Our Fragile Earth

By DR. JERRY HOWELL,
Director of Environmental Studies
Morehead State University

This article begins a series on urbanization, including its environmental implications. Our large cities usually were initially centered around one major industry, a major geographic feature, around particular manmade features or a combination of the three. Venice, Italy, was built on a river delta for protection from possible sea attacks and because of the city's oceanic trade markets. Paris and London were located on large rivers, as were countless other cities along the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. The rapid growth of cities like Lexington, Ky., and Indianapolis, Ind., was a result of central locations with regard to railroads and interstate highways. New York City, San Francisco and others sprang up around adaptable harbor systems. The early growth of these major cities was generally unchecked by legal or authoritative measures and was usually only restricted by economics. The unparalleled growth of the human population and the inherent economic drawing power of cities have contributed to rapid building programs in our major cities and construction and expansion became and are false idols, blinding many city officials to the obvious differences between quantity of life, standard of living and the quality of life. Few people disagree with the obvious attainment of the quantity of life and the increased standard of living. There are certainly enough people on this planet (an increasingly popular opinion is that there are too many) and there is little evidence to support the theory that we will actually willingly reduce the number of earthlings, although in a few countries, the rate of increase has slowed. The standard of living has gradually risen in many industrialized nations to the point where more people than ever before are enjoying "the good life." This does not discount the severe and widening chasm between the rich and the poor nations; the rich get richer while the poor get hungrier. The problems in industrialized countries and some underdeveloped countries that accompany a higher quantity of life and an elevated standard of living are ecological. Both our increased quantity of life and our higher standard of living result in a lowered quality of life, at least to some degree, for their inhabitants. The dreams of utopian city planners have been shattered by sprawling growth, high crime rates, air and water pollution, solid waste and sewage problems, overtaxed transportation systems, graft and greed, unreasonable worker and public demands, and general unrest. It is not a pretty picture.

Thoughts at Election-Time

A political campaign which has been described as "a mammoth exercise in mediocrity" has ended, and as this is written the American voter is contributing to the sorry show by a shocking disregard of the right to vote.

As a matter of fact, neither Gerald Ford nor Jimmy Carter is as lacking in the qualities needed as might be thought. Television, radio and press have exposed both to every searching beam of publicity, and both have been forced to act and react "on camera," so to speak. The result has been proof of the saying that "familiarity breeds contempt."

Had he been forced to go before the American public in 1976 fashion, exposed to the pitiless glare of publicity via camera, spoken and printed word, and all this seen and heard almost instantaneously, with scores of columnists picking at his every remark, wonder what sort of figure "Silent Cal" Coolidge would have cut as a candidate? Or Thomas Jefferson, who wrote brilliantly but spoke, as Goldsmith, "like poor Polli"?

And, standing before the cameras, how would the now-immortal Lincoln have fared—that gaunt, ungainly figure whose clothes "looked like they had been slept in"?

Or how would the voters of today react to Lincoln's furloughing of troops in the crisis of civil war, so that they might go home and vote for him in his second campaign for the presidency?

There are no halos for politician's heads, these days. If the microscopic inspection of public figures by electronic reporting had existed in the so-called "glory days" of the Republic, halos might have faded from the market.

A man with feet of clay, a fact we all know, will be elected this day. But, whoever he is, we believe because it is our earnest hope, he will find inspiration in the office of the Presidency and, motivated by a desire to occupy a high place in the history of his nation, will serve the country well.

Perhaps we should add, and not by rote or as an afterthought: God, bless America.

So much for the cold, scientific mechanics of tall fish tales. Now we return to Gladding's announcement. They have divided the contest into two divisions—one for amateurs, the other for professionals—and I think I may write to ask them since when were tellers of tall fish tales anything but professionals.

Anyway, in case you're interested, send your—er, story to:

Bob Fain in last Sunday's Lexington Herald-Leader reprinted our old item about the linotype operator whose trouble, along with ours, began in a cornfield, long ago, etcetera. Then he asked: "Could it be that this credit to the newspaper game moved to Lexington the following week?"

That's getting closer than Mr. Fain may think. And I am here to assure one and all that this linotype operator is a credit to the newspaper game as played in Lexington or any other place.

WEIGH THAT BEAR!

When a bill was proposed in the West Virginia state assembly prohibiting the killing of bears weighing less than 100 pounds, State Senator C. N. Harman rushed in with an amendment.

His amendment required a hunter to carry a scale with him, and wrestle on to it any bear whose weight could not be clearly seen. If the bear was less than 100 pounds, it was to be set free. If over, it was to be released and then the hunter could "fire at will."

Senator Richard Bensen objected to that, and made an amendment to the amendment. Instead of "fire at will," it read "fire at the bear."

After a heated debate, both amendments were defeated. West Virginia bear hunters were reported relieved at the final vote.

JUST IN CASE

I confess, I have been neglecting my old friend, Watt Hale, again, but Bob Shultz hasn't, and he came away with a laugh. He reports that Watt has eschewed chewin', but that he still has a fancy, shiny cuspidor within easy range.

"Since you've quit chewing, why the cuspidor?" he asked his host, who replied:

"Every once in a while I catch myself aimin' at it."

(Forty Years Ago issue missing)

by Neville Shackelford
UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY • COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE

In the year 1519, when that intrepid and cruel Spanish adventurer, Hernando Cortez, was rambling around in Mexico searching for gold and mistreating the natives, he found them adulterating their tobacco with a substance they called by the all but unpronounceable name of "Xochiococtzoquahuilit."

These natives, the Aztecs, also burned this substance as incense and used it in treating all sorts of ailments ranging from colds to skin disorders.

Being a somewhat, educated and well-informed man, Cortez recognized this substance as liquidambar, a commodity obtained at great price by European merchants trading with the Orient. This substance was used by Europeans, too, in perfume, incense and medicine.

Even under torture, as the folklore stories go, the Aztecs never revealed to Cortez the source of this precious substance. However, nine years later, in 1528, another Spanish explorer—one Alvar Numez Cabeza de Vaca, by name—had better luck. While exploring the fair and sunny land we now know as Florida, he discovered that this valuable stuff was a resin, a "liquidambar" that exuded from wounds made in the bark of a tree we now know as the American sweetgum, a tree whose leaves are the first to turn purple in the fall.

And strange as it may seem, liquidambar is still collected from the sweetgum and is known to the American drug trade today, not as the Aztec "Xochiococtzoquahuilit," but as "Storax," a word more easily pronounced.

But, according to the National Standard Dispensatory, a one-time bible of druggists, this substance of the Aztecs is still used in the flavoring of tobacco, in perfume to make the girls' smell sweeter, in scented soap and other toilet articles and in the preparation of some medicines, especially to treat scabies.

And so goes the romance of Liquidambar styraciflua, "the American sweetgum, a tree that is common to Kentucky and which often takes over in abandoned crop fields, especially along small watercourses.

In areas where the sweetgum is not too common, persons only slightly familiar with trees often referred to this tree as a maple. This is because the leaf of a sweetgum is star-shaped and vaguely resembles a maple leaf. In all other respects, however, the two trees differ. Sweetgum leaves, for instance, are attached alternately on a twig. Maple leaves are attached in pairs opposite each other on twigs. And something else as a method of differentiation, sweetgum twigs often have irregular corky wings or ridges not found on maple twigs.

Flint Is Associated With Inez Law Firm

Dr. Ted Flynt, a May graduate of the University of Louisville Law School, where he received a Doctor of Jurisprudence degree, has become associated in the practice of law with Inez attorneys John W. Kirk and Thomas D. Muncy.

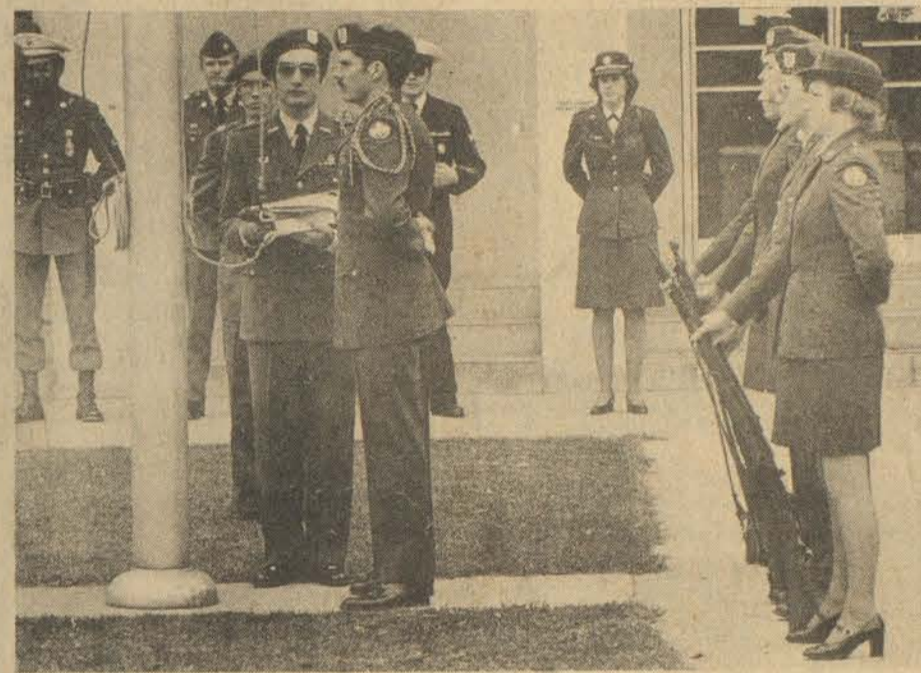

Dr. Flynt is a native of Magoffin county and a graduate of Salyersville High School. He is a Vietnam veteran and a 1973 graduate of Morehead State University where he studied political science. Upon graduation from Morehead, he entered the University of Louisville School of Law.

Dr. Flynt and his wife, Linda, currently reside on Blacklog in Martin county. They are members of the First Baptist Church, of Salyersville.

Red, White & Blue Day Scenes

THIS PATRIOTIC FLOAT was entered by the Dwale Child Development Center.

THIS R.O.T.C. UNIT from Morehead State University officiated at flag-raising ceremonies at the courthouse here to open Saturday's Red, White and Blue Day activities.

THE SHRINERS were present in force with all manner of humorous costumes and vehicles.

'Politics in the Blood . . .'

It has been said that Eastern Kentuckians are natural politicians, finding a place in public life wherever they are transplanted. Now and again, a particular event or bit of news points up this view.

Such was a letter received last week from Marion Hughes telling of his record of public service since leaving Floyd county. Born at Spurlock and reared at Hippo, Mr. Hughes' letter follows in part:

"I was appointed to a four-year term on the Board of Public Affairs in the town of Shiloh, Ohio. I have served in this job 14 years before this term in charge of water, electricity and sewerage. During the 14 years, we remodelled the water plant, replaced all the streets with new mercury lights—we have the best lighted small town in the state of Ohio. I served as Chief of Police and ran for mayor. . . . got defeated by two votes and ran the next term and won by over 100 votes. The mayor we have now, Grady McDonald, is from near Prestonsburg. I was elected to the Board two terms on a write-in vote. I have lived in Shiloh for 24 years and have served 20 years on the fire department while I was on the Board of Public Affairs. I am employed with General Service Administrator. . . . have 25 years with the government at the old Shelby Air Force Base, Shelby, Ohio. I worked for the Plymouth Board of Education at nights for 13 years, and am now warehouse foreman.

My wife, Hattie, is employed at Pioneer Rubber Company, Willard, Ohio, where she has worked for 24 years."

R. V. May Company Opens Third Outlet With Pikeville Store

Greg Campbell, of Dwale, former Prestonsburg High School athlete, is manager of the Pikeville store.

90,000 Immunized in State, First Week of Swine Flu Clinics

Frankfort, Ky.—During the first week of swine flu clinics in Kentucky, 90,000 persons were immunized, said Dr. C. Hernandez, director of the Division for Preventive Services for the Department for Human Resources.

Turnout at the first clinics was poor but now is picking up, said Dr. Hernandez, who has visited many counties where the clinics are taking place. "Some people were waiting to see if others had significant reactions to the vaccine. There have been no significant reactions and now more and more people are showing up at the clinics for their immunization."

As of Oct. 28, Kentucky has received 779,200 doses of vaccine from the federal government for distribution to clinics. "If delivery takes place as promised, we don't anticipate any problems in supplying the clinics with the amount of vaccine they need," said Hernandez.

Dr. Hernandez was especially strong in praising communities for supporting the immunization efforts of their local health departments. "The health departments have shown a tremendous amount of leadership and involvement with the community in making the clinics successful," he said.

By Nov. 18, all 120 Kentucky counties will have had at least one flu immunization clinic. Clinics began Oct. 16 in Jefferson county and Oct. 17 in Scott county.

People who miss their county's clinic day can still go to their county health department for vaccination, Dr. Hernandez said.

Social Security's Floyd 'Payroll' This Year To Top $15 Million

Social security benefits were being paid to 9,413 residents of Floyd county at a rate of $1.3 million dollars a month at the start of 1976, Jim Kelly, social security manager in Prestonsburg, said today.

Monthly social security benefits are payable to workers and their dependents when the worker retires, becomes severely disabled, or dies. Mr. Kelly said 2,112 retired and 1,635 disabled workers received monthly social security benefits at the beginning of this year. In addition, 1,521 wives or husbands of the worker, 2,806 children and 1,339 widows, widowers or parents received monthly social security benefits.

In this county 5,999 beneficiaries were under age 65; 3,414 beneficiaries were age 65 and over. Of the total number, 3,209 were men and 3,398 women.

The Prestonsburg social security office, which is a branch of Pikeville district, serves Floyd, Johnson, Martin and Magoffin counties.

Mine Service Firm, Governor Announce Greenup Expansion

Frankfort, Ky.—National Mine Service Co. and Gov. Julian Carroll last week jointly announced that the company will break ground next July for an $8.5 million expansion of its Greenup plant with expectations for more than 300 new jobs.

Longwall mining components which provide a shield-type roof under which miners work will be manufactured at the expanded facility.

Gov. Carroll attributed the announcement to efforts made during his recent European tour designed to promote economic development in Kentucky. He said he toured the joint venture companies in Germany through which National Mine Service sells the longwall components in the United States.

"I can frankly tell you that our visit to these two fine German plants and my discussions with those companies' officials strongly supported their decision to come to Kentucky," the Governor said.

K. E. McElhattan, president of National Mine Service Co., agreed with him saying after Gov. Carroll visited in Germany, he had no trouble convincing the companies' board of directors they should expand in Kentucky.

According to McElhattan, the firm is committing the $8.5 million from a recent public stock offering principally for the Greenup plant expansion. That plant opened a year ago last September. The company also has a plant in Ashland, but, Charles Douglas, vice president of National Mining and head of the Ashland and Greenup plants, said there was no space to expand the Ashland facility.

In the longwall mining technique, the roof of the mine is supported by hydraulic props which advance as the mining proceeds. The miner works under the shield-type roof which is essentially a solid, protective shield. Coal is extracted by a shearing machine which travels along the full length of the longwall support system removing coal from the face.

McElhattan said the method is the safest way known for extracting coal underground. Although the system is widely used in Europe, there are only two shield-type operations in the United States, he said, adding that longwall mining is the fastest growing technique of coal removal in the United States.

The Governor noted that the longwall process increases productivity, and the proximity of the manufacturing plants to the Eastern Kentucky coal fields will make Kentucky coal more competitive with coal mined in other states.

ENERGY Conservation Awareness Open House

Wednesday, November 10 8:30 to 5:15
at Kentucky Power's Main Street, Pikeville Office

Governor Julian Carroll has proclaimed November 7-13 as Energy Conservation Awareness Week. Kentucky Power fully supports this effort because it's important that we—both the energy producers and consumers—work together as partners in energy management. We're fortunate here in Eastern Kentucky to have an adequate supply of electricity, but skyrocketing inflationary costs have driven the price of producing electricity higher. Today, more than ever, electricity is too valuable not to use wisely. That's why we're asking you to take an active part in energy management. Experts will be in our auditorium throughout the day to discuss how to select the most energy efficient appliances, proper insulation, the heat pump and more. You can also learn how to read your meter, and even your bill, to help you track your energy use better. Our open house is really an old fashion customer appreciation day. It's our way of saying we appreciate having you as customers. We want you to know more about how to save on energy costs and to know more about your power company.

COMBINE A LEARNING EXPERIENCE WITH A GOOD TIME AND A CHANCE TO WIN AN ELECTRIC RANGE

Learn:

 How to read your meter	 How to read your bill	 About the heat pump	 About the biggest saver — insulation	 How to select energy efficient appliances
---	--	--	---	--

Enjoy: Free refreshments, friendly and informative talk plus free household items.

Win:

Door Prize Drawing

This electric range (school demonstrator) will be presented to one of our energy conscious visitors. Drawing will be at 5:15 and you need not be present to win.

Come in and register on Wednesday, November 10

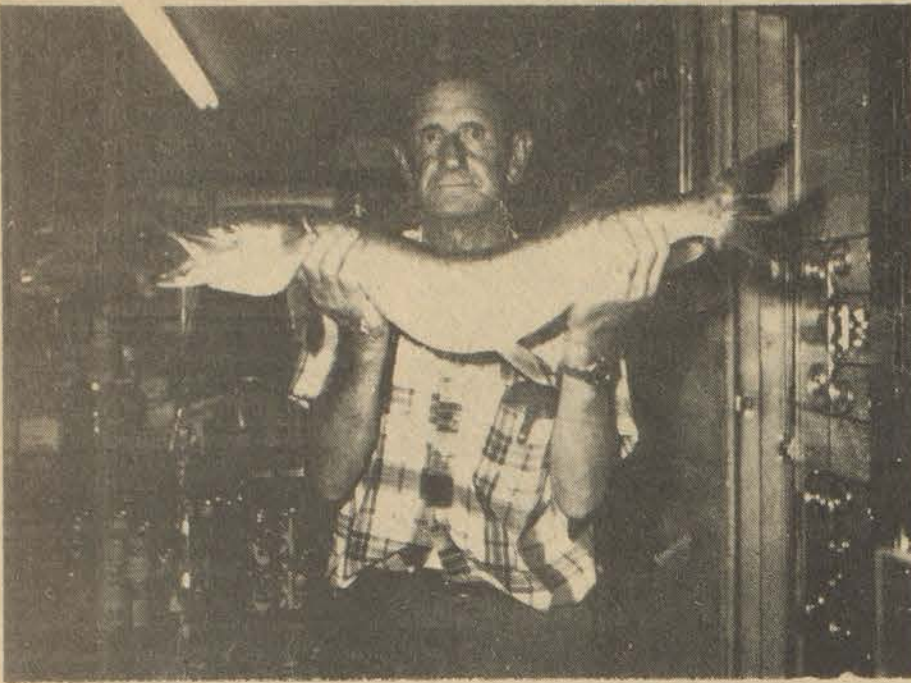

Kentucky Power Company employees and immediate families are not eligible for drawing.

Kentucky Economy Upswing During September Reported

Frankfort, Ky.—Kentucky's economy took an upswing during September.

Claims for unemployment insurance benefits continued to decline in the state, reaching a 22-month low in September, and the unemployment rate continued its downward trend.

An average 26,000 Kentuckians were receiving unemployment insurance benefits in September, compared to 40,000 a year ago and a record high of 63,000 in April, 1975.

About one million of the 1.4 million employed Kentuckians have jobs covered by unemployment insurance.

"The state's unemployment insurance fund has weathered the high unemployment rates through 1975 and 1976 and now is on the upswing," said James Hayden, director of the Division for Unemployment Insurance for the state Department for Human Resources.

Derived from employer taxes paid for each employe, this fund's total is the amount available for payments of unemployment insurance benefits. The total reached a low of $109 million a few months ago. Now it is up to $131 million.

"This is still well below the pre-recessionary total of $220 million," said Hayden, "but Kentucky is faring far better than the 21 states which completely depleted their unemployment insurance funds and had to rely on federal assistance," he added.

Kentucky's unemployment rate, which mirrors the decline in unemployment insurance claims, dropped to 5.2 per cent in September, the lowest since November, 1974.

"Kentucky is pulling out of the recession at a faster rate than the rest of the nation," said Robert MacDonald, chief labor market analyst for Human Resources. "The national unemployment rate hovers above seven per cent, while Kentucky's rate continues to decline."

This state does not depend on the automobile or steel industries, which have suffered the most severe cutbacks over the last two years, MacDonald pointed out, and Kentucky's coal industry has helped the economy.

He expressed some concern that Kentucky is not experiencing a good growth rate in availability of new jobs.

"We're just catching up with our 1975 losses. This makes it hard on people who want to change jobs or enter the labor force for the first time," MacDonald said.

He also noted that the unemployment rate usually drops in October and November, but begins to climb slightly in December and during the first quarter of every year.

Hayden expects claims for unemployment insurance benefits to rise with the unemployment rate this winter, but to remain well below the high number of claims filed during last year's recession.

"During the winter months, generally, construction industries are not operating at warmer-month capacities and seasonal labor is harder to find," he said.

General Electric, the state's largest employer, is expected to lay off some workers in Louisville over the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays. This would affect both Kentucky's number of unemployment insurance claims and the unemployment rate.

Now that the recessionary surge for unemployment insurance benefits has slackened off, more emphasis is being directed to prosecution of fraud cases, said Commissioner Gail S. Huecker of Human Resources' Bureau for Social Insurance. More than 800 fraud cases have been singled out by staff investigations to date, she said.

The Bureau for Social Insurance has eight persons working in its fraud unit, compared to five persons (who were responsible for other areas as well) a year ago.

Kentuckians who are eligible for unemployment insurance benefits can receive payments for up to 39 weeks, including 26 weeks of regular benefits and 13 weeks of extended benefits. "Additional programs which allowed up to 65 weeks of benefits have been phased out as the state unemployment situation has improved," noted Hayden.

Lonesome Pine Council Holds Fall Camporee

The Pine Mountain, Breaks and Pike districts of Lonesome Pine Council conducted their annual fall camporee during the week-end of October 15-17.

Held at the Bark Camp Lake of Jefferson National Forest, the camporee recreated the early days of the Northwest Yukon for three days. Scouts were required to form patrol "dog teams" to pull their "sleds" through a series of four competitive event stations where the patrols were judged on their proficiency in nature, first-aid, pioneering and signaling. "Nuggets" were awarded at these stations and at the campsite inspection held on Saturday evening.

Based on these judgments, Troop 4 of Big Stone Gap, Ron Begley, Scoutmaster, was awarded the President's Award as the best troop of the camporee. Other troops taking part in the camporee were Troop 81 of Millard, Troop 90 of Hazard, Troop 99 of Ary, Troop 143 of David and Troop 328 of Ashcamp.

Explorer Post 21 of Prestonsburg contributed valuable assistance to the operation of the Camporee. Following the Saturday night campfire, where the award presentations were made, the Camporee ended with the unofficial trademark of most Lonesome Pine Council Camporees—rain.

Ramey, a widely recognized authority on industrial education, is a former director of Mayo State Vocational Technical School at Paintsville. He served a three-year term as a member of the President's Advisory Council on Vocational Education.

A musical program arranged by Dr. John N. Ryan will also be presented. Luncheon tickets may be purchased when members and guests register. A business session will conclude the meeting. A display of regional historical materials will be available for purchase.

Other members of the society scheduled to participate in the meeting are: Byron T. Morris, Kenova, W. Va.; Wallace J. Williamson, III, Ashland; Henry P. Scalf, Stanville; Mrs. Doris Miller, Huntington, W. Va.; Dr. Leonard Roberts, Pikeville; Emory L. Hamilton, Wise, Va.; George A. Pruner, Lebanon, Va.; Mrs. Hetty S. MORE THAN 257,000 handicapped veterans applied or renewed applications for work with public employment offices during the first nine months of the 1976 fiscal year, according to the U. S. Labor Department. Of that group, 53,500 got jobs; 35,200 received counseling.

Sheltered Workshops: New Alternative To Institutions

Louisville, Ky.—"This is a much better way to live than bein' in an institution," says Richard Butler, with fervent accent on the word "much."

Both he and Danny Cottrell should be good judges, because for nearly 20 years they were residents of the old Frankfort State Hospital and School under supervision of the state. Now they're living in their own apartment and working full-time at the Sheltered Workshop of the Jefferson County Council for Retarded Citizens.

Richard and Danny are living fairly normal lives. They have enough income to cover their needs and can cope with day-to-day activities, needing only a little help from a few interested people. They do have legal guardians who handle financial matters for them, and a staff worker from the Council for Retarded Citizens helps them with grocery shopping. But instead of being two more residents of a large institution and wards of the state, they are individuals, two men free to enjoy a life not too different from the lives of others.

They ride regularly scheduled buses to work each morning, making a transfer en route. They cash their paychecks at a neighborhood bank, cook their meals, clean their apartment and do their own laundry.

The usual payroll taxes are taken out of the wages they earn at the Sheltered Workshop. In addition, the young men receive Supplemental Security Income, a federally funded program of assistance to the aged, blind and disabled. This program is administered through the Department for Human Resources.

Richard and Danny were committed to Frankfort State Hospital when each was about seven, and they lived there until the institution was closed in the fall of 1972. They learned numbers and how to print their names, but couldn't learn to read and write. "School's hard," explains Richard. He says he worked in the canteen at the hospital, and that was all right, but there was some work he didn't like. "They give you a mop, a bucket ... you sweep, mop and clean up."

After the old Frankfort School was closed, Danny and Richard were transferred to another state institution, Outwood Hospital in Dawson Springs. Later they moved to a group home in Shelby County which ceased operations following the death of one of its owners. The Council for Retarded Citizens then helped the home's residents find new living arrangements.

David A. Graves, director of the council's Citizen Advocacy Office, says that in the Louisville area alone, there are several hundred mildly to moderately retarded persons, who, like Richard and Danny, could manage apartment living if they received some supervision. The cost per person would be less than half what the state currently spends for institutional care, Graves adds.

Aside from cost benefit to the state, there is the great personal satisfaction for Danny and Richard. At the Sheltered Workshop, they perform necessary work. On one recent day, Richard was assigned to a team handling warranty cards for General Electric. He opened customer mail and sorted the cards according to the type of appliance covered. Danny was counting out the screws, nuts and other items of hardware which make up an installation kit for an appliance.

At home, both young men enjoy watching baseball or other sports events on TV. Their modest two-bedroom apartment is clean and neat. They've put up some posters as decoration, and have a wind chime in the hallway. Their building is in a large, well-maintained complex, near both a shopping center and the Sheltered Workshop.

Richard says that living in the apartment is "pretty good," but he'd rather be on a farm. While they lived in Shelby County he worked in the garden and in the tobacco field of the home and found that he likes working out-of-doors. However, he now enjoys walking around the neighborhood—the apartment complex has wide, well-trimmed lawns between the buildings. Richard has become acquainted with another resident of the complex and often visits his friend's apartment.

Danny prefers the apartment to farm life. He does most of the cooking using convenience foods which help him prepare balanced meals. However, he'll fry eggs or potatoes and makes coffee. Danny sometimes plays basketball with young neighbors, or visits with his brother or sister. Not long ago, he went fishing with his father. Danny also enjoys listening to records. Elvis and the Osmond Brothers are favorite performers. He keeps his record collection in his own room rather than the living room because "Richard doesn't agree with my tastes in music."

They work, shop, clean, enjoy life's usual recreations, but most of all, Richard and Danny are proving that, with a little bit of help, they can live on their own. They don't need to be in an institution.

THE WORLD'S LONGEST railway tunnel is under construction in Japan—connecting the northern island of Hokkaido with mainland Honshu. When completed, notes the September Reader's Digest, the Seikan Tunnel will run 34 miles from entrance to exit, three times the length of the next-longest tunnel, the Simplon, in Switzerland.

Although professional motorcycle hillclimbing has its greatest following in the eastern United States, the sport is rapidly gaining in popularity in all parts of the country. Riders from dozens of states participate in the annual climb circuit and the competition is keen—which makes it all the more impressive that the sport has been dominated in recent years not by riders from a certain state or region, but, specifically, by cyclists from the Floyd county community of Allen.

who swept this year's Grand National Championship in Class B climbing.

There is little difference in Class A and B riding—150 cubic centimeters difference in engine displacement, to be exact—and speeds and horsepower developed are quite close. Class A riders use machines of 650 c.c.'s while B competitors ride cycles of 500 c.c.'s.

As Mosley explained, "It's mainly according to whichever class you want to ride in."

Mosley, in his seventh year of competition, rode his first four years in the amateur class and won the national championship in that class three years consecutively. In 1973 he began riding professionally in B class, placing third in the nation and winning the Canadian national championship.

Mosley says finishing fourth last year was a big disappointment for him and credits his championship performance this year largely to a friend, Dick Soter, of Baltimore, Md., who made racing modifications and fine tuning work on his 500 c.c. Triumph bike. "No matter how good a rider you are, you've got to have the right machine," Mosely said.

Mosely's Triumph, like Class A machines, burns a special nitro-methane fuel mixture and at 240 pounds achieves an impressive power to weight ratio.

Mosely considers concentration the most vital rider factor in a sport which involves a race against the clock as riders explode from a starting position at almost full speed and strain to keep their machines under control as they ascend hills that appear almost vertical.

A motorcycle enthusiast since his teens, Mosely, now 29, credits his long-time friend Terry Kinzer with developing his interest in hillclimbing. Mosely also thinks that geography has something to do with the success of the "Allen boys."

"When you ride around here," he said, "you find yourself climbing hills out of necessity. Hillclimbing was just a natural direction to do."

Mosely, like the Kinzer brothers, is presently experimenting with new designs in frame configuration to be assured of having the "right machine."

It is this sort of experimentation that gives the local riders an added edge, Mosely believes. "I think we may go at the whole sport a little harder than other riders," he concluded.

By LARRY BURKE

The weaver as he fashions a tapestry works on the back side of his piece. To him and to everyone else the whole thing seems a confused and tangled mass of varicolored threads and knots. But the weaver works according to pattern; and when he turns the piece over and looks at the other side, behold, the promise of the pattern has been fulfilled.

So many of us fail to fulfill the patterns of life.

Do young people carry the religion of a godly household to the college campus?

Do we leave the high ideals of youth behind when we become involved in the exciting turmoil of the business world?

Even more tragic, are we failing to establish the right patterns for our lives—our children's lives?

Our Thought To Remember: Establish a pattern, and follow it closely.

Synonyms: Perkins and Hard Work

(In Carl Perkins the Seventh district of Kentucky has a Representative in Congress who is not only the most powerful Kentuckian in Washington but also a Congressman who practices the old-fashioned virtues—one of which is hard work. The following is excerpted from an article written by Geoffrey O'Gara for Capitol Hill News Service.—Editor.)

After 28 years in the House, Perkins is the dean of the Kentucky delegation, and by far the most powerful Kentuckian on Capitol Hill. He has chaired the Education and Labor Committee since the fall of Adam Clayton Powell in 1967, and it's nearly impossible to find members of either party who'll say a critical word about his stewardship. He instituted committee reforms, they say, opening up the operations and increasing participation of younger members, before such reforms were passed by the House in general.

During the 94th Congress, 1,089 bills were sent to the committee, which reported out 34, many of which were consolidations of several smaller bills. Sixteen of those 34 are now law.

"The invasion of Europe in World War II would have occurred 18 months earlier" if Perkins had been running things, says a committee aide, only half-jokingly. "He doesn't know delay as a legislative tool."

An aide to a Republican congressman on Perkins' committee, who had worked on other House committees, said this one was "extremely exciting" by comparison. Perkins, she said, handled "not only the issues (before the committee) but the personalities—which are flamboyant."

Indeed, many committee members, among them Rep. Frank Thompson, D-N.J., John Erlenborn, R-Ill., and John Dent, D-Pa., are strong personalities who can be, at times, flamboyant.

Perkins is not. He is courteous, good-humored, soft-spoken, even drab. A staffer for another Kentucky congressman said they would look elsewhere in the Kentucky delegation if they needed someone to attend a banquet.

But those who mistake his low-key style for a lack of strength—and some do—have only to look at the steady stream of legislation produced by his committee and listen to the accolades of colleagues and staff on both sides of the aisle.

Faced with a Republican administration opposed to many of the Great Society programs that came out of Education and Labor in the sixties and which must be renewed and modified regularly, Perkins' ability to work with Republican committee members, and make legislation palatable to them, is an essential skill. He avoids strong-arm tactics—when Republican objections to the aid to higher education legislation this year led to only a one-year renewal of the act, Perkins did not try to force the longer extension he favored.

But an aide to Rep. Albert Quie, R-Minn., the ranking Education and Labor Republican, says the divergence on the committee on education issues has "not been so great," although there's been pougher going on more controversial subjects, like the black lung legislation. He adds that Perkins "has been very generous" in funding the minority staff and encouraging minority participation.

The aide cited the vocational education amendments, which extend the Vocational Education Act through 1982, with a price-tag of about $2 billion a year, as one that "worked out on just about a completely bipartisan basis." The bill included provisions to make states more accountable for their use of funds, and to make the programs more relevant to developing participants' job skills.

The committee fought over renewing the higher education aid bill because some members wanted to direct it more toward the middle class. Perkins wanted more aid for the disadvantaged. Finally, they decided to sidestep the issue by renewing it for one year and coming back to it in the 95th Congress.

The program got a three-year extension in its present form from the House-Senate conference, much to Perkins' delight. He had his way without having to be an autocrat.

Each Additional Family Member $ 560 $ 1,340

Children from families whose income is at or below the levels shown are eligible for free meals, free milk or reduced price meals. In addition, families not meeting these criteria but with hardship conditions due to unusually high medical expenses, shelter costs in excess of 30 percent of income, special education expenses due to the mental or physical condition of a child, and disaster or casualty losses are urged to apply.

Applications are being sent to all homes with a letter to parents. Additional forms are available at the principal's office in each school. The information provided on the application is confidential and will be used only for the purpose of determining eligibility. Applications may be submitted at any time during the year.

In certain cases foster children are also eligible for these benefits. If a family has foster children living with them and to apply for such meals and milk for them, they should contact the school.

If a family member becomes unemployed or if family size and income changes, the family should contact the school to file a new application. Such changes may make the children of the family eligible for reduced price meals, or for additional benefits such as free meals and milk, if the family income falls at or below the levels shown above.

In the operation of child feeding programs, no child will be discriminated against because of his race, sex, color, or national origin.

Under the provision of the policy the school principal will review applications and determine eligibility. If a parent is dissatisfied with the ruling of the official he may make a request either orally or in writing to the Superintendent of Schools.

(NAME OF SUPERINTENDENT)

for a hearing to appeal the decision.

The hearing procedures are outlined in the policy.

A complete copy of the policy is on file in each school and in the office of the District Superintendent where it may be reviewed by any interested party.

Oil Foundation Grant

To ALCOR Is $500

Jack E. Burch, Jr., president of ALCOR, Inc. (Appalachian Leadership and Community Outreach, Inc.), recently announced the receipt of a $500 grant from the Ashland Oil Foundation, Inc., of Ashland.

The grant is of special significance due to its demonstration of support of ALCOR's human resource development and community outreach program by a leading member of East Kentucky's economic and business community. ALCOR, Inc. has recently initiated an effort to increase its support from the local business community in order to lessen its dependence on an adequate level of interest in this area by outside sources, primarily in the urban areas of the eastern United States.

The ALCOR Program is operated through cooperative agreements with six southeastern Kentucky colleges including: Alice Lloyd College, Cumberland College, Hazard Community College, Lees Junior College, Southeast Community College, and Union College.
