One man's trash ...

The Associated Press

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. — Talk about turning trash into treasure.

Two original paintings by well-known Chilean artist Alberto Lobos that were dropped into a bin at Goodwill Industries in Lavalette fetched more than $1,000 during an Internet auction earlier this week.

Lobos' early 20th Century paintings of rural Chilean landscape hang in nearly every major museum and private collection in that South American country. He lived from 1892 to 1925 and studied under Maestro Fernando Alvarez de Sotomayor, a Spaniard imported to Chile by its government to lead the program at the Escuela de Bellas Artes de Chile.

Linda Lindsey, Goodwill Industries KYOWVA's e-commerce specialist in Huntington, said she put the paintings on the Goodwill online auction site at the base rate of $6. Within 24 hours, the bidding was up to $52 and she was bombarded with e-mails about the paintings.

"They were asking me did I realize who he was," Lindsey said.

Once bidders recognized the works, prices soared to $1,007 within 10 days. The top bidder hails from North Carolina.

Lindsey said her charity, which is based in Huntington and serves Cabell, Lincoln, Mason, Mingo and Wayne counties in West Virginia and Boyd, Lawrence, Martin and Pike in Kentucky.

"It all goes back to helping the community," she said.

Suit questions vote in Allen

by JESSICA HALE
STAFF WRITER

PRESTONSBURG — Two candidates on the ballot for this year's election for Allen city commissioner have filed a lawsuit which alleges vote fraud in regards to the results for commissioner and the dissolution of the city.

Pauline Bentley and Jerome Kinzer filed the lawsuit Wednesday and are asking that the results of the elections for city commissioner and the dissolution of the city be declared null and void. The respondents in the case are Judy Parsons, Raymond Parsons, Terry Parsons, Cindy Bentley Parsons, Ernestine Burchett Hall, Floyd County Clerk Chris Waugh, Floyd County Board of Elections and the City of

Allen. According to court documents, Bentley and Kinzer claim that there were 81 votes cast for the Allen mayoral race, which happens to be 12 more than the 69 registered voters within the city. They allege that election officials at the Mouth of Beaver precinct allowed numerous voters to cast votes in the city elections even though they were ineligible to do so. Bentley and Kinzer also allege that they do not believe that all registered voters who were eligible actually participated in the election.

Bentley and Kinzer allege that the ballot measure to dissolve the city of Allen was contaminated because more

Bikers defy stereotypes to help children at Christmas

PRESTONSBURG — Members of Eastern Kentucky Chapter of Brothers of The Wheel spent Black Friday taking advantage of the increased traffic flow in Prestonsburg to collect money for their sixth annual Christmas for needy children.

It's true that almost everyone makes assumptions about people based on their appearances and, at first glance, you wouldn't guess that these rough looking bikers wearing Santa hats were actually doing something meaningful for the kids in their community. The old saying "looks can be deceiving" holds true to this chapter of motorcycle enthusiasts who choose to spend their day after Thanksgiving giving a little bit more.

Duncan looking forward to chance to lead national GOP

by ALEX SMITH

INEZ — Many politicians get their start in politics at an early age, but for Inez native and current general counsel of the Republican National Committee Robert Mike Duncan, his inception came especially early at the age of 9.

An uncle was running for a spot as a school superintendent in Tennessee at the time when a young Duncan began spending his weekends on the campaign trail with him, going door to door, talking to people and handing out flyers. He fell in love with it and has been involved ever since.

The RNC will vote in January to decide whether to accept President Bush's selections to head the committee, which he has picked Duncan for the chairman position and Sen. Mel Martinez of Florida as the general chairman. Both will work together to raise money for Republican candidates, with Martinez being the public face for the group while Duncan would run the daily operations in Washington.

"Obviously, I was honored and humbled that the president would select me," Duncan said. "I worked with his father for a long time and to be able to work with him as well is an honor."

Extra worker seen as plus for pet control

by ALEX SMITH
STAFF WRITER

PRESTONSBURG — The Floyd County fiscal court had a special meeting on Nov. 14 and the first order of new business was the reading of a new animal control ordinance, aimed at providing the county with a second animal control worker, which many people who know the current situation say is desperately needed.

David Shepherd, the lone animal control worker in the county, said he enjoys his job but some of the things he sees would cause nightmares for some people.

"The abuse and neglect is unreal," Shepherd said. "People have to realize they are responsible for what their animals do."

Shepherd said that instances of dogs biting people occur more often than people think and that the overall animal problem in Floyd County and surrounding areas is three-pronged — people do not help control the pet population, they do not care for their pets by feeding them enough or taking them to a veterinarian, and the number of stray animals is getting worse.

Shepherd said he is on call 24 hours a day following up on reports of neglect, responding to complaints such as dog bites and picking up dead animals. His workload varies from just a few calls and checkups a day to make sure animals are getting the proper care, to 15 calls where he is running all over the county picking up animals.

"A lot of people in this area are living on limited budgets so you have to be lenient, but you must educate them," Shepherd said. "By law I am required to give them a warning, but I would guess that over half the animals in this county haven't got their rabies shots."

Kathy Mullins, the manager of the Floyd County Animal Shelter, said the nonprofit organization's purpose is to nurse all cats, dogs, puppies and kittens into the Appalachian Trail could be 'canary in coal mine' for eastern U.S.

by VICKI SMITH
ASSOCIATED PRESS

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. — It stretches nearly 2,200 miles, a ribbon of mountains and meadows, forests and fauna. But scientists, hikers and land managers say the Appalachian Trail is more than a footpath.

Passing through 14 states and eight national forests from Georgia to Maine, it's also a living laboratory that could help warn 120 million people along the Eastern Seaboard of looming environmental problems.

That's why a diverse group of organizations has launched a project to begin long-term monitoring of the environmental health of the trail, with plans to tap into an army of volunteer "citizen scientists" and their professional counterparts.

Together, they will collect information about plants and animals, air and water quality, visibility and migration patterns to build an early warning system for the non-hiking public.

"It's somewhat like the canary in the coal mine in the sense of using it as a barometer for environmental and human health conditions," says Gregory Miller, president of the Maryland-based American Hiking Society.

Odds & Ends

■ EUNICE, N.M. — A New Mexico resident discovered an unadvertised option in a used car he recently purchased: a supply of marijuana.

The owner found the drugs and contacted police, who recovered 20 bricks — 22 pounds — of marijuana.

The weed, valued at $28,000, was stored under the back seat, police said.

The man told authorities he bought the vehicle in Hobbs. Lea County Drug Task Force Cmdr. Allyn Pennington said an investigation was under way and declined to speculate about why the drugs may have been inside the vehicle.

■ CHIANG MAI, Thailand — There's the Panda Express fast-food chain. Jing Jing, a mascot for the 2008 Beijing Olympics. The forthcoming animated movie, "Kung Fu Panda." Even a Mexican rock band named after the cuddly bear.

Not to be outdone, Thailand has come up with another, seemingly unlikely way to capitalize on this globally loved, bamboo-munching animal: panda poop.

When keepers of the country's panda couple — Chuang Chuang and Lin Hui — got tired of disposing the 55 pounds of feces daily produced by the duo, Prasertsak Buntragulpoontawe came up with the idea of turning it all into notebooks, fans, bookmarks and key chains.

"At first the Chinese were very skeptical," says the head of Chiang Mai Zoo's panda unit, referring to the proprietary attitude China takes toward its iconic animal.

But the multicolored paper products have proved hot selling-items at the zoo, with the $8,200 earned to date helping balance the accounts of panda keeping.

The Thai government pays $250,000 a year to China's Wulong Panda Research Institute to rent the pandas, who, depending on the weather, reside in either a $1 million air-conditioned cage or an extensive, fan-cooled outdoor enclosure ringed by a mini-replica of China's Great Wall.

Panda poop paper production involves a daylong process of cleaning the feces, boiling it in a soda solution, bleaching it with chlorine and drying it under the sun. Experimentation continues on how to reduce the chemicals now used.

"We tried selling it on markets outside but so far with not so much success," Prasertsak says. "But in the zoo, when people see real pandas and then their product, they're excited and buy."

■ HIGH SPRINGS, Fla. — Cats can be found everywhere on Steve and Pennie Lefkowitz's property: perched on barrels, under bushes, hiding in doghouses and rubbing against the backyard fence.

The couple have turned their wooded property just off U.S. 441 into the Haven Acres Cat Sanctuary. It's home to about 300 felines.

Pennie Lefkowitz, an animal control officer, began taking in foster cats about three years ago after she became concerned about the number of cats being euthanized in Alachua County.

"It was rather innocent to begin with," Steve Lefkowitz told The Gainesville Sun. "We took in foster cats, and adopted some more cats. Now, we have people dropping off their unwanted cats in our driveway."

He said while many of their cats are poor candidates for adoption because of behavior problems or health issues, other felines at the sanctuary would make great pets. The couple are trying to increase adoptions through Web sites such as petfinder.com.

County Zoning Administrator Benny Beckham said the Lefkowitzs have been cited for a code violation for having more than 150 cats in a rescue facility, but the couple are applying for a special exception.

best shape they can and find them a loving home. The facility is located in Prestonsburg and is funded by the county and by individual donations. The facility has four full-time employees and a veterinarian.

To control the pet population, all animals are spayed or neutered before being sold through adoption. Dogs are able to give birth twice a year and cats can four times, leading many people to kill them instead of caring for them. Mullins reminds people that doing this is illegal and a better option for people would be to bring unwanted cats and dogs to the shelter.

"We have a large facility that can house over 235 animals, so there's no reason to do it," Mullins said. "We ask for a $3 donation when people bring in an animal, but that's to pay for vaccinations and medications."

Mullins said there is no time limit as to how long animals can stay but they are eventually euthanized to make room for other animals. Mullins was quick to say that it is much more humane the way they put animals down than someone who would neglect an animal and expose them to the cold or forget to feed them.

"We see a lot of neglected animals in the worst shape,"

Mullins said, "This area is bad, especially with cats and dogs."

Shepherd compared the problem with people in the area taking proper care of their animals to a child with a new bicycle. When a child first gets a new bike they play with it a lot and take good care of it, but over time the feeling wears off, and the bike is neglected.

"We are known as animal owners in this part of the country," Shepherd said, "We can't go on like this. We are better people than that."

Mullins said one way to solve the problem is for people to ask themselves some basic questions before they purchase any pet. She suggests thinking about the time and effort involved in caring for a pet and budgeting money for food and care, including the possibility that the animal will live for as long time.

Not all the news in the area is bleak. Shepherd said with a second animal control worker in the works, the ability to combat the problem and raise awareness should increase.

"In the years to come, we'll have the funds to improve," Shepherd said.

Trail

The Appalachian Mountains are ideal for the project because they are home to one of the richest collections of temperate zone species in the world, and the trail has a natural diversity that is nearly unsurpassed in the national park system. It also has different ecosystems that blend into one another — hardwood forests next to softwood forests next to alpine forests.

The idea for the Appalachian Trail Mega-Transsect is in its infancy but it already has support from the National Park Service and U.S. Forest Service, Cornell University, National Geographic Society and the earth-conscious beauty products company, Aveda Corp.

"We're really after two things," says Brian Mitchell, a coordinator with the park service's Northeast Temperate Network in Woodstock, Vt. "We want to get a better understanding of what's happening on the trail so we can better manage it. The other side is we want to take the lessons we learn from the trail and show people that what's happening on the trail does actually affect us."

Scientists will periodically issue reports aimed at helping the average American understand the gradual trickle-down effect of environmental problems.

High ozone levels, for example, can reduce photosynthesis and growth, and speed up aging and leaf loss in plants. In humans, it can affect the lungs, respiratory tract and eyes, and increase susceptibility to allergens.

Atmospheric deposition — airborne sulfur and nitrogen that drop from rain and snow into soil — can affect farming and crop growth.

Dave Startzell, executive director of the Appalachian Trail Conservancy in Harpers Ferry, says smog and air quality in the Great Smoky Mountains are good examples of what people need to know.

"People will read that on 25 or 30 days in a given year, it's considered unhealthy to walk on the Appalachian Trail, and we think that's going to grab people's attention more than if they just read about air quality trends in general," he said.

That's also why volunteers will be critical to the project's success.

"It's one thing for people to read about the decline of neotropical migratory bird species or acid deposition or determining air quality and visibility in the abstract. We think it's another thing when people learn about that firsthand by actually helping to collect that information," Startzell says.

Environmental change is slow and can be hard to grasp, agrees Mitchell. But people need to look only at rising sea levels to see the potential human impact.

"If you have somebody actually going out and seeing where high tide is every year, you can have a measuring point and tell if sea levels are rising," he says. "People don't think that a foot of sea level rise is a big deal — until it's combined with storm surge and a hurricane."

The same concepts would apply to the trail, where Mitchell says volunteers could help with such tasks as measuring tree diameters, taking photographs to illustrate visibility, tracking the arrival times of migratory birds and dating the blooming and leaf loss of trees.

Mitchell hopes that within the next year, the partners will have at least two flagship programs for volunteers.

Advocates of the monitoring plan hope the project will help drive changes in public policy and personal behavior.

Earlier this month, United Nations Secretary-General Kofi Annan lamented "a frightening lack of leadership" in fashioning steps to reduce pollution that scientists believe contributes to global warming.

The United States and Australia are the only major industrialized countries to reject the 1997 Kyoto Protocol, which requires 35 nations to reduce greenhouse gas emissions 5 percent below 1990 levels by 2012. President Bush says it would harm the U.S. economy, and it should have required cutbacks in poorer nations as well.

"Part of our hope is that as people become more aware of trends affecting those lands, they'll be motivated to take action," Startzell says, "whether that means switching to a hybrid car or just conducting their own way of life in a little more energy efficient manner, or going to a town hall meeting and advocating for more open space."

Miller, of the American Hiking Society, says the trail also could inspire more people to get outdoors and become active at a time when the nation is coping with epidemic levels of childhood obesity and other health problems.

"It is both ecologically as well as culturally a ribbon that binds us and connects us," he says. "It reflects the pioneer nature of all our peoples — the connection to the land that maybe some of us have not maintained."

"It's something we hope everyone will buy into."

Duncan

Duncan has been a member of the RNC for the past 14 years, working his way up from county chairman to state chairman and now potentially as the national chairman. He said there is a solid foundation in place at the committee and he plans to continue the grassroots efforts of previous leaders.

"We've done a great job with voter registration and turnout and I just hope to bring more people into the party."

Duncan was quick to point out that he has not secured the post just yet, but a presidential nomination should help. He is currently reaching out to the 168 members who will be voting on his confirmation and speaking to them about why he is the right man for the job.

Duncan believes his previous experience campaigning for Republican candidates for the past 30 years and his work in the first Bush White House as assistant director of public liaison factored into Bush's decision. He has worked campaigns for Presidents Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford, Ronald Reagan and both Bush presidents before working as chairman for the 2000 Bush-Cheney campaign in Kentucky, West Virginia, Indiana, Ohio and Michigan.

Duncan described his potential job as a business enterprise, with hundreds of millions of dollars being raised and a staff of more than 100 people, which will balloon to over 400 closer to elections. He said there will be a lot of work to do right away, with gubernatorial elections next year in Mississippi, Louisiana and Kentucky.

Duncan said he hopes to do a good job not just for Kentuckians, but the nation as a whole, and to end Democratic leadership in the House and Senate as soon as possible.

"I'm interested in preserving the president's legacy and working to gain seats and regain control of Congress," Duncan said.

Energy and the environment

Protecting our air, water and land is not a partisan matter. Neither is protecting our planet from global warming. Both are matters of fact, economics and common sense.

Americans want change. They want to see science - not party ideology - restored as the foundation of public policy, especially when it comes to energy and the environment.

Here are some steps Congress can and should take now.

■ Energy policy. The United States needs a balanced energy policy that relies not just on producing more oil, gas and coal but also on conservation and a serious commitment to alternative energy. Congress should enact higher fuel economy standards, even though they're not popular with all Detroit automakers. Already, some automakers, notably Toyota and Ford, are cashing in on the growing demand for hybrids and gas-sippers.

Congress must set goals for federal and state governments to use less oil and gasoline by switching to vehicles that get better mileage and/or burn ethanol. It should encourage more service stations to install pumps for E85 fuel, one that many new vehicles can use but drivers often can't find.

Changes in tax policy could encourage American businesses and individuals to make smarter energy choices and provide tax incentives for the construction of energy efficient buildings and those that use energy sources such as solar power. Congress also should set goals to encourage large utilities to generate more power from alternative or renewable sources, such as hydroelectric and wind power.

■ Global warming. Over the last six years, the Bush administration and the Republican congressional majority tried to dismiss the huge body of data on global warming. Scientists know better. In the court of public opinion, the administration already looks foolish for refusing to acknowledge the reality of global warming, our role in it and the consequences of it. The longer we wait to address the problem, the more expensive and difficult it becomes.

Congress must regulate emissions of greenhouse gases, even though the United States did not sign the international Kyoto Protocol. There's widespread agreement that a market-based "cap-and-trade" system such as that now used for reducing pollution that contributes to acid rain would be a good approach. It also would demonstrate to other nations that we feel a sense of urgency. - Protecting air, water and our national lands. The Bush administration has been pursuing an Orwellian strategy by pushing such policies as "Clear Skies" to relax air pollution controls and "Healthy Forests" to open more national forest to logging. When it failed to win congressional approval, the administration tried to implement those policies by re-writing regulations. The federal courts slapped down a recent attempt to weaken a rule that required older coal-fired power plants to install new pollution controls. But Congress needs to close loopholes that encourage utilities to keep using obsolete and dirty coal-fired plants.

Congress also should restore the Clinton-era roadless wilderness rules in National Wilderness areas and rescind a Bush administration rule giving state governments more say in how that land is protected from development. And it should revisit decisions that opened millions of acres of protected lands to oil and gas drilling and mining.

Although the details of how to reach them may differ, there is broad public consensus on environmental and energy goals. The American people don't want to live with polluted air, water and land. We understand the need to conserve fuel. We are impatient for new energy sources that will lessen our dependence on oil - with all its political ramifications - and reduce greenhouse emissions. We don't want our National Forests exploited by timber companies or our public lands despoiled by drilling and development.

The challenge for the new Congress will be to build a sensible, forward-looking strategy on this common ground. Our health and the health of the planet demand it.

Change the course

President Bush's resolve is something to behold. One Bush aide tells a story of how when he left Texas to work for Bush in the White House after the 2000 election, a friend gave him a photograph of Lyndon Johnson visibly crushed at his desk, looking at casualty reports from Vietnam. The point was to remind this Bush adviser that the burdens of the office can break any man.

Six years into a turbulent presidency, Bush is determinedly uncrushed. Under the weight of a difficult war in Iraq, of regular meetings with families who have lost loved ones, of a hostile press and a vitriolic opposition, Bush has never given any indication of being run down. It is a testament to his physical and, above all, his spiritual strength.

The problem for Bush is that in the current environment, his resolve has become a drag. People hear him say that he will stay in Iraq even if only Laura and Barney still support him, and they think it signals a stubborn unwillingness to adjust. They hear him say that the next president will have to decide whether or not troops are in Iraq, and it sounds as if Bush's Iraq policy is on a mindless autopilot.

This is why the phrase "stay the course" has flipped in its political significance. It used to be the rallying cry of the war's supporters. Now, it is gleefully used by critics to discredit the war's supporters. Shrewd Republicans, including the president, have tried to get out from under the phrase by saying they want to "adapt to win." But "stay the course" is sticking.

Not many people want to stay the course in Iraq, and why should they? The Baghdad security plan is faltering, the violence is intensifying and the Iraqi government is dithering. This is why the Democrats' nebulously defined call for changing the course in Iraq is so attractive. Even many hawks want to change the course (if in an entirely different way than the war's opponents).

Bush needs to give a "change the course" speech. He cannot give up on his essential goal of establishing a stable, democratic Iraq, but he needs to signal that the strategy in Iraq, the number of troops (we might need more), and all constructive ideas from Democrats or Republicans are on the table, because he is not happy with the progress there and he is working to find better approaches. Bush has given the impression of being detached from reality in Iraq, and that sense is simply deadly.

For a president who talks so much about being a wartime leader and whose administration so emphasizes the prerogatives of the executive, Bush has been an oddly passive commander in chief.

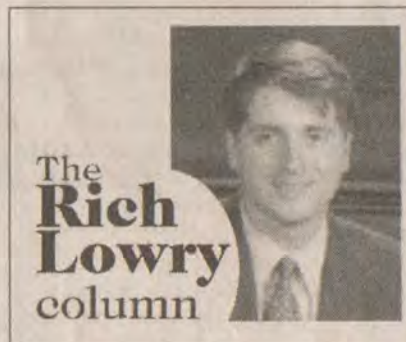

He often seems to be run by his government rather than the other way around. He rarely fires anyone. His deference to his generals is near total. He hasn't acted at key moments to resolve debilitating bureaucratic battles within his administration. He might be the "decider," but his deciding hasn't reached down far enough to see that his strategic decisions are effectively implemented.

There is a crisis in Iraq for all to see. Bush has to make it plain that he sees it too, and that his government is going to react to it. If he doesn't, his admirable resolve risks becoming a millstone around the neck of himself and his party.

— beyond the beltway

Here they are — your candidates for 2008

by DONALD KAUL
MINUTEMAN MEDIA

The smoke from the election wars had barely lifted when Tom Vilsack, Iowa's Democratic governor, announced he was running for president. Sen. Joe Biden, a Delaware Democrat, quickly followed by saying that he was planning on running.

Then Sen. John McCain, Arizona Republican, announced he was forming an "exploratory committee" to find out whether he should run.

Thus it is not a day too soon to begin thinking about 2008, when President Bush will be (thank God) leaving office. Here then is an early line on some of the people who, for reasons of their own, want to be our next Pinata-in-Chief:

Most Knowledgeable — Biden. He has been a senator since he was 12 years old and he knows just about everything about practically everything — farm policy, foreign policy, military policy, the infield fly rule — you name it, he knows it. And if you don't believe it, just ask him and he'll tell you. And tell you. And tell you. He reminds you of the salesman who continues his sales pitch even after you've agreed to buy.

Most Charismatic — Easily, Barack Obama, the senator from Illinois. He's only been in office two years and already he's causing rockstar riots whenever he goes to a Democratic campaign event. On the other hand, Democrats are people who can get excited at a Mike Dukakis rally, so maybe that's not such a big deal.

Best War Supporter — Senator McCain, who thinks we should not only stay the course in Iraq, but do it with more troops, maybe as many as 100,000. This puts many in mind of the guy who, finding himself in a hole, asks for a bigger shovel. Still, McCain actually has been in a war, which is more than you can say for any of his fellow warmongers.

Best Candidate Who's Proved He Can Actually Run Something — Former New York mayor Rudy Giuliani. Running New York City is a lot like running Baghdad, only with cab drivers instead of suicide bombers, and he left office with a better reputation than he entered with, a remarkable feat. Unfortunately, he has all the charm of a chain saw, which traditionally doesn't play well in the genteel South, now the spiritual home of the Republican Party. Also, the thought of him with Weapons of Mass Destruction is terrifying.

Best Wife — Elizabeth Edwards, wife of John, former North Carolina senator and a Democrat. She is smart and brave and warm and able to smile for hours on end (an important talent for presidential wives). Vilsack also has a dynamite wife, Christie, and Hillary Clinton's spouse is no slouch, although not technically a wife.

Best Candidate Whose Future is Behind Him — Al Gore, who was a fine, intelligent politician before he ran for president and has been even better since. It's the running part he hasn't mastered and probably never will.

Best Candidate Who Would

Need a Constitutional Amendment to Be Eligible to Run — Republican Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger of California. He has completed an almost impossible act of political jujitsu by winning in an overwhelming Democratic state then, when behind in the polls, changing his policies in order to become popular again. However, he not only was born in Austria, but sounds as though he still lives there.

Best Unknown Candidate — Bill Richardson, Democratic Governor of New Mexico. He was a good congressman, has proved himself an accomplished negotiator and diplomat and people like him as governor. As far as name recognition goes, however, he might as well be in the Federal Witness Protection Program. Also, most people couldn't find his state on a map.

Best Candidate Named After a Catcher's Glove — Mitt Romney. This Republican Governor of Massachusetts, despite the handicap of being smart, handsome, rich and stunningly successful at practically everything he's tried, has achieved an obscurity that Bill Richardson can only dream of. Go figure.

There they are, the whole bunch, or most of them. Feel free to take this list with you when you vote.

Editor's Note: For years, Floyd County Times founder and former publisher Norman Allen wrote a weekly column that looked at Floyd County through his eyes. His columns are being reprinted due to request.

Yes, Virginia, I am not Santa Claus.

NO FISHING, PLEASE

One of my good friends and readers wrote me recently to say she enjoys this column pretty consistently till I take off on one of my fishing bits. She apparently is too sympathetic, and lets my frustrations reach her. Or it may be she is not overfond of the gentle art of lying, at which some fisherfolk have been accused of being adept.

Be all that as it may, I am ceasing and desisting from recounting herein my woes and tribulations at this lake and that, at least till the weather takes a turn for the better.

A FAIR QUESTION

The dog may be getting to be hackneyed stuff for some of our readers, too. I began to suspect as much, this week, when I told Scott Collins that a dog gradually takes over till he seems like one of the family, and he quipped, "which one?"

JOB APPLICATION

I see by the public prints that Milt Pappas, the fellow who used to throw 'em and duck for the Cincinnati Reds, is available for the job, of Baseball Commissioner. So am I. And why not?

I have been connected with this game a long while now, dating back before the aforesaid Reds won their world series over the White Sox, and when you got your baseball news from the newspapers, or by sitting in the stands. I have played ball, all the way from One Old Cat to dishing up a round-house curve to a batter. And that's a lot more experience than General Eckert ever had.

Milt Pappas may have traveled in faster company than yours truly, but I claim to have been one of the first farsighted baseball men in the country to write Mr. Pappas off as a dead loss to the Reds, and threaten to watch them no longer from my easy chair, if they didn't trade him. They did, and I still watch.

After all, I'm going to be big about this matter. If baseball passes me up, I hope it gets what it deserves by hiring Pappas.

Underground coal miner Mark McKenzie and his wife, Vicki, stand outside the nearly complete new home they are building near Inez in Martin County. Both Mark and Vicki credit Mark's participation in the Coal Careers Program with helping him land his job with Booth Energy that has given them the financial means and security necessary to invest in their new home. The Coal Careers Program is a component of the Kentucky Coal Academy that exposes prospective miners to a combination of classroom instruction and on-the-job training at local mines that allows them to go straight to work in the coal industry.

Graduates of coal careers program seeing success

by MICHAEL CORNETT EKCEP INC.

About 10 months ago, Mark McKenzie's plans didn't include building a home, but they did include escaping the fast-food industry and the limited opportunities it provided. Mark chose to pursue training for a mining career by enrolling in the Coal Careers Program, and the new yellow ranch house now going up beside Coldwater Road in Martin County stands as proof positive that the program works.

If things go according to plan, Mark and his wife, Vicki, will celebrate Thanksgiving there with family. Discussing the change in their lives, Mark and Vicki exchanged contented smiles inside their nearly completed new home.

Building a house would have been "a lot harder to do" without his new career in the coal industry, said Mark, who began working as an underground miner for Booth Energy upon graduating from the program in early September.

Mark said he believes the Coal Careers Program works because it not only extensively trains prospective coal miners, but also places them into full-time mining jobs with Booth Energy or Excel Mining once they complete the program. The coal companies are partnering in the program because it helps meet their need for qualified miners.

Considering that he was working at McDonald's when he enrolled, Mark said his life has been profoundly improved.

"When I graduated and got offered a job, I felt like I really had accomplished something," he said. "I had wanted to get into mining for a long time, but I didn't have any experience and couldn't get a job. I don't have to worry about that anymore."

Mark's success is not an isolated case. Program officials said at least two other graduates of the Coal Careers Program are building or Joyce Wilcox, right, talks with Mark and Vicki McKenzie in the living room of the couple's new home going up near Inez. As Business Services representative for the Big Sandy Area Community Action Program, Joyce works as a liaison between Booth Energy and Excel Mining—the two sponsoring coal companies training and employing participants in the Coal Careers Program—and the Eastern Kentucky Concentrated Employment Program, Inc. (EKCEP), which helps fund the Coal Careers Program.

buying new homes only months after graduating and beginning full-time work with their sponsoring coal company.

The program has graduated around 30 fully trained and certified miners ready to go straight to work. Among that group is the program's fourth class of new miners, who gathered recently at the Hager Hill Campus of Big Sandy Community and Technical College to mark the completion of 1,700 hours of classroom and on-the-job training.

The program's success on both sides of the workforce equation shows it is doing exactly what it was designed to do, said Crawford Blakeman, manager of the Eastern Kentucky Concentrated Employment Program's (EKCEP) Business Solutions Team. EKCEP supplements the Coal Careers Program with workforce development funds that help cover the training salaries of the new miners.

"People need training to get into the coal industry, and coal mines need trained miners," Blakeman said. "EKCEP is committed to assisting endeavors like this one, which contributes to our mission of helping the coal industry solve its workforce shortages and help people improve their lives."

The Coal Careers Program is funded by a partnership of EKCEP, Booth Energy and Excel Mining, Big Sandy Community and Technical College, Big Sandy Area Community Action Program, and the Kentucky Coal Academy, a coal training initiative that offers courses at Kentucky Community and Technical College System (KCTCS) locations in Hazard, Madisonville, and Harlan.

Based in Hazard, EKCEP is a federally funded non-profit agency that administers the JobSight network of workforce centers in 23 eastern Kentucky counties. At JobSight "one-stop" workforce centers, job seekers and employers can access over a dozen state and federal employment and training programs and employer services in a single location. EKCEP's Business Solutions services help link employers with the right employees through numerous services, activities, and initiatives.

The Coal Careers Program gives prospective miners an extensive 30-week combination of classroom and on-the-job instruction. Participants are paid as they work to complete their training and are considered part-time employees of either Booth Energy or Excel Mining. The program includes training on high-tech virtual mining simulators that vividly mimic the experience of operating the continuous-mining and roof-bolting machines used in

THE BLACK LAGOON

'Abominable'

by TOM DOTY
TIMES COLUMNIST

Here is a Thanksgiving Turkey for readers. Alfred Hitchcock meets Sasquatch in this better than average effort from the film department at the Sci-Fi Channel.

Director Ryan Schifrin — more on him later — blends elements of "Rear Window" and your average Bigfoot opus here and succeeds in crafting the best Yeti tale since "Shriek of the Mutilated." The film follows the efforts of a wheelchair bound man to convince authorities that an enormous monster is stalking the five women who have rented the townhouse across the street. His efforts are hampered by a disbelieving sheriff and an unsympathetic male nurse who don't get it together till the final reel, which gives Bigfoot plenty of time to nosh on the cast like so many human pork rinds.

The film gets off to a good start with a local farmer losing a horse and a loyal pooch to a very hungry Sasquatch, which then proceeds to dog him back to his cabin. The scene then shifts to the homecoming of Preston Rogers (played by Matt McCoy of "Police Academy" fame, but don't hold that against him 'cause he's quite good here).

Rogers is in sorry shape after injuring his spine and losing his wife in a climbing accident on the well named "Suicide Rock." This ominous structure looms right over Rogers' townhouse and makes him more nervous than a congressional page getting text messages from Mark Foley. All this and he's stuck with a personal aid, named Otis, who appears to have attended the Mike Tyson School of stress management. His signature move is to belt Rogers in the jaw when he expresses some anxiety and his plan B involves drugging Rogers to the gills so he can get some sack time after gulping down a little soy milk and vodka.

Things perk up when five women (who apparently wandered off a Victoria's Secret catalog) arrive at the Townhouse next door to toast one's impending nuptials. Before you can say Psycho, they are jumped by the Bigfoot creature, who isn't above letting one of them finish her shower scene before yanking her through the window before remembering to open it.

Shortly, there is only one left and she pairs with Preston to take the fight to the Yeti. The ensuing ordeal rejuvenates Rogers, sees the woman saved, and finally brings the sheriff into the picture, though he's missed all the action.

This one works because of solid direction by Schifrin, who delivers on promise he showed with his short film "Evil Hill," which parodied romantic comedies by focusing on the love life of Dr. Evil (from the "Austin Powers" films). Schifrin manages to build suspense and sustain it while also taking several detours from the main story line to focus on the mundane talk at the sheriff's office and an ill advised hunting party which actually finds the Sasquatch lair but doesn't live to tell about it.

Schifrin knows when to pile on the gore and several of the attack scenes

Straking for love

by CAROLE BELLACERA
"CHICKEN SOUP FOR THE COUPLE'S SOUL"

On a warm spring night in April on Iraklion Air Station in Crete, I left my dorm with a girlfriend, and decided to check out a party that was happening on the base. Boyfriend-less at the time, my eyes automatically swept the crowd in search of "potential" — and stopped on Frank.

I'd seen him around the base before, and I'd always thought he was cute: Tall and thin. Curly black hair. Mustache. Kind of Jim Croce-looking. I parked myself next to him and engaged him in conversation.

As we spoke I found he had a sweet smile and a sexy New York accent (terribly exotic for a girl who'd grown up in the cornfields of Indiana). But it wasn't just his good looks and accent that charmed me. He was a genuinely nice guy — easy to talk to, and best of all, he made me laugh.

I was so engrossed in Frank and his lively conversation that at first I didn't notice the commotion around us. Too late, I looked up just in time to see a flash of bare skin disappear around the corner of the building. Everyone around us laughed hysterically and pointed in that direction. Suddenly, I realized what I'd missed.

"My first streakers!" I gasped. Then I turned to Frank accusingly.

"And I missed them because of you!"

Frank looked properly contrite. "I'm sorry. But for you, I'll get them to do it again."

I didn't think Frank was serious, but before I could say a word, he scrambled up from the ground where we were sitting and disappeared around the corner of the dorm.

A few minutes later, I heard a peal of shrill laughter from the crowd. I whipped my head around, and there they were — the two streakers, as naked as babes, running once again like mad demons down the span of lawn between the two dorms. Suddenly, my eyes widened. A third streaker had joined the other two. He was tall and thin, with curly black hair and a mustache. Kind of Jim Crocelooking.

Oddly enough, Frank missed the whole thing, or so he said. He reappeared at my side a few minutes later slightly out of breath, acting as if nothing had happened.

"Thanks," I said dryly. "You didn't have to go to so much trouble to impress me."

He shrugged with a sly smile. "Well, I couldn't let you miss your first streakers."

What could I say? He'd done it for me.

That was the beginning of our relationship. It's been 23 years now, and we have two wonderful grown children. Frank doesn't streak anymore. He feels it no longer fits into his lifestyle — being a respected computer programmer and all.

Oh, he still gets naked — just not for the general public.

Everyone who knows the story of our first meeting thinks I saw something I liked that night when Frank streaked past me in the buff. I did ...

Should reader dart after $300 offer?

by TOM and RAY MAGLIOZZI

Dear Tom and Ray:
My 1963 Dodge Dart four-door sedan was an old-lady car when I bought it in late '63. I have now become an old lady and changed to another, newer old-lady car, a 2001 Buick Century. My Dart and I drove from one end of this country to the other several times — both west to east and north to south. My maintenance bills were for oil, gas, lubes and an occasional part. I love that car, and it looks basically like it did when purchased. The original upholstery was changed twice due to dog passenger wear. It had two new paint jobs to match the original, and the engine was rebuilt after it reached 40,000 miles. Now I must part with it, and I can't seem to find a value. The Blue Book apparently doesn't go back that far. Can you tell me how to find a fair market price? I have someone interested, but he feels the value is about $300. I see others priced over $2,000, which is about its original price. Your help would be most appreciated. — Joy

TOM: Well, I, too, owned a 1963 Dart at one time, Joy. It was the apple of my eye.

RAY: Yeah, an apple with more worms in it than an acre of prime Iowa farmland.

TOM: Anyway, I paid $2,200 for it about 10 years ago. But it was a convertible, Joy. Yours is a sedan.

RAY: It also had a body like my brother's: severely weathered. So that's not a good comparison.

TOM: It's impossible to judge a car's value without seeing it. For instance, it might run fine, but it might be getting ready for another engine rebuild.

RAY: But if you want a general estimate, a pristine version of your car might be worth about $4,500.

TOM: But then you need to subtract $1,000 because the paint job is not the original one. Subtract another $500 if the upholstery is torn. And take off another $500 if it has more than 100,000 miles on it now.

RAY: And take off another $2,200 because my brother has publicly praised these cars. That eviscerates their value. So grab the $300 offer, Joy!

TOM: No! Don't listen to him. My guess is that you're looking at a value somewhere in the $2,000-$2,500 range. And rather than sell it cheap to a guy up the street, your best bet is to check out Hemmings Motor News. That's where people who love old cars buy and sell stuff. You can place an ad there. You might get lucky and find a Hemmings reader who knows this car well, and will give you what it's really worth.

RAY: Or you might get really lucky and find someone who doesn't know this car well, and will give you more than it's worth. Good luck, Joy.

Allen

sometimes gets philosophical. For example:
"Some folks seem to complain all the time about their hard day's work. Why, listen, folks, it's not so much the hard work, as it is the tension we build up inside us, worrying what's to do and what's to be done next. Then, after the day's work is over, they stretch out on the couch, one eye open watching TV and the other eye trying to sleep."
"Then, suddenly they realize it's bedtime. They go to bed and can't sleep worrying about what is to be done tomorrow.

"If we will just stop our thoughts long enough to realize we need to relax, let the muscles loose. Stretch out and let the tension down, and by the time we are completely relaxed, we are sound asleep."
"Probably dreaming of the gold we have in the bank, but still have to dig it out."
"There's just one thing that worries me the most, and that is to see how pretty people are when they are young, and how ugly we get when we are old."

are gross enough to satisfy fans of the visceral, while there are a ton of in-jokes to satisfy hardcore movie fans.
Schifrin also employs a veteran cast which is capably led by McCoy. There are also good turns by several film veterans. Jeffrey Combs ("Reanimator") is hilarious as a chain-smoking clerk who ignores his oxygen tank whenever he lights up. Lance Henriksen has a brief moment as a tough guy hunter who runs like a rabbit when he lays eyes on the monster. The best bit, though, goes to Paul Gleason (the principal in "The Breakfast Club") as the ineffective sheriff. Schifrin lets Gleason ad-lib his way through the brief role, and it pays off with ribald dialogue that can't be reprinted here.

Tight suspense sequences, good characterizations and occasional splashes of the red stuff make this one of the better films to come from the Sci-Fi Channel, which has hitherto relied on CGI insect movies for their Saturday night movies.
There's also a killer ending which I won't give away here. Suffice to say someone has made a decent Bigfoot movie which blows away those Sun Classic Studio films of the 1970s that purported to have real footage which amounted to some guy in a hairsuit running around Yellowstone Park.
Best line: "I'm going to the head and giving birth to a real monster."

underground mining, or the haul trucks, dozers, and loaders used in surface mining.
Instructors deliver classroom training on mining-related topics like safety and first aid, welding, electricity, and hydraulics along with classes on business and personal finance, computer operation, and other practical skills.
The program alternates blocks of classroom work with hands-on work at actual coal mines. Through both types of training, participants become certified miners, as well as Mine Emergency Technicians (METs).
"They're not only better miners, but they're safer miners as well," Blakeman said.
Dennis Hatfield, president of Booth Energy, said the importance of the program's hands-on training component cannot be overestimated.
"This is very different than when I became a miner," Hatfield said. "They basically gave me a hat and a light and sent me in. Coal Careers gives them some training and helps them get into the job, and it takes them farther along before they take the step of actually entering a coal mine."
Full-time job opportunities with the sponsoring coal companies are available to graduates who successfully complete all facets of the Coal Careers Program.
That opportunity is perhaps the program feature that participants find most attractive, according to Joyce

Wilcox, who works closely with leadership of both sponsoring coal companies in her job as Business Services representative for the Big Sandy Area Community Action Program.
Wilcox said she has personally encountered the frustration of many miners who were stuck in the same situation that Mark was prior to getting involved in the program.
"One man came in my office recently and threw down his green card, his work permit as an inexperienced miner, and said, 'This isn't worth a quarter,'" Wilcox said. "It's extremely difficult to get a job in coal without experience, and you can't get experience without a job."
Hatfield acknowledged that this "Catch-22" situation is too common in the coal industry, but said the Coal Careers Program is helping address that problem, to the benefit of both the prospective miners and the companies.
"Normally, the coal industry is looking for experienced workers, and that's what the whole world really wants," Hatfield said. "But the program allows us to do early career training where they basically learn about coal mining before they actually step into an underground mine."
"It also takes away some of the risk and burden of us training people without experience," he continued. "Underground mining is not for everybody, and Coal Careers helps us identify the people who, in the long haul, really want to be career coal miners."

Hatfield said Booth Energy anticipates continuing to be involved in the Coal Careers Program as it improves and builds upon the successes it has already achieved.
"We want to train the next generation of coal miners, and this is how we're doing it," Hatfield said. "For a new program that's still being refined, Coal Careers is developing well, and we've had some strong candidates come through the program. Those who have come through to full completion have been successes, and successful in helping us staff our coal mines."
The McKenzies said they are glad to have attained their share of that success through Mark's participation in the Coal Careers Program.
"It's been an exciting year for us; we met, got married, Mark got a new job, and we're building a house," Vicki said with a smile as dust-covered workers sanded down drywall mud in what will be their new kitchen. "Things are great."
Mark agreed.
"I like working in coal, and I don't want to do anything else," Mark said. "I wouldn't have believed how much this program would help me, but I can see it now."

McDonald finishes strong in 2006 Wal-Mart FLW Tour

TIMES STAFF REPORT

PRESTONSBURG — FLW Tour bass fishing professional Tim McDonald recently had another top finish in Alabama. Lewis Smith Lake — hosting a FLW Series event Nov. 15-18 — was witness to McDonald's latest showing of rising fishing ability. Against the country's best bass fishing professionals, McDonald showed that his skills are continuing to improve. On a tough lake that produced few limits and many zeroes for the top professionals, McDonald came through. After three challenging days of competition, McDonald would miss the top-10 cut for the event's final and a shot at $100,000 by just one ounce. Finishing with a three-day total weight of 19 pounds, 11 ounces, McDonald was left feeling sick when he watched Craig Powers weigh in enough weight to push him back to an 11th-place finish and another $12,500 payday.

"I could not believe it," McDonald said, following the weigh-in. "I worked so hard this week and felt sure I would make Saturday, but I'll just have to work harder next season.

McDonald and local bass professional Tee Watkins will team up next season to fish the FLW Tour and shoot for more top finishes around the country.

Fishing for $1 Million: Tim McDonald reached another milestone in his fishing career earlier this year. After several year away from tournament fishing, McDonald has went back on tour in a big way. Riding his opening top-10, sixth-place finish at the Northeast Stren qualifying tournament on Kerr Lake, McDonald finished 24th overall in the Northeast Stren division and earned a berth into the prestigious $1 Million Stren Championship on Alabama's Wheeler Lake.

McDonald had never competed on a national level event at Wheeler Lake and felt unsure of his chances until his first practice day, which provided him with a fish-catching pattern. He worked in several areas and raised his hopes of a good showing. And what a showing it was. On day one, McDonald's catch of 13 pounds, nine ounces moved him into seventh-place and allowed him a shot at the LEXINGTON — The Garrett Christian Academy Warriors posted a 2-1 record at Kentucky Basketball Academy the weekend of Saturday, Nov. 18. Garrett won its first game before splitting its final two matchups. More on each of the games follows.

Garrett Christian 87, Saline 55: Garrett Christian opened play at KBA with a convincing victory over the Saline Saints. Five different Garrett Christian players worked their way into double figures scoring. Kyle Green led Garrett with a game-high 18 points. Justin Shepherd and Andrew Zabo each had 14 points for the Warriors. In other Garrett scoring, senior guards Matthew Potter and Robbie Vanderpool netted 12 and 11 points, respectively.

Heartland Academy 72, Garrett Christian 62: Elizabethtown-based Heartland Academy pulled away and defeated Garrett Christian for a hard-fought win.

Despite the loss, Kyle Green managed to score 24 points for the Warriors. Andrew Zabo and Robbie Vanderpool were also in double figures for the Garrett group. Zabo scored 13 points while Vanderpool added 10.

Garrett Christian 80, Berea 59: The Warriors won their third game in easy fashion. In a blowout win over Berea, Garrett Christian got a team-high 19 points from Ryan Burns. Matthew Potter scored 13 points and Kyle Green added 12 as Garrett Christian won convincingly. Bobby Prater and Cody Jackson each had eight points for the Warriors.

A little good duck calling can go a long way

by STEVE VANTREESE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MONKEY'S EYEBROW - Inappropriate or excessive calling probably saves more ducks than it dupes. Calling with that famous mallard quackery is a big part of duck hunting, which has broken out across Kentucky with the early, Thanksgiving-Nov. 26 phase of hunting. The longer part-two follows shortly, Dec. 4-Jan. 28. Typically, hunters greet the season with an wling pro Rick Waldon. Waldon, a Ballard County native and lifelong waterfowl hunter, is opening his 18th season operating Waldon Lodge and Waldon Hunting Area adjacent to the waterfowl-rich Ballard County Wildlife Management Area in the wetland suburbs of Monkey's Eyebrow. Waldon, who's typically in the pits guiding visiting hunters every day of the Kentucky season, was in Canada for the opening of duck hunting far to the north back on Sept. 4. "That's how long these birds have been hunted already," he said. "By the time ducks get here, they've been hunted for weeks and are pretty well educated." Consequently, the ducks are sensitive to overly aggressive calling and calling that doesn't sound too much like the real thing. And when calling isn't particularly good, it's bad. "The main thing is to match your calling to the conditions," Waldon said. "You have to follow Mother

Nature's lead. When it's windy and cold, it makes you a lot better caller. At least you can call louder and more often and it will sound better to the ducks. "When it's still and quiet, though, you're better off calling just a little bit and letting the decoys do the work," Waldon advised. "When a duck is coming in, let him come without doing much more calling. And when he's above you, be really careful." Waldon said calm conditions in which calls come under closer scrutiny are also the most testy conditions for visual attraction. Regular decoys sit motionless and not so life-like. Rather than force the issue of attraction with more calling, Waldon and his guides more often rely on Pulsator decoys, which are battery-powered duck "butt" decoys, among their spreads. They use pump action to pulse and wiggle on the surface, creating a realistic appearance of an upturned and feeding duck. "You have to play the calling by ear," Waldon said. "Try what works. That is, if you do something and the duck likes it, keep using it, but if a duck flares, you know you're doing the wrong thing." "On those days when it's quiet, it's hard to blow a call and have it sound good to them," he said. "Once we've got their attention and they're coming to the decoys, about all we'll do is give them a little spank, a little soft "wak wak wak." "The later in the season you go, the more they've been shot at, the less calling you want to do - again, depending on conditions," Waldon said. "On the days when it's blowing hard and they can't hear very well and it's cold and they're a little hungrier, everybody in the pit can call and it will sound good to them." Waldon said hunters who learn the calling part of the duck pursuit from the competitive calling game can lose sight of what's necessary. "Duck calling contests are a whole different thing," he said. "You go through a whole routine that everybody does - you use all the calls. But in hunting, conditions might not be right for a lot of that. Instead, you kind of have to follow Mother Nature's lead and just call as much as is needed." More is too much. Especially for educated ducks. saa

KDFWR officials seeking info about Lawrence County black bear roadkill

SPECIAL TO THE TIMES

FRANKFORT - Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources officials are seeking information about a black bear struck and killed on U.S. 23 in Lawrence County Monday evening, Nov. 20.

Conservation officer Jim Marshall and Wildlife Biologist Jason Plaxico met Sheriff Garrett Roberts and a deputy about four miles north of the Johnson County line and discovered a dead 215-pound young male bear that had been killed crossing the highway. They noticed upon arrival that someone had cut off its paws. Black bears once ranged throughout the forests that covered three-quarters of Kentucky. But habitat destruction, the loss of the American chestnut tree and human harassment nearly eliminated them from the state a century ago. Today, due to large scale regeneration of forest land in eastern Kentucky, and abundant bear populations in neighboring states West Virginia, Virginia and Tennessee, they are naturally recolonizing the state. "We have a small but growing population of bears," said Marshall. "They have become significant tourist attractions in several areas." Kentucky does not have a hunting season for bears. It is illegal to take the carcass or body parts from a bear found dead or killed along the roadside in Kentucky. Marshall is requesting anyone with information about the bear or its missing parts to call him at 606/265-4474 or 606/367-0193. They can also call the Kentucky Fish and Wildlife law enforcement hotline at 1-800-25-ALERT.

COLLEGE BASKETBALL ROUNDUP Butler 56, No. 22 Tennessee 44

NEW YORK - Julian Betko scored 11 of his career-high 15 points in a decisive second-half run to lift Butler past Tennessee in the NIT Season Tip-Off semifinals. With Butler (5-0) leading by one, Betko hit three 3-pointers and a layup to give the Bulldogs a 46-38 lead with 7:49 left in the game. A.J. Graves added 15 points for Butler, which earned a trip to New York with victories over Notre Dame and Indiana in the Midwest Region. JaJuan Smith scored 16 points for Tennessee (4-1). No. 5 UCLA 88, No. 19 Georgia Tech 73 LAHAINA, Hawaii - Arron Afflalo bounced back from a poor shooting game to score 19 points for UCLA in the championship of the EA Sports Maui Invitational. Darren Collison, selected tournament MVP, had 15 points and seven assists for the Bruins (4-0), who shot 61 percent (20-for-33) in taking a 47-36 halftime lead. They extended it to as many as 22 points in the second half, and the Yellow Jackets were never able to get closer than 12 down the stretch. Luc Richard Mbah A Moute had 14 points and Lorenzo Mata had nine points and 10 rebounds for the Bruins. Lewis Clinch had 21 points for Georgia Tech (5-1). No. 17 Syracuse 79, Charlotte 67 SYRACUSE, N.Y. - Demetris Nichols scored 21 points, and freshman Paul Harris added 17 points and nine rebounds for Syracuse (5-0). It was the first meeting between the teams since Charlotte (1-2) ruined the afterglow of the Orange's 2003 national championship with a 96-92 victory in the Carrier Dome to open the 2003-04 season. No. 12 Memphis 80, No. 20 Kentucky 63

by JIM O'CONNELL
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAHAINA, Hawaii — John Calipari contorted his face over and over when trying to explain his team's performance in the EA Sports Maui Invitational.

"We're walking out of here with a 'What happened for 20 minutes?'" Calipari said after his 12th-ranked Memphis Tigers dominated No. 20 Kentucky 80-63 on Wednesday to finish third in the eight-team tournament.

The 20 minutes he was referring to was the second half of a 92-85 semifinal loss to No. 19 Georgia Tech. That was a game in which the Tigers blew a 16-point halftime lead by being out-rebounded 29-9 over the final 20 minutes.

"Maybe we just went brain dead and I'm not taking anything away from Georgia Tech," he said. "But I'll tell you, as disappointed as I was after that second half in our lack of physical play, and after I watched the tape I was even sicker, I'm as proud today. This is a hard game to play with both teams down a little bit after hard losses."

Kentucky, which lost 73-68 to No. 5 UCLA in the semifinals, and Memphis were pretty even for the opening half Wednesday. Then the Tigers took over with their speed and inside power.

Freshman Willie Kemp scored 10 of his 12 points in the opening four minutes of the second half for the Tigers (3-1), and 6-foot-9, 260-pound Joey Dorsey keyed their game-breaking 14-0 run in the second half with two monster dunks.

"That second half yesterday was a crisis," Calipari said. "We had to regroup and we did."

There was no problem on the boards against Kentucky. Memphis had a 38-27 rebound advantage, including 11-5 on the offensive end.

"There was effort today rebounding," Calipari said. "The way it should it always be."

Center Randolph Morris was most of Kentucky's offense throughout the first 30 minutes of the game. He finished with 18 points and Joe Crawford had 15.

"They were putting some big guys on him," Kentucky coach Tubby Smith said of Morris, who admitted he was worn down some after playing in his third game in as many days and his fifth in eight days.

"That had an effect on me. We hit the wall so to speak in the second half," Morris said. "They showed what they wanted to do and rotated big men on me."

Robert Dozier, who was scoreless and fouled out in the loss to Georgia Tech, had 15 points for Memphis, while Chris Douglas-Roberts and Jeremy Hunt each had 13. Dorsey finished with six points and seven rebounds.

Memphis led 43-40 after a first half that saw four lead changes and two ties over the final seven minutes. That all changed at the start of the second half when the 6-2 Kemp, who started all four games and came in averaging 8.7 points, took over.

He was scoreless in eight minutes in the first half after picking up two fouls. He hit two 3s then scored twice on drives as the Tigers took a 55-46 lead four minutes into the second half.

"It wasn't anything I set out to do. It came in the flow of the game," Kemp said of his scoring burst.

Asked if taking the 3-pointers was something he set out to do to start the second half, Calipari interrupted.

"No one ever has to tell Willie to shoot," he said. "He is a point guard who likes to shoot."

The pace of the game changed to what the Tigers like and Kentucky suddenly wasn't getting any offense from Morris down low.

Dorsey dunked to start the deciding 14-0 run. He then blocked a shot by Sheray Thomas and took off on the break. The run was worth it when he took a short pass on the wing and threw down a power dunk. Kentucky called a timeout but the tide was definitely the Tigers' way.

Antonio Anderson's 3-pointer with 8:21 to go capped the run and Memphis was up 73-50.

"There are no excuses but we were tired," Smith said. "We'll get better. We have a lot of things to do to get better."

The third-place finish matched Memphis' best (1992) in four appearances on Maui.

Kentucky won the tournament in 1993, and finished third in 1997 and 2002.

This was the first-ever meeting between the schools.

Pikeville Bears sweep Classic with win over Bluefield

TIMES STAFF REPORT

PIKEVILLE — Now that they have a taste of winning, the Pikeville College Bears seem to like it just fine.

One night after ending a losing streak that had reached 19 dating back to last season Coach Kelly Wells' Bears have got a run going on the positive side after knocking off Bluefield College 80-73 Wednesday night.

The back-to-back wins came in the Thanksgiving Classic played at the Eastern Kentucky Exposition Center. The classic marks half of Pikeville's games in the 6,700-seat complex, which is in its second year of hosting Pikeville College basketball. They'll return there for back-to-back games beginning with a January 30 clash with regional rival Alice Lloyd College.

Bluefield (3-5), a member of the NAIA Div. II Appalachian Athletic Conference, led most of the first seven minutes of the game, pulling ahead 13-9 on a three-pointer by J.R. Montgomery with 14:04 remaining.

But Pikeville (2-6) then scored 10 unanswered points to take a lead of six at 19-13. It would bounce between one and eight the remainder of the half before settling at 37-30 at recess.

The teams waged a fierce battle for the first 13 minutes of the second half, with the game being tied four times. A free throw by Omar Reed gave the Rams a 59-58 lead with 6:38 to go, but Pikeville scored 10 of the game's next dozen points over a 3:36 period, with senior Donnell Dobbins accounting for seven of them, to take a 68-61 lead. Bluefield was never able to get closer than three the rest of the way.

Dobbins led the Bears with 25 points, adding four assists and as many steals. Freshman Rob Walker had a huge night for the home team, scoring 15 but pulling down 19 rebounds to lead the Bears to a 47-34 edge there.

Freshman Brad Lowe had 17 points and five assists while junior Paul Frazier had 16 points to go with nine rebounds.

Bluefield was paced by Robert Sharpe's game-high 30 to go with six rebounds. Curtis Dixon tossed in 11 and six assists, while James Chapman followed with 10 markers.

Johnny Witherspoon had eight points, six assists, six rebounds and four steals.

The Bears are off for the Thanksgiving holiday, but return to action Sunday afternoon when they host Ohio State-Newark at 2 p.m. at the Pikeville College Gym.

Georgetown 108, Covenant 71: Six players reached double figures as Happy Osborne's Tigers improved to 8-1 with the win. The game was much closer than the final indicated in the opening half, with Covenant leading much of the first seven minutes, including at 17-16 with 12:43 remaining.

But from there the Tigers outscored the Scots 41-20 the remainder of the half and the rout was on. Justin Taylor led Georgetown with 20 points while Donovan Brown came off the bench for 11 points and 12 rebounds.

Covenant (1-7) got a game-high 32 from Jacob Skogen.

Alice Lloyd College Athletic Hall of Fame inducts new class

TIMES STAFF REPORT

PIPPA PASSES — Six former athletes — Jeff Humphrey, David Vicini, Sammy Smith, Terri Abbott, Jimmy Collins and Mike Smith — were inducted into the Alice Lloyd College Athletic Hall of Fame in mid-October as a part of Appalachia Day Homecoming. The festivities took place between the women's and men's alumni basketball games at the Grady Nutt Athletic Center. The following is an overview of the former outstanding athletes and their career statistics.

■ Jeff Humphrey played baseball at ALC from 1980-1984. The Fairview High School graduate hails from Ashland. He was an outfielder, primarily a center fielder. His freshman year statistics are unavailable. However, during his final three years he was a .342 hitter with 94 hits, 50 runs scored, 53 RBIs and seven home runs. He hit .366 his senior year. Humphrey played his career under the direction of Coach Bill Melton.

■ David Vicini played baseball from 1980 thru 1984. He is originally from Lynch and is a Lynch High School. He was an infielder, primarily a shortstop who also played some third base. His Freshman year stats are also missing. During his final three years, Vicini had a .316 career batting average. He had 93 hits, 51 RBIs, scored 60 runs and belted three home runs. He batted .340 his junior year. Vicini also played his entire career for Coach Bill Melton.

■ Sammy Smith was a catcher on the ALC baseball team from 1982-1986. He is originally from Michigan, but graduated from Wheelwright High School. Smith had a .301 career batting average at ALC during his four-year career. He was a two-time team MVP who finished his career with 113 hits, 59 runs scored, 71 RBIs and 20 home runs. His coaches were Bill Melton and Jim Stepp.

■ Terri Abbott played forward and center for the Lady Eagles basketball team from 1981-1985. She was a four year starter and team captain. Her senior stats were unavailable, however, during the first three years of her career she played in 84 games, scored 860 points, pulled down 444 rebounds and dished off 99 assists. She was the first Lady Eagle basketball player to reach the 1,000 point milestone in her career. She also finished her career with over 600 rebounds and well over 100 assists. She was a member of the 1982-83 NLCAA Eastern District Championship team. Abbott played three years for Coach Gary Gibson and her senior year for Coach Tammy Oakes. She is originally from Jenkins and graduated from Fleming-Neon High School.

■ Jimmy Collins played basketball at ALC from 198-1985. The statistics for his freshman campaign were unavailable. During his last three years he played in 81 games, scored 1,197 points, had 273 assists and pulled down 217 rebounds. He was an outstanding free throw shooter and an outstanding long range bomber for the Eagles in an era before the three point shot. He played for coaches Lonnie Morris, Ray Herman and Joe Stepp during his career. Collins is from Brinkley and graduated from Knott County Central High School.

■ Mike Smith played forward and center for the Eagles from 1984 thru 1988. He is from Kermit, W.Va., and graduated from Kermit High School. Smith was a very physical player, an excellent scorer and a tenacious rebounder. During his career he played in 111 games. He scored 1,100 points which currently ranks him 16th All-time. His 704 rebounds currently ranks him sixth all-time at ALC. He played for coaches Joe Stepp and Jim Stepp during his career.

When Athletic Hall of Fame inductions began at ALC, basketball players Kathy Sergeant and Eddie Salyers were inducted. In a second induction, basketball players Danny Johnson, Ronnie Slone and Denise Moore Davidson were inducted. Later on, basketball players Eddie Gibson, Jimmy Hopkins, Garry Fields, Jasper Sumner, Sonja Meade Holbrook and Karen Duff Hall were inducted.

In October of 2003, 10 more former ALC standouts were inducted. They were basketball players Robbie Russell, David Martin, Henry Webb, Rick Conley, Robert Marcum, Pam Valentine Cox, and Katrina Hacker Short as well as baseball players Bob Braden and Scott Cornett, and former men's and women's basketball coach Charlie Whitaker.

In October of 2004, 11 more inductions were made. They were basketball players George Nichols, Shawn Hager, Daryl Slone, B.B. King and Brenda Hamilton Curry, baseball players Randy King and Danny Rice, cross country runner Darla Anderson Whitehead, former baseball coach Bill Melton, and former basketball coaches Joe Stepp and Jim Stepp.

In October of 2005, basketball players Russell Clark and Rhonda Whitaker Sizemore; basketball and baseball player Nehi West and baseball players Jamie Couch and Todd Stevens were inducted.

MSU outlasts ETSU

TIMES STAFF REPORT

MOREHEAD — Senior Quentin Pryor scored a career-high 24 points and senior Shaun Williams had 16 points and a game-high 10 rebounds to lead Morehead State to a 77-56 win over East Tennessee Tuesday evening in Johnson Arena.

Click here for a box score.
Pryor also added eight rebounds, three assists and three blocked shots. Williams handed out four assists, blocked three shots and had three steals. MSU also got 10 points from sophomore Cordaryl Ballard.

East Tennessee, now 2-3 on the season, was led by senior Brad Nuckles who scored 14 points and grabbed eight rebounds. Freshman Mike Smith added 10 points. The Buccaneers played without starting point guard Dequan Twilley who missed the game tending to a family matter, according to ETSU sources.

MSU, 2-2 on the season, hit 12-of-24 from three-point range, held ETSU to 39.6 percent field goal shooting and out-rebounded the Bucs 37-29.

"I felt like our guys played extremely hard," said MSU Head Coach Donnie Tyndall. "Among our goals going into a game are holding our opponent under 40 percent shooting and out-rebounding them by five. We accomplished both in this win.

"We had 23 assists in 30 baskets, and that means we were very unselfish with the basketball."

Morehead State will play its next game Nov. 29 at home against Marshall.

2006 a time of change for NASCAR

by JENNA FRYER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Jimmie Johnson opened and closed the 2006 season on top, for very different reasons.

The year began with the controversial suspension of his crew chief, who was caught cheating before the Daytona 500 and kicked out of the garage for four weeks. It ended with Johnson and Chad Knaus hoisting the Nextel Cup trophy as the championship-winning team.

It was a headlining year for Johnson, but he hardly stole the show.

NASCAR's 2006 season was thick with story lines, subplots and drama that didn't involve Johnson at all.

There was NASCAR's intense focus on the future, two elite teams moving in opposite directions and the defending Nextel Cup champion embarking on his own rollercoaster season.

Dale Earnhardt Jr. and Jeff Gordon both returned to the top of the sport — with Gordon making a pit stop to get married along the way — while a handful of former contenders dropped to the back of the field.

But the main theme of the season was change as everyone spent most of the year preparing for what's to come in 2007: A foreign automaker, a Colombian driver, a futuristic car and a new television network.

NASCAR chairman Brian France is confident the new look can jump-start a sport that seemingly has stalled after a decade in the fast lane.

"It's an awful lot of change, but it's going to be good change," France said before Sunday's season finale. "A lot of exciting things for the fans and the drivers and everyone else to look forward to. I love where we're at, and we're excited about where we're going."

It all started with Toyota, which said in January it would enter Camrys in the Nextel Cup Series in 2007. The announcement coincided with NASCAR's decision to phase in its custom-designed "Car of Tomorrow," which will debut next season and is meant to cut costs and improve safety.

Fans will become acquainted with Toyota and the CoT next year on ESPN, which will replace NBC.

Toyota started the biggest domino effect as it worked hard to land the top talent in NASCAR: The garage was consumed for months with which drivers would sign with the automaker. Toyota had its sights set on Kevin Harvick or Matt Kenseth but got Dale Jarrett and Brian Vickers instead.

Still, Harvick played the game and kept his options open — a hardline stance that forced car owner Richard Childress to pull his once-proud team from the back of the field to the front of the pack. When Harvick realized RCR was a competitor again, he resigned and had the best season of his career.

With five Cup wins, nine Busch victories and that series title, as well as a spot in the Chase for the championship, Harvick helped RCR become a major player again. But he received help from teammate Jeff Burton, who resuscitated his career by ending a five-year winless drought and making a major play for the Nextel Cup title.

With Harvick off the free-agent market, 1999 Cup champion Jarrett became a viable option for Toyota, sending RYR into a free-fall that threatened the team's survival.

Jarrett opted out of the No. 88 Ford to drive a Camry for Michael Waltrip Racing, and sponsor UPS went with him. Then Elliott Sadler asked out of his seat, leaving RYR down two drivers, two crew chiefs and a sponsor.

Yates heads into the offseason still trying to save his flagship No. 88. So far, he has only David Gilliland — the unproven driver who shot to stardom with a freak Busch win in June — holding his operation together.

Toyota also lured Vickers away from powerful Hendrick Motorsports, as well as Champ Car driver A.J. Allmendinger, who is just one of the many open-wheelers invading NASCAR.

It started in July with Juan Pablo Montoya, who stunned the racing world by fleeing Formula One for NASCAR. He's committed to a full schedule next year, while reigning IndyCar champion Sam Hornish Jr. is testing the waters. He closed the year with two forgettable Busch Series starts.

When the open-wheelers get comfortable, they might find themselves battling with former series champion Tony Stewart.

The two-time champ had a truly bizarre season as he struggled with his role as a garage leader, slumped on the race track and missed the Chase for the championship.

It started at Daytona, when he publicly warned someone would be killed because of the dangerous racing conditions. That led NASCAR to police aggressive driving, and Stewart was one of the first offenders. Then he angrily backed away from commenting further on the issue.

He was a split-personality most of the season, lecturing young drivers on etiquette then breaking most of his edicts. He ultimately hit a summer swoon (no thanks, probably, to the broken shoulder blade he suffered in May) and failed to qualify for the Chase.

Unable to defend his Nextel Cup title, he spent the final 10 weeks of the season focusing on himself. He hired a personal trainer, lost 20 pounds and breezed his way to three wins during the Chase.

He wasn't the only previous contender to watch from the sidelines: Ryan Newman and Jeremy Mayfield, both two-time Chase qualifiers, also failed to make the postseason. Newman never really got rolling, while Mayfield feuded with car owner Ray Everham. Mayfield was fired, then aired the team's dirty laundry in court documents in an attempt to land a better severance package.

They were replaced in the Chase by Earnhardt Jr. and Gordon, the two big stars who missed it in 2005. Harvick and Burton stepped in for RCR, and rookie Denny Hamlin surprised many by racing his way to a third-place finish in the points.

"This has definitely been a year that exceeded every expectation," Hamlin said, speaking for almost everyone.

New Nextel Cup champion was destined to win

by MIKE HARRIS

Jimmie Johnson's racing goals were a bit different before being stranded in 1994 in the Baja desert.

Until then, the Southern California 19-year-old, was content to run off-road races and, maybe some day, win the Baja 1000 or an off-road title.

Stuck for a day and a half in the rocky no-man's-land after driving off a ridge, Johnson revised his plans.

"I decided to go a different direction, maybe see what else there was out there in the racing world," Johnson said.

Johnson made a connection with then-Chevrolet racing boss Herb Fishel that eventually landed him in NASCAR's Busch Series, where he was spotted by Nextel Cup star Jeff Gordon. He introduced Johnson to team owner Rick Hendrick and became co-owner in 2002 with Hendrick of Johnson's No. 48 Chevrolet.

Johnson quickly became known as the best NASCAR driver not to have won a Cup title.

He insists he never let the onus of having lost two championships before weigh him down, and crew chief Chad Knaus and the rest of the team never let up.

"I don't see (being a perennial contender) as a burden, and I don't think anyone on our race team does," Johnson said after wrapping up his first Nextel Cup championship Sunday with a ninth-place finish that followed five straight top-two performances.

"It's our fifth season together," he continued. "People thought and expected a lot out of us as a race team from the beginning. We never felt a burden."

Before Sunday's triumph, Johnson came close three times, but late-season problems cost him and his team the championship.

In 2003, Matt Kenseth was too consistent, and Johnson finished second, 90 points behind. The next season, the first year of the Chase format, Johnson started the final 10 races badly but won four of the last six, losing to Kurt Busch by eight points, the closest finish in NASCAR history.

Last year, Johnson entered the final race second to Tony Stewart and seemed to have a shot at the title until a blown tire sent his car into the wall, dropping Johnson to fifth in the points.

"It was tougher in 2004, because I felt we were very competitive and had some bad luck. But we were racing our way back into it," Johnson said. "I felt like 2004 was the year for us."

"There were periods in the (final) race, where I thought, 'This is it, it's going to happen.' I had a tingling feeling, and I looked up in my mirror with the closing laps and the 97 (Busch), I couldn't get rid of him. That year was more painful than last year."

After he got off to a bad start again in this year's Chase for the championship, even Gordon says he thought: "Ah, here we go again."

"The Chase starts, and those guys had their problems," added Gordon, who finished sixth in the points standings. "The one thing about those guys is you never count them out. Sometimes they do better when they're down."

Johnson said he and his team were prepared for any eventuality Sunday, knowing a flat tire, an engine failure or a wreck would keep people talking.

"Don't get me wrong. We didn't want to miss an opportunity when we were in the position to become a champion," he said. "We've just been happy to win races and have the season we had. We're very proud of what we did."

"I'm not saying we would have been happy if we didn't win the championship, but, after a couple days went by, we would be able to look back and be proud of what we've done."

Still, the "best driver never to be a champion" title was becoming a heavy burden.

"Now that we've won, that title can't linger around any longer," Johnson said.

Johnson getting the ball, having big games

by JOE KAY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — Chad Johnson's grousing got results.

After putting up first-half numbers that were merely above average — and complaining that he wasn't getting the ball more — the Cincinnati Bengals' big-play receiver has put together two of the best games in NFL history.

Johnson set a club record with 260 yards receiving and a pair of touchdowns in a loss to San Diego, then had 190 yards and three more touchdowns in a 31-16 win at New Orleans last Sunday. The 450 yards in back-to-back games are the most in league history.

It's what he's wanted the whole season.

"We're being more the aggressor, offensively, regardless of what the coverage is," Johnson said Wednesday. "That makes it a lot more fun out there."

The first eight games were no fun at all.

The Pro Bowl receiver who led the AFC in yards for three straight seasons had trouble getting open and getting the ball. He complained that the offense had gone conservative and stopped challenging defenses with the long pass.

He wasn't the only one grumbling — running back Rudi Johnson wanted more carries, right tackle Willie Anderson wanted to see more toughness, safety Dexter Jackson wanted to see more effort. Given his stature, Chad Johnson's complaints became the soundtrack to a 4-4 first half.

He disgustedly referred to himself a sitting duck, a hood ornament, a decoration. He stopped checking off his "Who Covered No. 85" list. He put "Ocho Cinco" on his uniform for a pregame warmup, boasted that a big game was at hand, then slipped into a self-imposed silence as it all fell apart.

In the last two weeks, he has stopped complaining and stuck to catching passes.

"It's good to have the old Chad here and (that other) No. 85 gone elsewhere — the superhero," coach Marvin Lewis said. "He was here too long this season. I think he got started that way in the offseason. So it's good that the other guy is back, the guy that makes his teammates better. That's what a pro is all about — make the rest of your team better."

Several factors have combined to put Johnson back atop the AFC in receiving with 932 yards.

At the season's midpoint, the Bengals decided to let offensive coordinator Bob Bratkowski call more plays instead of having Carson Palmer choose from a limited number of options in a no-huddle attack. Plus, there was a renewed effort to try to get the ball deep.

Also, the Chargers and the Saints made the mistake of losing track of Johnson when Palmer scrambled, setting up big plays. Johnson took advantage of the defensive lapses with touchdown catches of 51, 74, 41, 60 and 4 yards in the last two games.

"You always try to throw the ball over teams' heads," Palmer said. "You just have to pick your times to do it. A couple times in the past couple weeks, it's been weird — they've blown coverages and been way out of place. There's nothing fancy to what we did. It was just a miscommunication defensively to what they did."

"We took advantage of it, but we can't rely on that. The teams you need to beat to get in the playoffs and beat in the playoffs don't let that happen."

The next game will be a good test of whether Johnson is really back on track. The Cleveland Browns (3-7) usually focus on stopping him, forcing the Bengals to run the ball or throw it to someone else.

Johnson had six catches for 78 yards and a touchdown during a 34-17 win over the Browns at Paul Brown Stadium in the second game of the season. It was his only touchdown catch in the first six games.

He also got knocked silly on the Bengals' final pass play, when safety Brian Russell hit him high. Johnson's
