Abbott blast investigated

by Susan Allen
Staff Writer

The mailbox of a Abbott resident was destroyed by an explosive device Monday and police officials believe it could have been dynamite.

Lanny and Linda Hunt of Jenny's Creek Hill reported to police Monday that their mailbox had been blown up by an unknown person(s). The box was found over an embankment behind the home of their neighbor, Lanny Hunt said Thursday. The blast hurled the metal mailbox approximately 300 feet.

A rash of mailbox vandalisms have been reported in the last five months, but this incident is believed to have been different.

"People have had their mailboxes beat up with baseball bats and have had them shot off their posts," Hunt said. "But nothing like this. This isn't the first time we've had trouble with people destroying our mailboxes."

Hunt said he believes the incident was in retaliation because of a lawsuit he has pending.

"It scared us to death," Hunt said. "I was in the smokehouse grinding up some feed and heard this big explosion. I didn't think nothing about it. Then my neighbor came running over and said 'Lanny, somebody blew up your mailbox. He said he was watching the ballgame and it knocked the remote control out of his hand."

Lanny Hunt said his wife had removed the mail from the box about an hour earlier.

Hunt said Kentucky State Police officials told him dynamite is suspected as the cause of the blast. That claim could not be confirmed through the KSP Thursday.

The incident was also reported to the postal authorities.

Floyd County chief deputy Linzie Hunt said this incident appears to be unrelated to other mailbox vandalisms at Abbott.

"This looks like it's something personal," deputy Hunt said Thursday.

Floyd County deputy sheriff Lloyd Powers arrested five juveniles for vandalizing mailboxes approximately two months ago after a high speed chase into Johnson County. Deputy Hunt said those juveniles are not suspects in this case.

"We want the people of Abbott to know that we've placed a deputy in the area full-time at night in an attempt to stop this problem," Hunt said. "We're doing everything we can to stop it and we won't stop until we do."

The incident is still under investigation by the sheriff's department.

Out-of-court settlement reached in miners' rift

Five area coal miners have reached out-of-court settlements in the last two months in safety discrimination cases against Toler Creek Energy, Inc., a Floyd County underground mining company.

Odell Rogers, Tennis Rogers, Garland Rogers and Earl Rogers, all of Floyd County and David L. Justice of Pike County voluntarily withdrew their discrimination complaints as part of their settlements, according to Mine Safety and Health Administration (MSHA) records.

The miners complained to MSHA officials that they had been laid off their jobs for complaining about safety violations at Toler Creek Energy's number two mine. The allegations included the company's failure to set roof support timbers during pillar removal and that the company was operating the mine without the main mine fan running, a violation of federal mining regulations.

Although the terms of all five settlement agreements are confidential, the miners' attorney stated that the settlements included substantial cash payments. The miners were represented in these cases by Tony Oppogard, an attorney with the Mine Safety Project of the Appalachian Research and Defense Fund of Kentucky.

Toler Creek Energy officials could not be reached for comment on the settlements.

Special investigator Ricky Hamilton of the MSHA field office in Martin, investigated the cases for the U.S. Department of Labor.

According to Oppogard, the Federal Mine Safety and Health Act of 1977 gives miners the right to complain about unsafe conditions and the right to refuse to work in such conditions, and the law protects miners against discharge or other types of discrimination for asserting these rights.

Oppogard said that miners who believe they have been discriminated against for asserting their federal safety rights should immediately contact their local MSHA office and ask to file a safety discrimination complaint.

Four counties unite to address litter problems

by Tess A. Whitmer
Assistant Editor

In a cooperative effort between the Chambers of Commerce and fiscal courts in Floyd, Pike, Knott and Johnson counties, billboards promoting a clean environment have been cropping up around Eastern Kentucky.

"We wanted to come up with something that was a concern to all of us and work together to accomplish our goal," said Dolores Smith, Floyd County Chamber president. "A cleaner environment is the number one priority for each county. We all understand the importance of cleaning up and how it relates to economic development.

"A community is looked on more favorably when it is clean," she said. "We have had the perception here in Eastern Kentucky for a long time that we have a problem with litter and we want to change that perception... or rather, that reality."

The fiscal courts from each county have provided the funds to purchase 100 billboards designed by the chambers cooperatively and Unisign has donated the space. As spaces become available more signs will be seen around Eastern Kentucky promoting environmental awareness and cleanliness.

"People need to understand that a cleaner environment will benefit them as citizens and this is not just a chamber-thing it is a people-thing, we need everyone's support," Smith said. "Already we have had comments from people noticing the differences, but not as significantly as we would like to see. We are committed to seeing it improve."

Stumbo, Charlotte McFall and Dolores Smith stand beneath the billboard sponsored by the regional Chambers of Commerce and fiscal courts promoting cleaning up Eastern Kentucky. New regulations take effect in 1994 :

Emission tests are awaited by group

by Tess Whitmer
Assistant Editor

Members of Floyd Countians in Action (FCIA) are anxiously awaiting the reports from the state office of Air Quality Control to ascertain whether the two incinerators located behind Highlands Regional Medical Center are burning hazardous waste.

Whatever the results of the tests, Medisin will be required to obtain a permit to operate a medical incinerator according to new state laws passed in February. Since the incinerator was in existence before the law was passed they have until Dec. 31, 1994 to comply with the new regulations, according to Eva Smith Carroll of the state Division for Air Quality.

Carroll said that Medisin was going to apply for the permit, but she had not received any paperwork yet.

Phyllis Walker of FCIA said the group is waiting for the test results to prove that Medisin is burning something hazardous and then they can take it to the courts.

"I don't think we can live until 1994," she said. "So what we are hoping is if they find contamination Medisin will have to clean it up."

Walker said that she really didn't want to see Medisin have to shut down, but she was concerned about the amount of material being burned.

"If we could trust them to burn only Floyd County waste it would be no problem with me," she said, admitting that most of the group was looking for Medisin to shut down, "because we have to take care of our own waste. Maybe if someone from the community was on a board to ensure it..."

She said that the group would definitely file suit to get compensation for the years the alleged contamination has been going on, but they weren't sure if it started before the out-of-county medical waste was being taken in or not.

"We need new laws and regulations passed because if we file suit that will be the end of it," Walker said. "The state law is great and the county does a great job, we have to give them credit for that. People need to be made aware of what is going on."

Big bangs planned for Fourth

by Tess A. Whitmer
Assistant Editor

President George Bush has said "this should be the greatest Fourth of July celebration ever." With that in mind, WMDJ and the Floyd County Fiscal Court have planned a fitting celebration.

Festivities begin at 8 p.m. on Wednesday, July 3 at the Stumbo Park in Allen with local bands "Westwind" and "Brotherhood" performing. The evening will also include several local politicians and dignitaries speaking on what America means to them.

Those who have accepted the invitations to speak are: State Representative Greg Stumbo, State Senator Benny Ray Bailey, Lieutenant Governor Brereton Jones, U.S. Congressman Chris Perkins, Commonwealth Attorney Jerry Patton, Floyd County Judge Executive John M. Stumbo, Floyd County Attorney Jim Hammond, Pike County Judge Executive and Democratic nominee for Lt. Governor Paul Patton and Magistrates Jackie Edford Owens, Betty Caudill, Gerald DeRossett and Erma Tackett.

There will be military displays by the local National Guard unit and a presentation of the colors by DAV Chapter #128, Garrett.

"We want this to be a special tribute to those who served in the Gulf," said Dale McKinney of WMDJ. "It is for veterans past and present and an opportunity for us to pay tribute to the greatest country of all, the United States of America."

McKinney said that in the past two years over 10,000 people have attended the Independence Day celebration and he expected as many this year. He asks that all people who have served in the military attend.

The City of Martin is also planning a large celebration on Wednesday, July 4. In addition to fireworks being shot from Firehouse Hill, there will be a mini festival in the parking lot behind Shopwise.

David Martin's band will be performing; there will be a dunking booth; arts and crafts displays; food concessions, including the famous funnel cakes, games; contests and other activities beginning at 11 a.m. and continuing through the day.

A fireworks display can also be seen in Prestonsburg on the Fourth of July, sponsored by the City of Prestonsburg at Archer Park starting around 9:30 p.m.

Highlands cancer program is approved by commission

The Commission on Cancer of the American College of Surgeons has granted three-year approval to the Cancer Program at Highlands Regional.

The Commission on Cancer is composed of Fellows of the American College of Surgeons and members representing 26 other cancer-related organizations. It sets standards for approval of hospitals and freestanding programs and reviews these programs for conformity to these standards. The Commission also develops national patient care evaluation studies for specific cancer sites. Results of these studies are used by cancer committees to monitor patient care.

In 1987 Highlands was among the first of 16 hospitals in Kentucky to establish a Tumor Registry and join the Kentucky Cancer Program (formerly McDowell Cancer Network). Then in 1990, Kentucky legislature signed into law a bill which made Tumor Registries, and the reporting of cancer, a state requirement. According to a January, 1991 report from the Kentucky Cancer Program, Highlands has one of only 12 approved hospital cancer programs in Kentucky.

The Tumor Registry is an integral part of the cancer program. The Tumor Registrar lists all patients who are diagnosed or treated for cancer in the Registry so that the hospital can maintain contact with them and make sure they receive continuing care and assistance with rehabilitation. Information collected through the Registry allows Highlands to participate in national studies that are designed to improve patient care.

Cancer is a complex group of diseases and consultation among family physicians, surgeons, medical oncologists, radiation oncologists, diagnostic radiologists, pathologists and other cancer specialists is a vital part of any cancer program.

that he had no knowledge of hazardous waste being burned at either incinerator. Traum, who also is administrator of Highlands Regional Medical Center, told the paper he welcomed the state's review.

"That's good," he said when the reporter told him of the review. "Maybe we'll get some sensible action on this."

The new state regulations will help alleviate environmental problems associated with medical waste incinerators due to poor incinerator design and operational practices, said Hisham Saaid, acting director of the Division for Air Quality, the cabinet agency which will enforce the regulations.

The new regulations will require all medical waste incinerators, regardless of size, to obtain a permit from the Division. Some other requirements will include:

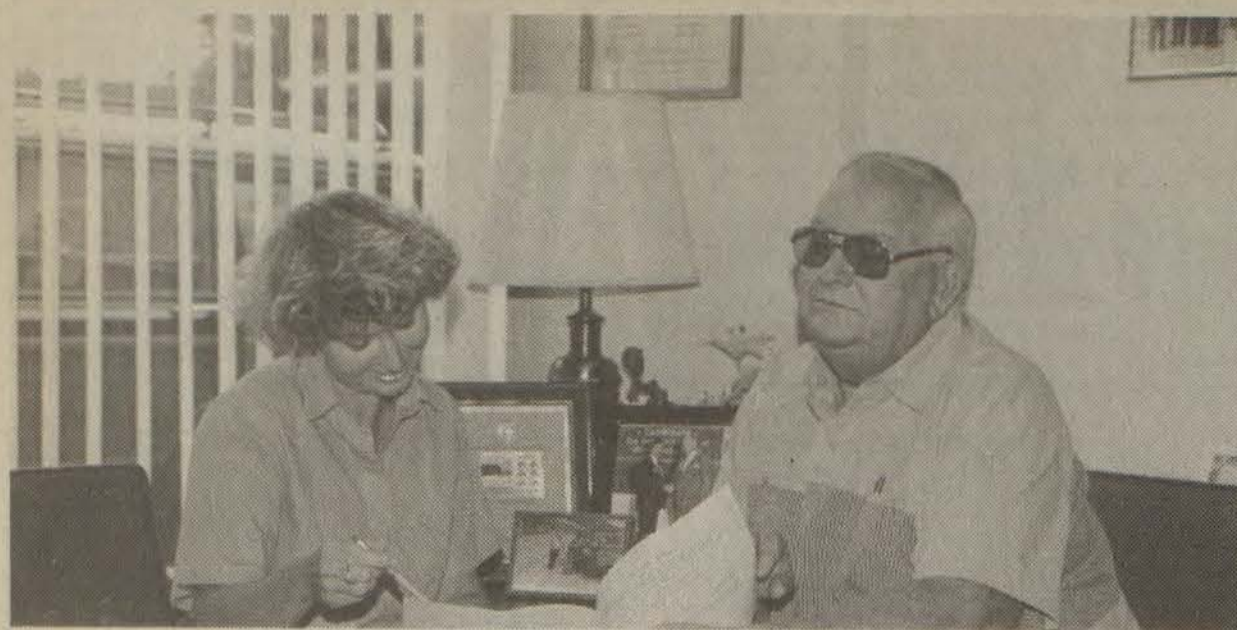

- An opacity (degree of obstruction of light) limit of 10 percent;
- More stringent particulate matter emission limits;
- Carbon monoxide limits;
- Continuous monitoring for carbon monoxide and for opacity;
- An annual stack test for particulate matter;

- Ash testing and proper disposal requirements;
- Hydrogen chloride standards and annual testing requirements for new sources with a burn load over 500 pounds per hour;
- Sulfur dioxide limits if other waste material is burnt along with medical wastes;
- One-second residence time in the secondary chamber in all units with the secondary chamber operating at 1,800 degrees, plus or minus 200 degrees; and
- Completion of an approved course by medical waste incinerator operators.

If the Medisin applies for a permit, which it must do before 1994, Floyd County Attorney Jim Hammond said the Fiscal Court would challenge it. A state law allows county governments to object to the siting of incinerators during the application process.

"If the cabinet will tell me that these people have to have a permit, we will go right out and challenge that permit as a government body," Hammond said.

First to sign

Kitty Frazier, on behalf of the Cracker Bottom community, was the first person to sign a contract with the county to adopt a county road. The new program follows the same guidelines as the state adopt-a-highway program, but allows communities to contract to clean the roads on which they live. Signs will be erected stating the road is adopted and who adopted it. (photo by Tess Whitmer)

Area education programs may receive monetary boost

Concentration grants which will funnel education money to districts with the highest concentration of low-income families, passed the House late Wednesday afternoon. It now goes to the Senate for consideration and a vote.

If the measure passes, Eastern Kentucky should see a big chunk of the $70 million plus increased funding for education programs in needy areas.

Concentration grants make up 10 percent of a larger education funding package called Chapter 1 basic grants, which target funds to school districts with educationally disadvantaged children. The Chapter 1 program, estimated to serve between 6.4 million and 6.7 million children in over 14,000 school districts nationwide.

received an allotment of $6.5 billion for 1992.

The Chapter 1 and Concentration grant funds are part of a larger spending bill for the departments of Labor, Education, and Health and Human Services. The bill includes funding for a number of employment and training programs which fall under the Education and Labor's Employment Opportunities subcommittee, which is chaired by Congressman Chris Perkins. The program now stands at $650 million for fiscal year 1992, a five-year increase of $430 million since the program was funded in 1986.

Letters

Editor:

School is out and the students are groaning, "I'm bored, I've got nothing to do." Believe me kids, there is a lot of voracious activity going on.

Take the public school board meeting last Monday. Here was a situation involving a cheerleader (one of you) that at first seemed easy enough. It even appeared this child could outfit up after a review of policy and hearing evidence. Article V of the Bill of Rights states (among other things), "Nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb."

In front of the public, this juvenile's every infraction was read, things like, "not taking a poster down," "being tardy," "defending herself..." The principal testified he did suspend her three days for this. She was not told the rest or worst is yet to come at that time.

Out of the darkness, like a torpedo in the side, she is secretly screened (which shouldn't happen to cheer-leading veterans) and is then notified she is out—off the squad.

Our fair, learned dedicated public officials on the school board considered all angles, pondered some policies, looked around and decided, considering they had disembowelled this child publicly. They mercifully decided to kill her by voting her out—off the squad also.

Here is a child spectacle thrown in the public eye. Why not read a book, attend a meeting and join in. You never know, you may be next.

Note: The following letter was sent to the Lexington Herald-Leader.

I have noticed the paper carrying many statements from people who seem to have their hand on the pulse of the people concerning the past election in May. They must be taking the pulse of a herd of goats not American citizens of Eastern Kentucky.

Some state that the people are just satisfied with the kind of government we have and insinuate that all is well. That's as far from the truth as hell is from heaven. I covered the election precincts, election day.

For the vote sellers, there was not money! For the honest people of the county, they were not looking for money for their vote, they were just plain turned off with the corrupt politics of our state and nation. Most said if you elected anyone, you were just replacing the evil that's there with another evil.

They talked about sell-out politicians, officials without honor with no regard to oath of office, all selling their influence and getting ready for the next election. The people said that they could do just as much good by not voting as they could by casting an honest vote in a crooked election. They contend that our elections are bought and sold—that it would be much better to auction the offices off on the courthouse steps and enrich the fund for transporting hogs to Jerusalem. And they don't eat pork. Only 35 percent of the people in Eastern Kentucky voted in May.

The First R: Results

by Thomas C. Boysen
Commissioner of Education

First among the four dynamics of the Kentucky Education Reform Act is results. The other three—restructuring, refinancing and rejoicing—all hinge upon the quest for and the achievement of successful results. In fact, the reform law's radical results orientation, more than any other factor, gives it the power to drive positive change in schooling and in the quality of our graduates.

American education has floundered in recent decades primarily because it has had no clear focus, no clear mission. By trying to be all things to all interest groups—by shifting constantly to meet competing political, social and bureaucratic demands—our schools lost sight of real education. Kentucky's reform brings us back to the basic purpose of education: to ensure all our children the academic, personal and social skills they must have to succeed as adults.

Kentucky's efforts at reform prior to 1990 were commendable. Compared to most other states, Kentucky was keeping up. But the weakness of that approach becomes apparent when we look at the results. Yes, during the 1980s Kentucky, along with the nation, improved moderately its graduation rate, scores on basic skills tests and the quality of college-going graduates. The problem was that the nation's performance during that period was, at best, mediocre.

American mediocrity was clearly exposed in a 1988 report, "A World of Difference." The math and science performance of American 13-year-olds was compared to that of 13-year-olds in eight industrialized countries of Europe and Asia plus Canada.

Three findings were striking. First, American students were last; Korean students first. In fact, in math Korean students were about 50 percent better.

Second, when asked if they were good at math, only 21 percent of Koreans but 70 percent of Americans said yes. Obviously, our students are appallingly out of touch with reality.

Third, other countries' expectations were higher and their methods better. While our 6th, 7th and 8th graders were concentrating on simple computation, their cohorts in Europe and Asia were mastering algebra and geometry. While active application characterized their learning, passivity and repetition characterized ours.

A recent 20-year review of American test results by the National Assessment for Educational Progress, "America's Challenge: Accelerating Academic Achievement," reaches the same conclusions. Performance has lagged, and the best teaching techniques are too seldom used.

So, how does Kentucky's reform law address these issues?

It puts the child's success first. Its core concept is that schools will be engines of improved student performance. It begins with the expectation that we will make a quantum leap in student learning and well-being. It challenges us to begin with the belief that we will run the four minute mile, that we will reach the moon by the end of the decade, that we will achieve internationally superior schools by 1996.

In its challenge to the Council on School Performance Standards, the law outlines comprehensive—not just academic—results, including personal and social performance standards for our young people.

It requires a performance-based approach to student testing that will reflect the learning and behavior we seek and will showcase the success we expect.

The whole approach will enable Kentucky educators to concentrate on producing Zero Defect students: 100 percent will graduate, all will be employable, all will be prepared to enter university or vocational programs, all will be chemical free.

We will know that because the testing system will focus on the ability to demonstrate skills.

Kentucky's new student testing mechanism and the rewards for success and penalties for failure provide powerful leverage for encouraging teachers to use the most effective methods.

The ecstasy of rewards and the agony of sanctions will lead first to better teaching and then to better student performance. We've known how for years. Kentucky's reform act provides the focus on results and the incentives for change.

Coffee Break

by Scott Perry

We had not planned on writing this column this week, but our lottery numbers didn't come through.

That means if we want to continue to eat, we'll have to continue to work.

Tough luck.

We always get tickled when folks who win multi-million dollar lotteries say the big bucks won't cause them to change their lifestyles.

Hah.

Kentucky's lottery jackpot is up to $8 million. The way we figure it, one winner will haul in $400,000 a year for the next 20 years or about $260,000 a year after taxes if they hit the right combination of numbers.

Hmm.

Now there's some change that could force a change any anybody's life... in style.

If our numbers come up Saturday, we'll see ya in the funny papers.

Times staffer Susan Allen will be a guest panelist on Friday night's (tonight) segment of KET's Comment on Kentucky, hosted by Al Smith.

The show's topic will involve educational issues and problems, subjects with which Susan has a more than adequate working knowledge.

Despite her familiarity with the subject matter, Susan seemed to be coming down with a case of stage-fright this week as show time neared and was saying something about nerves and throwing-up on camera.

To soothe her fears, we offered Susan our tried-and-true system for dealing with such situations.

Mumble and smile.

If that doesn't work, throw up.

Sports editor Ed Taylor is on vacation this week as you probably noticed from our less-stuff-than-usual sports pages.

Fireworks bootleggers tout patriotism but sell misery

Swindlers are trying to cash in on the biggest Fourth of July in years by selling residents of Kentucky dangerous explosives misidentified as fireworks, said Special Agent in Charge William A. Curley of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (ATF).

In the past year, ATF has intercepted hundreds of thousands of explosive devices that feed a multi-million-dollar black market active throughout the U.S. just before July 4. ATF investigations involving illegal devices are in progress.

Items hawked by bootleggers as fireworks are unstable devices with names like M80, M100, ashcan and silver salute. The devices sell for $1 to $3 or whatever the market will bear.

Agent Curley asked Kentuckians to reject the pitches of bootleggers offering "big bang" devices. "Don't be victimized by con-artists who peddle misery in the guise of patriotism," Curley said.

The CPSC regulates common fireworks sold to the public when permitted by state law. Common fireworks contain only a trace of pyrotechnic material. ATF targets the makers and sellers of illegal devices touted — falsely — as fireworks. These devices routinely have enough destructive power to damage eyes and hands. Some are as lethal as small bombs. Each type of device, small and large, has caused fatalities.

Typical illegal devices are explosive-filled cardboard tubes fitted with fuses. The tubes usually are about an inch in diameter and one to six inches long.

The illegal devices are made without safety standards by unlicensed producers. Accidental detonations are triggered by heat, shock or pressure. ATF explosives specialists call the devices "Accidents waiting to happen."

Where state law permits, sales of common fireworks are conducted openly. Legal vendors stress safety and accept inspections by local, state and federal officials. Common fireworks are clearly labeled Class C, identify the producer, and come with instructions for safe use.

Vendors of illegal devices often operate from vans or cars in places where people congregate, especially young people. Bootleg vendors shun contact with the law and tend to leave places where prospective buyers check with police before making a purchase.

Police, sheriffs and the fire departments appreciate tips on suspected sales of illegal explosives devices. Persons convicted of trafficking in explosive devices can go to federal prison for 10 years, longer if the offense involves death or injury. ATF vigorously supports state and local prosecutions of traffickers.

Reconstructive plastic surgery can correct disfigurements

Thousands of people each year choose plastic surgery to bring about a change in appearance, to correct a minor imperfection, to correct the effects of age or a disfigurement. Many want to look as young as they feel, to build confidence after a change in lifestyle, or to gain an edge against younger competitors.

Although most people are familiar with the term plastic surgery and what it refers to, many don't understand the difference between plastic, reconstructive or cosmetic procedures.

The term "plastic" comes from the Greek word "plastikos" which means to mold or give form. Plastic surgery is a specialty that can mold or re-form the human body.

Reconstructive plastic surgery procedures correct disfigurements from injury, disease or birth defects. Correctable deformities include cleft lip and palate; ear deformities; abnormal growths; alignment of the jaw; burns; lacerations, and other injuries from automobile, home and work-related accidents; cancer; arthritis; and other diseases. Health insurance generally covers the cost of reconstructive procedures, but usually does not pay for purely aesthetic procedures.

David Crafts to display work at Berea

A David craft shop will display the work of area craftsmen at the 10th anniversary of the Berea Craft Festival July 12-14 in the Indian Fort Theatre.

Julie Johnson will represent David Appalachian Crafts during the event which has become internationally acclaimed as a major center for American folk art and crafts.

Cool it

Do you know what to do when your car overheats? The National Safety Council suggests turning the air conditioner off and the heat on to carry heat away from the engine.

If this doesn't lower the temperature, find a nearby service station or pull off the road and turn the ignition off. Raise the hood and wait for the engine to cool, but never remove the radiator cap.

Aesthetic or cosmetic plastic surgery procedures are those that enhance appearance by recontouring facial and body features. Aesthetic procedures include minimizing effects of aging (facelifts, eyelid surgery, chemical peels, dermabrasion and hair transplants); redefine facial features (nose, ears and chin); and resculpt body contours through fat reduction (liposuction), abdominoplasty (tummy tuck) and breast augmentation or lift.

The most important factor in the success of any plastic surgery is the person who performs the operation. It is important to choose only a board certified plastic surgeon. This physician has finished a three-to-five-year residency in general surgery, followed by another two-to-three-year training program specifically in plastic surgery—one that has been approved by the Accreditation Council of Graduate Medical Education.

Plastic surgeons have a thorough knowledge of the entire body, and are skilled in both aesthetic and reconstructive techniques. This training in the full scope of plastic surgery, not in just a particular procedure or body part, promotes quality performance no matter what challenge may arise in the course of your treatment.

Certification by the American Board of Plastic Surgery (ABPS), is earned by passing rigorous oral and written tests. Only one certifying board per specialty is recognized by the American Board of Medical Specialties.

Because there are many boards that test physicians in different specialties, some of which are not approved by the ABMS, you should ask which board a doctor is certified by. If the answer is not the American Board of Plastic Surgery (using those exact words), then he or she has not met these strict standards.

For a free brochure describing different plastic surgery procedures, call Ann Martin at Highlands Regional Medical Center at 1-800-533-HRMC. From Floyd County call 886-8511.

Recognizing heart attack symptoms

With new drugs and technologies, heart damage can be minimized if medical treatment is received promptly when a heart attack occurs. Mended Hearts, Inc. offers the following information (excerpted from an article by Felipe Cubas, M.D., reprinted with permission) to help you recognize early symptoms:

While chest pain can be a symptom of many things—including indigestion—it is something that always should be reported to your doctor. And if chest pain is combined with any other symptom of heart attack (or a first angina attack), an immediate trip to the hospital is in order.

Angina pectoris, the Latin term for pain of the chest, and heart attack (myocardial infarction), have many of the same symptoms: A squeezing pain around the breastbone, often including the neck, left shoulder and arm; shortness of breath; dizziness; faintness; palpitations and nausea. Both angina and a heart attack can mimic severe indigestion.

Because angina is caused by decreased oxygen to the heart muscle, it is generally relieved by a brief rest or drugs, such as nitroglycerin, that dilate the coronary arteries. The average angina attack last for a few minutes and then subsides. The patient who has had previous angina attacks can take a prescribed medication, and may well resume his ordinary activity after a short rest.

When an actual heart attack occurs, the pain and other symptoms will not be relieved by rest or medication. A heart attack usually involves a clot in an artery that supplies blood and oxygen to the heart. The absence of oxygen and blood supply causes destruction of tissue in the affected regions of the heart. New drugs can dissolve these blood clots, but they must be administered within a short time—no more than four hours after the onset of chest pain. In fact, the sooner the drugs are started, the better the results.

In addition, ventricular arrhythmias and fibrillations—the often fatal irregularities in the action of the heart that generally follow a heart attack—must be dealt with in the ambulance or emergency room to save the patient.

If you see someone having chest pain, here's what to do:

- Keep the individual quiet.
- Do not move the person or apply artificial respiration.
- Do not give stimulants, such as caffeine.
- Send for help and call an ambulance to take the patient to the hospital as quickly as possible. It could make the difference between life and death.

Floyd students selected for Engineering program

Missi Bailey and Steph Bilter of Floyd County are among 21 Kentucky high school juniors selected for the 1991 University of Kentucky Engineering Ahead program.

Bailey, who lives at Harold, attends Prestonsburg High School. Bilter, who lives at Grethel, attends Betsy Layne High School.

The two — who will begin their senior year this fall — received a two-week orientation to the engineering profession at UK's College of Engineering in Lexington.

The "hands-on" experience, which began June 9 and ran through June 21, included daily computer activities, field trips, engineering physics, and workshops on career planning, cooperative education, ethics, graduate education and research.

The students are introduced to each engineering discipline — from agricultural engineering to interdisciplinary programs in biomedical engineering and robotics.

Engineering Ahead is funded through grants from the National Science Foundation Young Scholars Program, and the ALCOA Foundation. It also is supported by the Kentucky Society of Professional Engineers.

Garrett student chosen for Appalachian Explorers Program

Donnie Wallen of Garrett, a student at Maytown Grade School, has been chosen for the University of Kentucky's Appalachian Explorers Program.

He is among 24 students from four states who are spending part of their summer vacation at UK studying such subjects as land forms, water quality, forestry and energy use.

The students were selected from 135 applicants on the basis of their academic record and the quality of an essay examining a problem of scientific concern in the Appalachian region.

The Appalachian Explorers Program is one of many such programs supported by the National Science Foundation as part of a nationwide plan to interest more students in pursuing careers in science.

LIVING WITH CLUTTER

School had been out exactly two days when Linda announced, "Spring cleaning will start tomorrow." I thought to myself: call school back on, give me early duty, late duty, hall duty, and after-school faculty meetings, but not spring cleaning. To begin with spring cleaning means all that furniture has to be moved. Why do women have the urge to see how many combinations they can make with furniture? Linda will say, "Do you have any suggestions on how we can change things around." After a while I will give a suggestion out of sheer exasperation. Her reply will be something like this: "What a silly idea. That would never work." And the worst scenario of all is this: "Well, none of these work. Let's move it back the way it was when we stated." It is about this time that Ryan starts looking for that number for spouse abuse.

Spring cleaning is such a monumental task that a room a day is the standard. We started with our bedroom. I thought this room would be a breeze and we would be out of there in half an hour. When we moved the bed (you always have to move the beds during spring cleaning), we found that Ryan, who watches television and plays Nintendo in this room, had been using the area under the bed as his own personal land fill. Some of the stuff we found wasn't exactly alive, but on the other hand, it wasn't exactly dead either. I'm glad we found it before the health department did. I know it would have been suggested that we burn the house. We found things under that bed that we couldn't even identify. Of course, Ryan has no idea how they got there.

We will throw out no junk before its time.

As the clean up continues, the junk moves toward some central spot in the house. If every family decided to do spring cleaning the same week, the sanitation department would have to put on an extra crew to take care of all the junk that is found in houses.

We are approaching 1992, yet there was the 1989 Sears catalog being carefully saved so we could sell it to someone in the year 2525. I have no explanation for the 1985 calendar.

There are so many vases, baskets, and other containers that have to be washed. The only thing that has been in them since this time last year is dust. That's why we have to wash them. As we carted off four or five trash bags, we all promised not to bring in any junk during the upcoming year. For a family that thrives on junk, that will be a hard promise to keep.

After a week of work that would put the Roman slaves to shame, we were told that next week we would start on the outside of the house and the junk building. Yes, we spent at least $5,000 of hard earned money to build a room to put worthless junk in. Ah, the joys of the homeowner. As we cleaned the junk house, I became aware of the amount of money spent on plastic toys. No wonder we don't have any money—we send it all to the Japanese for plastic toys.

If you plan to have a garage sale during the summer, good for you. Don't let my wife know about it. After all this cleaning, there were a couple of spots not filled with junk and I'm afraid she will be on the lookout for junk—any junk. Why doesn't the surgeon general come out with some kind of policy on junk?

Soapbox

A lot has been published about the David School recently. Just this Wednesday there was a letter to the editor in this paper saying that the school does not receive enough local support.

by Tess Whitmer

Well, here are my comments on the David School.

I believe it is a Godsend. I know many of the people that work up there, mostly from church. They are the most friendly and caring people I have ever met. They give unselfishly of their time for little or no money.

Monetary compensation is not their reward, seeing a young person find themselves and discover what they are capable of is. Everyone enjoys seeing their work produce positive effects and those who work at the David School are lucky enough to see the results of their time and effort in a few short years.

The David School fills a void in our school system. Many of the kids who chose to attend the alternative school are the ones who are sitting on the fence. On one side of the fence is a productive life with work and commitment and self-esteem. On the other side of the fence is unemployment, apathy and possibly even criminal actions.

The David School gives these students the little shove they need to land on the right side of the fence. The kids aren't bad, they cover a wide spectrum of characteristics, just like in any other school. They are just the ones who need some special attention.

In a public school, these are the kids who watch the cheerleaders and the academic teams and the basketball players get all the attention. They feel as if they are not good enough to earn any attention and become dejected or lose confidence and quit trying because their "minor" accomplishments get lost when the basketball team brings home the tournament trophy.

The love and the acceptance that the David School staff shows these students is greedily taken in and then bursts back out in unsuspected forms. If you are shown only love, hard work and selfless dedication, you can't help but to return it.

That boy who mows the neighborhood playground without expecting recognition, is the one who is trying to return something to his community. Or, that girl who always seems to be entertaining the children at public gatherings, is giving away the love that was given to her.

People support the David School because it provides a much needed service to society. It takes the people who may travel to the wrong side of the fence, because they were never shown differently, and gives them a guiding hand into their own future. I've known several young people who said they wanted to go to the David School for the simple reason that the students are treated so special there.

Danny and Ann Greene told me that there is a waiting list to get into the school. If it was a school that wasn't worth anything nobody would want to attend but, no, there is a waiting list. I sincerely hope that the Floyd County Education system can find away to proceed with their plans for an alternative school like the David School. There is a need, and that need should be met.

I messed up. As with my accomplishments, I must also take credit for my mistakes. With hanging head, and foot in mouth, I admit that I gave State Representative Greg Stumbo Congressman Chris Perkins' title in a caption on the front page of Wednesday's paper.

Civics was never a favorite subject of mine, and now I wish I would have paid more attention to what the teacher was telling me. I know more now, however, because Scott gave me a crash course in it first thing Wednesday morning.

My apologies Greg, maybe someday you'll run for that office and can look back to this week and say you had the title years ago.

Marshmallow towers are engineering feat

Math Day was celebrated at Allen Central High School on April 29 as the ACHS math Club observed April as National Education Month for the seventh year.

Although "Math Challenge," the official quick recall and written assessment competition, was the main attraction, many other activities were enjoyed. Engineering concepts were employed in building towers out of marshmallows and toothpicks and in building boats from aluminum foil.

Computer activities, puzzles, statistical games and refreshments rounded out the day's activities.

This year's Math Day was even more special thanks to a grant of $400 from the Regional Math and Science Alliance. Math Day '91 shirts were distributed to winning teams along with their trophies.

Individual trophies were awarded to the following students: Nathan Elliott of Duff Elementary, first place; Kevin Hinchman, second place;

Donnie Wallen of Maytown Elementary, third place; William Lester of Allen Elementary, fourth place.

Combined points placed Allen Elementary as the winning team in Written Assessment and Duff Elementary second. Quick Recall was won by Duff Elementary with Maytown taking second place.

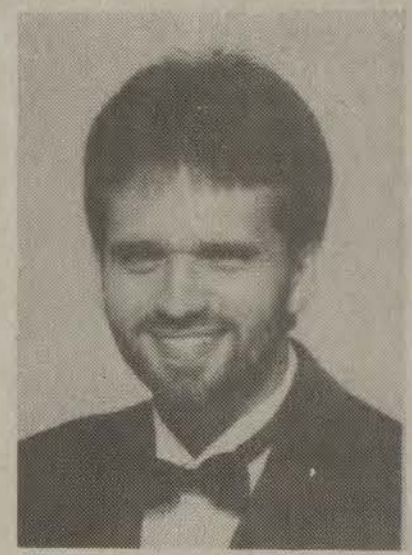

Coach Glenda Blackburn's Allen team included Kevin Hinchman, William Lester, Amanda Spurlock, Brandon Castle, Kristie Jarrell, and Jennifer Goodman.

The Duff team, coached by Stanton Watson, consisted of Nathan Elliott, DeWayne Shepherd, Ephraim O'Quinn, Jessica Slone, Tawnya Griffith, Kevin Caudill, Roy John Martin, Derek Conley, and Allison Conley.

Coach Susan Compton's Martin team included Kathy Hall, Brad Blackburn, Jason Samons, Josh Flanery, Adam Coleman, Beau Tackett, Kelli Thompson, Andrea Patton, and Amy Howard.

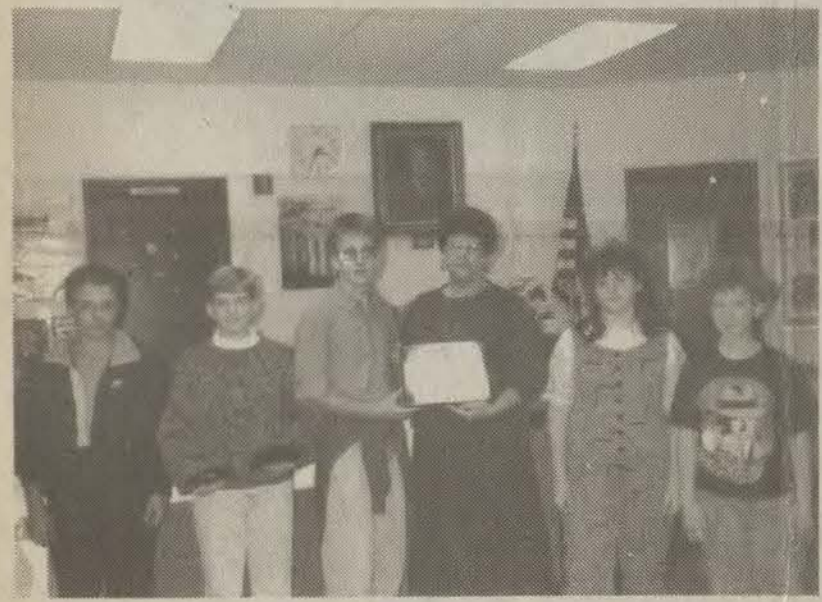

The Maytown team was composed of Donnie Wallen, Levi Wells, Sheila Salisbury, Pam Goble, and Mary Baldrige. This team was coached by Forrest Hughes.

Allen Central's Math Club, sponsored by Joyce Watson and Charlotte Moore, worked diligently to provide a special, fun learning atmosphere for the elementary students. Earlier this year, the club attended Math Day at Eastern University.

Leila Hall presented cheerleaders awards to Kathy Hall, Becky Hayes, Stephanie Samons, Charla Bartrum, Kristal Floyd, Spring Vanderpool, Allison Hall, Misty Bush and Misty Jenkins.

The stifling heat in Martin Elementary's gymnasium didn't deter approximately 400 people who came to see graduation ceremonies held Thursday, June 13.

The young people who gave speeches expressed appreciation to parents and teachers for bringing them this far in their progression and looked to the future with hope and high expectations for themselves and the world in which they live.

Awards were given as follows: Gwen Williams presented reading awards to Kevin Allen, Jason Samons, Kathy Hall and Becky Hayes; English awards to Kathy Hall and Misty Bush; Creative Writing awards to Kristel Floyd, Charla Bartrum and Misty Jenkins; and Social Studies awards to Josh Flanery and Brad Blackburn.

HOBY ambassador

Heather Watson, Allen Central sophomore, served as an ambassador to the Hugh O'Brian Youth Leadership Conference, Kentucky East seminar held on the Transylvania University campus June 8-10. The Hugh O'Brian Youth Foundation (HOBY) recognizes outstanding high school sophomores throughout the world for being responsible leaders. The seminar stresses the following objectives: to motivate young people to make positive contributions to their school and their community; to provide young people the encouragement to recognize their leadership potential; and to give young people an opportunity to learn about problems of today and challenges of tomorrow.

Smile Awhile

by Sarah Hopson

A KISS IS STILL A KISS

If I hadn't read it myself I wouldn't have believed it, but kissing pigs for charity has now become a reality.

It seems that an organization decided to sell chances on kissing a pig for their annual fund-raiser event. This met with opposition from the local chapter of the Humane Society, thus gaining national exposure.

The Humane Society spokesperson said that it was wrong to subject a pig to this form of cruelty because the pig was unable to speak for itself. In other words, the pig might object to kissing humans.

In a world fraught with famine, war, drugs, and AIDS, it's difficult for me to understand how people can place so much emphasis on pig kissing. So much attention, in fact, a judge was appointed to rule on the hogwash.

"Jimmie," I asked my husband. "Do you think it's cruel to kiss a pig?"

"Oh, Honey. Would a hug suffice? I'm watching this race."

"I wasn't speaking of kissing me," I snorted. "There's a story about pig kissing in the paper."

"I heard about that. The poor pig was probably exposed to herpes."

"I thought it was a novel idea. Pigs are so cute. I always did want one."

"Well, you know what they say, it takes one to know one."

"How would a person go about kissing a pig?" I wondered aloud. "Do they have lips?"

"I don't know," he replied, as he turned the volume on the TV up. "Go look in the mirror or something."

"That's not funny. It's a valid question."

"Sara, it's a stupid question."

"I suppose you'd just have to kiss it right in the snout. That doesn't seem sanitary, does it? No, you'd just have to kiss it above the snout, or to the side or something. I wonder if they made any money?"

"Why are you still talking about that?" Jimmie asked above the noise from the television. "Who in his right mind would pay money to kiss a pig for Heaven's sake? Think about it, Sara. Don't you think the person who thought that idea up might be a little strange? I think there's a name for people like that."

"People pay money for more idiotic things than that. This benefited charity. I bet the sign read, 'Pucker up for the Pig!'"

"Sara, I wouldn't care to raise pig or eat one, but I'm pretty discriminating when it comes to what I'll get intimate with, and a pig isn't on my list."

"I'm not saying I'd kiss a pig either, Jimmie. I just thought of all the money that could be raised by all types of organizations if they could think of something for people to kiss."

"You can't let them kiss Butch."

"People give dogs more germs than dogs give people. Anyhow, Butch is very selective as to whom he kisses. He's never kissed you, has he?"

"No, he hasn't, but that's only because I've never given him the opportunity! Most men have kissed a few dogs before anyway."

"Really. And you don't think women haven't kissed a lot of frogs?"

"Now you're into an entirely different species. No sane person would ever kiss an amphibian. That's really going too far."

The more I thought about the poor pig, the more I believed that the Humane Society was probably justified in squealing about the whole affair. In fact, they probably had to hog-tie the animal in order to get it to sit still for it. Maybe they just should have let the people kiss a donkey. Can you imagine how the sign for that would have read? At least the idea wouldn't have seemed so far-fetched because people have been doing that for years.

Bluegrass Games provide award winning medical aid

With thousands of Kentucky amateur athletes competing in 22 different sports at next month's Bluegrass State Games in Lexington, there are sure to be few cuts, scrapes and bruises to go with all those gold, silver and bronze medals.

For the past six years of the Games there have been few serious injuries, especially considering the number of participants of all ages and the variety of sporting events.

When the Games begin on July 26, participants can rest easy knowing they are in good and well-trained hands in case there are injuries.

The Games' medical program is so excellent that it recently won the College Athletic Management (CAM) Award of Excellence in Athletic Training Innovations. The award is sponsored by the NACDA Insurance Company.

Under the supervision of Al Green, sports medicine director for the Games, the medical staff is ready for any emergency, small or large.

The Games' medical staff will consist of about 140 personnel, including certified athletic trainers from throughout the state, neighboring states and as far away as Florida, student athletic trainers, volunteer physicians, nurses, paramedics and EMTs. Last year the staff was responsible for medical care for some 15,000 athletes in 19 sports at about 30 sites in and around Lexington. This year there are three new sports and some additional sites.

To prepare for the Games, Green and his staff began work about six months ago. About 20 man hours a week of preparation are put in before the Games begin.

Green's full-time job is head athletic trainer at the University of Kentucky Athletic Association. From his store of knowledge and experience, plus a lot of hard work, he has put together a Games' medical program that has drawn admirers and copiers from other states.

The overall coordination of medical services will be done at the central triage area in the main training room at the E.J. Nutter Training Facility. Here, doctors, nurses and athletic trainers will be equipped to handle suturing, to administer intravenous fluids, and perform other medical procedures.

At each site there will be at least one certified athletic trainer in charge, and several student athletic trainers. The larger sites will also have mobile triage centers set up in RVs, staffed with M.D.'s and athletic trainers.

Minor injuries will be handled by certified or student athletic trainers. If needed, an injured athlete will be taken to the main triage center. For serious cases, a medivac helicopter operated by the National Guard can take the person directly to the hospital.

Local ham radio operators will provide communication between the central triage area and the various sites, while National Guard radios and borrowed walkie-talkies from UK and local businesses will provide communications within sites.

To standardize procedures and make sure everything is organized down to the number of bandages needed, Green, associate athletic trainer Sue Stanley and other staff members have developed a complete manual for the event.

The manual describes the scope of the services, emergency protocols, injury record forms, general information and individual site needs. The manual has helped standardize personnel requirements, communication, transportation, setup and supplies, Green said.

Besides taking care of business, the medical staff members have developed a great camaraderie that makes everyone's job enjoyable, Green added. "Receiving the CAM award this year is a credit to all the medical team and others who have worked together to put safety first in carrying out the Bluegrass State Games," he said.
