trip that the "Boone chair" arrived in Kentucky.

Dr. Tapp's collection of historical information states that the LaMond family was living in Trimble county in the early 1850's, having lived prior to that time in what later was to become Pendleton county. In 1854, John James LaMond left the village of Milton and floated down the Ohio River on a raft made of the lumber and logs from his house. On arriving at Uniontown, he transported the lumber to his farm near Morganfield where he reassembled the house. He lived there with his family until he died in 1893. The Boone chair was part of the household goods on the raft that landed at Uniontown on the bank of the Ohio. Morganfield is eight miles south.

Miss Lila Katherine LaMond, social and religious worker and former missionary to China, now is residing in Dallas. Her sister, the late Stella Lodge LaMond, was head of the Department of Art for 20 years at Southern Methodist University, Dallas.

'Whatsoever Things'

By DONALD E. WILDMON

Criticism — all of us, at one time or another, are victims of it. And all of us, sometimes too often, are guilty of it. But there is nothing basically wrong with criticism in itself, it is only that we humans have a way of mis-using it.

Most of our criticism isn't constructive, or even given in a spirit of helpfulness. Most of our criticism is nothing more than our attempt to belittle another's efforts. And that's where the real problem comes in. We have no higher purpose in our criticism than to make someone else look bad.

It is too bad that we don't use criticism like our Maker intended for us to use it, in a spirit of love and concern for those we criticize. I have an idea that if we used it in this method, there would be a lot less of it and more constructive results from it.

Did you even notice that those who get the most criticism usually give very little of it? And, at the same time, these people usually do the most good for society and are appreciated the least for their efforts. Sure, there are exceptions. But, generally speaking, that's the way it appears. I guess the reason that those who get criticized the most give very little criticism is that they know the deep hurt which cruel, cutting, unfair criticism brings. There are very few hurts that can compare with it.

No one is immune to criticism. And those who more fully try to follow the way of the Galilean sometimes suffer most. Many have been the number of people who have been pure in heart and sincerely trying to help their fellowman who have been criticized ever so harshly.

I may be wrong about the matter, but I am of opinion that if we are to be critical of someone, or their way, we should at least offer a better way. Else, what good have we accomplished by our criticism? Any idiot can be critical without being constructive.

The Fisher of Men once said said something about having a log in our own eye and trying to take a splinter from the eye of another. He said we would do well to first get the log from our own eye before trying to remove the splinter from our neighbor's eye. You know, the tragedy is that we don't follow this very practical advice. No, sir, we can spot the smallest splinter in another while looking straight through our own log. 'Tis a real shame that this is the case, but the case it is.

Once a man sets his sights high in this life, he has opened the door for severe criticism. For history records that those who have done the most for mankind have been those who have suffered most. So if one has ambitions about leaving the world a better place to live in, he had better get prepared for the criticism that will follow.

And while we know that to be truth, somehow it just doesn't take away the hurt that criticism brings.
