You can't get away from the fact that

A SIX IS MORE ECONOMICAL

Thousands of tests and owner experience have confirmed THE FACT: For lowest all-round motorizing cost, SIX CYLINDERS. No more—No less!

With more you sacrifice Chevrolet's famous economy. With less you sacrifice the kind of maintenance cost that Chevrolet gives you—the lowest available.

Why not strike a happy balance between "too many" and "too few"? Do as the majority of car buyers have done—HAVE—with SIX CYLINDERS. The Chevrolet motor alone you won't find—its body, chassis and engine are united, the repairs that result from broken vibration!

Army Command

June 15, marking the anniversary of the death of George Washington, was a day of national significance in the history of our country. On that day, 157 years ago we are told by the United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission, the members of the Second Continental Congress, sitting in Philadelphia, unanimously selected George Washington to be Commander-in-Chief of the Continental forces.

That were the destinies of a nation struggling to be independent placed in the hands of one strong individual. How well that individual carried out the trust invested in him is well known throughout the world.

It is interesting to note that not one dissenting voice was raised in opposition to the resolution that George be appointed to this important post. It is also interesting to note that his strongest supporter was not a member from his native state, but from the north, from Massachusetts.

John Adams, destined to succeed George Washington as President of the United States almost a quarter of a century later, was the leading advocate in making the "Gentleman of Virginia" the Commander-in-Chief of the nation's continentals. To substantiate that fact, the United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission quotes from Adams' own words on the subject:

"I had but one gentleman in my mind for that important command, and that was a gentleman from Virginia, who was among the very well known and experienced military officers, whose independent, vigorous talent, and excellent military character would command the respect of all America, and upon the cordial exertions of all the states, better than any person in the Union."

The man upon whose shoulders fell the burden of carrying on a death struggle with the most powerful nation did not receive his appointment with confidence and assurance of his own ability. John Hancock, the President of the Continental Congress, officially notified General Washington of his appointment the next day, the latter rose and made the following speech of acceptance:

"Mr. President:

"Though I am truly sensible of the high honor done me in this appointment, yet I feel great distress from a consciousness, that my ability and military experience may not be equal to the extensive and important trust. However, as the Congress desire it, I will exert every power I possess for their service and support of the glorious cause. I beg they will accept my most cordial thanks for this distinguished testimony of their approbation."

"But, lest some unlucky event should happen unfavorable to my reputation, I beg it will be remembered by every gentleman in the room, that I this day

HEALTH NEWS

Director, Floyd County Health Dept.

PREVENTION OF INFANTILE PARALYSIS

August, September and October are the months during which poliomyelitis, or infantile paralysis, is usually most prevalent. While there is no present threat of anything approaching an epidemic in Kentucky this year, there are enough scattered cases in the state to render it timely, in the opinion of Dr. J. L. Jones, state epidemiologist, to present a few facts, which are of importance in the prevention and control of this disease.

Infantile paralysis, Dr. Jones points out, is a "catching" disease, caused by an infecting agent, or virus, which gains entrance into the substance of the brain or spinal cord. This entrance is gained through the mucous membrane of the nose and throat, thence by lymph channels to the nervous system.

"Exposure occurs," says Dr. Jones, "through contact with discharges from nose, throat or coughs of an affected person or through contact with a healthy individual harboring the virus of the disease in the nose or throat. Such an individual is known as a 'carrier.' The contact with discharges from nose, throat or coughs of an affected person may be either direct—that is, from person to person—or indirect, that is, by way of some article of food, especially milk, polluted by such discharges."

Infantile paralysis, in the judgment of Dr. Jones, is, in all probability, much more prevalent than reports would indicate. This is explained by the fact that a considerable percentage of those affected with the disease do not develop paralysis at all; while, in some others, paralysis is so slight as to be unrecognizable. It is, therefore, probable that many mild cases are not recognized as all these mild cases, however, are contagious.

Speaking of the early symptoms of infantile paralysis, Dr. Jones adds: "The first symptoms are usually fever, sore throat, swollen glands, and headache, especially when combined with head-ache, a tendency to shivering of the face, general sweating or retention of urine. During the latter part of the incubation period, the patient may complain of tingling, numbness and weakness in the limbs, which may be accompanied by a numbness out of all proportion to the temperature, which is kept high from fever and pain and the highly contagious virus in the body."

Such and such general weakness and clammy about the fourth day of illness mark the onset of paralysis, and they constitute the diagnostic signs of the disease. A child should be immediately isolated in bed, other children in the household should be kept away from the room and all other children and adults from coming near the child. When a definite diagnosis of infantile paralysis has been made, the patient, quarantine must be observed and observed under the supervision of the county health officer.

treatment against infantile paralysis. There is, however, a vaccine or serum treatment for the disease itself—the serum from a person recently recovered from infantile paralysis. This serum may be obtained from the State Board of Health and its use is urged in all early cases.

"The general treatment includes absolute rest in bed until all pain and tenderness have left the affected muscles. When this has happened a series of properly graded and controlled exercises, carefully carried out according to directions of the attending physician, is in order.

"Precautions against exposure to infantile paralysis should be taken immediately upon the report of a case in the community and should be continued until the local health authorities definitely pronounce the danger over. These precautions may be summarized as follows:

- "(1) Every possible avenue by which the virus of the disease can reach children should be cut off. The most important measure of prevention is isolation of the child and so disinfection of places of exposure. This does not imply that the child should be confined to his room, but rather that his movements should be restricted to the playground and association with other children avoided. Contact with adults should also be avoided.
- "(2) Milk consumed by the child should be either boiled or pasteurized.
- "(3) All measures to prevent contact with body discharges, suppression of the fly nuisance, prohibition of the common drinking cup and a general educational campaign for cleanliness and sanitation, with particular instruction to parents and children concerning personal hygiene, especially of the nose and mouth, should be urged.
- "(4) Children should be guarded against over-fatigue and indigestion of food. They should be given a little extra rest during the day and kept, as far as possible, cheerful and happy.
- "(5) Every case of infantile paralysis must be promptly reported to the local health authorities. Steps for its control are mandatory under the law, but it is absolutely essential to the proper cooperation of the health department in preventing spread of the disease."
