Opponents Allege Tipple Fill Poses Increased Flood Threat

A couple of logs cracked in the grate as David Watson pointed to a spot on the brick fireplace, 22 inches above the polished oak floor of his living room. That was where the floodwater reached in 1984.

The highwater mark is likely to be even higher in the future if a California coal company has its way, Watson fears. And the worst of it, he said, is that the elected officials and state agencies on which he depended to protect his home seem unwilling or unable to help him.

"You feel so helpless, so desperate, so totally frustrated by your inability to get anybody who can do something about it. I'm absolutely diminished," said Watson, 58, who lives with his wife, Jean, and the youngest of their five children in a ranch-style home half a mile up Stephens Branch of Right Beaver Creek.

The project that has them and some of their neighbors worried is clearly visible at the mouth of Stephens Branch, just above Martin, where Edco Energy Corporation is filling an 8.6-acre tract preparatory to construction of a coal-washing facility and refuse disposal site.

Stephens Branch Residents Fail To Block Permit

struction of a coal-washing facility and refuse disposal site.

On Nov. 11, 36 Stephens Branch residents, including the Watsons, filed a protest with the state Natural Resources and Environmental Protection Cabinet (NREPC), arguing that the tipple operation should not be permitted because it would pollute water supplies—including the city of Martin's—and because it was in conflict with a county flood plain ordinance enacted in 1984.

For Watson, a right-of-way buyer for the state Department of Highways, the flood plain encroachment was the clincher. The NREPC permit granted Edco over the residents' objections on Jan. 7, he noted, was "subject to the requirements of any other federal, state, or local agencies." Herschel Flanery's property, site of the proposed fill, was undeniably within the floodplain and subject to local floodplain provisions.

"Will you please investigate this complaint," he wrote confidently to Judge-Executive John M. Stumbo, who is also the county floodplain administrator, on Jan. 15, "and put a stop to this construction?"

It would not prove so easy.

Stumbo said decisions about floodplain construction rest with the state Division of Water. A Division of Water official said all decisions about coal-related facilities are made by the Department of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement (DSMRE). DSMRE officials said they had all the evidence they needed that the Edco project would neither pollute the water nor significantly increase flooding.

Commenting on an Edco engineer's claim that the effect of the fill would be "negligible," Watson said, "One fill might not amount to a hill of beans, but they don't take account of all the other (See Story No. 1, Page 4)

LESS THAN IMPRESSIVE the exterior may be, but some said the floor show at the Silver Fox Lounge, which opened last Wednesday on the Lake Road, was an eye-opener. The county attorney was not amused, vowing to shape a local ordinance if necessary to put a stop to any striptease.

Issue Freedom, Not Disorder, Attorney Says

It took a District Court jury approximately five minutes last Tuesday to acquit defendant Kelly M. Franko of a disorderly conduct charge. The trial stemmed from an argument Franko had with a deputy sheriff in the sheriff's office June 9.

Defense attorney Ned Pillersdorf called the trial "a waste of time and a humiliation to my client." It was Pillersdorf's contention that Franko was merely exercising his First Amendment right to free speech when the deputy arrested him.

Over the prosecutor's objection, Judge Harold Stumbo allowed evidence to be heard about the cause of the argument. According to testimony, Franko, then manager of Franko's Lounge & Grill, on South Lake Drive was in the sheriff's office to question the sheriff's right to close his bar the previous Saturday night. Because the bar is within the city limits, it falls under the jurisdiction of Prestonsburg Police Department, Franko argued.

Pillersdorf conceded a heated argument occurred, but said Franko never should have been put in a half-nelson and taken to jail. "In this country, you have a right to question and criticize your public officials, and you ought not be charged with a crime for doing so," the attorney said. In his summation to the jury, Pillersdorf compared the incident to what happens in the Soviet Union. "Over there when you speak out, they arrest you and charge you with sedition," Pillersdorf said after the trial.

Prosecuting the case, County Attorney David A. Barber said he was not surprised by the verdict given the difficulty of convicting someone of disorderly conduct. But he said the evidence warranted a conviction. Emphasizing the word "tumultuous" in describing Franko's behavior, Barber said, "He kept raising his voice louder and louder in a public place. That's disorderly conduct."

Prestonsburg City Council To Meet

The Prestonsburg City Council will hold a special meeting Friday, January 30, at noon in the City Council room of the Municipal building.

Lafferty Charges Dismissed; New Indictments Anticipated

Charges against two former Floyd officials were dismissed a second time last Wednesday and their attorney said the government should stop pursuing the two men. An assistant attorney-general said the dismissal was only technical, however, and that the men would likely be indicted again soon.

Thomas D. Lafferty, Sr., and his son, Thomas D. Lafferty, Jr., were among 16 persons indicted in December, 1984, on charges of misusing county funds during the 1982 administration of their brother and uncle, Jerry Lafferty, Jr. The elder Lafferty was tried by a Pike jury in July, 1985 on a charge of theft by deception, but the panel was unable to agree on a verdict.

Because of a technical defect in the form of the original indictment, charges against father and son were dismissed and new indictments were issued by a Floyd Circuit Court grand jury in November, 1985. Citing a 1941 case, however, their attorney, Phillip Damron, argued successfully last

Topless Revue Out Of Place Here, Say County Officials

A newly-opened nightclub on the Lake Road at Lancer will have to clean up its act if it wants to stay in business, County Attorney David Barber warned this week.

Barber, Sheriff Henry Hale, two deputies and a state police detective paid a surprise visit to the Silver Fox Lounge on Friday night—just two days after it opened its doors and after complaints were received from nearby residents, and confirmed by patrons, that the entertainment included topless dancers, Barber said.

The court officials saw nothing unseemly during their visit and left after talking to the operator, Carmel Ray "Jan" Blevins, of Garrett, a son of Johnson County Judge-Executive Wayne Blevins. "We told him this is not the type of situation we want to get started in Floyd county," the county attorney said. "They can run it as a bar, with heterosexual dancing for private couples, but we won't have professional or amateur dancers in scant clothing for the purpose of arousing prurient interest. That's not the kind of environment that's healthy in any community."

Danny Caudill, an attorney for the nightclub, denied that its entertainment was lewd or calculated to appeal

60-Ton Trucks Downtown?

Ironies, Confusion Mark New State Coal-Haul Law

Under-reporting by coal companies may mean that the eastern extension of the Mountain Parkway through Floyd and Magoffin counties will be off-limits to coal trucks weighing more than 40 tons even after a new law raising the weight limit on certain roads goes into effect April 1.

At the same time, coal trucks of up to 60 tons may be permitted to roll through downtown Prestonsburg on KY 1428.

Those are two of the somewhat contradictory effects of the new coal-haul law passed by the 1986 state legislature. Criticisms and complaints about the new law got a public airing in Frankfort last week as the state Transportation Cabinet geared up to implement the law.

The new law allows truckers who pay extra fees to haul loads of up to 60 tons on certain major coal-haul roads—those roads that carried more than 50,000 tons of coal in 1985. Current law permits a maximum weight of 40 tons unless the coal company applies for a special "transportation plan" and pays an overweight fee.

The catch is that the state has depended on the coal industry itself to report which highways qualify as major coal-haul roads and should be allowed the higher weight limit. Since many companies filed inaccurate reports or no reports at all about the amount of coal they shipped in 1985, some major routes such as the parkway extension have been left off the list of higher-weight roads.

The list of higher-weight roads includes 3,812 miles of highways in 67 counties. It does not include the section of parkway between US 460, just east of Salyersville in Magoffin county, and KY 404, west of Prestonsburg in Floyd county.

The list does include a 2.6-mile section of KY 1428 that runs through the southern part of Prestonsburg from U.S. 23 to KY 194, the Cow Creek road.

Coal industry officials want to amend that list, now that they realize the importance of the shipping reports. At the time, there seemed to be little reason for making sure the reports were accurate, Kentucky Coal Association Vice-President Bill Caylor explained at last week's hearing.

"There was no incentive to report ton-miles, nor was there any penalty for failing to report ton-miles," he told the Transportation Cabinet. "If 1985 is to be used as a base year, it simply is inaccurate."

But state transportation officials say the list can't be changed before next summer at the earliest. The new law requires the list of higher-weight roads to be updated each year, but the updating doesn't have to be done until Nov. 1. In the meantime, severance-tax money has already been distributed to local governments based on the inaccurate 1985 reports.

Until the list of highways is amended to include the parkway extension, trucks weighing more than 40 tons will not be allowed on that road except under a special provision that would require the PINE BOUGH'S BURDEN of heavy wet snow was evidence of the storm that passed through during Sunday's early hours, dumping more than seven inches of snow in the county and bringing sub-zero temperatures in its wake.

Season's First Storm Blankets County, Shuts Down Classrooms

The unusually pleasant winter of 1986-87 ended abruptly last Thursday with the arrival of a storm that dumped more than seven inches of snow over the weekend and pulled the mercury down to below-zero levels by Tuesday morning.

But, except for school closings and a delay in garbage collection, Floyd county so far has survived the arctic blast in good shape.

County schools closed down on Thursday due to the icy roads that kept buses from reaching many students, and when they will reopen depends on how quickly those roads are cleared. That will definitely not occur in time to reopen today (Wednesday), said transportation director Ed Patton, and it's "very doubtful" that classes will be in session Thursday.

"If we get the rain that's predicted for Thursday, we might have a 50-50 shot at opening Friday," Patton said.

"Then again," he added, "if we get too much rain, we could have a flood."

Prestonsburg Community College

cancelled both day and night classes Monday and operated on a short-class "snow schedule" Tuesday, according to associate director Robert Allen. Barring further problems, he said, the college should be back on its regular schedule today.

Garbage collection is running about three days behind schedule, according to Dave Cooley, director of the Floyd County Solid Waste department. A partial crew was working on Friday, but there was no collection Monday and only the main roads were reached Tuesday.

Cooley said he expects the crews to be back on schedule today. Residents whose garbage didn't get picked up can expect the trucks to arrive on their normal pick-up days, unless further weather problems develop.

Sheriff Henry Hale said that his office has been on alert for weather-related mishaps, but hasn't received any unusual calls.

"We've been pretty lucky," he said. The Floyd County Emergency and Rescue Squad hasn't been called upon for any dramatic action on snowed-in hilltops or hollows, said Captain Chuck Akers.

Akers, who is also a Prestonsburg police officer, said there have been no problems with vehicles sliding into ditches or snowbanks. "Not even a fender-bender," he said.

It's been "real quiet" around the city fire department, too, said Chief Tom Blackburn. That's a bit unusual, he added. Overheated furnaces and other fires related to heating systems are common when the weather turns icy.

Even the plumbers haven't been (See Story No. 4, Page 4)

High Court Rejects Okie Bevins Appeal

The U.S. Supreme Court declined yesterday (Tuesday) to hear the appeal of William Okie Bevins, 76-year-old Floyd man, who pleaded guilty in 1983 to the slaying of five men and the wounding of three others in an Allen truck parts store in 1981.

Bevins was sentenced to death in Greenup Circuit Court, to which the trial had been transferred, and yesterday's decision sweeps away his last court appeal. No one has been executed in Kentucky since 1961, however.

At 64, Doctor Returns To School

By TOM McCORD
 (Reprinted from the Lexington Herald Leader)

Dr. Porter Mayo is working hard to avoid doing what he says he will never do: retire.

At 64, Mayo is pursuing a doctoral degree at the University of Kentucky, nearly a half century after first setting foot on a college campus.

"I think I contemplated from the very beginning, even before starting to practice medicine, doing what I am doing now," said Mayo, a white-haired physician who finished the classroom work for his doctorate in history last October.

"I always felt that if I had spent, say, 30 years in medicine and I was physically able to do so, that I would in all likelihood engage in another profession."

He said he last performed surgery at age 60, when he thought he was at his peak.

"I don't want to retire," he said last week, sitting on a comfortable love seat in a book-lined basement room of his Lexington home. "I've never thought about retiring. Don't intend to."

When he was 58, Mayo took a course at UK about Shakespeare. By 1985 he had earned a master's degree in the history of science and medicine.

Once he finishes his doctorate, Mayo plans to write, lecture and possibly teach.

"Did he tell you he got all A's?" asked his son, Walker Mayo, as he joined his father during an interview. "He's got a 4.0 grade-point average," the son said, grinning.

At 28, Walker Mayo is a lawyer, working on a doctorate in legal history at Oxford University. The two men hope to collaborate as historians.

The elder Mayo's wife, Pat, said she had decided her husband was an "eternal" student.

"The more he studies, the more he knows he doesn't know. I've decided he will never finish. And I've accepted it," Mrs. Mayo said.

Eric H. Christianson, an associate professor of history at UK and Mayo's adviser, said his oldest student had few illusions about what he would do with his doctoral degree.

"At this point, it's not institutional assistance that's going to get him a job—but his own ingenuity," Christianson said. "He's basically carving out his own niche."

With the combination of a doctorate in medicine and a doctorate in history, "He'll be able to go out and write his own limited ticket, as it were," Christianson said.

Mayo grew up in Prestonsburg in a family that included a long line of lawyers.

He entered what was then called Eastern Kentucky State Teachers College in Richmond in 1939. He also studied at Vanderbilt University, the University of Michigan and the University of Louisville medical school.

After years of training, Mayo started practicing thoracic, or chest, surgery in Lexington in 1954.

The first thing Mayo published, when he was 34, was an essay in which he outlined his idea that adults should continually educate themselves.

"Mental inertia in the young is directly attributable to an educational challenge of limited conception," he wrote in 1957.

In those early years, Mayo said, he decided he would try something else instead of "retiring" when he entered his 60s.

"What I am doing now I intend to use. This is not a sideline with me. It's an intention to proceed and develop and to work, I hope, for another 20-plus years in a second career," Mayo said.

Mayo's specialty—the history of medicine and science—has only recently been studied as thoroughly as such other established specialties as economic and political history.

Christianson, Mayo's adviser, said he had been excited about Mayo's study at UK.

"I'm a medical historian. And here we have a person who has developed a terrific reputation as a thoracic surgeon going for a Ph.D. in history. It's been a tremendous opportunity," Christianson said.

And Mayo may turn out to be an example for Christianson.

At 40, Christianson said he too might consider a second career when he reaches the so-called retirement years.

"Probably one of the things I'd like to do is make furniture," Christianson said.

Mayo LPN Class Holds Capping at Pikeville

The Pikeville class of the Mayo State Vocational Technical School of Licensed Practical Nursing recently held their capping and candlelighting ceremony at the Pikeville United Methodist Church. Family and friends of the students were present as each student was presented with their nursing cap, thus signifying a half-way point in their training.

After receiving their cap from instructors Marie Conn, R.N., Sharon Bailey, R.N., and Veronica Click, R.N., each student then lit a candle from the flame of a five-candle candlebra.

The five candles of the candlebra were lighted by the class president, Ida Sullivan, who recited the nurses creed explaining what each candle signified. The first three candles signify faith, hope, and charity for all nurses; the fourth candle, Florence Nightingale, and the fifth candle, all those dedicated nurses who are no longer with us.

The students then recited the Nightingale Pledge.

Officiating at the ceremony was the Rev. Lamaster, chaplain of the Pikeville Methodist Hospital. Mrs. Dorene Ballmer, coordinator of the nursing program at Mayo State was guest speaker. In addition, speaking on behalf of the Gideon Organization was Mrs. Jackie Neff and Mrs. Janice Rogers, who presented each student with a white Bible.

Immediately following the ceremony, a reception was held in the fellowship hall of the church.

Four-fifths of the employed women maintaining families in 1985 worked at full-time jobs. Half of the women maintaining families had earnings which comprised three-fourths or more of family income, according to a fact sheet on working women published by the Women's Bureau of the U.S. Department of Labor.

An electric heat pump is the most economical system for supplying electric heat. It actually captures "free heat" from the outside air, even cold winter air, and pumps warmth indoors. Club Bouncer Held On Assault Charge

A bouncer at a Prestonsburg bar was arrested on an assault charge Saturday after he allegedly struck a handicapped man on the head with a night stick.

Eugene Hall, 45, of Banner, was charged with second-degree assault after he reportedly struck Billy Worth Music, 44, of Abbott Creek, at the Wildcat Lounge on South Lake Drive, around 10 p.m.

Prestonsburg police officer Mike Meade said the manager of the bar told him Music was drunk and was "trying to fight everyone." Hall admitted striking Music to subdue him, the police officer said.

Hall was lodged in Floyd county jail overnight but was released Sunday after posting a $10,000 property bond. Music was taken first to Highlands Regional Medical Center and then to the University of Kentucky Medical Center, where he was held for observation before being released Sunday.

Music's mother, Mrs. Dorcas Music, said her son, a former coal operator, has been disabled since he suffered two aneurysms in 1981 and underwent brain surgery. Since the operation, he has been unable to speak distinctly or to form long sentences, she said.

"They did him wrong. They should have called the law if he was being unruly," Mrs. Music said of her son. Music, who was in a coma for 12 days after his brain was injured six years ago, is suffering dizzy spells as a result of Saturday's beating, his mother said.

Many people believe odd numbers are "luckier" than even ones.

fills, illegal or otherwise. We just can't absorb any more."

The filling of bottoms along Right Beaver Creek associated with construction of new KY 80 and two housing projects above Martin were typical of the development which is rapidly extending the floodplain throughout the whole Big Sandy valley. Watson warned.

"When we built here 25 years ago, we were not in the floodplain," he said. "A few years from now, people who are not in the floodplain will wake up and find themselves in it. A fill anywhere in this valley affects all of us."

Watson likened the situation to a sponge soaking up spills. "One small spill soaked up by a sponge has no effect on it. But after soaking up several spills the sponge becomes full. I believe Floyd county is now at the state of the full sponge."

Keith Crim, supervisor in the Division of Water's floodplain management section, said the ordinance the county was required to enact in 1984 if it was to qualify for subsidized flood insurance was "not designed to stifle floodplain development." The basic objectives of the law, he said, are to prohibit construction in the floodway—areas within the path of the flooded stream—and to require that new buildings in the floodplain—the area affected by backup waters—be elevated above the 100-year-flood level.

While the Division of Water has no jurisdiction over the Edco coal-washing facility, the Department of Surface Mining is supposed to apply the same flood-protection standards in permitting construction, Crim said. The Stephens Branch fill appeared typical of fills that are customarily permitted by the Division of Water, he said.

The news came as a blow to Watson, who tangled earlier with Edco over reconstruction of a refuse dump opposite his home and whose complaint led to the company's being cited for violating environmental regulations. In fact, Edco's stripmine operation on Stephens Branch was cited eight times for violations between May, 1985 and June, 1986 and was assessed a total of $13,780 in fines, according to DSMRE records.

The citations and fines are scant comfort to Watson, however, who feels let down by the system. "I honestly thought our petition would have some effect, but now I'm sure it wasn't even considered," he said this weekend. "It makes it awful hard to be a law-abiding citizen."

Generations to come will be the real victims of a flood-protection plan he considers tragically inadequate, Watson insists. "Nobody thinks about this until they have a flood," he said. "It was not raining when Noah built the ark."

working overtime to fix the pipes that burst when water lines freeze.

"We've had several calls, but not too many. Not like in previous years," said Maxine Rose of Rose Service and Repair in Prestonsburg.

However, at least one form of Floyd county "life" is in serious danger. Rising temperatures and possible rain are predicted for the latter part of this week, bringing widespread destruction to snowmen.

coal companies to pay for any road damages.

The new law permits local governments to ask the transportation secretary to remove sections of road from the list. This month the Prestonsburg City Council adopted a resolution asking that "through traffic" coal trucks weighing more than 25 tons be banned from KY 1428 through the southern part of town, from KY 3 to U.S. 23.

"We have an awful lot of coal spillage through town," said Mayor Ann Latta. Heavier trucks also damage the road, she said, and could harm the city's storm drainage system.

The city's request did not reach the Transportation Cabinet in time to be considered at last week's public hearing, but that will not disqualify it, according to a transportation official. However, under the new law, the transportation secretary is not required to grant such requests.

CARD OF THANKS

The family of Maggie Martin extend their deepest appreciation to all friends and neighbors for their kind words and deeds in this time of sorrow. Thanks to those who sent food, flowers, prayers, or spoke comforting words. A special thanks to the Regular Baptist ministers, Raymond Lawson, Jerry Manns, and Roger Hicks, for their kind words expressed and to the Hall Funeral Home for their kind and courteous service.

noted this week. "I don't see that (the prosecution) has grounds for continuing going after felony indictments," he added.

Of the 16 originally indicted after a lengthy state police investigation of county finances, only three defendants remain to be tried—the Laffertys and John Mark Stephens, of Pikeville. Of the others, three were convicted and sentenced to jail terms, one was jailed after entering a guilty plea, another awaits sentence after pleading guilty, two pleaded guilty to misdemeanors and did not draw prison sentences, three were tried and acquitted, one was acquitted by directed verdict of a judge, while charges against two were dismissed.

The three convicted and sentenced—former magistrate Kenneth Roberts (30 months), Magistrate Ed Caudill (12 months), and Eastern auto dealer Ballard Crum (3 years)—are all free pending appeal. Caudill's conviction was upheld by the Kentucky Court of Appeals but he is now seeking review by the state Supreme Court.

Hugh Fugate, sentenced to a year in jail after pleading guilty to three counts of theft by deception, was freed on parole in December, 1985, after serving nearly three months of his sentence. Harlos Marshall, who has pleaded guilty to two counts of theft by deception, awaits sentencing.

Pleading guilty to misdemeanors were Alma Castle and Anthony Castle, mother and son; Anthony Castle was put on 12 months' probation. Tried and acquitted were Rick and Jack Crum and Naomi Green; acquitted by directed verdict was Irene Merion. Charges against Robert Duncan and former magistrate Lowell Samons were dismissed.

statute, which requires only that genital areas be covered, but said the county might be able to enact a stricter ordinance if necessary. He was seeking advice from the state Alcoholic Beverage Control board, which has issued the premises a beer license, to see if any of its regulations might have been violated, he said.

Floyd Judge-Executive John M. Stumbo said he questioned Caudill closely during a Jan. 14 hearing on whether Blevins should be issued an entertainment license. He issued the license because no one had lodged any protest against the opening of the lounge and the premises conformed with health and safety codes, Stumbo said.

Caudill gave him to understand that the nightclub would serve beer, have a live band, and occasionally offer other entertainment, but nothing the attorney said led him to believe the entertainment would include topless dancing, the judge-executive said. "I would not allow anything along that line. I would deny a license and let them go to court," Stumbo said.

Caudill said only that he had truthfully answered all questions put to him during the hearing. He expressed confidence, however, that any difference between his client and county officials over the type of entertainment offered at The Silver Fox could be resolved amicably.

The lounge consists of three rooms in premises leased from Freddy Williams. On his entertainment license application, Blevins said the nightclub would offer "music, live and recorded; dancing; and dance revues, amateur and professional."

Patrons and employees appeared "scared" when county officials visited the premises, around 10 p.m. Friday, Barber said. Five women were seen in brief bikini-style costume, one of them dancing on a raised, lighted stage. He detected the odor of marijuana, Barber said, but saw no laws being violated. No arrests were made.

Barber said later he viewed the lounge as a test posed by liquor licensees who have not found the business as profitable as they had hoped since the county went wet in 1983. "They're trying to come up with a gimmick. They're mimicking bars in Lexington and Louisville. Because they can't make it with a nice atmosphere, they're trying to generate business by having nude and semi-nude females," the county attorney said. "They're going to stop or we're going to close them down by whatever legal means are available."

Bits and Pieces

A LITTLE IS A LOT

Wednesday, Jan. 21—
So far, this has been the winter that wasn't. I'm not exactly complaining, but somehow it just doesn't seem right.

Thursday, Jan. 22—
Now, it seems right.
Friday, Saturday, Sunday, Monday, Tuesday—
Winter? Who needs it?

SUDDENLY, IT'S NOT SPRING

Here I was, looking at these pictures in the garden books of specimens of plants no ordinary gardener is ever likely to grow, and could almost smell the fresh, sweet scent of newly-turned earth. O, yes, good soil smells—well, good.

Then I woke up to the first sign that it really is winter—a beautiful, gorgeous, glistening snowfall.

Used to be, whoever got up first at our house and discovered that it had snowed during the night would wake everyone else up. There seemed to be the feeling that it might disappear in a blink. I always called Mother and Daddy to be sure they were as impressed as we were, and they were pretty tolerant of their perennial two-year-old going on 30-40-50 and counting. (O.K., so it started a few years ago.)

I don't care. Who wants to be grownup if it means not getting excited about the first, second, or umpteenth snow of the season?

This time, my daughter called from Pennsylvania; I called my sister in Lexington, and my sister-in-law called from North Carolina to report 18 inches of new-fallen beauty. Snow mania seems to run in the family.

And does anyone still make snow cream? Mother always did, and we loved it. I guess it is sort of old-fashioned winter ice cream, only better. You had to eat it fast for two reasons. First, it melted in minutes, and second, if you didn't, your brother would eat your share.

In case anyone cares, here's how to make it, sort of:

First find good, clean snow. Start with ½ gallon. Beat well two eggs with sugar, vanilla, and one cup milk or cream. The sugar and milk are iffy. You just have to use sugar to taste. The milk or cream is according to consistency, but you can add more without spoiling the snow cream. Stir eggs, sugar, milk into snow, and voila—snow cream.

The judge's instructions to the jury defined disorderly conduct as intentionally engaging in "violent, tumultuous or threatening behavior" that "wantonily created a risk of causing public inconvenience, annoyance, or alarm."

Of the verdict, Pillersdorf said, "The jury sent a clear message to public officials: That individuals have a right to question and confront them and any attempt to deny them their right will not be put up with." The defense attorney is now weighing the possibility of filing a federal lawsuit against the sheriff's department for violation of Franko's civil rights.

Big Sandy Health Care Reports 1986 Progress

During 1986 Big Sandy Health Care, Inc., logged in 25,460 medical encounters, of which more than 35 percent involved people who could not afford to pay for their health care, executive director Jim Stewart reported his month to the agency's board of trustees.

Mud Creek pharmacy filled 23,341 prescriptions in 1986, more than 18 percent above the budgeted number, according to Stewart's report. In addition, collections were higher than for any other year.

"If the last two months of the fiscal year hold, we will collect over $82,000 more than we estimated," Stewart informed the trustees.

Other 1986 milestones for the agency included start-up of a Blacklung program and hospital admittances, reinstatement of Quality Assurance meetings, and the employment of an internist. A computer system has been installed and managers have been hired for both the Mud Creek Clinic and Magoffin County Clinic. The agency also has acquired a smaller, more fuel-efficient truck, brought in three new physicians and hired two more to begin in 1987, and paid $60,182 back to the Medicaid program without requiring additional federal funds. A three-year Medicaid audit also was performed.

Turner Probes Illegal Dumping On RR Property

Railroad Commissioner Jimmy "Gabe" Turner and the commission's general counsel Raymond D. Kirk were in Floyd county Thursday to investigate reported illegal dumping on the Chessie System right of way. Complaints by residents of Oklahoma Creek near Allen triggered the investigation.

"We don't have the jurisdiction to prosecute, but I would like to see the situation corrected," Turner said after viewing the dumps. Turner said he plans to notify the Chessie System and see what can be done about it. Letters will also be sent to the county attorney and commonwealth's attorney informing them of the dumping, he said.

Turner pointed out that, while the dumping isn't the fault of the railroad, they have a responsibility to help correct the situation because the debris is on their right of way. He suggested that the railroad could help by bringing in a railroad car to haul the junk away, or by appointing a railroad detective to find out who is doing the dumping.

Both Kirk and Turner believe the solution will take a joint effort by the Chessie System and the Floyd county government, in particular the county attorney's office. "While the railroad may conduct a clean up of the area," Kirk said, "the cure will only come from the county attorney's office prosecuting the people responsible for it."

"It's an eyesore more than anything else," said Kenneth Justice, a resident of Oklahoma hollow. Justice thinks the dumping is being done by people from outside the area and estimates it's been going on for 10 or 12 years. "We'd like to get it cleaned up and have signs posted or do whatever it takes to have it stopped," he said.

"We can act as a catalyst to see that something is done," Kirk said of the Railroad Commission. "But we can't do the job of the local authorities." Kirk compares the dumping to a cancer that can't be cured by just treating the symptoms. "We can have it cleaned up but if we don't bring the full weight of the law down on the people responsible, they'll go right back to dumping there."

W-4 Headaches? Experts Extend A Helping Hand

Free help is available in Prestonsburg for employees who are confused or frustrated by the new federal W-4 form.

The form is familiar to most people as one of the papers that must be filled out when they take a new job. But this year all workers are required to complete the new form, even if they have held the same job for years.

That's because of the tax-reform law passed by Congress last year, which has changed the way taxes are calculated and the amount that each person will owe. As a result, employees need to recalculate the amount to be withheld from each paycheck.

The W-4 is the form that tells employers how much to withhold from paychecks. The deadline for filling out the new form isn't until next Oct. 1, but employees who wait that long could find that they have been having the wrong amount withheld all year.

The problem with the new form is that it's much more complicated than the old form, which used to take just a few minutes to fill out. The new form comes with four pages of instructions, worksheets and tables and, according to one local CPA, is as difficult to fill out as many tax returns.

However, at least two local tax preparation firms are offering free help to would-be taxpayers who are bewildered by the new form.

"I filled one out just this morning," said Donna Bentley, office manager at the H & R Block Agency in Prestonsburg. Her firm has had several drop-in requests for help and "a lot of phone calls," she said. They will help anyone who needs it, even if the person has never been a Block client, right up to the Oct. 1 deadline, according to Bentley.

Harry Short, owner and manager of DanTax, said his company also has gotten calls from a number of people.

"It's a lot of confusion that there's no need of," Short sympathized, adding that his firm will help anyone who requests it, even non-clients, at no charge. His agency has recently moved from its Court St. office to 40 N. Lake Dr., next to Druthers Restaurant.

Stephen R. Allen, a Prestonsburg CPA, said he would be willing to give free advice over the phone.

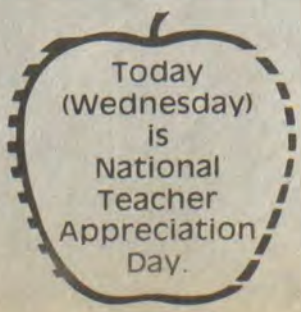

The Internal Revenue Service also has a toll-free telephone number that taxpayers can call for help with the new form: 1-800-424-1040.

Widespread complaints about the new form led U.S. Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III last week to promise that a new, simpler W-4 form will be designed.

But there is no telling when that simpler form will be ready, and Baker advised taxpayers to do their best to cope with the form as it is.

"They better continue filling out the current form," he told a group of legislators in Washington, D.C., "or we will find ourselves in a position of having underwithheld a lot of taxes. And there will be a lot of unpleasant surprises down the road."

"The public is merely a multiplied 'me'."

HUD Grant To House Homeless

The Louisville Office of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) has announced $145,000 in matching grants available to Kentucky under the new federal program for establishing shelter for the homeless. Of the amount of funding for the new federal initiative, $31,000 has been earmarked for the City of Louisville. The remainder of the funds will be distributed to local governments to assist their homeless population.

A letter to HUD Manager Joseph G. Schiff from Governor Collins officially stated the governor's intention to accept the administration of the remaining $114,000 Emergency Shelter Grant funds. The governor has designated the Kentucky Department of Local Government as the agency to administer the program for the State.

HUD Manager Joseph G. Schiff stated, "I am very pleased that the Commonwealth of Kentucky and the City of Louisville will receive this additional assistance to help better provide shelter for the homeless people within Kentucky."

Money for the new program can be used to renovate buildings, provide support services and pay operating costs, other than salaries, to house the homeless.

Credited With School Reforms

Kay Anne Wilborn, at left, formerly of Prestonsburg, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chalmer Frazier, and Jean Rosenberg, of Prestonsburg, joined Kentucky Superintendent of Public Instruction Alice McDonald recently at an Education Forum for approximately 40 of the citizens who organized education town meetings in 1984 that had a great impact on the legislature's passage of $300 million in new resources for the state's school systems. The group was briefed on the status of the new programs and their input was requested on the process.

Kentucky Teens Targeted in Latest "Champions Against Drugs" Project

Kentucky's anti-drug abuse campaign, "Champions Against Drugs," is sending a message to the state's 323,000 junior, middle and high school students. The message? Help is just a phone call away.

Gov. Martha Layne Collins, founder and member of the "Champions Against Drugs" statewide action committee, announced the distribution of an eight-page informational tabloid, HELP—Who Can I Call?, to students in grades 7-12 at public and private schools in Kentucky.

"When a young person is growing up, the right choices are often hard to make," Collins said. "We want every student in the state to know what those choices are and where they can turn when they need help."

"This publication is something for our teenagers to take and keep for that tough time when they need to talk to someone in the know."

The tabloid's release coincides with the Jan. 28 airing by Kentucky Educational Television of two programs designed to help Kentucky's teenagers.

"Generation at Risk," an hour-long program on teenage problems of drug and alcohol abuse, pregnancy and dropping out of school, will be broadcast beginning at 8 p.m. EST on KET's 15-station network.

Following that pre-recorded program, KET will air an hour-long, live call-in program, "Kentucky's Troubled Teens: A Turning Point," hosted by Collins and Kentucky radio executive and sportscaster Ralph Hacker. The program will also feature a panel of experts who will respond to questions called in by viewers.

The tabloid, produced by KET and distributed by the Cabinet for Human Resources Division of Substance Abuse, isn't being provided to Kentucky teenagers just to encourage them to watch the one-time broadcast.

"Many students are experiencing problems with drug or alcohol abuse, considering dropping out of school or trying to cope with teen pregnancy," said Substance Abuse Director Mike Townsend. "The tabloid has the name and telephone number of someone who can help—regardless of the problem or where the young person lives."

The paper contains contact persons and telephone numbers for local and district health departments and for each school district in the state. Telephone numbers are included for drug and alcohol abuse counseling available through the state's 14 regional Mental Health/Mental Retardation centers.

"Students are Kentucky's most valuable resource," said Collins. "They are the future of our state, because one day they will be Kentucky's leaders."

Pharmacy Footnotes

By HAROLD COOLEY

SKIN DEEP

Topical retinoic acid is a synthetic version of a vitamin A derivative that the body makes in minute amounts. It has been used successfully as a prescription acne treatment for 15 years. When users reported that their skin looked smoother and more glowing as well as less broken out, scientists began to investigate the drug's ability to normalize sun damage and aging symptoms. Their efforts seem to be proving successful. Preliminary studies found that use of topical retinoic acid over several months to a year induced a number of skin changes. It slowly re-formed the epidermis (top skin layer), improving superficial wrinkling. Fresh strands of skin supporting collagen were seen in skin layers right under the epidermis. The drug also lightened age spots and improved blood flow.

COOLEY APOTHECARY meets the highest level of professionalism in our business and would be honored to become your pharmacy. ## Dorothy Hall found there's no place like home after Same Day Surgery...

Dorothy Hall faced eye surgery for a detached retina, a cause for real concern. And when it was suggested that Dorothy go to Lexington for surgery she and her husband stood firm, and stayed home.

"There would be no point in going to Lexington when we know the Hospital and the staff here...and we've got a lot of confidence in the doctors, so why travel that many miles when we've got just as good or better here."

Same Day Surgery was an ideal alternative for Dorothy. Expenses were minimized because she recovered in the comfort of her own home. Many surgical procedures, like retina surgery, can be accomplished on an outpatient or Same Day Surgery basis.

Highlands now has 15 full-time surgeons on staff, covering specialties from internal to cosmetic and reconstructive surgery. And our performance has earned accreditation by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals* based on strict national standards.

Experienced, skilled surgeons are only part of the story. Highly trained medical support teams in anesthesiology, nursing, diagnostic services and post-operative care, combined with state-of-the-art equipment and facilities, make Highlands one of the safest most professional surgical centers for inpatient and outpatient surgery around.

Maybe that's why some people would rather stay home at Highlands for something as important as surgery. So if you're already here, why go anywhere else?

For more information on inpatient and outpatient surgery, ask your family physician, or call Highlands at 886-8511.

★ Cancer Hopeline

QUESTION: I know that x-rays are essential in order to diagnose many conditions, but I am also concerned because of the radiation. Are there any guidelines that will help to avoid excessive radiation exposure from x-rays?

ANSWER: Here are some guidelines suggested by the American Cancer Society for the wise use of medical x-rays.

*Do not hesitate to ask your doctor why he has ordered an x-ray if the reasons are unclear to you.

*If you are concerned about the amount of radiation you will be exposed to during an x-ray, your radiologist or technician should be able to provide you with that information.

*Keep track of the dates and locations of previous x-rays, to avoid having to repeat x-rays unnecessarily.

*If you are a young adult, avoid having repeated x-ray exposure of the sex organs (near the testicles or ovaries) unless medically necessary.

*If you are a woman of childbearing age, non-essential abdominal x-rays should be done in the first half of your menstrual cycle, if possible, to avoid possible risk to a fetus in an early and undetected pregnancy.

*If you know you are pregnant, avoid all unnecessary x-rays, especially of the abdomen.

*Shielding (with a lead apron or cup) is often used to decrease exposure to the reproductive organs, especially if you are a young adult.

For additional information on x-rays and your personal safety, call the Cancer Information Service at 1-800-4-CANCER and ask for the booklet, X-rays: Get the Picture on Protection.

State, Federal Officials Investigate Bat Killing

State and federal wildlife officials are investigating the killing of 188 bats in a Breckinridge county cave.

Sixty-six of the bats were Indiana bats, a federally endangered species.

Vandals apparently scraped the hibernating bats from the ceiling of the cave and smashed them into the ground with their boots and with large chunks of rock, according to John MacGregor, nongame wildlife biologist with the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources.

MacGregor said that on Jan. 8, a member of the Louisville Grotto caving club reported the presence of "about 200" dead bats in the "Bat Avenue" section of Thornhill Cave (or Wind Cave, as it is also called). This cave, located about a mile west of Big Springs, Kentucky, is popular with both experienced and novice cavers.

In addition to the endangered Indiana bats, 112 little brown bats, seven eastern pipistrelles and three big brown bats were killed, MacGregor says.

In February, 1986, the cave held 82 Indiana bats. Now only five remain alive in the cave, according to MacGregor.

Because of the endangered status of the Indiana bat, a reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of those responsible for this incident will very likely be offered, MacGregor said.

Anyone with information should contact the Louisville office of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service at (502) 582-5989 or call the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources' "Hotline" by dialing 1-800-25ALERT (252-5378). All information will be kept strictly confidential. Penalties for killing a federally endangered species can run up to $20,000 for each occurrence, MacGregor said.

Kentucky's wintering population of Indiana bats has declined from an estimated 330,000 in the 1960s to under 89,000. The repeated disturbance of hibernating bats by humans is thought to be one major reason for this species' decline, MacGregor says.

This is the second recorded incident of hibernating Indiana bats being wantonly killed in Kentucky. In the early 1960s, three boys entered a cave in Carter County and killed about 10,000 Indiana bats.

During hibernation, Indiana bats huddle together for warmth in large clusters on the ceilings of walls and caves, making them particularly vulnerable to vandalism. The fish and wildlife department's nongame wildlife staff works closely with organized caving groups and with the owners of important bat caves to limit or exclude cave visitors during the critical winter months, MacGregor said.

Fifteen different kinds of bats occur in Kentucky. Three of these (the Virginia big-eared bat and the gray bat, in addition to the Indiana bat) are listed as federally endangered, while three others are candidates for endangered or threatened status.

All Kentucky bats feed exclusively on insects. The main food sources of the Indiana bat are wasps, beetles, aphids and leafhoppers, according to MacGregor.

Teenage Birth Rate Said Alarming High

Over one half million teenage women give birth each year, and Kentucky's teenage birth rate remains among the highest in the country. In 1983, Kentucky had the highest percentage of births to white teenagers of all states. There were over 15,000 teen pregnancies in 1984 in Kentucky, meaning about 45 teens became pregnant every day, almost two every hour.

Not only are the statistics alarming, but so are the health risks. The death rate from pregnancy complications is much higher among women who give birth under age fifteen than among older mothers. Also, the teenage mother is more likely to be undernourished and suffer premature or prolonged labor. The baby is also at a health risk. Babies born to teenagers are often born too small and too soon.

Health risks are not the only considerations. Two out of three pregnant teenagers drop out of school and one half of all teen mothers rear their children as single parents. Men who become fathers before the age of 18 are about 40 percent less likely to graduate from high school. Of those fathers under 18 who do not graduate, one in five is employed. Almost 25 percent of teens who have a baby become pregnant again within a year. Also, the suicide rate is seven times higher among pregnant teens.

This evening, (Wednesday) KET is airing "A Generation at Risk". For more information on teen pregnancy, contact your local health department.

Sharks reportedly attack men ten times more often than they do women.

Doesn't Match Fast Food For Speed, But...

Beaten Biscuit Machine Promises Revival Of Hundred-Year-Old Culinary Tradition

They were served at the inauguration of former Governor John Y. Brown, and they're popular every year at derby time with a mint julep. They're delicious served with a slice of country ham, or just hot from the oven with butter. You won't find them in many restaurants. Nor do many people take the trouble anymore to prepare them. But they're a country delicacy. They're beaten biscuits.

Beaten biscuits, a 100-year-old southern tradition, are being revived in Floyd county by Mike and Jane W. Levans. The Prestonsburg couple served them in their home during the holidays and on special occasions and own a new beaten biscuit machine, which makes the preparation much easier.

"It's a unique piece of food of southern culture," said Mike Levans, "and they're just as good today as they were a hundred years ago." Levans suggests they be served as an appetizer or on party trays if you're having people over to watch the Kentucky Derby. "They're a special biscuit for a special occasion," he said.

While the ingredients for beaten biscuits seem simple enough—flour, butter, salt, and ice water—making the biscuits takes time and patience and a skill acquired with practice. And when you start out learning to make them, it's a trial-and-error process, according to Jane Levans.

After the ingredients are mixed in a bowl, the dough is kneaded into a soft round mound. The dough is then cranked through the rollers. Squeezing the dough over and over through the rollers forces air into it and changes the texture from a crumbly mixture to a smooth satiny dough, which will pop when the consistency is right. The dough is then spread out flat, one-half to three-quarters of an inch thick and cut with a circular biscuit cutter. The biscuits are pierced with a prong to make four holes, placed on a cookie sheet, and baked for 30 minutes. The whole process takes about an hour.

"They're something you have to develop a taste for," said Mrs. William Cook, of Prestonsburg, who enjoys eating beaten biscuits and appreciates the effort that goes into making them. "They're hard and have a bland taste, but they go so well with a thin slice of country ham."

Beaten biscuits are as much a family tradition as they are a Kentucky tradition. Around the Christmas holidays families have been known to gather and share the work of making beaten biscuits the same way they would take part in trimming the tree. Jane Levans can remember as a little girl turning the crank while her mother and father did the folding and feeding of the dough through the rollers.

Bill Francis, of Prestonsburg, as a boy recalls going with his father to his grandmother's house and helping her prepare the flat, hard biscuits. The custom has remained in the Francis family since his father inherited the machine, which is now a treasured possession.

Beaten biscuits got their name during colonial days when baking powder and soda were scarce and biscuit dough had to be beaten with a hard mallet or kneaded to get air into it. Later the beating process became mechanized when a machine was invented for that purpose in Missouri in 1880. The invention alleviated a lot of the hard work by making it possible to roll the dough.

There aren't many beaten biscuit machines around any more and the few that have survived through the generations are now sold as antiques or kept as family heirlooms.

What is now creating a resurgence of interest in beaten biscuits is a new patented machine developed by Wright Waller of Morganfield, Kentucky. The new version is constructed from castings which are exact replicas of the original 1880 machine and retains the same durability and quality. The Levans received their new Waller machine in November and consider it a collectible.

Leon Russell, the director of Jenny Wiley State Park, said he is considering buying a Waller machine. He will be given a demonstration this spring, and if he does purchase the machine, beaten biscuits will become a regular part of the May Lodge restaurant menu.

Levans agrees that the making of beaten biscuits isn't for everyone. However, he said, "It's a colonial-type of recipe that's been around 100 years, and in this day and time it's nice to come across something that isn't fast food."

"Kentuckians as a whole are traditionalist," said Jane Levans. "And this is a rebirth of a tradition."

Job Corps Looking For Qualified Men

The Carl D. Perkins Job Corps Center has been named the Most Improved Center in its region, director Rod Chambers told the center's advisory council at its Jan. 20 meeting.

"Although our center is the smallest in the country, we prevailed over the 23 larger ones we were competing against," Chambers said. The local center is in Region Four, which consists of eight southeastern states and includes one-quarter of the Job Corps enrollees in the nation.

In addition, Chambers noted, the local center is one of the top ten of all 106 Job Corps centers nationwide in G.E.D. acquisitions by its students.

Two new members also were welcomed to the advisory council at its Jan. 20 meeting: Tim Jessen, minister of the Presbyterian Church in Prestonsburg, and Elmo Allen, Prestonsburg police chief.

The center is now accepting applications for its new non-residency program, Chambers told council members, and he asked their help in locating possible participants. This pilot program, which began Jan. 1, offers the standard Job Corps training and other benefits but allows the students to live at home instead of at the center. The program also provides transportation to and from the center.

"We're looking for qualified Floyd county young people that we're sure are out there, young men ages 16 through 21 who have dropped out of school," he said.

Lenny Grant, standards officer at the center, told the council about the success story of a recent graduate, Reginald Hightower.

"This was a guy who didn't have his G.E.D. when he first arrived here," Grant said. By the time Hightower took his first military screening test, "his performance was well above average. A short time later, he scored 92 on his Army entrance test."

Because of Hightower's performance, Grant said, the Army and Navy got into a tug-of-war over him. The Navy won out, putting him in flight training where he focused on aviation electronics. He will leave his basic training as an Educational Petty Officer and recently qualified for navy-sponsored college education. He will attend a university in the U.S. that offers a Naval Reserve Officer's Training Corps program, possibly Annapolis.

"This is a heck of a program indeed," Grant concluded.

Grant also reported that 11 students will attend Prestonsburg Community College this year. Last year, four attended.

Pets' Deaths Anger Briarwood Families

"People must be heartless who would do something like that; they're not hurting anyone but children," said Sue Milligan of whoever is responsible for poisoning three dogs this month in Prestonsburg's Briarwood Addition.

The death of their year-old mixed-breed dog, Skippy, on January 3—apparently poisoned by strychnine—was "very traumatic" for her three children, she said.

Also a children's pet was Lucky, a full-stock Dalmatian belonging to the Thomas Lafferty, Jr. family. The 8½-month-old puppy died in a Lexington veterinarian's office Sunday, apparently after drinking antifreeze during a brief romp Friday near home.

A stray dog, also apparently poisoned, was found earlier in a Briarwood ditchline.

"We think it's deliberate. It's too much of a coincidence. It's running in a pattern," Lafferty said of the dogs' deaths. "We're very upset about it."

While some Briarwood residents have expressed concern about dogs running loose in the neighborhood—a petition to ban them circulated briefly about 10 months ago, and a resident appealed to the city council several months ago for help in resolving the problem—Lafferty insisted that the two family pets killed this month are almost always fenced in.

Mrs. Milligan said the same. "Everyone knew our dog. It had a collar and tags; it was extremely gentle, a beautiful little pet," she said. "If somebody wanted us to keep it up, they should have told us. I'm really shocked that people would do such a horrible thing."

For his part, Lafferty said he would offer a $1000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the culprit. "Obviously somebody doesn't want dogs in the neighborhood," he said. "But this is like vandalism. It's senseless. Our hearts are broken."

PCC Art Exhibition Features Work Of Two Local Painters

MARGO ADAMS, OF RUSSELL, painted "Forbidden Farm" after she and several artist friends were refused permission to paint on the premises.

"STREETWISE," BY JEFF CHAPMAN-CRANE, OF NEON, won third prize in the art show now on display at the PCC library.

An art show featuring works by two local painters and 30 other Kentucky artists is on display this week and next week in the library at Prestonsburg Community College.

Many of the artists will be on hand at PCC tonight (Wednesday) for a reception, open to the public, from 5:30 to 8 p.m.

Tim Sizemore, a Floyd county native, and Tom J. Whitaker, who grew up in Magoffin county but has spent the last 13 years teaching art at PCC, were chosen for the show out of about 65 artists who applied for the honor.

Also chosen was Knott county artist Mack Chaffins, whose painting entitled "Mountain Cat" won first prize among the works on exhibit. This is the first public showing of any works by Chaffins, a self-taught artist who is a house painter by trade.

All of the works were created by artists living in the 49 "Appalachian" counties of eastern and southern Kentucky, and much of the subject matter will be familiar to local viewers: mountain landscapes glowing with autumn colors or dusted with snow, a coal tippie, a mule, a rooster fight, an old woman hoeing a garden.

But some of the paintings deal with subjects that have little connection with the mountain origins of their creators—the pain of the Vietnam experience, the "visual realism" of a painted shirt, the "rearrangement of reality" in a depiction of fruit and vegetables.

"I think we're basically no different from artists anywhere else," said Whitaker, pointing out the many styles included in the exhibit, such as modern, folk, fantasy, primitive and abstract. "I think we're especially proud of our roots," he added.

Those roots are apparent in Sizemore's contribution to the show, a work entitled "Cheese Line" that pictures local people queuing up to receive surplus federal food. The cheese is being distributed by a faceless bureaucrat holding a list of recipients, and "Sizemore" is the first name on the list.

Sizemore said he started painting about a dozen years ago as a way to express thoughts and feelings. "I wanted to chronicle the mountain people," he explained.

That personal expression of the artist's vision is what art is all about, in the view of Whitaker, who owns a local gallery. Eastern Kentuckians are beginning to learn that art is not just a way to decorate a wall, he believes.

Since September the show has been displayed in Lexington, Cumberland, Somerset, Hazard, and Berea, and from here will go to Morehead, Maysville, Ashland, and Henderson, finishing up in May. Next year's show is already being planned by faculty at the Appalachian-Centers of Berea College and the University of Kentucky.

"We hope this will become an annual event," said Becky Bingham, project coordinator at the UK Center.

Second prize in this year's exhibit was awarded to Clay county artist Michael Wheeler for "February Woods." Third prize went to Jeff Chapman-Crane, of Neon, for his painting entitled "Streetwise." Prize money was provided by the state Endowment for Appalachian Artists.

Planned Activities Will Mark "Vocational Education Week"

February 8-14 is Vocational Education Week in Kentucky. Using the theme, "Vocational Education—Building America's Future," vocational educators will celebrate with planned activities statewide.

A number of mayors and county judge executives are declaring vocational education week in their respective cities and counties. Many vocational schools across the state will host open houses, have guest speakers, and offer tours of the school.

Student-produced work samples and products will be on display. Exhibits are being placed at schools, shopping malls, and other public places.

"Kentucky vocational education gives our young people a head start on jobs," said Superintendent of Public Instruction Alice McDonald. "It provides the job training and the skills that we need to make our labor force attractive to industry. Working together with our schools, vocational education programs offer broader opportunities for our citizens, and promise for Kentucky's economic prosperity."

Ann Bardwell, associate superintendent for vocational education, said vocational education is making adjustments to meet the changing needs of industry and the workforce.

"We are continually updating equipment and curriculum," she stated. She said that in addition to offering traditional vocational programs such as nursing or welding, vocational programs are often geared to an employer's particular needs.

"For example," Bardwell said, "if an employer needs people trained in robotics or special machinery techniques, we work with the employer to design a program to fit this particular need."

Another integral part of the vocational curriculum is student organizations that develop leadership skills and reinforce the curriculum. More than 1.5 million students are involved in student organizations nationwide. Of this number, approximately 50,000 are members of Kentucky chapters.

In Kentucky, vocational education programs are operated through 14 regions. Altogether, there are 17 state vocational technical schools, five health centers, and 57 area vocational education centers operated directly by the Office of Vocational Education of the State Department of Education. State schools serve mainly post-high school students while centers serve both high school students and adults.

In addition, most high schools offer general vocational education courses. These prepare the student for specific occupational programs, provide related instruction, teach work discipline and generic work skills, and also better prepare individuals who are college bound.

Gets Fraternity Post

Sheridan Martin, of Drift, was elected rush chairman for Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity at Morehead State University for the 1986-87 school year.

A sophomore majoring in political science, Martin is a member of Phi Alpha Delta pre-law fraternity and the Political Science Club. He is also Student Government Association treasurer and a Student Alumni Ambassador.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Sheridan Martin.

Miss Warrix, Mr. Lerman Wed

The marriage of Miss Rebecca J. Warrix and Mr. Stephen M. Lerman was solemnized September 14, at the Wellington House in Fayetteville, New York; Justice Franklin A. Josef officiating.

The bride is the daughter of Curtis and Minnie Warrix and the granddaughter of Ted and Rebecca Miller, all of Prestonsburg. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Lerman, of Fayetteville, New York, and the grandson of Mr. and Mrs. David Lerman, of Syracuse, New York.

Wearing a taffeta Princess Diane wedding gown, the bride was escorted to the altar by her brother, James C. Warrix, and was attended by Caryn Lerman, maid of honor, and by Dewana K. Warrix and Nancy Lerman, bridesmaids. Flower girls were Paula Sabbagh and Eisa Harris. The ring bearer was Christopher Harris. Pre-nuptial music was provided by harpist, Gail Lyons, and a reading of poetry was presented by Nancy Lerman.

The groom was attended by Mr. Robert Wilson, best man, and by groomsmen, Mr. Ken Lerman and Mr. Matt Lerman.

A reception was held on the grounds of the Wellington House. After the reception, the couple left for Cancun, Mexico.

The bride is a graduate of Prestonsburg High School and Artistry in Motion Modeling School. She is presently studying aerobic instruction and is employed by the Chemical Bank of New York.

The groom is a graduate of Jamesville-Dewitt High School and the Stowe School. He is self-employed in association with the Lerman Carpet Corporation. The Lerman's will reside in Syracuse, New York.

Students Will Compete In AAA Poster Contest

Kentucky students will compete next week for the chance to move on to national competition in AAA's 43rd annual school traffic safety poster contest.

This year's contest, set for Friday, January 30, at 11 a.m. in the Club's offices, will be judged by Larry Ball, Lexington Fayette Urban-County Police, Sharon Thompson, Lexington Herald-Leader and Ruth McCarthy, graphic designer, East Kentucky Power Cooperative. Traditionally, the contest draws hundreds of entries from communities throughout central and eastern Kentucky. This year, students have been asked to illustrate the following themes: (grades K-6) "Buckle your Safety Belt" or "Walk Facing Traffic" and (grades 7-12) "None for the Road" and "Stay Alert for the Unexpected".

"The contest is a fun, constructive way to make children more aware of proper safety practices," says Missy Tharpe, Supervisor of Safety Programs for AAA.

Winning entries from the local contest earn $50 U.S. Savings Bonds and then compete nationally in Washington D.C., next month. Top designs there are selected for reproduction and used to illustrate AAA safety education materials.

Judging criterion includes relationship of poster design to safety practices, originality, execution of the artwork and its visual impact.

Morehead Woos Floyd Seniors

Morehead State University recently held Senior Opportunity Night at the Prestonsburg Holiday Inn for high school seniors and their parents of Floyd county. The evening's activities, designed to acquaint students with MSU and its programs, included a video presentation and drawings for door prizes. MSU assistant professor of education Dreama Price, right, discussed opportunities at MSU with Suzie Coleman, of Prestonsburg, and her grandfather, Ray Nunery. (MSU photo by Pauline Young)

FESTIVAL BOARD MEET SET

Mrs. Maxine Bierman, chairman of the Jenny Wiley Festival, asks that members of the executive board please meet at the Floyd County Library here, Thursday (tomorrow) at 4 p.m.

FATHER POOLE BACK

Father William Poole, who once served as pastor of Catholic churches in Floyd and Johnson counties, and is presently pastoring a church in Lexington, is here to serve as pastor of St. Martha Catholic Church, while the regular minister, Father Joseph Muench, is on a tour of the Holy Land. Father Poole has many friends throughout this area, who are welcoming him here.

CHURCH GROUP MEETS

The Friendship Circle of the First United Methodist Church met Thursday, January 8, at the church. Mrs. Sandra Robertson presided at the meeting, during which plans for the improvement of the library there were discussed. Attending were Mesdames Sandra Robertson, Callie Carroll, Becky Scholtz, Kathy Fitzpatrick, Diana Turner, Dawn Brown, Rebecca Hereford, and Debbie Hicks.

The next meeting will be held February 5 at 7 o'clock, when work on the church's library project will continue.

CARD OF THANKS

The family of Fred Allen Nunemaker wishes to extend our sincere thanks to our friends and neighbors for all the kindness shown us during our recent loss. A special thanks to Rev. Brody Amburgey and Bobby Baldrige, and to all those who sent flowers. Also to Johnny Hall and his efficient staff at Hall Funeral Home.

His family,
PAULINE SALISBURY AND FAMILY
LAURA E. AMBURGEY AND FAMILY

RECOVERING

Miss Christine Spradlin is recovering nicely at her home, following recent hospitalization at the Highlands Regional Medical Center.

WORKERS WELCOMED BACK

The Baptist Day Care Center is welcoming back aides Mrs. Rhonda Howerton and Mrs. Jewell Bayes, who have been off sick. Loretta Ferrell substituted in the pre-school department during Mrs. Howerton's absence. The center is observing Kentucky Special Olympics Month by taking up donations from the children and staff.

MEN'S DAY

Sunday was Men's Day at the First Baptist Church here. This observance began with a breakfast there, at 8 a.m., with Ruby and Cam Garrett in charge of the cooking, and the pastor, Rev. Steve Hopkins, and several other men of the church, in attendance. During the morning services, which followed, testimonies were shared by Ron Johnson, Lee Carter, and Ron Hooker, and the All-Men's Choir presented the musical program.

First Presbyterian Will Hold Congregational Meet

The annual congregational meeting of the First Presbyterian Church has been rescheduled for Sunday, February 1st, immediately following the morning worship service. Annual reports and a review of the activities of the past year will be made. A luncheon will follow the meeting.

For further information, contact one of the Church deacons or the pastor, the Rev. Timothy Jessen.

RECOVERING AT HOME

Robbie Watson is recovering at his home, after being a patient this past week, at the Highlands Regional Medical Center, here.

MEETING RESCHEDULED

Mrs. Jane Bond, president of the Prestonsburg Kiwanians, announces that the luncheon-meeting scheduled for this past Thursday, at May Lodge, was postponed, due to inclement weather. The next luncheon-meeting there will be February 26, at 12:30, noon.

HERE FOR HOLIDAYS

Spending a part of the recent holidays here with Mrs. Earl Moore and Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Moore and son, Alan Kyle, were family members Edsel Moore and daughter, Miss Donna Moore, of Frankfort; Mr. and Mrs. George Stephens, of Frankfort, and the Stephens' son, George David Stephens, of Pittsburgh.

VISIT IN KINGSPORT

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hereford were last weekend in Kingsport, Tennessee, where they visited with their son and daughter-in-law, Dr. and Mrs. John Hereford, and were present when Dr. and Mrs. Hereford were welcomed into the fellowship of the Broad Street Methodist Church, during Sunday morning's services.

RETURN TO FLORIDA

Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Fannin and children, Jenna and Mikeal, returned recently to their home in Bradenton, Florida, after spending the holidays here with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Winston Ford, Jr., and family, and other relatives and friends.

New Career Information System Helps Kentuckians Find Jobs

Choosing a career. It's one of the biggest decisions a person makes.

The Kentucky Career Information System (KCIS) is designed to aid counselors, students and job seekers in career assessment, analysis, exploration and planning. It also offers information about educational opportunities, projected job openings and financial aid.

KCIS is a project of the Kentucky Occupational Information Coordinating Committee.

The KOICC is an interagency committee representing such diverse interests as the state departments for Employment Services, Economic Development, Labor, Local Government and Education, the Council on Higher Education, the Kentucky Association for Counseling and Development and local Private Industry Councils.

"Committee members and school counselors felt the career guidance programs that were available were too general," said KOICC Coordinator Don C. Sullivan. "So, we developed a program that includes information specifically about Kentucky as well as the national job market."

The career information program is available on computer diskettes. "This program can be valuable to people with a long work history who are looking for a different job, as well as students and recent graduates," Sullivan said.

Counselors and administrators in public and parochial schools, employment, vocational education and vocational rehabilitation counselors, job training programs staff and placement officers at Kentucky's colleges are among the people invited to training sessions on using the program. These workshops will be held Feb. 16-March 5 at 14 locations across the state.

Agencies may purchase a set of the diskettes and related material for $300, the committee's actual cost. However, the KOICC is giving 300 copies of the program to schools or offices that meet the following criteria:

- (1) the site has the necessary computer hardware;
- (2) a representative must attend an annual one-day training conference on proper use of the program, and
- (3) the agency agrees to return, upon written request, any materials that need updating.

The KOICC is limiting the free programs to one per site.

People who use the program will be asked a series of questions about the types of work and work environment they prefer, their personal abilities, physical demands and limitations, and how much time they are willing to spend in education and training to learn skills required for a particular job. Answers to these questions determine what potential occupations the computer will list.

"The computer files contain about 350 occupations, which represents about 91 percent of the employment in Kentucky," Sullivan said.

The program also contains guidelines for a systematic plan for attaining career objectives.

"It's written at the sixth grade reading level and should be easy for most people to use," Sullivan said.

The program was developed under a special grant from the National Occupational Information Coordinating Committee.

Three Point Shot May Become Three Point Recruiting Object

Last fall when the NCAA first introduced the three point shot most people didn't give the new rule much attention, thinking it to be just another of those passing effects, maybe likened to the jump ball ordeal.

However, the three point shot has had enormous effect on college basketball, probably even more so than the NCAA initially expected.

College athletics' controlling force introduced the new rule in hopes of increasing the game's excitement while decreasing traffic jams underneath the basket.

What the NCAA didn't give as a reason for the three point play was their desire to give even the smallest of schools an opportunity to compete on a Division I level, and this is exactly what happened.

Teams without a great deal of talent have consistently knocked off college basketball's top guns and as long as the three point play is in effect upsets will no doubt continue.

The NCAA succeeded in cleaning up play inside but even they couldn't have possibly estimated the impact and drastic change adding one point to an outside jumpshot would bring to college basketball.

The University of Kentucky has taken full advantage of the new rule and as a result, won several games they weren't expected to, at least in pre-season. To add fact to example, just look in the direction of the Louisville Cardinals. This is a group with talent galore but can't win because of a lack of outside shooting.

That one extra point per shot can quickly add up to a lead for one team or another but the three point play not only gives a boost to smaller teams, it also gives a smaller player a shot to play, especially when that shot comes beyond 19 feet nine inches.

Scott Draud, Vanderbilt's tiny guard, is a prime example. Draud isn't exactly a dominating physical player but with the three point shot he, as a freshman, has been able to score impressive numbers for Vandy. Without the three point shot Draud would be riding the bench instead of being his team's fourth leading scorer.

Draud represents the new breed of college basketball's role player. Forget the days of a bruising forward who the fans affectionally called 'a garbage man'.

Now fans will have the luxury of cheering for their team's designated shooter, that is if he can shoot from 20 feet.

We've all heard the talk around the gym. The talk about that small guard who doesn't possess great athletic ability but has been blessed with the talent to shoot a basketball from a great distance.

"If he was only a step quicker or maybe an inch or two taller," fans and coaches will say, "He could definitely play college basketball because he can surely shoot."

Well, you won't hear this conversation anymore. Reason? The three point shot. To be a positive contributor on any basketball level a college player doesn't necessarily have to possess an incredible vertical jump or tremendous quickness, that is if he can hit the outside jumper.

This season has already proven that a college team without three point shooters will be left in the dust of an opponent with the ability to successfully capitalize on the shot.

All of these facts and estimations leads us to one final conclusion, schools of higher learning will no doubt be in the market for players who can shoot the three point shot.

Be it in Louisville, Western, or Pikeville College, schools from all across the state and country will take to the road in search of a player with the ability to connect from 19 feet and nine inches, and this could have a positive affect on eastern Kentucky.

Several players from this area fit the three point mold we have mentioned which opens up additional revenues for local players to earn a spot on area college rosters.

Pikeville and Clinch Valley, along with Berea, seem to be the only schools interested in mountain basketball talent and with the three point shot the mountains can now give these small colleges the single factor needed to compete in and out of Kentucky.

Lets not get our hopes up too quickly though. The NCAA was rapid in their action of introducing the three point play and, who knows, they can be just as quick to destroy its presence.

In the mean time, however, don't be surprised if some players from this area get interesting offers that you and I didn't think they would get.

Ball handling and quickness on defense is almost a must when attracting a college recruiter's attention but there is room on any bench for a player who does nothing but score three points every time he shoots a medium range jumpshot.

MADE FOR THE THREE-POINTER: Allen Central's Roger Horne and McDowell's Brian Hall are two prime examples of the three point shot and college success. Both senior guards could eventually prove to be assets to area college programs.

McDowell Continues Search For First Conference Win

McDowell basketball coach Rick Hall keeps hoping for a conference win, he thinks maybe it would get his team over the county hump and give the Daredevils much needed confidence when playing Floyd County competition.

McDowell is a proven basketball team, sporting a 5-1 winning record over teams outside their own county but it is inside Floyd County where the Daredevils experience their problems.

Currently Coach Hall's club is struggling at 0-6 inside the county and last Tuesday night proved to be no different.

McDowell traveled up 122 to take on Wheelwright in the battle of Left Beaver and at least this time the Trojans proved they were the best team on that road.

Trailing by eight at halftime Wheelwright road the crest of a balanced scoring attack to defeat visiting McDowell 43-41.

While the Daredevils continue to search for their first conference victory Wheelwright, under first year coach Monroe Jones, has impressed themselves upon the rest of Floyd County with a 2-2 conference slate.

Johnny Isaac led the Trojans to the victory with 14 points while Tony Hutton and Steve Cole added eight points each.

Sophomore guard Dickie Joe Shannon topped McDowell and all scorers with a total of 17 points and Brian Hall tossed in 11 in the losing effort.

With the win Wheelwright not only improves their record but also put themselves in a position to battle for that ever important conference finish. The Trojans have at least kept their fate in the most comfortable hands, their own.

With four games remaining on their conference schedule the Trojans will have to win but are indeed in a solid spot to contend for at least the second position, also a bye in the district's tournament's opening round.

However, the conference's final standings and the district tournament are several basketball games away and Coach Jones says his team has some work left to do.

"We've got four conference games left and all of them are on the road so we've got our work cut out for us," Jones said.

But work isn't a stranger to either Jones or his Trojan players. They overcame many obstacles earlier in the season to develop into a competitive team and now are regarded by their competitors as a legitimate threat from this time to regional tournament time.

By the way, all isn't lost for McDowell, either. Although the Daredevils are 0-5 in the Floyd County Conference, their losses haven't exactly been as a result of domination on their opponents' part and a last placed finish also means that McDowell needs only one win in the district tournament to advance beyond Floyd County post-season play.

The Daredevils will also get another opportunity to gain bragging rights of Left Beaver basketball this Friday when McDowell and Wheelwright tangle in their return bout. This time Coach Hall's club has the luxury of playing at home.

INDIVIDUAL SCORING: WHEELWRIGHT: Johnny Isaac, 14; Tony Hutton, 8; Steve Cole, 8; Tommy Jones, 7; Craig Martin, 4; Jason Cook, 2.

MCDOWELL: Dickie Joe Shannon, 17; Brian Hall, 11; Lenny Hall, 9; Reggie Hall, 4.

SHORT SPORTS

In a game scheduled for Tuesday night, the McDowell Daredevils will take on Magoffin County tonight (Wednesday) at McDowell.

The game was originally scheduled for Tuesday but was delayed one night due to slick driving conditions.

The matchup will represent the second time the two teams have met this season, Magoffin County upended the Daredevils by six points in Salyersville earlier this month.

McDowell hasn't played since last Tuesday, as hasn't most area schools. The break also affected Magoffin County but in a positive way. The Hornets were not exactly playing their best basketball before the snow came, battling themselves and the flu.

Despite David Martin's 22 points the Prestonsburg Blackcats fell hard to Johnson Central, 60-37 at home last Tuesday.

After playing the Golden Eagles even through two quarters, Prestonsburg went cold from the floor, managing only 15 points in the second half.

Other than Martin's 22 the undermanned Blackcats received scoring from only three players. Brent Music accounted for eight while Cory Vicars scored six and Tim Trusty hit on a free throw.

On the Central scoring chart Jimmy Daniels led the Golden Eagles with 22, 20 of those coming in the second half, and Wendell Ratliff tossed in 14.

The big man in the Naval Academy, David Robinson, broke a Rupp Arena single game scoring performance and tied a personal career high when he scored 45 points Sunday against the University of Kentucky.

Robinson, proclaimed by most as the best center in college basketball, also claimed 14 rebounds and blocked 10 Wildcat shots.

However, Robinson didn't receive much help from his teammates, enabling Kentucky to win their 11th game of the season, 80-69, over 16th ranked Navy.

The "Cats will return to the hardwood and South Eastern Conference play tonight with a road game at Ole Miss.

Kentucky will also do battle with another SEC foe Saturday when they return home to take on Mississippi State, a team they defeated earlier in the season. The game will be aired courtesy of the SEC Television Network.

North Carolina and Dean Smith have finally worked their way back to where they should have been all the time, the number one spot in college basketball.

With only one loss on their record the Tar Hills were forced to settle with second best but only until number one Iowa lost to Ohio State Saturday and North Carolina blew out Georgia Tech.

Now Dean Smith has his team in the

THE SPORTING TIMES

I woke up yesterday morning, looked in the mirror and realized something. I'm getting old. No, my hair isn't falling out or I haven't lost my memory. I've just got this feeling of oldness.

I remember last year overhearing a basketball official saying, "you can tell you're getting old when you come to a basketball game and remember dating the cheerleaders' mothers."

This isn't the kind of old I'm talking about, though. I guess maybe it's just a feeling of old instead of a feeling of getting old.

Probably because I've had some time to think lately and from watching too much television. When the realization of mankind's destination and what people have created to destroy each other becomes a prime subject of thought the end result can be somewhat disheartening.

Have you ever considered what our ultimate goal is? Obviously every living thing will eventually meet the exact fate, death.

When a body dwells on this thought they can certainly become depressed, or maybe feel old and tired earlier than usual. Since the creation of man, man has constantly been scheming on how to destroy life, either their own or that of their enemy. Eventually germ warfare, nuclear weapons or common stupidity will destroy the life that we now know and cherish.

Really all we have is our short life granted to us but unfortunately some do not even get a fair shake where this thought is concerned.

Almost every night I see Glenn Campbell or some other celebrity begging us to send money to save starving people in lands we have never seen.

We all know world hunger, even in these great United States, exists but why are we constantly introduced to this guilt type pity. To make things worse, they show us the starving children.

With their screams of hunger and frail bodies lying limp, no question can be raised as to where they need help or not. They do, but how can I help. When we do send financial support who gets it? These programs have been around a long time but the initial problem is still here.

Now, I often ask myself, if this country and these people need money to assist underdeveloped countries why not cancel a space exploration or two and send needed equipment to where it's needed?

If the United States would take the finances from what it spends, in one year, on developing new ways of destroying our fellow human beings, they could save these children a lot of pain and hunger. I also ask myself, does our country really want to help?

Hey, with thinking like this there isn't any wonder why I feel old at 24. The worse thing about all of this is, I can't do a darn thing about it.

I'm not rich and I have no political power. Goodness, all I can do is sit and wait while the world continues to self destruct around me.

Luckily I woke up this morning and realized something else. I am rich. No, I don't have much money but I can certainly buy food for the table and I'm healthy enough to make of this life whatever I want.

So far I've done a pretty good job of it too. My job is probably the easiest one around and I can honestly say I love it.

I also realized this morning that tonight we will go see another excellent school matchup.

While we're sitting in the Prestonsburg Fieldhouse someone will probably sit down and start up an enjoyable conversation, probably something lighthearted and positive.

The Big O may show up with some words of wisdom, a prediction, or something about Alice Lloyd College. Oscar knows I greatly dislike the whole meaning of Alice Lloyd but for some odd reason I always enjoy his remarks on the subject.

The night will probably be highlighted by the game itself but occasionally a parent or maybe just a sports fan will mention that he or she enjoys the Times Sports Section. Occasionally a parent will thank me for an article or mention on their child and then is when I realize that this world isn't such a bad place to live, after all.

Even with its ultimate self devastation and wide range of human suffering I suddenly get a good feeling about this thing called living.

Then I realize that it really is the little things and the little people who make the world go around.

Ah, what if the lifestyles of the rich and suicidal destroy our lives. It hasn't happened yet and until it does I'm one who is going to have fun and enjoy.

Two little things will enable me to do this. The realization that all of life's good people certainly override the bad and richness is found in each other's hearts, not in their pockets.

Thanks to you and thanks to me, it works for all of us, the human way.

Bad Weather Forces Several Delays In County Schedule

The damage has already been done so now area coaches and basketball personnel are out to set the record, or at least the schedule, straight.

With an unexpected and unwanted snowfall, several games involving county basketball teams were put on hold for an unknown period of time and now coaches are tackling the task of re-scheduling the postponed games.

This problem may not seem to be of major proportions but if the Floyd County Conference is to crown a champion then several missed games are a must for make up.

Along with playing their regular schedule some games will have to be played when most coaches had rather not play because facing that extra game during the week might cause some physical problems.

Four conference contests were delayed due to the snow while several non-conference games were either cancelled or postponed.

No new dates have been announced as of yet but some people have mentioned playing on Sunday, which could very well become a reality.

Last year Wheelwright and Allen Central held a Sunday affair and could repeat the feat this season after having their game snowed out Tuesday night.

Both the Trojans and Rebels have two games to re-schedule sometime between now and district tournament time as does Prestonsburg and Betsy Layne.

McDowell is the only Floyd County team not facing the conference re-scheduling bit but the Daredevils did have games with Dorton and Hazard stopped short due to the bad weather.

The final game of the conference schedule was set for February 13 but county fans may have to put their conference winner on hold for a while because the four makeup games might not take place until the final weeks of the season.

Wheelwright coach Monroe Jones, who has his Trojans in the thick of the conference race at 2-2, says the teams involved will have to play in between games, on Sunday's, or whenever it takes to make the games up.

Jones agrees that this might cause some difficult playing times but also says that its something that has to be done.

Jeff Riley, Prestonsburg's head man, also mentioned Sunday in his casual conversation but the postponed games didn't seem to have an adverse effect on him.

And probably was a sweet surprise indeed. Riley's Blackcats were suffering from a rash of injuries and illness and proved it in their Tuesday loss to Johnson Central.

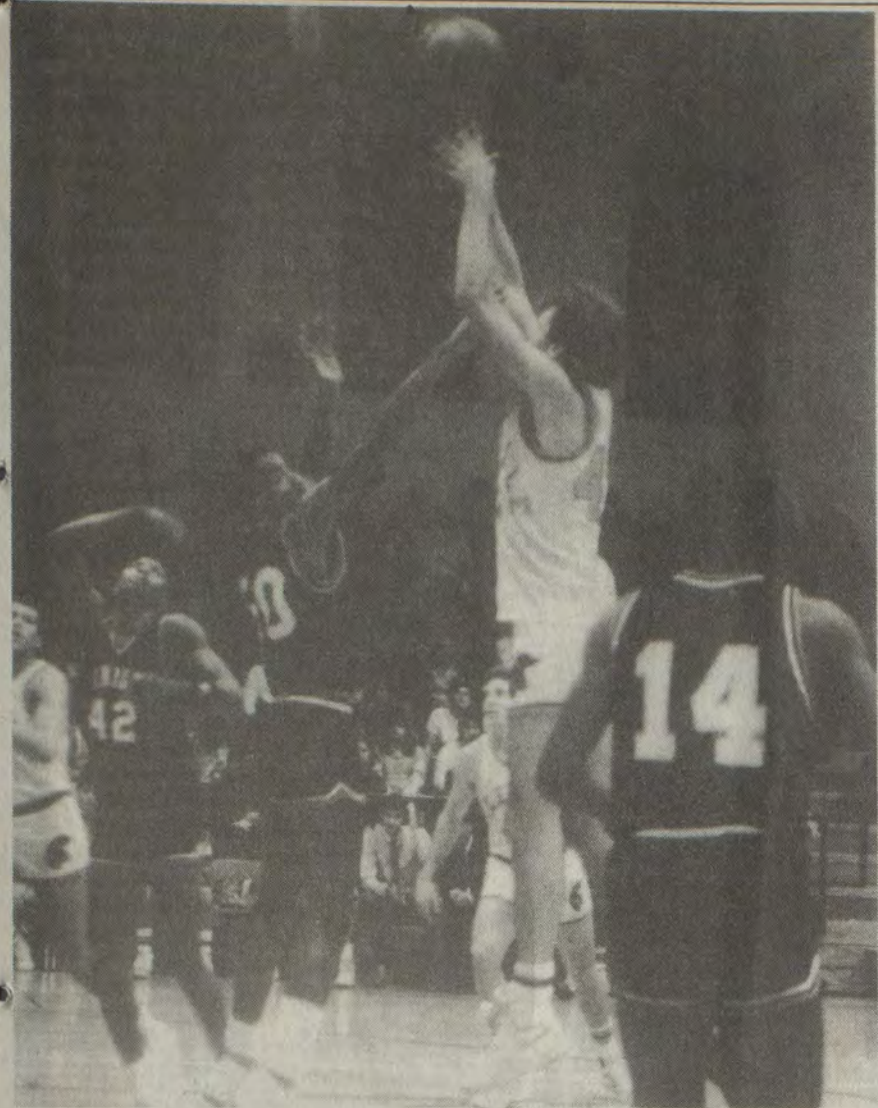

Now Coach Riley is slowly but surely getting his befallen warriors back in battle form but is still without a couple of key players.

For the rest of the county the snow was merely a happening rather than a major development so when the roads clear and basketball resumes all will be back to normal, except maybe for Betsy Layne. The Bobcats were in the midst of a terrific winning streak and folks around Betsy Layne hope their Bobcats can continue their momentum, or winning ways, or whatever magic they had been weaving.

No major changes are expected but some headaches could be a possibility when all sides sit down and re-make the conference schedule.

Playing on Sunday doesn't sound bad and neither does an extra week day contest but waiting longer for these anticipated battles does make for a disappointing stretch.

PLAYER OF THE WEEK, AGAIN: Pikeville's Todd May was named the K.I.A.C. Player of the Week while continuing to lead the nation in several offensive categories.

all familiar spot, number one, and if North Carolina has decided to play basketball the way they can then it may be a long time before anyone replaces the Tar Hills as the nation's number one team.

When spring training starts next month Paintsville native Johnny LeMaster will be among the many players looking for a spot on their team's regular season roster.

LeMaster, a 10 year veteran of major league baseball, found himself without a job after being let go early last season. The former Tiger baseball star played this past summer in Montreal's farm system and now will be trying to earn a chance to play with the Oakland A's parent club.

LeMaster, even if he makes the club, isn't expected to see much starting duties but with his experience and defensive skills, should give Oakland a big boost as a utility man.

On the strength of a 75-57 victory over Murray State Monday night, the Morehead State Eagles moved to within one-half game of OVC leader Middle Tennessee.

Bob McCann led the Eagles to the victory, scoring 18 points while controlling the boards with a total of 14 rebounds. MSU is currently 5-1 in league play while leader Middle boasts a 6-1 record.

PIKEVILLE'S MAY, CAMPBELLVILLE'S GUNN PLAYERS OF WEEK
For the third time this year, Pikeville's 6-9 senior forward, Todd May, is the Men's Player of the Week. In leading the Bears to two conference wins, the NAIA's leading scorer scored 82 points, grabbed 31 rebounds, and blocked 8 shots. He hit 33 of 51 from the field and 16 of 18 free throws. Campbellsville's Franseda Gunn, a 5'11 senior from Lebanon, Ky., scored 78 points as her Tigers won two of three. She also grabbed 43 missed shots. She hit 30 of 51 field goal attempts and 18 of 24 free tosses. Congratulations Todd and Franseda!

Meetings Will Give Hunters An Opportunity To Voice Opinion On 'Coon Management Plan

Kentucky's raccoon hunters will have a chance to voice their opinions about future management of the state's favorite furbearer in a series of public meetings scheduled for late January and February.

The meetings will help determine if coon hunters are satisfied with the current situation, or if they are willing to make the sacrifices necessary to improve raccoon numbers.

Tom Edwards, furbearer program coordinator for the department, has developed a program which he says will improve the quality and quantity of hunting and trapping for raccoons. Edwards will meet with raccoon hunters in each of the state's nine wildlife districts to explain his proposals and receive feedback on increasing raccoon numbers.

Kentucky's raccoon population is stable and in no danger of being depleted, Edwards says. However, coon numbers are lower than they could be in several areas of the state.

Illegal harvest during dog training seasons (when raccoons can legally be chased but not taken) is one of the main reasons populations are not what they should be, according to Edwards. The proposal calls for no dog training season (which currently is, in effect, open year-round) over the eastern portion of the state, and the complete elimination of the "shake-out" season, when raccoons are treed and hunters shake them loose for their dogs to catch.

The plan also calls for a total closure of the season for a 15-day period just before the opening of the hunting and trapping season. This would reduce illegal harvest during the time when the violation rate is the highest, according to law enforcement records.

The restrictions on dog training would limit coon hunters, but would provide an increased number of animals available during the hunting and trapping season. It would minimize the running of pregnant sows and the splitting up of family groups, which also hinder population growth.

The proposal calls for dividing the state into Eastern and Western zones. The Eastern Zone would be more strictly regulated because of lower raccoon populations and the lack of suitable habitat. The Western Zone on the other hand, has both higher populations and less hunting pressure and would therefore be managed more leniently.

Dog training would be permitted only in the Western Zone, but would begin July 1 instead of February 1 and continue through October 31. Sanctioned field trials and departmental approved club trials would also be permitted only in the Western Zone. There would be no bag limit on raccoon in the Western Zone, while the Eastern Zone bag limit would remain at one per hunter per night.

Removal of the bag limit in the Western Zone should not jeopardize the raccoon population, since hunters are currently harvesting below the limit already.

Specific dates and locations for the meetings will be announced in the near future or are available by calling the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources at (502) 564-4336.

The Kinkajou, a cat-sized, tree-climbing animal, uses its prehensile tail to climb and as an extra "paw" for scooping insects, honey and fruits.

Flu or Flu-like...

It's Not Just For Kids

Ah-choo! Cough, sneeze, snuffle, wheeze—flu or flu-like, it's no fun for those who are suffering from what's going around, hereinafter referred to as WGN.

Too many have honest-to-goodness, horrible, awful flu—Taiwan or otherwise. There are lots of other kinds, y'know, and they all lay you low unless you're a Superman (or woman) type.

Your head pounds, muscles you don't even have, ache; your teeth hurt where there aren't any; absolutely nothing tastes good. Good? Make that bearable. Well, maybe Coca-Cola. Some people have existed on it for an unbelievable number of days. (No, they are not paying me anything.) Others find only water palatable and lose an amazing amount of excess baggage. This is known to a limited number of victims as the "Flu Diet," and in an ever-changing, unstable world, you may depend on this as firmly as the Rock of Gibraltar, it will never catch on.

Maybe you can't be too rich, but thin, hollow-eyed, and weak, you can be too much of. Or is that, of which you can be too much? Also you can carry to extremes not ending a sentence with a preposition.

To get back to WGN, two of the biggest dangers are pneumonia and heart damage, both side effects or complications of flu. These are usually, I'm told, from secondary infections, not the flu itself. That's why your doctor may prescribe an antibiotic. It won't do a thing for or against the flu, but it will keep you from having pneumonia. The heart damage/attack is sometimes brought about by too much exertion too soon. So watch it! Let Junior clear the walks.

Anyway, it doesn't matter what they say about the Taiwan strain seeking out youngsters 35 and under, flu is not just for kids. It doesn't matter whether you're four or forty, eight or eighty. There's a strain for everyone.

There's also a theory—you might even relegate it to the rumor level, and you know what rumors are—that this WGN is traveling from North to South. These words are always capitalized, by the way—at least by some people. At any rate, look at the facts. First Magoffin county closed its schools. Then, the next week, Johnson county followed suit, and you know who's next, don't you?

Now that we have established the fact(?) that a flu epidemic is imminent, and a Yankee plot to boot, how would you like another unfounded rumor to the effect that there is a shortage of Kleenex, Puffs, or whatever turns you on?

Now, wouldn't that be a revolting development?

Don't push the panic button. Not one word in the preceding three paragraphs is true, and according to the medical community, no matter how rotten you feel, it's mostly not flu, it's flu-like.

Whod's thad you say, Docdor?

HRMC Upgrades Heart Monitoring System

Patsy Sword, RN, supervisor in the Cardio-Diagnostics Department at Highlands Regional Medical Center, demonstrates the Holter Scanner.

The Cardio-Diagnostics Department at Highlands Regional Medical Center has upgraded its Holter Monitor System. This system records patterns of heart rhythms, and is able to detect and analyze irregularities of the heartbeat. Many problems associated with the heart occur during an individual's daily work or activity pattern. This system allows the physician to assess any EKG changes associated with one's daily schedule.

The basic Holter System is not new at Highlands. It has been in use for approximately ten years. The original Holter machine was about as large as a console T.V. Then, in 1983, the first upgrade took place, when the large unit was replaced by a newer machine similar in size to an average office typewriter.

The 1987 upgrade will allow this system to analyze ST segments, that portion of an EKG which detects heart damage, and will also allow for pace-maker analysis. It has three screen display modes permitting easier and more accurate scans. These procedures will offer increased monitoring power and efficiency for all heart patients.

Also included in the upgrade is a new Pacetrack Recorder. This is a unit similar to a small tape recorder. By connecting its electrodes to a patient for a 24-hour wearing period of normal work, or home routines, the physician is able to monitor daily heart rhythms. The notable feature of the new Pacetrack Recorder is that patients with all types of pacemakers may now be monitored.

Still another new feature is a Quick Jet Printer which is smaller, quieter, and more cost efficient and will replace the existing thermal printer.

Rodney Handshoe, M.D., Medical Director of Cardio-Diagnostics stated, "Technology is constantly changing. Holter monitoring is a valuable service and this enhancement has improved its diagnostic capability."

This upgrade is another in the continuing program at Highlands Regional Medical Center to offer the most up-to-date medical procedures available, to the people in our area.

Single Parents To Form Support Group

A group of single parents located in Pikeville is seeking to organize a local chapter of "Parents Without Partners," a national organization that promotes the welfare and interests of single parents and their children. Floyd county residents, as well as single parents from any other nearby county, are invited to join, according to Linda Blair, an employee at Mountain Comprehensive Care Center who is one of the primary organizers.

The first meeting for interested parents will be held Saturday, March 28, at 3 p.m. at 156 College St. in Pikeville, next to Deskins Motors and two doors down from the Care Center. Free parking is available next to the Care Center.

Blair asked that anyone who plans to attend, or who is interested but cannot attend, call her or one of the other organizers at 432-3143 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. or at 432-3057 or 456-3007 after 5 p.m.

"Parents Without Partners" is a non-profit, non-sectarian educational organization that offers help and companionship for any person, male or female, who is trying to raise a child without the help of a spouse. It is open to those who are single due to separation, divorce, death, or desertion, even if they do not have custody of the children, and even if the children are grown.

The world's smallest deer, a South American animal called the pudu, stands only about 15 inches high, about the size of a cocker spaniel. According to International Wildlife magazine, this diminutive creature is also remarkably elusive. An American biologist who has been studying pudus for nearly a decade has never seen one in the wild.

PCC Enrollment Is Up

Spring semester enrollment at Prestonsburg Community College numbered 1,517 students, the largest in PCC history, according to associate director Robert R. Allen. He attributed the continuing climb in enrollment to the college's accessibility, the variety of night and day classes offered, and the high-quality program presented by PCC faculty.

Several new education and engineering technology courses are being offered this year, according to PCC public relations officer John Herald. A Single Parent Program also has been initiated, and the college is making an effort to fill the educational needs of vocational education, Job Corps, Head Start, and coal industry personnel, Herald said.

Continuing education classes also have attracted new students who are not counted in the 1,517 enrollment total. These classes include a program in entrepreneurship and a Dental Auxiliary Training Program. The college also is offering Morehead classes at the junior and senior level, held on the PCC campus.

FLOYD COUNTY HEALTH NEWS

By JANE BOND
Health Educator

A pap clinic will be held at the Floyd County Health Department Thursday, January 29, from 8:30-11:30 and 1-2. This clinic is open to women of all ages, but those women age 45 and over are especially urged to take advantage of this free service since this is the high risk age for the disease.

A nurse from the health department will be in Martin Monday, February 2, at the Beaver Valley Clinic from 10-2. She will offer T.B. skin tests, urinalyses, blood pressures, anemia screening, immunizations, and pap tests. This clinic is a free service of the health department and is open to the public. With the exception of the pap tests, these same services will be offered Friday, February 13, at the Methodist Church in Wayland from 10-2.

Family Planning Clinics for February are as follows: Monday, February 2, at 12:30; Monday, February 9, at 12:30; and Wednesday, February 11, at 8. No appointment is needed for these clinics. For more information call 886-2788.

Wal-Mart To Award $1,000 Scholarship

The Wal-Mart Store, here, has announced that a $1,000 scholarship will be awarded to a high school senior in the near future. Speaking on behalf of the store, Carl Sparks, manager, said, "One scholarship will be presented to a student who plans to attend a college or university after graduation from high school."

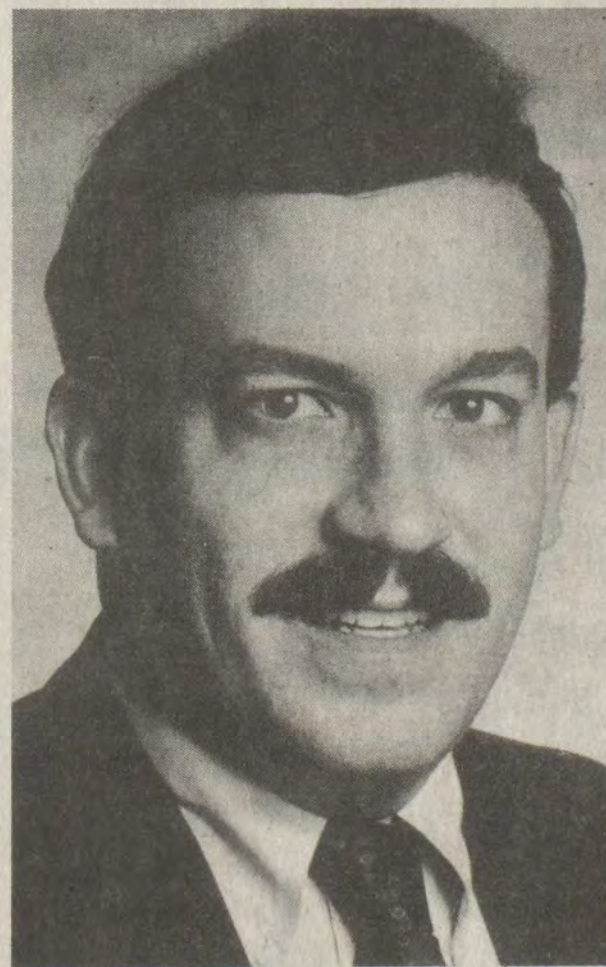

The scholarship will be based on the student's scholastic and academic achievements, extracurricular and work activities, and financial need. A team of judges, consisting of community leaders, will evaluate the applications and make their final determination during an interview with the student.

"Students interested in applying for the scholarship should check with their high school counselor for applications and more information," Sparks stated. Applications must be received by the school counselor during the first week in February.

The scholarship given by the Prestonsburg Wal-Mart Store is only one of over 1,000 other scholarships being given by the company. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., is headquartered in Bentonville, Arkansas.

JERRY PATTON

DEMOCRAT FOR
COMMONWEALTH ATTORNEY

Being Commonwealth Attorney is a privilege, not a right. After all, the object is to serve the people. The fact is, your Commonwealth Attorney is directly accountable to you, and you expect him to handle the job like his future depends on it. After all—it does. That's the way it should be. That's the way it will be when you elect Jerry Patton Commonwealth Attorney.

HOOSIERS (PG-Orion Pictures) Starring Gene Hackman, Barbara Hershey, Dennis Hopper. ★ ★ ★

By J.T. YURKO

Sure, "Hoosiers" is another sports film. The underdogs rise over incredible odds, achieving their goals with good old-fashioned hard work and more than a touch of natural talent. It is a small-town basketball version of "Rocky," where the hick town of Hickory takes on the bullies of Big Town High, and guess who wins.

Don't strain too hard. From beginning to end, this is predictable hokum. The only surprise of "Hoosiers" is that you may find yourself cheering along with everyone else by the time the final credits roll.

The most important ingredient in a sports film is the likability of the lead characters. Root, root, root for the home team, and if the home team is not worthy of praise, move out of town. There's no need to do anything so drastic here, thanks largely to Gene Hackman, who seems to be settling in to middle age with quiet dignity.

He plays a man named Norman Dale who arrives at Hickory, Ind., in 1954 to teach history and be the high school basketball coach. Hickory is the kind of town that makes Mayberry look like a metropolis. The entire senior class contains only 57 students, and the basketball team consists of only six boys.

Barbara Hershey plays another teacher in the school, the one who realizes that a man like this in a place like Hickory is usually running away from something. She does her research and discovers that he was once one of the top college coaches in the country. Add on a local superstar who refuses to play for the team after the previous coach's death, and the subplots begin to fall into place.

It is to everyone's credit that it all falls together in a most likable, friendly manner. Hackman plays the coach like a middle-America reverend; he's part fundamentalist and part psychologist. And Dennis Hopper nearly steals the film as a former local basketball star now turned town drunk.

"Hoosiers" was released in time for Academy Award consideration, and chief among any nominations should be the editing. Good editing is crucial to a sports film, and it rarely has been done better

GUILTY OF INNOCENCE

Lenell Geter (Dorian Harewood) is a young black engineer who was sentenced to life in prison for the armed robbery of a fast-food store in Dallas County. The story of Geter's accusation, conviction and ultimate release, due in part to media pressure that pointed out alleged weaknesses in the prosecution's case, is told in "Guilty of Innocence," airing TUESDAY, FEB. 3, on CBS.

VIDEO SCENE

Love 'em or hate 'em, the Beasties have arrived

By Barton Weiss

The Beastie Boys have galvanized the rock 'n' roll world like no other band. For the sophisticated crowd, they are juvenile and stupid. For the fun-loving crowd, they are everything rock should be — nasty, anti-formal and the epitome of street cool.

King Ad-Rock

They are the logical next step after Run-DMC's enormous popularity, combining rap with a little heavy metal and some heavy doses of hard rock. But the street-level angst is missing in this group.

The second video of the boys Beastie is "You've Got to Fight (to Party)," an anthem of sorts for the rebel-with-a-useless-cause generation. The video is a ripoff of Dee Snyder's Twisted Sister clip. Here the three Beasties, who go by the names of King Ad-Rock, Mike D and MCA, invade a party given by a couple of nerds.

The Beasties have something of the fresh rawness of the early Sex Pistols without the anger. These guys just want to party.

What price science?

Kate Bush's videos are always clever. Her latest, "Experiment IV," is the only new track on her current "best of" album. The clip is about a series of military experiments gone wrong, and Bush makes only a brief appearance as a ghost.

It is told from the point of view of scientists who are caught between the desire to satisfy their scientific curiosity and the unexpected consequences of their research. It makes good watching.

A real joy

A-ha's new video, "Cry Wolf," is another joy to watch. There are a few nice effects of the boys running, but the best parts are the shots of the band as live figures in a pop-up book, which a boy watches as he turns the pages.

The nice thing about this clip is that it conjures memories of a-ha's famous "Take on Me" clip, in which band members popped out of a comic book, but avoids being a straight repetition of a-ha's initial success.

A tad obvious

In "Nothing's Gonna Stop Us Now," Starship's music video from the movie "Mannequin," band members start out as dummies, come to life, play the song and turn back to mannequins. There isn't one original idea in either the song or the video. This one is a complete waste of time.

Adult Education Programs Give School Dropouts Second Chance

By ALICE McDONALD
 Superintendent of Public Instruction
 I'm an educator, not an economist, but it is clear to me that Kentucky's biggest economic-development problem is the low educational level of our work force.

Just a few years ago, Kentucky's major attraction to manufacturing industries was the willingness of our citizens to work hard for reasonable wages. Formal education didn't make a lot of difference.

But the world has changed—dramatically. The factories that once sought out Kentucky workers now go to Asia, where people work seven days a week for as little as $3,000 a year. In the United States, more factories are closing than are opening.

The current growth industries—and the ones with the brightest future—are those based on science and engineering technology and those that process and distribute information. The industries of tomorrow are looking for employees with strong academic skills, particularly those with good basic math and science knowledge.

In these industries, a strong back and a willingness to work are not enough. To them, Kentucky's work force is no longer efficient; it cannot adapt quickly to new technology. Statistically, it is the most poorly prepared work force in the nation. That makes Kentucky unattractive to the kinds of businesses that offer the most promising jobs.

Already a poor state, we cannot afford another decade of being last—dead last—in the country in the education of our work force.

Yes, we have made significant improvements in our grade schools and high schools in the past three years. But we can't change our work force soon enough by educating our young people alone. With a labor force of 1.3 million people and only 40,000 high school graduates a year, it would take 30 years.

To change Kentucky's work force, we must improve the education of the more than 1 million adult Kentuckians who have not completed high school. That is correct: We have a million dropouts in Kentucky.

And that's what Project Second Chance '87 is all about. It is an effort to increase enrollments substantially during 1987 in literacy classes, adult basic education classes and testing programs for the General Educational Development certificate, or GED.

It's a partnership effort of the Kentucky General Assembly, the Kentucky Department of Education and dozens of Kentucky businesses.

Thanks to the 1986 General Assembly, we now have adult education programs in all 120 counties. Plus, we were able to create the GED Foundation to raise money from the private sector to promote adult education and the GED test. The promotion effort is already a great success. Electric and gas utilities in all parts of the state have mailed sample GED questions and other promotional materials in their bills. Similar materials will be mailed in welfare checks.

We are asking businesses to offer incentives to employees who earn their GED certificates and to refer all applicants without diplomas to the adult education program.

We want to make sure that every Kentuckian gets the word about our programs in 1987.

We are offering other incentives. The Kentucky League of Savings Institutions, Inc. will pay the $10 GED test fee for all who take the exam on Saturdays in March and April.

The Kentucky Department of Education's adult education programs are already recognized as the best in the nation. Last year they served more than 25,000 adults and issued more than 10,000 GED certificates. With the additional support of the General Assembly and the business community, we will reach tens of thousands of other Kentuckians in 1987 and the years to follow.

When the 1990 census results are announced, Kentucky will no longer be last in educational attainment.

We will show the businesses of the future that we can work both hard and smart.

We will create a new Kentucky with better jobs and a better life for all Kentuckians.

Moon & Stars Watermelon has bright yellow spots on its fruits & leaves and is now being offered by three dozen SSE members.

Gardeners search for old-time vegetables

Thousands of gardeners across the country are searching for "endangered" vegetable seeds. Through a non-profit organization called the Seed Savers Exchange (SSE), they are coordinating their efforts to save "old-time" vegetable varieties from extinction.

Kent Whealy of Decorah, Iowa, founded the SSE in 1975 after an elderly, terminally ill relative gave him seed of three garden plants the family brought from Bavaria four generations earlier.

Whealy started trying to locate other gardeners keeping seeds their families had passed down from generation to generation. He discovered most gardeners brought seeds with them when they immigrated to the U. S. The SSE is now an annual seed exchange with 630 members who distribute thousands of seed samples each spring.

The SSE would like to hear from all gardeners keeping seeds not available in any catalog: beans grandmother raised, tomatoes a friend's family brought from the old country, corn obtained from an Indian gardener, or a grain from the Amish.

Gardeners who are keeping the seeds of any food plant that is not available commercially are asked to write: Seed Savers Exchange, Rt. 3 Box 239-A, Decorah, Iowa 52101. Include a detailed description of the plant and its history. Everyone who sends a 22-cent stamp will receive a two-page information letter describing the SSE's preservation projects and publications, said Whealy.

EKU Plans Phonothon

More than 6,000 Eastern Kentucky University alumni will receive telephone calls seeking support for their alma mater during EKU's Phonothon '87, Feb. 1 through March 5. Student volunteers will ask EKU graduates to contribute money to the University's Alumni Annual Fund during the five-week event. Alumni contributions will benefit student scholarships and other general university needs. The phonothon goal is $30,000. Last year's phonothon, the first held by EKU, raised $22,215 and was a "resounding success," according to coordinator Mary Ellen Shuntich. More than 300 students will participate in the event this year, Shuntich said, including members of EKU fraternities and sororities, the Student Alumni Association, and other campus groups. Area businesses have donated food and prizes for the student volunteers. "The degree of participation and cooperation for both the campus and local community has been tremendous," Shuntich said. "I think people realize how important higher education is to the state and how important private support is to Kentucky's colleges and universities. "The phonothon also gives our students a chance to learn for themselves how important alumni support can be for EKU."

"I'm glad you made me listen."

Elsie C. Wheeler, "Granny Cotton" Succumbs At 111

Elsie Cotton Fitch Wheeler, known to many in this area as "Granny Cotton," died Tuesday, January 20, at Riverview Manor Nursing Home. Born Oct. 7, 1875, in Dallas, Texas, she was 111 years old.

The only child of Kentucky coal miner Emmy Samples and his wife Mary, she had outlived three husbands, and none of her five children survived infancy. But her last Christmas was not without gifts. Four weeks before she died, Mrs. Wheeler received a new apron and dress from the Prestonsburg Junior Beta Club and the Southside Freewill Baptist Church of Paintsville.

Her health had deteriorated over the past year, particularly her eyesight, which kept her from working on the hand-sewn quilt tops that had earned her spending money in recent years. Nevertheless, she told a reporter on Christmas Day that she was feeling "fairly well."

She had lived in Paintsville for most of her life, moving there in 1893 at the age of 18 when she and her first husband, John Cotton, heard that the coal mines were hiring again. Cotton was originally from eastern Kentucky, but had moved to Texas when the mines closed.

After Cotton died, she married Pea Fitch and later Edd Wheeler, both of whom are now dead.

In spite of her lack of close family members, in her later years Mrs. Wheeler had no lack of visitors, most of them reporters. She was featured in numerous newspaper articles and television shows, including the "Good Morning America" show.

"She was a real popular person," said Janie Tinscher, a staff member at Riverview, where Mrs. Wheeler spent her last eight years.

She had smoked a pipe for most of her life, Tinscher added, and kept the habit right up to the end, puffing on two or three pipefuls a day at the nursing home.

Services were held Friday at Paintsville Funeral Home, and she was buried at Jayne Cemetery in Staffordsville.

Claude Wallen

Claude Wallen, 72, of Prestonsburg, died Saturday at the Highlands Regional Medical Center following a short illness.

He was born April 29, 1914 at Bull Creek and was a son of the late Butch and Julie Belle Elliott Wallen. A retired miner, he was formerly employed with the Princess Elkhorn Coal Company at David and the Clinchfield Coal Company at Clinchfield, Virginia. He was a member of the Eagles Club, and was also a member of the Local Union No. 29 at Clinchfield. He was twice married, first to Mae Green Wallen, who preceded him in death in 1974, and later to Louise Butler Wallen, who survives.

In addition to his wife, he is survived by four sons, Claude E. and Billy R. Wallen, both of Warsaw, Ind., Charles M. Wallen, of McDowell, and Don Wallen, of Pikeville; a daughter, Betty Jo Ramey, of Warsaw, Ind.; a sister, Minnie Allen, of Dwale, and seven grandchildren.

Funeral services were conducted Monday at 11 a.m. in the Floyd Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Don Fraley, Jr., officiating. Burial was made in the Richmond cemetery here.

Pallbearers were Dickie Butler, Sonny Butler, Norman Hunter, Joe Dillon, Claude Allen, Gary Kendrick.

PETITION TO CLOSE COUNTY STREET

At the January 16, 1987 County Fiscal Court meeting, a petition was received from Bill & Sylvia Elliott to close Virginia Street in the Ferguson Addition of Harold, Floyd County, Kentucky. The Street is located on the property line of Willie and Sylvia Elliott from beginning to end. If no objections are received, the Court will vote to close said street at the February 20, 1987 meeting.

IN MEMORY OF REV. DOCKIE MARSILLETT
Who went away with a friend
Jan. 31, 1986

Dockie, to some you are forgotten to some a part of the past. To Shelton and I who lost you Your memories will always last. Know one knows the heartache only those who lost can tell. The pain we bear for the one we loved so very well. The sound of your voice, the touch of your hand. So very much missed and so hard to understand. It's a lonesome home without you and sad has been the way. For our life and home are not the same since God called you away. If all the world was ours to give we would give it yes and more To see you coming home from work and walking through the door. You were so very special in your own special way. Your love and memories will always be with Shelton and I today and everyday. Dockie, we love and miss you very much.

In Memory of Eva Collins

Died Feb. 11, 1967

Mother, 20 long years ago the Lord called a loving mother home to be with him somewhere in Glory. Sadly missed by her children. Mother, the old home place is not the same any more. Saw you on the porch watching for me to come home. Mother, you have been gone a long time but it is just as if it were yesterday in my heart. It won't be long till God calls His children home and we will meet to separate no more. I know you will welcome me home. Sadly miss you. Your son, Ollie Collins.

Chloe S. Ferrell
Chloe Saunders Ferrell, 70, of Enon, Ohio, a Prestonsburg native, died Jan. 7 at Community Hospital, Springfield, Ohio, after a long illness.

A teacher for more than 30 years in the Mingo County, W. Va. public school system, Mrs. Ferrell was a member of the West Virginia Retired Teachers Association, Delta Kappa Gamma Sorority, the Order of the Eastern Star, and the Church of Christ. She was also active in scouting, serving for several years as den mother to a Lenore, W. Va. cub scout troop.

Daughter of the late Fred and Tenna Bingham Saunders, Mrs. Ferrell was also preceded in death by her husband, Ed Ferrell. She is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Carol Ramey, of Enon, and a brother, Delmas Saunders, of Prestonsburg; and four grandchildren.

Funeral services were conducted Tuesday, Jan. 13, at the Little Dove Church of Christ in Lenore, W. Va. with Mac Hall the officiating minister. Burial was in Mountain View Memory Gardens, Maher, W. Va.

Charlena Merwine
Funeral services for Charlena Merwine, 38, of Prestonsburg will be conducted at 11 a.m. today (Wednesday) in the Floyd Funeral Home chapel. She died Monday at the University of Kentucky Medical Center following an extended illness.

She was a daughter of the late John Spears and Lora Jervis Goble, born April 19, 1948 in Floyd county. Preceded in death by her husband, Robert Merwine, in 1979, she was a member of the Church of Christ at Arkansas.

Surviving are a son, Robert Avery Merwine, of Prestonsburg; a stepson, Fred Merwine, of Cincinnati, O.; two stepdaughters, Bonnie Porter and Virginia Parker, both of Delaware, O.; three brothers, Avery, Bobby, and Billy Goble, all of Prestonsburg; two sisters, Ruby Billiter, of Big Rock, Va., Garnett Gossell, of Prestonsburg.

Evangelist Benny Blankenship will be the officiating minister and burial will be made in the family cemetery at Water Gap.

Lillie Mae Bradley Prater
Lillie Mae Bradley Prater, 57, of Martin, died last Thursday at the McDowell Appalachian Regional Hospital, following a short illness.

Born July 21, 1929 at Risner, a daughter of the late Lewis and Bertha Ousley Bradley, she was a member of the Cold Springs Regular Baptist Church, at Risner.

She is survived by her husband, Clearence Prater; one son, Jack Prater, of Martin; five daughters, Jo Ann Slone, Shirley Newsome and Jeana Freasure, all of Martin, Sandra Carroll, of Langley, Frances Conn, of Printer; two brothers, Arnold and Willie Donald Bradley, both of Martin; one sister, Ina Mae Prater, also of Martin, and ten grandchildren.

Funeral services were conducted Sunday at noon at the Cold Springs Regular Baptist Church, Risner, with Regular Baptist ministers officiating. Burial was made in the Prater and Bradley cemetery at Risner, under direction of the Hall Funeral Home.

Amos Tackett
Amos Tackett, 42, of Beaver, died Sunday at the McDowell Appalachian Regional Hospital, following a long illness.

Born May 5, 1944 at Beaver, a son of the late Thomas and Fannie Hall Tackett, he was a former miner and a member of the U.M.W.A.

He is survived by his wife, Carolyn Tackett; one son, Amos Tackett, Jr., of Beaver; one daughter, Teresa Newsome, also of Beaver; four brothers, Hatler, George and Clifford Tackett, all of Beaver, Larry Tackett, of Detroit, Mich.; six sisters, Verna Paige, Roberta Tackett, Carolyn Newsome, Barbara Caudill, all of Beaver, Lacy Teems and Mary Belle Hall, both of Ellijay, Ga., and one grandchild.

Funeral services will be conducted today (Wednesday) at 10 a.m. at the Samaria Regular Baptist Church, with Regular Baptist ministers officiating. Burial will be made in the Tackett cemetery at Beaver under direction of the Hall Funeral Home.

CHILDREN AND PETS
COPYRIGHT 1987 KVMA
Kentucky Veterinary Medical Association

Numerous Kentucky homes will be including pets in their family routines now, thanks to Christmas giving. Many of these homes have children as well—in fact, the children may have been the reason for the pets.

Both children and pets will fare better and develop a closer relationship if a little common sense is used in getting them accustomed to each other.

For example, those warnings about animal parasites are more applicable to your family, now. To put it bluntly, the dog that doesn't have fleas doesn't give them to you. There are more than 40 afflictions that can be transmitted from animals to humans (and some the other way). While most of them, such as fleas, ticks, and worms, are relatively simple to remedy, some others, like Rocky Mountain spotted fever, may not be so simple.

Dog bites and cat scratches can be hazardous to children, and while they are probably not malicious at all, they can still be painful.

Common sense may help here as well. Parents should remember that animals, especially young animals, are probably not accustomed to having people around much. While the animal may be patient and willing to learn new responses, he also has instincts. A puppy, for example, may be hurt by a playful child. The puppy doesn't know the hurt wasn't intended, and by instinct bites and tries to run away from the pain.

The solution? Teach the child how to properly handle the animal and to avoid hurting the animal, and at the same time teach the animal good behavior and obedience patterns.

Careful selection of pets, taking into consideration their disposition and other traits, should have been an important part of the decision to obtain a family pet. But animals are sometimes gifts, while other times they just stray in and stay a while. Whichever way you obtained the animal, he's a better companion if he's healthy.

Your veterinarian can advise you of a schedule of vaccinations and other preventive measures that will assure you a healthy pet. In addition, he will be glad to give you some pointers on training your children and your pet to get along together.

Give them both a chance!

To Donate Organ Consult Family And Do It Now

Few decisions are as personal as what should be done with your body at the time of your death. But this decision is one that cannot and should not be made alone.

Kentucky law (KRS 311) now requires hospital staff to ask the relatives of any terminally ill or expired patient whether that person had previously expressed a desire to donate tissue or organs. It also requires hospital personnel to inform the next-of-kin about the option of consenting to organ and tissue donation.

This means that if you die in a hospital, your family members must be asked these questions. By making this decision with them now, you can make their response easier and guarantee that your own wishes are fulfilled.

For example, organ and tissue procurement agencies like the University of Kentucky's Lions Eye Bank won't accept an organ or tissue donation without the permission of the donor's next-of-kin, even if the person's donor card is signed and witnessed properly. If you've already signed the back of your driver's license or a donor card, make sure your loved ones know, understand and accept your decision. Legally, next-of-kin is seen in this order; spouse, adult son or daughter, parent, adult brother or sister, and/or legal guardian.

However, if you haven't signed a donor card or expressed your feelings against donation, it is also possible that an unknowing family member could consent to the donation of your organs, tissue or body when asked by hospital personnel.

Discussing this important decision now will allow the decision to be made carefully and thoughtfully. Since organs and tissues must be transplanted within three to 72 hours of a person's death, families who have not discussed this issue are forced to make their decision within moments of their loved one's death—a time when shock, grief, exhaustion or other intense emotions make decision-making much more difficult.

Family members aren't the only ones who can help you decide. Surely, if you are a religious person, this is something you want to pray about and discuss with your pastor.

Health professionals might also assist you with this decision by providing correct medical information. Many myths about organ/tissue donation have arisen from assumptions and fear.

One common fear is that one's own medical care will be compromised. This fear is unnecessary. Your doctor is there for you alone. Organ procurement will be considered only if you and your family are interested. The doctor responsible for organ procurement and transplantation is not called in until you are dead. Modern technology allows the determination of death to be very precise by measuring brain function. Your physician—not the procurement/transplant doctor—makes this determination. Even in small hospitals, your physician and the procurement/transplant doctor are not the same person.

Another concern, usually expressed by family members, is that your body would be disfigured by the procurement process. This is not true. A highly skilled surgical team removes whatever organs and tissues are donated and your body is left intact for funeral arrangements.

Neither donors, their families, nor the donor's estate are responsible for any donation costs.

Right now approximately 8000 people need kidney transplants. About 5000 people await cornea transplants. (Interestingly, even those with sight abnormalities can donate corneas.) Hundreds of others need hearts, heart-lungs, pancreata, bones and skin.

Only you and your family can decide whether you should use your body, organs, or tissue to help one of these individuals. The "right" decision is the one about which you and your loved ones agree. Making that decision now will prevent confusion and uncertainty about your wishes at the time of your death.

Our Lady of the Way Hospital has some excellent pamphlets about organ/tissue donation. To receive these free pamphlets, a free copy of this article, or to discuss organ donation with a health professional, please contact the Administrative Office at Our Lady of the Way Hospital, 285-5181, extension 333.

Refund Checks Await Claimant

The Kentucky Revenue Cabinet has almost $45,000 to return to 681 Kentucky taxpayers but it cannot locate them. The money is 1985 individual income tax refund checks returned undeliverable by the U.S. Postal Service.

To claim these refunds, taxpayers are asked to write to Kentucky Revenue Cabinet, Division of Compliance and Taxpayer Assistance, 421 Ann Street, Frankfort, Ky. 40601; or call (502) 564-4580 and request delivery of the check. The request must be signed by the taxpayer and include the Social Security number.

Among Floyd taxpayers, the Revenue Cabinet was unable to locate Claude G. and O. Mullins and Wanda L. Williamson.

Card of Thanks

The family of Roberta McCloud wishes to thank all those friends, neighbors and family who helped in any way upon the passing of their loved one. Thanks to those who sent food, flowers, prayers or spoke comforting words. A special thanks to the minister, Rev. Bob Martin, for his kind service and to the Hall Funeral Home, for its kind and efficient services.

In District Court

Nursing Home Ins. Now Being Offered

In 1980, some 1,243,000 Americans 65 years and older were in nursing homes. By the year 2000, the figure will increase more than 73% to 2,155,000, according to The Better Way in Good Housekeeping's February issue. When the need for a nursing home arises, patients and their families find themselves facing bills that average $25,000 a year. Medicare pays for care only in special facilities, and coverage is limited to treatment of an illness or injury. Currently, some 70 companies are selling or developing a new kind of insurance for up to six years of care. Usually such insurance is sold to people in their 50s and older. Patients already in nursing homes can't apply, and it's unlikely that individuals with recent serious health problems will not be accepted. Once insured, premiums can't be raised because of illness later on. And most policies can't be cancelled.

When buying a policy, here are some questions to ask:
How much are the benefits for custodial (general) care? Is there a hospitalization requirement? Is home health care covered?

'OH, GIVE ME A HOME' may well be theme song of this and other puppies at the animal shelter. This is just one available now for adoption. For more information, call 886-3189, or visit the shelter on Sally Stephens Branch, near here.

ALC To Name New Dormitory For Miss Howard

In a press conference held Wednesday afternoon, Dr. Jerry C. Davis, president of Alice Lloyd College, announced the future construction of a women's dormitory to honor the memory of Miss Judy Ann Howard. Miss Howard, an Alice Lloyd College student from Martin county, was the victim of a tragic slaying last fall.

According to Davis, "It never ceases to amaze me how Americans respond in time of need. The story of Miss Howard's tragic death touched the hearts of many Americans. The Grover T. Hermann Foundation, of Chicago, Illinois, made a challenge grant of $500,000 toward the construction of the women's dormitory. The president of the Foundation has graciously agreed to name the building in memory of Miss Judy Ann Howard. I feel confident that other Americans across the nation will generously respond to our need, as they have done in the past.

Dr. Davis went on to say, "Many in our own community have wanted to do something to perpetuate the memory of a student who meant so much to all of us. I think nothing could be more appropriate than a dormitory that will house students like Miss Howard."

The Howard Memorial Hall, to be located at the west end of the college campus, will house approximately 100 women students. Construction on the facility will begin later this year.

PCC Faculty Plan Local NCTE

A local chapter of the National Council of Teachers of English (NCTE) is being formed by Monnette Sturgill and Dr. Alice Adams, of the PCC English faculty. The chapter will include middle and secondary school English teachers in the Eastern Kentucky counties. The only other local chapter in Kentucky is in Louisville.

The group plans to meet in the spring to elect officers and make plans. So far, the group has 30 prospective members and hopes to secure more when all language arts teachers have been contacted.

The purpose of a local chapter, according to the two faculty members, is to hold conferences once or twice a year so that teachers can attend and share their knowledge and teaching skills. Sessions at the conferences can be conducted by local talent, and outside experts can also be called in to exchange ideas. For more information, call Monnette Sturgill or Dr. Alice Adams at 886-3863.

If your cakes tend to fall a lot it could be because the eggs you use are too big. Medium to large eggs are best. Extra large may be too much for your baked goods.

WARM-UP TO A WARM UP...The traditional pre-workout stretch may not be such a good idea after all. Since muscles are still cold, says Good Housekeeping in its January issue, you're more prone to injury. So before stretching, warm up with a light jog, running in place, or jumping rope—just enough to slightly increase body temperature and produce a light sweat.

The Heil heat pump delivers year 'round comfort with year 'round dependability.

If you're looking for a heat pump that delivers both comfort and dependability, you're looking for a Heil heat pump. A Heil heat pump uses the latest technology to guard your family's comfort year 'round. It efficiently pumps heat out of your house in the summer and into your house in the winter. Dependability. Like all other Heil products, our heat pumps go through our product testing lab—one of the toughest in the industry—before they go to market. If it doesn't measure up, it doesn't go to market. Year 'round comfort. Year 'round dependability. Heil heat pumps.

MALL WALKING

Walking regularly is one of the easiest ways to exercise but if you get discouraged when the weather is too cold—or too hot—give mall walking a try, suggests Good Housekeeping in its February issue. You'll be in climate-controlled comfort and there's a steady stream of companions. You can choose your own course, making it more difficult by using the stairs or quickening your pace. Store owners are in on the action; many malls are opening their doors as early as 7 a.m. and offer walkers special health-related discounts.

McDowell Schools Win Attendance Awards

McDowell High School and McDowell Elementary School were recently presented trophies by the Floyd County Board of Education for achieving the highest percentage of attendance for the school year, 1985-86. This represents the third consecutive year McDowell High School has received the award. Shown above, holding trophies are, at left, Frank Pack, principal, McDowell Elementary School, and Gary Frazier, principal, McDowell High School.

Teachers Invited To EKU Poetry Seminar

Feb. 2 is the deadline for teachers who want to apply for a summer seminar on great American poets at Eastern Kentucky University.

Participants will receive up to $750 apiece for expenses at the seminar, which will be held June 15 through July 26 and is sponsored by the Kentucky Humanities Council. Fifteen middle-school and high-school English, reading, and history teachers will be chosen to participate.

The classes, led by professors Harry Brown and Isabelle White of the EKU Department of English, will look at letters, essays, and autobiographical materials of Walt Whitman, Emily Dickinson, Robert Frost, William Carlos Williams, and e.e. cummings. The seminar also will include a historical lecture on Civil War hospitals, an artists discussion of Cubist influence on W.C. Williams' poetry, a readers' theater production of Frost's "Death of the Hired Man," and a discussion by two poets on the relation of their prose writing to their poetry.

Interested teachers may write to professors Brown or White at Wallace 217, EKU, Richmond, Ky. 40475-0959.

Temperature Changes Affect Pigs' Eating

Does the hot weather commonly found in Kentucky and much of the southeast affect the growth of swine?

If so, as temperatures climb do Kentucky farmers need to increase the protein supplement such as soybean meal which they feed their pigs?

And, by how much? These are questions addressed in recent research at the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture by animal scientists Tim Stahly and Gary Cromwell.

The answers are: yes, yes and by as much as 150 pounds of meal per ton of feed.

"During hot portions of the year, pigs normally reduce their food intake so that they don't overheat," Stahly said. "When they reduce eating, they may not get enough nutrients to meet their daily needs."

How does not eating reduce a pig's heat level?

Stahly explained that if a person gets too hot, he naturally begins to sweat to release excess body heat. But pigs cannot sweat. The breakdown of food consumed produces substantial heat in their body. So they naturally reduce their food intake in hot weather so they will not create more body heat than they need.

"By eating less, the pig takes in less proteins, minerals and vitamins," Stahly said. "So it grows slower and gains weight less efficiently."

In the UK experiments, which were partially funded by the Kentucky Soybean Association, Stahly said pigs were housed in controlled environments ranging from cold to mildly cold to mildly hot.

"Then we tried to determine what was the optimum amount of protein from soybean meal for the varying conditions," he said. "As the temperatures go from cold to mildly hot, we found the optimum amount increased by as much as 150 pounds per ton of feed."

These experiments aren't over. In the next year, he said the experiments will continue to include a test of even hotter temperatures.

ARIES (March 21-April 20)
Offer some assistance and be more cooperative with co-workers during the week. It will be appreciated.

TAURUS (April 21-May 20)
You have an urge to get away from it all. Plan for a vacation or take a weekend trip to a new place.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
Communication of all sorts may be delayed. Meetings may be postponed or canceled. Try to be flexible and patient.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
Your sensitivity makes you appealing to new acquaintances. They may appreciate your viewpoint and enlist your advice.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
You are feeling independent and eager to receive recognition for your present efforts. Do not be too aggressive or people may be put off.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
Business associates are impressed with your abilities. Remember to present yourself in a professional manner.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
Your standing in the community takes on added importance. Engage yourself in charitable activities.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 22)
Trust your intuition in personal relationships. Remaining a little distant right now might give you the perspective you need in order to make a decision.

A personal obligation or limitation may be lifted at this time. Consider giving some serious thought to where you want to go from here.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
Sibling relationships are stressed. Make the effort to keep in touch and that will help you avoid any misunderstandings.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
Concentrate on being productive at work. Tend to tasks that may have been neglected. Be punctual and reliable.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
You may have many projects going on at the same time. Tackle them one at a time. Do not try to do everything at once.

PACE '87 Trade Show Scheduled May 14-16

The Pike County Chamber of Commerce announces PACE 1987. The Pike Area Coal Exposition is the fastest growing trade show in the coal industry. Last year there were 104 exhibitors who came from as far away as Texas, Florida, Massachusetts, and New York.

Information packets are now going out and everyone is being encouraged to reserve early.

The Riverfill area behind the Pikeville College Gymnasium is finally complete as is most of the construction in the Pikeville area. This will make easier access and more space for visitors.

For additional information call the Pike County Chamber of Commerce office at 606-432-5504.

Box 3428, Pikeville, Kentucky 41501, has filed an amendment to an application for a surface coal mining and reclamation operation. The proposed operation disturbs approximately 162.3 surface acres and will underlie an additional 131.50 acres. The operation is located 2 1/2 miles north of Galveston in Floyd county.

The proposed operation is approximately 3 1/2 miles south from KY 979's junction with Branham Creek and located 0.1 miles east of Branham Creek. The latitude is 37° 27' 15". The longitude is 82° 37' 33". The surface area is owned by Therman Newman, Howard Martin, Clark Heirs, Ruby Martin, Osborne Heirs, and Harold & Olga Conn. The operation will underlie land owned by Therman Newman, Howard Martin, Clark Heirs, Ruby Martin, Melvina Gillis, and Osborne Heirs.

The proposed operation is located on the McDowell and Pikeville U.S.G.S. 7 1/2 minute quadrangle map. The operation will use the contour strip, area mining, auger, and deep mining methods of mining. The application also includes a proposed land use change from the forest pre-mining land use to a hayland/pasture land or wildlife habitat.

The application has been filed for public inspection at the Department for Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement's Prestonsburg Regional Office, 503 South Lake Drive, Prestonsburg, Kentucky 41653. Written comments, objections, or requests for a permit conference must be filed with the Director of the Division of Permits, 6th Floor, Capital Plaza Tower, Frankfort, Kentucky 40601. 1-28-3t.

How To Survive The First Snow

We've been fortunate so far this winter, but now we're having our first real snow. Here are a few thoughts to keep in mind when coping with the white stuff.

When you go out in the morning to brush the snow (all of it) off your car, you will have backed in your front-wheel drive car or pulled straight in with your rear-wheel drive. Why? Two reasons. You want to have your drive wheels as close to the street as you can. Second and equally important, when the driving wheels turn toward the rear end of the car, you get optimum weight transfer (using the radius of the entire wheelbase), thus giving you considerably better traction. That's why front-wheel drive is backed in and the rear-wheel drive goes straight in.

One old axiom you can put away is keeping the car in gear on icy roads to aid in braking, especially downhill. Having the transmission in neutral permits the braking action to affect all four wheels equally. Otherwise, the brakes on the non-drive wheels lock first, while the wheels driven by the engine tend to keep going, probably causing a skid.

The only way to avoid this imbalance is to equalize traction by taking the car out of gear. If this idea makes you nervous (and it probably will), find a safe area to experiment so you'll know what to expect.

Some places become icy sooner or stay icy longer. Bridges or other elevated roadways are exposed to cold air below as well as above the road surface, and will frequently be slippery when the pavement on either side is dry. Extra cold air can be trapped in underpasses, creating similar circumstances. Shady areas, such as tree-lined roads, may be slick longer after the sun has dried the open stretches.

The best overall tactic is to slow down significantly and at least double the interval between yourself and other traffic. Of course, there's always someone who'll cut in front, reducing your clearance. So back off some more—you don't want to get involved in their accident.

Besides clearing the snow from your head and tail lights, make sure they're clean. Roads that are wet with melted snow can coat your lights, dramatically reducing visibility. Be lavish with the windshield washer fluid. It's cheap. Keep a gallon in the car, and carry a roll of paper towels. Wash your lights and windows frequently on bad days. Headlights or bright sun on a dirty window can reduce your visibility to zero.

Give yourself a little extra time on those cold mornings. Your engine and transmission would really appreciate a warm-up. By the time you've cleaned your windows and your defroster is blowing warm air, they'll be ready to go.

The History Corner...

"The End of a Dream"

By A.G. SPENCER

Picking up where we left off last week, Aaron Burr's efforts to gain support for his conspiracy in St. Louis with help from the commander-in-chief of the western forces of the U.S. military, James Wilkinson, and other contacts he had established there, suffered a temporary setback when Wilkinson decided the military support for the venture was not there.

Burr, still aiming to separate Kentucky, along with the recently-acquired Louisiana Purchase, from the rest of the Union in order to form a new nation which he plotted to head, gained the support of financier Harman Blennerhassett. Unbeknownst to Burr, the latter was staring at the last little bit of change in his pocket. This matter notwithstanding, Blennerhassett sought to line his own depleted purse by raising other aid for Burr. He wrote a series of articles attempting to garner support for Burr's fund-raising in the Ohio Gazette.

These articles backfired by attracting the attention of noted political dragon-slayer John Wood, who, as the editor of the Western World, hoped to create a credibility gap for his publishing rivals at the Gazette. Wood launched a series of scathing articles against Burr beginning on October 15, 1806.

Concurrently, federal district attorney Joseph Daviess wrote to President Jefferson about the rumors of treason that were blowing on the political winds. While Daviess was busy, at the behest of Jefferson, gathering information on Burr, the latter was making substantial headway.

Burr had acquired a $25,000 loan from the Kentucky Insurance Company, which had no idea of Burr's true motives. On November 8 of that year, Daviess appeared before Judge Harold Innes to explain the need for swiftly bringing Burr to justice. Innes, who was somewhat inept and hazy on a number of legal fine points, stalled on this motion, to bring Burr to justice.

Meanwhile, Burr caught wind of these legal maneuverings, and retained the services of several prominent lawyers, including Henry Clay, Lieutenant Governor Thomas Posey, and state legislator General Samuel Hopkins. Partly because of the reputation of his counselors, and partially due to the inexplicable absences of several key witnesses at every trial date, Burr was eventually released by the jury.

However, these legal proceedings afforded enough time for the busy President to send a special investigator west to seize Burr's armada. Afraid of being implicated, the ever-treacherous Wilkinson betrayed Burr to the government.

Along with a couple of his lieutenants, Burr ran the federal blockade with what ships he had hidden away, ten craft, and less than one hundred men. This collection of malcontents surrendered to federal authorities at Natchez. Incredibly, a sympathetic jury again acquitted Burr.

After the trial, Burr fled Natchez ahead of Wilkinson and his troops. Burr hoped to reach the Florida coast to be ferried away by British ships, as the Redcoats had encouraged his devious scheme in order to split the Union. However, Burr was arrested by forces led by Edmund Pendleton Gaines near Fort Stoddard in what is presently Alabama. He was sent to a United States District Court at Richmond, Virginia, where he was yet again acquitted for lack of evidence.

Despite another acquittal, Burr's reputation was now irreversibly damaged. Thus ended the efforts of ex-Vice President Aaron Burr to split Kentucky and the Louisiana Purchase from the rest of the fledgling nation. Until next week, health!

Asthmatics Should Beware of Sulfites

Most people never heard of sulfites until a few years ago. Now it's known that many people, mostly asthmatics, may be sensitive to this preservative that is used in many foods, in some alcoholic beverages, and in drugs. Reactions, reports The Better Way in Good Housekeeping's February issue, could include hives, shortness of breath, vomiting, diarrhea. There are now new government and industry rules that make it easier for consumers to identify products containing sulfites. Sensitive individuals should watch for:

In packaged foods—Ingredients lists on boxed, bagged, or bottled foods must now include sulfites if they exceed a regulated level of 10 parts per million. Sulfites may be listed as sulphur dioxide, sodium sulfite, sodium bisulfite, sodium metabisulfite, potassium bisulfite, or potassium metabisulfite.

In alcoholic beverages—By 1988 alcoholic beverages that contain sulfites (mostly wine) must carry a notice on the label saying so. This notice will start showing up this year.

In drugs—Sulfites preserve the potency of many prescription and some non-prescription drugs. Under new voluntary guidelines, most manufacturers now disclose all inactive ingredients, including sulfites.

State To Get $200,000 To Expand Fair Housing

Samuel R. Pierce, Jr., Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, has approved $2.2 million for 20 state and local agencies to expand fair housing enforcement and educational activities. One of the 20 state agencies receiving funds is the Kentucky Commission On Human Rights which will receive $200,000.

"The funds will allow these state and local fair housing agencies to continue their fight against housing discrimination", Secretary Pierce said. "I am pleased that the Kentucky Commission On Human Rights is one of the selected organizations."

The funds were awarded from HUD's Fair Housing Assistance Program (FHAP) Type II fiscal year 1986 competitive funding. FHAP is designed to provide Federal financial assistance to State and Local Human Rights Agencies which administer fair housing laws or ordinances that are substantially equivalent to Title VIII of the 1968 Civil Rights Act.

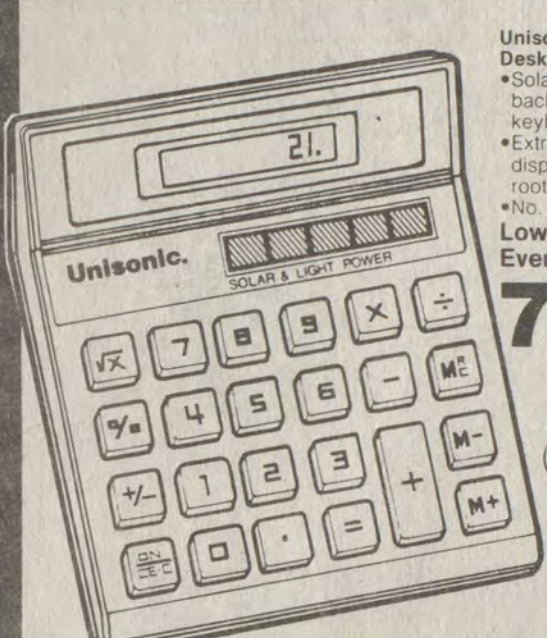

HUD's ten regions were divided into three geographical areas, then HUD's Regional Managers for Fair Housing Programs rated and ranked the proposals from state and local agencies. This was done to assure equitable, effective and efficient distribution of the funds. These recommendations were then submitted to HUD's Office of Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity for Secretary Pierce's approval.

Joseph G. Schiff, Manager of the Louisville HUD Office said, "Recent studies indicate a decline in discrimination complaints state-wide. It is our hope and desire that the funds targeted for the Kentucky Commission On Human Rights will help accelerate this reduction in housing discrimination. The reduction of housing discrimination is a key goal of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, and we are pleased that these funds are available for the Commission".

Projects funded under FHAP Type II focus on fair housing enforcement activities such as: testing programs in targeted geographic areas where fair housing violations are suspected; increased complaint investigations of fair housing violations; and education and outreach to racial and ethnic minorities where discrimination exists.
