GO TO CHURCH SUNDAY COME WORSHIP WITH US

WHY GO TO CHURCH?
You are sometimes asked with surprise the question of seriousness. It is a question to which a full answer in this article is not intended to give a partial answer.

In the first place, you should go to church for your own sake. Religion, like any other activity, in your own life, is a habit to be formed. All of this work to do. All of this work to do. All of this work to do.

Religion is of the soul, and the soul is the chief part of a life and directs that life's activities. The church will help you make that preparation, will enable you to be more fit for every task of life, and will make you feel that those tasks are worth performing.

In the second place, you should go to church for the sake of others. Your going sets a good example before your fellow-men, your family, and possibly your children. Furthermore, your going strengthens the church, and enables it to wield a larger influence upon the life of the community. The church is weakened when its members continually absent themselves from its services. You have it in your power to add to the strength and usefulness of your church, and of yourself by going to church.

H. L. HOFFMAN

CONSIDER THE CHURCH

What does it mean to your community? What would your community be without the influence of religion as represented by its several churches?

Remove from the lives of young and old alike every vestige of church influence, turn youth to pagan revelry and the old only to the hurly-burly race for riches and power—and what is left?

Against such tragic contingencies the Church serves as a protecting barrier; it acts as a benign buffer to the tumult of everyday life.

No man or woman who hopes to attain his or her full stature as a citizen, who envisions for his or her community its fullest development, can afford to neglect the Church.

It is easy for one riding the crest of good fortune to neglect the Church. But in time of sorrow, when something more comforting than mere riches or physical well-being is needed, when strength can be derived only from the Fount of all blessings—then one turns to the sheltering arm of religion as represented by the Church.

Attend some church regularly, give it of your support unstintingly, take pride in the work you are doing. You have a guarantee that you cannot lose.

It is right that the place of his birth should want to be the first to signally honor him. Governor Chandler was invited to attend the affair but a previous engagement prevented him from...

When the Young Democratic Club of Kentucky's Convention ended in Louisville last week nothing but harmony prevailed. Charley Epperson of Pikeville had been elected president to succeed Tom Logan of Livingston and John Dugan had been re-elected National Committeeman while Mrs. H. P. Morancy, Lebanon, had been selected to the post of National Committeewoman to succeed Miss Ruth White of Glasgow. This slate met the approval of both the State Administration and the Anti-Administration forces.

Highway Commissioner Robert Humphreys appointed a committee of three advisory commissioners composed of Zach Justice of Pikeville, Tom Padon of Hopkinsville and George Weatherly to investigate the feasibility of freeing all toll bridges, owned by the Commonwealth. This committee is to cooperate with any and all associations, groups or individuals who are interested in freeing the state's toll bridges, in working out a plan to either free the bridges or cut the toll.

After going through the agony of winning a primary election, Ulysses G. Foster of the Harlan-Letcher District has withdrawn from the race. His withdrawal has been posted by Secretary of State Arnett. This means that Foster felt that he could not run a good race against his Republican opponent, who is Lonnie Davisworth of Cumberland.

Col. E. O. Hucy of the State Highway Patrol has announced a state-wide drive against the folk who operate motor vehicles without Operators' License. The drive will be made in each of the state's 120 counties. In order not to annoy the operators who have already purchased licenses a patrolman will go into each county, notify the citizens thru the public prints that he is there and ready to check operators' licenses.

TRAM (Last week's correspondence) A revival meeting is being conducted at the Church of Christ. Unusual interest is being shown by the large crowd attending. - Shooting and Fishing -

By O'NIMROD

Ten between a strong desire to fish the two days and an equally muscular yen to hunt squirrels, we had compromised on one day for each.

Tent, blankets, shot-guns and fishing tackle, stowed in the back seat we pulled out of Martin for Big Creek in Pike County, intending to camp that night on the Creek, hunt the next day and then some some minutes as insurance for our artificial lures. We would then drop down to the Left Fork of Big Sandy and fish Saturday. At Shelby the river looked a little too full and two miles. So we dropped into genial Dick Roberts for information, but beyond "she ought to be in good shape by Saturday," Dick couldn't help us. We crossed Grapevine Mountain with visions of those Big Creek squirrels jumping from one bone in our heads to another and tooting up the creek, we hadn't spouted a sign a mile square which reading, "State Game Preserve—No Hunting Allowed."

Joe started to chew viciously, but remembering he had left his teeth in his tackle box he spat thru the windshield and wrecked an iron-wood stump ten feet below the highway. I couldn't think of anything to say, either. We drove on up the road but, apparently the whole creek was closed, so there was nothing to do but go back to the river and turn down the old river road.

Pitching camp and gathering firewood on a cold dark night is not my idea of a big time. You find a dry limb in a brushpile and pull at it. It won't budge, but a blackberry vine jets around your necks; you give a big pull and the limb comes loose, but a grapevine grabs your feet and you wind up on your hip pockets in a briar patch.

When you go to sleep there is a big fire burning which should last all night. Ten seconds later you think you awoke and there is nothing but a bed of red coals, but a glance at your watch shows it's nearly time for daylight.

Joe took one hollow and I another after breakfast and just inside the timber on a little slope, a pheasant zoomed out of a thicket of grapevine just ahead of me, and he must have known he was protected from the delectable look in his eye as he sailed away, I might have hit him had I fired, but watching him twist and plummet through the trees I couldn't help wondering if a more outgun would be fuff enough for him—the first native ruffed grouse I'd seen in Kentucky in ten years.

Further up the hill, a sudden excited squeaking out to the left froze me in my tracks, and from the tail of my eye I saw a limb quiver abruptly—then another limb shook and I saw the bushy-tail hit the tree and go out the other side before I could get my safety off. However, he hadn't seen me and another jump took him into a tall scaly-bark hickory. I ran rear into the top for a nut and I took the advantage to get closer, but, coming down, he suddenly stopped, looking straight toward me and I knew it was now or never. At the crack of the little sixteen he pitched downward for twenty feet then grabbed a limb and started crawling in, apparently badly wounded. I fired again and he hit the ground with a very satisfying thump. Two nice long shots I thought as I walked down to pick him up but when I got there the squirrel was nowhere to be seen. However, a trail of blood led over to a big open hole in the base of a beech tree. The pole I cut with the nice little notch in the end for twisting could not reach him, but I could hear the plucky little rascal climbing higher.

Grabbing a handful of damp leaves I plugged the hole, then put a bunch of dry leaves under them and on top of a slab, which I held over the pole. A match struck to the dry leaves sent a cloud of smoke up the hole, and I soon heard him backing down, as the hole was too small to turn around in. When his tail was within reach I pulled him out and smart crack on the head with a stick put an end to his suffering. Carefully extinguishing the smoldering leaves, I continued around the hill but by now the sun was getting high, the fall wind was rising and knew they were through cutting for the morning.

Back at camp a peep into the locked car disclosed Joe's shotgun and two squirrels. I could also miss in cutting rod and wading boots. After I had re-kindled the dying embers of the camp-fire and was enjoying a cup of warmed-over coffee Joe came slumping camp declaring that the river was still "fuller than a tick" and those Livist Fork has "got" but the lock-jaw" every time we came up.

That night before dark, we heard the old pheasant drumming up on the point and believe it or not, we distinctly heard him drum several times long after dark. So we know a pheasant does drum after dark. With another big fire burning before our tent we drifted off to sleep, lulled by the sound of a couple o dog foxes up on the ridge, barking at the unaccustomed light of our fire.

LOB CASTS

Did you know that R. L. Keeling is a first-rate amateur taxidermist? If you have a fish or game trophy to mount talk it over with him—Let's see Jack May about PWA labor for some dams on the Left Fork of Beaver Creek. There are suitable locations there for a fish hatchery and protection would be assured because the bulk of the fish and game club membership is around Drift, McDowell and Salisbury.—We should all dip in and help "Pick" Heinze with his swimming pool for Allen project. After all its the club's regular meeting place, its the most central place in the county and it would benefit the folks of the Beavers most of all. We will eventually hold our big trap-shoots and also, after a hard match to take a plunge in a clean, sparkling pool which our wives and children could enjoy as well. And how!

ment of the estate of J. P. Akers, mental incompetent.

At said time and place I will also receive, inspect and pass upon the final statements of Jessie Bates and Dewey Akers, former committees for said J. P. Akers and inspect and pass upon the accounts of J. D. Bond, present committee for said J. P. Akers.

All persons having claims against the estate of J. P. Akers will the properly proven claims with me at the time and place hereinabove set out.

Given under my hand the 18th day of October, 1937.

W. W. BURCHETT,
Special Commissioner.

JAILER SHOTS SELF AND WIFE

Lawrence Jailer Commits Suicide After Shooting Wife at Louisa

Louis, Ky., Oct. 28.—Barnes Butler, 68, Lawrence County Jailer, shot and wounded his wife and then killed himself early tonight at their home here.

Mrs. Anna Steele Butler, 45, wounded twice in the chest and in the left arm, was in a critical condition at the Riverview Hospital, but physicians said she may recover.

"If he had anything against me, I don't know what it was," she said at the hospital. Butler entered the kitchen where she was washing dishes, and without a word fired three shots at her, she said. One shot missed her.

He went into an adjoining room and fired a shot into his brain from a .32-20 caliber revolver.

Butler, who had served as jailer for four years, was defeated for renomination on the Republican ticket. Since then he had bought a restaurant here.

Mrs. Butler said he had been "acting queerly" recently.

They are the parents of three and two daughters.

A Queen OF ANCIENT TIMES COULD NOT COMMAND SUCH SERVICE

THE opulence of the Orient, the glamour and luxuries of the East, elegant robes and crowns encrusted with precious jewels, fawning courtiers and servants who came at the clap of hands were all part of the olden Queen's life. Yet Mrs. Household today can command inferior service from a train of ELECTRIC servants, the like of whose speed and efficiency these ancient monarchs never dreamed.

Consider the low cost, too, for such servants: Did you know that you can operate your electric vacuum cleaner half an hour for 1/4 cent; run your washing machine an hour for 1/4 cent; enjoy the radio two hours for 1 cent; run an Electric Clock a whole day for 1/4 cent; a 100-watt lamp burns 4 hours for 2 cents; or that you can make the family's toast in the morning for 1/4 cents? For approximately 8 cents, or less than a dime a day, you can buy the electricity to run many ELECTRIC servants.

CHAPTER XIII

It took a little maneuvering to get rid of Mr. Krael without hurting his feelings or indulging his curiosity, but it was managed at last. And this being accomplished and Rachel and Curt left alone, an odd restraint fell on them.

Rachel broke it. "I do believe you're disappointed that I wasn't in the hands of gangsters or something wild, so you could rescue me. Did you bring a Tommy-gun?"

"Not even a slingshot, Rachel. Why did you come?" "Curt got up and put some wood on the fire."

"It's very pleasant here," he said. "Any room with sunlight and a fireplace full of driftwood is decorated. And besides, there's the sea over the dunes. It must be lovely in summer."

"But quiet!" said Rachel, mockingly. "Too, too lovely! Simply divine." "Ray rugs and chintz covers, ornaments on the mantelshelf, books, pictures and fresh flowers artistically arranged, my dear, you have no idea how really charming the little dump can be!"

"I don't deserve that, do I?" "But what do you deserve, Curt? I don't even know why you've come."

"But you're not sorry I came?" "No, of course not." "I was worried about you, that's why I came. Pink showed me your telegram and I phoned Curtis and he said the Caynes had taken finding out about their son pretty hard and I was afraid they had been so rotten to you that you'd run away. And then, another reason for coming back. I didn't know when you were coming back."

"You could have wired me, or telephoned." "I wanted to see you with my own eyes. You've been awfully overstrained, Rachel—remember the last time we talked? You were so undecided about searching that brain's room, you took it all so serious, and I was afraid it had happened to any of them. I got you into that job and I insisted that you come to me, because, so I felt responsible."

"But how did you get here this time, then, no train?" "I took Vinco's car and drove. I'd have been here earlier, but I lost my way in the night." "You've been driving all night?" "Pretty near. Want to drive back with me?"

"I suppose I might as well. I thought I'd take the afternoon train. But you can't drive back without a test drive, can you?" "If you'd let me take the newspapers off that sofa and catch an early train, I'd be all right. You really want to go back today? There's no reason for you to stay?" His voice was anxious.

"No, not a thing. I was awfully upset by that last interview at the Caynes. And I felt I couldn't go back to my job and begin in the morning at Vinco's. I suppose I had my nerves trick me. Curt, and so, I came down here, and—well, I had a good night's sleep and a great big breakfast—and I feel all right again. Now, I'll head off in the sort of half-drive for lunch, but I'll break it and while you take a sleep I'll go downtown and get some food and we'll have a picnic here. Or we could go down on the beach and make a fire, no, it's too cold for that. I'd like to have a run on the beach before we start back, though, just for a minute. By the way, where's Vinco's car?"

"Add if that isn't a magnificent lunch she thought, 'What is?' Then her eyes fell on a tray of fresh sugared cutlers and she brought two down. All that she and Curt didn't eat she'd take to Vinco's as a home-coming gift. And though she was laden with packages, she went round the block to avoid passing the library again. It would do Bob good to wonder who might be her luncheon date."

Curt was fast asleep when she got back. She tipped past the living room into the kitchen and noiselessly hunted a pan to reheat the stew, got out dishes, spoons and glasses. Back into the living room and she set the pan on the coals and arranged the other food on the desk.

"But she found time to look at Curt and notice how sleep rubbed out the lines from his face and made him into a quiet little boy with flushed cheeks and a defiant curl in his rough hair. A quiet little boy, a good little boy. But not too good. There was no conscious overt act about Curt's expression, either asleep or awake."

"He might just as well sleep a while longer," she thought. "I'll slip out and run on the beach. I must do that before I go to bed. The morning wind had fallen, the winter sun was almost warm and the sea had caught blue light from the sky. The path across the dunes was hidden under wind-blown sand, but she knew her way and down on the edge of the beach the sand was hard and smooth. That searching breath of the sea, cold to penetrate and enervate and make even wood and fur chill to the touch, yet giving a sense of vigor and power, welcomed her to the familiar scallop of the cove and made her want to shout. There wasn't any reason why she shouldn't run, though it would be wiser not to shout, but run she did, all down the white causeway, turning to run back when she reached the rocks that led over to the point. Sun and sea, a hard beach, and best of all the moggot in her brain was gone, she herself destroyed it. No more worry about her own mother, no more secret resentment against Anne. There was the old spar Anne had leaned against last summer when she'd told Rachel the story of Eleanor Caynes. Rachel stopped her running beside this relic. "I might put a tablet on it," she thought trivially. "Place of revelation," or "Here's where the blues began," or something. And then, "I ought not to be after all that—after Eleanor—after Mr. Caynes." But it was no use, they were gone, she couldn't drag them up from the dunes and reproach herself with them any more. Her name called and saw Curt coming down the dunes.

"I woke up and there was all that elegant food spread about, but no sign of you, and then I discovered you running about down here. What do you think you are—a beach bird?" "Almost. Mother and I practically live down here in the summer. Are you rested?"

"Oh fine! This is a grand cooee. Come along, I'll run up and down a couple of times and get the sleep out of my head. Want to race?" "Very fine, but I suppose that elegant oyster stew I saw before the fire next evening? Only the sauce she knew he could easily beat her best speed."

"Golly, what a day!" he said, as they turned, "and after what a night?" "You and me both! I'd like to run up and down here for an hour!" "Very fine, but I don't think that elegant oyster stew I saw before the fire next evening? Only the sauce she knew he could easily beat her best speed."

"We'll go in then," said Rachel, "and lap up the oysters. I'm hungry, too. I had for breakfast what an orange and two fried eggs and some bacon and rolls and a spot of marmalade and a cup of coffee with three lumps of sugar in each."

"Lay off, you're making me droop. I never heard of such a breakfast. It's indecent. Where did you get it?" "I stopped in to see a friend and he was just about to eat."

"Right, it was a he. And though he wasn't terribly glad to see me, he did give me my breakfast. And he didn't say it was indecent at all, so much, as you did, he merely called it disgusting."

"Rachel, I—no, not now." "Nothing now that isn't lunch," said Curt firmly. "I observed doughnuts as well as oysters."

"Crullers, not doughnuts, is the right name," said Rachel, as they came down the long road. "Look, Curt, do you see what I see—in the next house, two ladies eagerly watching or every movie from behind the lace curtains in the first window?"

"They were there when I came out," said Curt. "They're wondering if I mean to do right by my net, or if you've just a brazen bluff."

"We'll keep them guessing, it will brighten up their lives." "That's all right, but I'm not going to let them see me while they ate. It was a pleasant meal than the breakfast with Bob that morning, Rachel thought. The two men were a little alike in appearance, but in the way they talked. But Curt was sturdier, saner. "What are you thinking about?"

"Nothing much. I'm so glad I came here." "Are you glad I came?" "Yes, I'd have had to borrow money for a ticket back to New York if you hadn't come with Vinco's car."

"I surely do appreciate being liked for myself alone. Rachel, be serious—tell me something. Did you run away here because you felt you must see someone in particular?" "No, why?"

"Because Pink said there was a man here who rated very well with you. And she thought perhaps you had a message from him, or wanted to see him. Was that it?" "And what else did Pink tell you?"

"She said this man had asked you to marry him last summer and you'd turned him down, but that you might have changed your mind. Rachel, please, tell me that man's name, and I'll go and find him for you."

"No, it wasn't. There is a man here. I've known him ever since we were boys, and he did ask me to marry him last summer, quite earnestly, too. I didn't think about him at all when I came. I only thought this was my name and it was very quiet and I wanted to be quiet and sort of pull myself together."

"That's the man," said Rachel, "the man who asked you to marry him last summer and you'd turned him down, but that you might have changed your mind. Rachel, please, tell me that man's name, and I'll go and find him for you."

To say that Morehead has captured one sister, Mrs. John Rath, of Kern Kentucky is putting it mildly. Today the Eagles have the best one in Kentucky. In two games they have captured sister after sister. The chances are good that the Eagles to protect their record during the season will probably be in the club in the United States with the perfect season of the Eagles. They scored 111 points with perfect play and had dominantly the most points. Blue and Gold read time.

Tidbits of Kentucky Folklore

SOUND AND MUSIC—Descriptive music can be and often is comic but there are some great illustrations of it that we could little spare. The "Rite of the Valkyries," in Wagner's "Die Walkure," from the Peer Gynt Suite, are a few of these descriptive passages that I love. In the first one the whinnying of horses forms a Motif, in the second the braying of a donkey and in the last the snarling associated with morning. What Wagner and Mendelssohn and Grieg have made of these makes me wish that some musician could take some of our every-day sounds and give them their proper musical interpretation. There is the calling of the dog for example, which is often a long-drawn-out, sonorous thing, capable of musical setting. The calling of other farm animals is almost equally musical. Even the calling of children is different from the calling of the dog or the calling of the cow, which could be worked into something beautiful. Elsewhere I have called attention to the musical "hollers" of the Negro men and boys. I need no know. The white farm hands developed a similar series of "munch", prolonged calls, each one a little different from the others. I must have known half a hundred at one time. Once when a Negro boy was mournfully giving his call, someone asked him what it was for. He said, rather oddly, "I'm just glad I'm living." On a typical spring morning when we had risen early and were at work in the fields not long after sunrise, boys called to boys, white or black across the intervening fields, unconscious of their contributing to anybody's musical education. Joyous though most of the boys may have been in actual life, the calls had minor tones that attuned them with primitive music of all times and places. Much has been made by some musicians of the squeals and cries of fawns of farm animals, but I believe that only a beginning of interpretation has been made. A combination that I always treasure in my memories is that of the ringing of farm bells, the greeting of the boy at the plow and the braying of the mule. Again across the fields comes the succession of sounds, every farm be with its distinctive tone, every boy or mule with an individual shade of difference from the others.

OPENING

Frank Layne's Club Rustique—with the largest dancing floor we've seen this side of Huntington's Varsity Fair—made its formal opening last Friday night. Jimmy Raschel and his terrific horn-toters supplied much better music than was expected by more than 300 persons who attended the opening. The club, now open every night, is making plans for a gala night near Thanksgiving, with an orchestra that will be tops.

MORE CORN HUSKIN' NEEDED

What has become of the old-time huskin' bee and why doesn't somebody rediscover or revive it?

The corn-huskin' is an Eastern Kentucky institution from 'way back, and if allowed to leave us entirely we lose much of that thing which 'outsiders' love to call 'local color' and at the same time we lose much of our attraction to the 'tourist' as they like us to call them.

How many of you know what a "scue-ball" is and what were all its romantic connotations? Ask the old-timers. They will tell you that a "scue-ball" is a white ear of corn with a spot of red grains on it and that the finder thereof has won the coveted privilege of kissing "the purtiest gal on the barn floor."

And they talk of corn-huskin' contests, they print big newspaper stories about 'em. But what about that lucky guy who finds he "scue-ball"?
