Methodist Editor Features Martin Opportunity Store, Work of Mountain Minister

The Opportunity Store in Martin and five like it in other counties of the Appalachian highlands is the counterpart of Goodwill Industries and Salvation Army stores in the city.

But such a store is unique in these mountains, writes Associate Editor Herman B. Tetter, in the January TOGETHER, Methodist's midmonth family magazine. It is also the evidence of one man's concern for his neighbors.

Some 20 years ago, writes Tetter, Pastor John H. Lewis obtained permission to leave his substantial pastorate at First Methodist Church, Jackson, Ky., to begin a personal mission program in the remote, unchurched mountains where the specter of growing unemployment and want fed on the hearts and souls of a once self-sufficient people.

He began collecting used goods from Methodist churches, and the project got under way with the backing of a Nebraska woman who agreed to pay Pastor Lewis' salary for three years if he went ahead with Methodist Mountain Missions in Kentucky, now backed by the Board of Missions of the Methodist Kentucky Conference.

Since the beginning, Mr. Lewis has combined preaching and storekeeping, and besides, founded three churches. He was first started in an old bus.

Despite an amazing material growth (total sales this year were $80,000), Martin's Mountain Missions' Opportunity Store, though a business house, not a charitable institution, has one purpose:

EAST KENTUCKY AREA NEEDS TOLD JOHNSON

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—The needs of Eastern Kentucky were reviewed by Representative Carl D. Perkins for central Lyndon Johnson today...

Perkins repeated his previous requests that the Corps be called upon to regularize, clear, and widen smaller streams, creeks, and tributaries throughout eastern Kentucky...

Perkins asked that a massive road building program be undertaken which would be in addition to the regular federal aid highway programs...

Perkins expressed the hope that the President would recommend legislation for a special Appalachian program which would not only call for the appropriation of necessary funds...

The company will manufacture quality bedspreads with future expansion to the manufacture of area rugs and monogram towels...

FOOD SHOPPERS

Here are some suggestions for smart food shoppers. Read the labels; they give such helpful information as weight, size, grade, ingredients, number of servings, cup measure and price. Buy by brand; it's your guarantee of quality. Check the price difference per ounce in large and small packages; if you can use the larger size, it's usually the best buy, but if some will be wasted, consider the smaller size.

STATE, U. S. TECHNICIANS VIEW EAST KENTUCKY AREA

An on-the-spot check through Eastern Kentucky's hardship areas by a team of state and U. S. technicians, was completed recently. Several officials from the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Department of Health, Education and Welfare, and other agencies were accompanied by John Whisman, special assistant to Gov. Bert Combs. Whisman is head of the Area Program Office.

James L. Sundquist, deputy undersecretary of the U. S. Department of Agriculture and senior member of the tour party, commented that the trip "has been extremely valuable to the team in figuring out ways we can contribute to the crash program launched in this area."

James Adler, special assistant to Undersecretary of Commerce Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., also made the trip and will continue in both Washington and Kentucky to help fit federal programs to critical needs, where possible, Whisman said. Roosevelt is chairman of the President's Appalachian Regional Commission.

Whisman said other teams are working in Frankfort, Atlanta, Ga., Charlotte, N. C. and Washington, D. C. Overcoming problems in the health and welfare fields and ways of creating more jobs are their main goals, he said.

Whisman pointed out that the activities envisioned will involve state and local actions as well as the special use of many federal programs. The principal work of the group is to fit existing programs to defined priority needs. "It must be stressed that there are two objectives," Whisman said. "This crash effort is to help Eastern Kentucky get through the winter. At the same time a permanent development program is being designed for the Appalachian Region on all levels."

Two days after accompanying the officials on their close-up of Eastern Kentucky, part of the crash winter program ordered by the late President, Whisman issued this statement on the future of the emergency program and the long-range development for Eastern Kentucky:

'64 Pontiac

Here's why you'll like it

Here's why you'll tell other people you like it.

Wide-Track, for instance. Wide-Track is what does away with tilting your way around turns. Pontiac's smoother, quieter ride is another thing you might point out. A big 389-cubic-inch Trophy V-8 is standard in each and every Pontiac. You get to choose from 34 engine/transmission teams to harness all that power. (Happy choosing!)

Now then—on to more of the things that make the '64 Pontiac so thoroughly likeable. Frankly, we couldn't think of anything radical to do with this car. Oh, we made the styling even more stylish, as you can plainly see. We lavished even more care on the interiors. We even improved the light bulbs. But as for more vital things, why change? Improve, refine, sharpen—yes. Change—no. And you can tell that to your friends.

100 YEARS AGO THIS WEEK

The Civil War in Kentucky by JOE JORDAN (Kentucky Civil War Commission)

One hundred years ago this week a detachment of 150 Confederate cavalrymen took Mt. Sterling, the Montgomery county courthouse and a separate building housing the clerks' offices, released prisoners from the jail, and "captured" 100 horses. The word "captured" is quoted from Collins' "History of Kentucky." That was all accomplished without a fight although newspaper accounts emphasized, an entire regiment of Federal troops was quartered "a mile or eight" from the town. That was the fourth time during the calendar year 1863 that Mt. Sterling had been in Confederate hands. On one of the previous occasions, in March, Col. Roy S. Clarke of Morgan's command had taken it after four hours of hard fighting during which several buildings were set on fire to drive out their defenders.

Six officers of Kentucky regiments of the Union Army were dismissed from the service "on orders from Washington City." They were a major, a captain, and four lieutenants. Two had to set them across in a skiff. They were charged with cowardice, drunkenness, or "abandoning company in the face of the enemy."

Brig. Gen. John Hunt Morgan and Capt. Thomas H. Hines, two of seven Confederate officers who during the previous week had been taken from the state penitentiary at Columbus, were making their way through Kentucky, assisted by Confederate sympathizers in every county they passed through. A contemporary wrote of Morgan and his progress through his home state, "Every body vied with each other as to who should show him the most refinement, and young ladies of the county vied with each other as to who should not recognize the general traveling in civilian clothes, he sometimes passed as a government contractor buying cattle; at other times he said he was a contractor or inspector."

Back at Columbus, the Kentuckians who had not escaped from the prison when Morgan and his six captains left were put under stricter rules. Formerly they had been permitted to be locked up in individual cells only at night. Now they were kept in their cells all the time except when they were marched to their meals and back, and they could not speak while at the table. The cells were so small that in each of them the bed took up half the floor space. Basil Duke, who was there, later wrote: "The only method we had of exercising was to step sideways from one end of the cell to the other. It was intensely cold."

Union Army soldiers were put on duty inside the prison, replacing civilians who had been prison guards when criminals were confined in the building and had stayed on when Confederate officers were sent there. Duke wrote: "None of us had imagined that we could welcome the presence of Federal soldiers with so much satisfaction. The difference in the tone and manner of the soldiers... made it a relief."

One hundred years ago this week, Confederate Brig. Gen. John Hunt Morgan of Kentucky and six of his officers, all captains, escaped from the Ohio state penitentiary at Columbus through a tunnel which let them out of the building into the prison yard. The tunnel had to scale a wall twenty-five feet high. They had provided for that by placing a strong rope from strips of bedclothes, to one end of which they attached a book made by binding a poker.

Thrown over the wall and pulled back, the book caught the coping; the seven men went up the rope hand-over-hand. When all were on top, the book was transferred to the inside of the coping, the rope was let down on the outside, and they slid down, an attempt was made to shake the book free, but it was unsuccessful. So they had to leave the rope dangling; at daylight it betrayed the fact that there had been an escape. A fact which otherwise would not have become known for two months.

All seven soldiers had of course been in uniform when they surrendered. All had obtained civilian clothes while in prison. Basil Duke, Morgan's brother-in-law, who was in the same prison but was not among those who escaped, has his "History of Morgan's Cavalry" that Morgan had a Little Miami Railroad time-table which had cost $15. The only money used in effecting his escape. A century later, nobody knows whether there was any

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION INDUCES NEW INDUSTRY

BY LIEUT. GOV. WILSON W. WYATT

Kentucky's expanding vocational education program is a vital part of the development effort that is bringing new industry to the Bluegrass State and creating new jobs.

When an industry considers what a community has to offer, a supply of skilled workers is often an important factor. By providing well-trained workers, Kentucky's vocational education program has helped open the door to new plants in many areas of the state.

Steadily increasing enrollment in vocational training is a part of the pattern of progress in Kentucky. A statewide network of vocational schools has been expanded in the past four years and has won national recognition. This program is not only helping Kentuckians secure new and better jobs, it is also making a valuable contribution in dealing with the problem of school drop-outs.

Kentucky was one of the first states to set up area vocational schools and among the first to take advantage of federal funds for job training and re-training.

During the past school year, ending last June, a total of 101 job retraining projects were approved for Kentucky with federal aid. More than 2,600 jobless persons were enrolled in vocational training under these projects.

During the past four years, four and a half million dollars in state funds have been allocated to expand vocational education facilities. There are currently fourteen area vocational schools. Six new school buildings costing more than two and a half million dollars are planned or under construction at Ashland, Hazard, Somerset, Madisonville and Hazard and Jefferson counties. New facilities costing $2 million have been completed for area schools at Covington, Paintsville and Paducah.

Eight extension centers, plus courses offered in high schools in some cases at industrial plants, round out Kentucky's effective vocational education system. Plans call for construction of an additional six to eight extension centers during the next two years.

Enrollment for the first quarter of this school year showed substantial increases in all areas of the vocational education program which served almost 75,000 persons during the 1962-63 school year. During the past school year, enrollment in fulltime courses for adults, youths who have completed high school, and high school students rose by 46 per cent. Enrollment in industrial arts courses in the area schools was up by 25 per cent during the month of September of this year.

The program's flexibility makes it possible to change curriculum to keep pace with Kentucky's expanding economy. Special courses are set up to meet the need for workers of specific skills for any new or expanding industry.

Historical Notes

John Porter of Russell county, Virginia. His wife was a lady of great kindness and heart, and strength of character.

His sons and six daughters were born to them, all of whom are still living but John J. Henry is now living at John J. Henry Crider and Venetia. The sons and daughters, without an exception, married into families of the highest respectability; and the descendants of Daniel, to the third generation, maintain the reputation of their ancestors for intellectual vigor and great energy.

"Captain Elijah Patrick of Masoffin, Captain Frank Preston, Dr. Turner, William Stafford, Dr. Johnson and Dr. Martin, of Ashland, are all sons-in-law of General Daniel Hager and wife—almost all of them in their command.

"Venetia was the wife of E. W. Brown, of Morran, She died some years ago. The sons grew up to manhood, and entered the busy race of life; and each one of them, to this day, has never by any wrong act, stained the fair escutcheon of the House of Hager. They all went to the front in the Civil War, and distinguished themselves as sterling citizens. John J. went South with the Confederate Army, and lost his life. Captain Henry G. was a merchant and shipboard owner, and died in the prime of his busy life. He left three sons, and a daughter who reflected the image of his person and the strength of his mind. The daughter is the wife of Captain D. M. Atkinson, a prominent citizen of Salversville. The second son, John P. Hager, is one of the most prominent lawyers in East Kentucky. He lives in Ashland, and is recognized as one of the leading men there. Milton Hager, another brother, is a business man at Salversville, and is a man of intellectual force.

"General Hager became comparatively wealthy and did not by his children, not so much in a pecuniary sense as in raising them to think and act for themselves, and to depend on their own efforts to succeed in life. He was for years a Brigadier General in the Militia, was the first sheriff of Johnson county, and served in the Legislature of the state, and many other places of trust and honor, with great intelligence and integrity.

"When the war came upon the country in 1861, General Hager, having all his life been a Jefferson Democrat, logically took sides with the states in rebellion against the General Government, and expressed his sympathies that way. But when his own state refused to go with the South, he quietly settled down in charity to all, and awaited the result. His sons, save the oldest, were either Union men or had the sense to follow the example first set by their state, and remained neutral.

"Daniel, the youngest son, served a term in the Union Army. Dr. Martin acted as surgeon in the same cause. Captains Patrick and Patrick, another son-in-law, was active as an officer in the war. Captain Henry G. did service, also, as a carrier of supplies during the struggle.

"General Hager has always been a decided Democrat, and most of his sons follow in his footsteps, though Daniel the youngest, is a Republican. Four of his sons-in-law are Republicans: Captain Patrick, Dr. Martin, Dr. Turner, and E. W. Brown.

"William Stafford and Captain Preston are Democrats; but the family never let politics destroy personal friendships.

"The Hagers are Methodists in religion, and favor all reforms calculated to raise the race to a higher plane of happiness. They are all moderate, temperate people. The General and his male descendants are great musicians.

"When General Hager was in middle life, he was fond of the horses as were two friends of his, Dr. Herford and Samuel Parer, and the trio often remained in leading the bottom of their fast horses. Sometimes hundreds of people would be in attendance at these places, of amateurs and those three determined men kept down everything like disorder which would have been a hindrance for the people who attended the early-time races.

"General Hager grows quite feeble, being now 107 in the eighty-sixth year of his life; but he is happy in the consciousness of having faithfully discharged his duty through his long life. Death has no terrors for him. His noble wife died in 1876."

Christmas Is Sad

In Memory of a Loved One, T. Y. Martin, Who Passed Away February 1, 1959.

I have lost my life companion. A life linked to my own. And every day I miss him more. As I go through life alone.

It won't be long till Christmas day. A day that used to be so good and sweet; Little did I know that one day I would be giving you a bunch of flowers Instead of a Christmas cake.

If all the world was mine to give, I would give it all and more. To see the face I love so dear. Come smiling through the door. I sit alone and think Of your smiling face I long to view.

Our boy is all I have to love, My treasures are so few. I hope some day to meet you, Somewhere beyond the blue. In the sweet bye and bye. We shall meet on that beautiful shore.

Sadly missed by his wife and son

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A VIEW OF NATIONAL TRAGEDY

Editor, The Times:

Millions of words will be written as well as spoken and millions of thoughts unspoken, throughout the nation and the world, in regard to the malicious, vicious, dastardly attack and assassination of the most distinguished citizen of the world, the President of the most powerful nation on earth, the United States of America. Every citizen throughout our land is grieved and saddened to the depths of his heart by this vicious act of course. We have seen such kind of people as Oswald.

It has been approximately one hundred years since another martyr has gone down at the point of the gun of the lowest, corrupted kind of human being, the scum of the earth, a treacherous, worthless being, the worst that could possibly be born of man. Yet, as it is written in the most high book of all the ages, there is a time for every purpose and a time for everything, so it is in this generation another of the most deplorable acts has to take place. And it does not stop at the right foot forward. This vicious, brutal killing continues like wild men.

Of course, we are living in a far different time than the days of Lincoln. The great stage is set and the drama unfolds with worldwide effect, and our great leader is caught in the swirling tide of corruption that flows against the true American way of life. Mr. Kennedy vainly sought peace and equality for all men, and did so in the light of our constitution, yet in his earnest endeavor he ran afoul of the evil forces against our ideals of life.

Out of bitter sacrifice and loss something is learned, something of things we never felt or knew before. First, the heartrending pang of the impact of the sudden, unthought-of tragedy. That so suddenly and sweepingly came to our leader. First, our anger against all evils of the fate. Next, the satisfaction of the anger being replaced with reasoning within us, then to shut out the wrong spirit to be replaced with most powerful of all, the spirit of God. In our crises we always turn to God. This in itself is one great lesson. Next, we turn to more unity and solidarity. The family may have its differences, political or otherwise. The family may have its fights and feuds, but let some outside force inflict a wrong or an injury upon one of them and see how quickly they instantly turn together upon the foe. I think we all forget God at times. Some of us longer than others. Some stray away a little way, some a long way. Yet, with some calamity hit us, or at us, we immediately turn for help and guidance of the Lord. This is another lesson.

As is said in this writing, we are living in a far different age and circumstances than did our forefathers. Our families, institutions and organizations are of greater magnitude. We, of course, are living in a day of high speed communication and transportation, which brings the scope of the world in general to a much smaller globe than it was to many one hundred or two hundred years ago. A man could not sit in his home and hear, every second, every event taking place during some terrible disaster all this coming through a little wood-lined box, or better still, see the actual picture of his loved one made right before his very eyes, even though the event is taking place many miles from him. We take all this for granted, yet it is a startling dream of our forefathers, which has come to pass. We also witness through this fact communication. The "great birds" bringing in the dignitaries from capitals of the world to us in large hotels, hotels and thousands of miles in just a few hours, whereby it need to take days and days to see people. We witnessed the most heinous crime. We witnessed a murder so down. We witnessed the swiftness of a government in action. We witnessed a fearless one take the reins of power. We witnessed the most distinguished and lavish interment in the quiet splendor. We witnessed a very great lesson from our first lady, complete serenity and sublime endurance.

We beheld the most touching events. The graceful kneeling of the first lady beside her husband's casket and the admirable kiss of the flag that covered it, even more to see the little girl with a pin in her little hand against the ing as she stood beside her treasured mother. And at another instance, see the little boy saluting, as if giving his father a farewell salute. All these witnessed is the manifestation of love, which, of course, is our most powerful element of mankind. Love will sustain us. Hatred will wreck us. This is another of the great lessons we witnessed.

The President in this instance did not give his soldiers in battle, instead we gave our President in battle. He was going out in the cause of what he believed in. Should he have been wrong, he was still in earnest in our behalf. This is the sagacity of a man of war and a smile turned to a shattering, blood-stained, sudden death. All this is a lesson to long remember.

We further witnessed diplomacy in action. We saw the distinguished friends of foreign lands of our late President, being received by our new President, which was superbly done, even after he had been through three terrible, distraught days. We could see the kindness and extreme courtesy shown our visiting dignitaries, the good right arm extended in a most welcome handshake, with a smile and a good word to each of them in a very diplomatic way. This, itself, is the lesson of extended friendship. We could readily see our new man was setting the right foot forward. This lightened the days of grievance.

I am thankful to know I live in a country where we always have the torch of freedom carried through three terrible, distraught days. We could see what America really is in love, freedom, strength and endurance.

I am thankful to the editors throughout the land for so well relating this tragic event. I appreciate the sympathy of my fellow Americans and the freedom-loving people throughout the world for the good and warm feeling toward America.

I am thankful to be an American.

When buying knives, be sure the rivets that hold them together are solid. Three rivets are a minimum for good service. Why not give gardening friends a "rising" gift for Christmas? Many nurseries have gift certificates for roses, evergreens, shrubs, shade trees or other plants for early spring planting.

Which is the best buy, fresh or canned mushrooms? If the price of a 4-ounce can is one-third that of a pound of fresh mushrooms, they are equally good buys. USDA reports. The logic behind this: one pound of fresh whole mushrooms will yield six servings. A 4-ounce can of whole mushrooms yields two servings.
