Stumbo wants equal air time:

Judge-executive race heats up

by Geoff Belcher Staff Writer

The first volleys in the rapidly approaching May primary election were officially fired this week when incumbent Floyd County Judge/Excutive John M. Stumbo drafted and delivered by attorney a letter to challenger Dale McKinney, owner and operator of WMDI radio, requesting equal time on McKinney's station. According to Federal Communications Commission regulations, Stumbo said Thursday, radio and television personalities who are running for public office are required by law to cease personal broadcasting and recording at least ten days prior to

Floyd County government's crumSince McKinney failed to cease broadcasting, Sumbo said, hedrafted the letter requesting equal air time or WMDI in the interest of fairness.
"I assume," Sumbo said, "he request was denied."
However, McKinney said Thurday, he took himself off the air this week in response to Stumbo's letter.
"He should ve stopped ten days prior to registering," Stumbo said, "That's according to the law... If it wasn the haw, he wouldn't be offlue air now.
"I was really upset about it in sense...," McKinney said

McKinney said that he had checked with the FCC prior to registering his candidacy and was allowed to continue broadcasting as long as he did not address political issues. He added that he only took himself off he air in order to avoid a lengthy, expensive court battle, which his campaign treasury cannot currently afford.

Second date is missed on filling seats

Education Commissioner Thomas Boysen missed his second self-imposed deadline Thursday to name two Floyd Countians to fill vacancies on the local school board.

Education department spokesman Steve Swift said Thursday that Commissioner Boysen may announce the appointments next week.

"The information has been sent to the commissioner and we first the commissioner and we're this the commissioner and we're this the commissioner and we're the second the commissioner and we're this the commissioner and we're this the commissioner and we're the second the commissioner and we're this the commissioner and we're the second the s

When asked if any decision has been made to reopen the application process in educational district three because only two persons submitted applications. Swift replied that no decision has been made to that issue

"The whole situation has been put before the commissioner to make a decision on and his decision is ex-pected by at least sometime next week," Swift said.

pected by at least sometime next week. "Swift said.

Jim Parks, also a spokesman for the department, said last week that Boysen was expected to announce his decision April 29, the day after applicants were interviewed. That date was changed to May 3 when it was revealed that Boysen would be out of his office.

Parks said that filling the vacancies on the board was a "top priority" for Boysen.

On May 3, Parks said that Boysen had a full schedule and did not have time to make a decision because he had to leave to go to Chicago. The commissioner was in Western Kentucky May 4-5.

There are vacancies on the board of education in educational districts two and three.

Better late than never

It's taken a while, but we've finally heard a sensible solution to the construction problems plaguing the Floyd County School System

Well, maybe it's not the solution, but at least it's a start.

A state education department official, whose job it is to oversee school construction regulations, opined this week that maybe he ought to make a trip to Floyd County to conduct a workshop for board members on what they can and cannot do or what they must or must not do in relation to spending millions of dollars building schools.

Had such an effort been made three years ago, we might not have seen so many taxpayer dollars wasted or so many school officials dragged over the coals. We have argued in the past that while school boards are ultimately responsible for managing their district's finances, it was incredibly short-sighted of the state to imagine that local boards would have the expertise to effectively oversee multi-million dollar construction pro-

We need to look no further than South Floyd High School to prove that point.

That school is years behind schedule and has cost nearly seven million dollars more than originally projected. It may or may not open for the 1993-94 school year.

Floyd County should have had at least two new schools up and running with the time and money spent at Left Beaver.

Maybe that's just smoke up the chimney, but remember, the fire was started with taxpayer green-

Perhaps so. U.S. District Judge Robert Ward of New York bas ordered the Long Island Rairoad to pay $550,000 in "pain and suffering" awards to four laborers who allegeddy contracted Lyme disease from tick bites while working on railroad property. The rail authority was remiss, Judge Ward ruled, even though it had issued the men bug spray and bite-resistant pants. The decision implies "the duty of all sorts of prop-erty owners to protect against Lyme disease," says the four's lawyer, not

No longer, under an expansive

And surely ticks aren't the only

We can imagine the outdoor host of tomorrow, Duke Waynestyle, aerosoling adive-bombing bee with one hand while hurling an insect bomb with the other. Future jurisprudence no doubt will fully define the responsibility to protect others from chance nature. If a guest is hit by lightning, is a homeowner at fault for failure to put up a lightning rod? Must a suburbanite reduce the pollen count upon his half-aere or be cast into receivership by a red-eyed encyclopedia salesman? For now all that is sure is that the eight-legged parasites have a sweet deal going with the trousered ones.

The power of deception

The trail is done, the jury is in Former Kentucky Speaker of the House Donald Blandford has joined 10 others who have been brought to court in the FBI investigation of influence selling and buying in our state capital. Now the federal prosecutor tells us— and it's no surprise—there are more indictments to Frankfort is a deceptive town. It possesses an aura of history, charm and gentitity. It's normally a small, quiet town in the evenings and on weekends. Most of the people who work for us in the state buildings commute from other towns and cities.

Coverage of the so-called BOPTROT investigation has pointed out the deception Frankfort is not what it seems, at least not when the law makers come

They are followed by the media, school children, constituents, and tobbytas. It's enough to turn a parama's head, no doubt about it. Sometimes, some of our lawmakers, like Mr. Blandford, come to view themselves as truly important, apart from those they represent and from the laws they make. It's easy, then, we suppose, to convince themselves that they deserve the hundred-dollar bill from the utility com-pany or that case of Wild Turkey from the mega-corporation.

then, we suppose to the control of the control of the company of that case of Wild Turkey from the mega-corporation.

We're disturbed that leaders like Mr. Blandford Cannox see that there's harm in accepting money from someone who curries your favor. We're disturbed that, just his winter, our lawmakers passed an ethics law that isn't designed to put a serious stop to the buying of state government.

All we can do is keep an eye on those we elect and keep reminding them that they represent us and not the tobbyists or their own self-interests. Sad to say, most voters today accept the deceptions of their state capitals, county courhouses and city halls. As long as we accept the deception and tolerate it, it will continue. - Appalachian News-Express Attention slobs, it's OK to be you.

We meant to tell you this last month. And we would have, really, except the dispatch ended up in the Appalachian mountain chain of paper on conceine's desk and didn't surface until recently.

But now, the waiting is over. None other than The New York Times announced in an April front-page story the decline of bousekeeping in America. This comes as good news to those who more but mope about how seldom; who sweep but don't dare look under the sofa; and who plump pillows before guests come but would sooner serve them five varieties of fruitcake than let them go near a closet. (If they do, try yelling, "Don't touch that knob! The boa's in there." It usually works.)

The Times cited a University of Maryland study that found that women spent an hour and a half less cleaning house each week in 1985 than they did in 1965. During that period, men devoted about an hour more to cleaning, which left us with a half-hour void for all kinds of dirt, dust and germs to multiply.

The final boost for self-esteem came from Dr. Peggy Maszaros, dean of human and environmental sciences at the University of Kentucky, who was quoted in the article. Her advice: Just make sure the kitchen and bathroom get cleaned. We agree. Would you have time to do ours, 100? - Lexington Herald Leader know Kentucky needs to look beyound tobacco as a source of income.

As the American Cancer Society asks for an increase in excise taxes on

We sense the political winds regarding tobacco are shifting in the direction of intelligence and reason. Volunteers and staff working with the American Cancer Society need to speak out as thinking popple who care about the health of Kentuckians, who are aware of the economic impact of tobacco and who know tobacco farmers may need help as tobacco becomes less reliable as a cash crop.

"1-900" calls become election issue in Pike

An after-hours caller in the Pike County Court-house ran up more than $100 in charges by dialing "1-900" numbers, allegedly phone sex lines. The caller may never be found, said Tim Bostic, a spokesman for Pike Judge-Executive Wayne T. Rutherford.

Bostic said flive calls were made, but he did not know the nature of the services provided by the numbers. Donna Damron, a former county finance officer who is challenging Rutherford for the office in the upcoming election, said the calls went to "sex lines."

The Damron campaign blames Rutherford for the calls, saying he removed a safeguard from the treath, saying he removed a safeguard from the calls, saying he removed a safeguard from the calls, saying he removed a safeguard from the foundation of the calls of the safeguard from the calls, saying he removed a safeguard from the foundation of the safeguard from the safeguard from

The Michaels Company of Fort Mitchell sued Rutherford in 1982 for the $32,000 cost of the plaques. Company owner Robert Michaels Jr. delivered the plaques at the end of Rutherford's last term in 1981, but the fiscal cour that took over refused to pay after an attorney said the plaque orders violated state bidding laws.

Michaels agreed to drop the suit after rutherford made a "modest payment" for the markers. Neither side would say how much money was involved, but Rutherford's attorney, Ira Branham, said it was "considerably less" than the original bill. - Appalachian News-Express

Primary programs mean involvement

It's pretty obvious that twins Mor-gan and Rachel George are alike in many ways, but it became clear very early to their mother, Sara, that their learning needs were different. Rachel loved school from the very beginning and always did well. Mor-gan, on the other hand, didn't seem gan, on the other hand, don't seem motivated to do much of anything. "Morgan was pretty content to draw Ninja turtles all day long if you let him," said Sara George of let him," said Sara George of Pikeville.

When the Pikeville Independent School District asked for volunteers to participate in the pilot primary program last year, George signed up both her children. At the time only Morgan, 8, was placed in the pilot program. Rachel entered the second grade in a traditional classroom.

Before the end of September, George began to see a remarkable difference in her son.

"It was amazing. He was writing booklets on karate. He wrote a country song," Someone Stole My Quarter. 'He was doing homework on the weekends. Before, the only way you could get him to do school work on the weekends was to bribe him with the weekends was to bribe him with money."

Morgan thrives in the primary classroom where desks are no longer lined up in neat little rows. He is motivated by being with older kids in the classroom. He loves working on the computer after he finishes other work at his own pace.
For George there is no doubt that the primary program is a success. "Rachel will do well in any environment. She works to please the teacher but for Morgan this was wonderful. He's incredibly motivated." At the beginning of the next school year all schools in Kentucky will be required to create a primary program required to create a primary program for children from the age of 5 and until they're ready for the fourth grade.

The primary program shifts the focus to individual children and their individual learning needs. The program's main tenet is that children school at different developmen tal levels and they will progress at different rates in various skill areas. In a graded elementary program certain skills have to be mastered by the end of a given grade or the child will be retained in the same grade or labeled slow or a failure. In the pri-mary program a student progresses at his or her learning rate without any of Report cards will evaluate coechts and skills but not with letter grades. More meaningful evaluations of what students have learned will be provided.

 More information about a child's

More information about a child selevelopment will be communicated between the school and home.
 Groups of teachers will work together to plan a common curriculum.

• More opportunity for parents to become involved in the classroom will be available.

While there are many parents such as Sara George who praise the primary program, some parents, particularly those whose children's schools haven't instituted the primary process, have voiced questions about process, have voiced questions about how this will work.

One frequently heard question in-

One frequently heard question involves the open classroom—"Hiddin't work back in the "70s what makes them think it's going to work now?" "It didn't work back then," said Nawanna Fairchild, acting Associate Commissioner for Learning Programs Development for the Department of Education. "But it didn't work because teachers didn't have a curriculant to go along with it and we do now."

One of the fears teachers have also heard from parents is "flow do we know this is going to work?! don't want my child to be a guinea pig."
White new to Kennucky the primary concept has been successfully implemented in schools in Tennessee, California, New York, Ohio and many other states as well as in Canada, Great Britain and New Zealand. "If parents went into the class-room, they would see how exciting this is and how excited the kids are about learning," said Carol Allen of Murray whose daughter Emily has been in the primary program for two

Unless witnessed firsthand, it's also hard for parents to understand how a teacher can maintain control of a classroom where children aren't required to sit in their seats all day required to so in the long.

In a survey of primary teachers who have had primary for at least two years, all adamantly stated that behavior problems had decreased since the long teachers was introduced in their schools.

"The kids are so busy they don't have time to cause problems. It's all so fun for them and they're totally involved," said Pat Cherry, a primary teacher at South West Elementary teacher at South West Elementary School in Murray.

Added time for preparation has also been an issue with teachers and Cherry, who has taught for 18 years, acknowledges she has spent more time preparing for class.
"It does take more time, particularly when you've been used to doing the same thing year after year. But it really has made teaching more fum," she said.
Mixing age groups has concerned really has made teaching more tim, she said.

Mixing age groups has concerned some parents. Multiage grouping raises both the floor and ceiling for children. Those who are advanced intellectually will progress at their own rate which may go beyond the traditional K-3 curriculum.

Older students can be challenged by teachers who have evaluated their potential and the children can be assigned more difficult projects that require high level learning and skills development.

Concern over what we don't know or understand is natural but visting a primary classroom will energize even the most skeptical.

Sara Goorge expresses that senti-the most skeptical.

Sara George expresses that sentiment best." School is no longer looking over a pile of papers out of the book bag each night, hoping that any notes that were supposed to come to you made it into the pile. School now demands that you take an interest in and encourage your children to actually do things, explore things and find out about things..."

JOHN EARL HUNT

COMMONWEALTH'S ATTORNEY

John Earl Hunt has the three qualities most important to the job of commonwealth's attorney:

John Earl's reputation is above reproach. He will do what's right. He will do the best he can. No one can do better. His word is his bond.

COMMITMENT

John Earl will see that murderers, rapists, child abusers, and the rest of the criminal element are prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. You demand it, John Earl's family demands it, and John Earl demands it.

COMPASSION

John Earl's commitment to the law is a personal one. He treats yone he comes into contact with as a real person. He grew up hard, works hard, and loves people. He will, when necessary, temper the law with compassion to see that justice is done.

I'll do what is right, I'll do the best I can.

Wesley Nelson

The Floyd County Times and the Department of Instruction of Floyd County Schools jointly wish to feature the student work of Wesley Nelson, a fifth grade Young Authors' winner from Mrs. Bonnie Harmon's class at Prater Elementary. Wesley is the son of Dean and Jeanne Nelson of Banner. His book, The Decisions of Earner, His book, The Decisions of Life, printed with permission, was the winner in the fifth grade "nonillustrated" competition.

Wesley was a room winner, as school winner and a county-wide winner for the 1991-92 school year for his book. He received a 550 U.S. Savings Bond at a spring awards ceremony. Over 5,000 elementary and middle school students participated in competition throughout the county.

Editor's Note: The following story is an excerpt from Wesley's book.

THE DECISIONS OF LIFE

Derick Hughs, a slightly tall, dark haired boy studied quietly in the library. "I'll never get this report finished." he thought to himself. Just as he started to write again a, slender girl with silky, blonde hair walked up to him. "Hello Derick." she said smiling. "What do you want? Derick said tensely. "Calm down! I only want to know how much it takes to get as smart as you? It must have taken a long time since you are so smart.
Could you kind of do my report for me? I'll pay..."

Just then Derick broke in. "Do you think that I am stupid enough to fall for that?" He said angrily. "Look I've been having a real hard time lately. I've got to help feed five brothers and six sisters." She said sweetly.
"Are you kidding? I know for a fact that you are an only child!" he said, still angry. After that Beth stormed out of the library. Derick realized he wasn't going to get any work finished there. So he decided to go to his dorm room.

"Hey if the price was right I would have did it. What do you say. It's a way to make some easy money and I'm sure she would be grateful." Then Derick stopped him quickly. "Now you listen to me. You only want me to be nice to her so she will go on a date with you!" he said angrily. "No you listen to me. When I get back your attitude had better have changed!" yelled Steve. Then they both walked Jessica Charles was a blonde, stightly tall girl. She was the school gossip. She was on the phone with Missy Damron. She was a short, brown headed girl. "Did you hear about the new girl Shelia Krane."

Jessica said excited, "No I don't think I have. What does she look like?" asked Missy. "Well she's got dark brown hair and she's kind of short anyway. I heard that she got kicked out of her last school." Jessica said.

dark brown har and she's stund of short anyway. I heard that she got kicked out of her last school." Jessica said.

"What for?! Itmust have been pretty bad," Missy said curiously. "O.K. at her last school she spray painted graffici every where. I heard that she made the school look awful and they caught her red-handed," said Jessica. "So she thinks that she's an artist. With our school security she'd better be careful." Missy said. "We'd better keep our eye on this one," she said. Saturday, Steve had a date with one of the prettiest girls in school. Her name was Beth Thacker. She has the perfect beight. She has a great figure, beautiful, blue eyes and silky blonde hair but Beth has a reputation to dump a boy at a moments notice. "Hi Beth. Are you ready to go?" asked Steve. "I'm still doing my hair. By the way where are we going?" she asked quickly. "To the bowling alley. It'll be fun." he said. "Well maybe we'll run into Jack." she said merrily. Oh your old boyfriend." he replied.

At the bowling alley Beth was merrily. Oh your old boyfriend." he replied.

At the bowling alley Beth was being very annoying, "Steve would you please go get me a drink? I'm so thirsty after all of this bowling." Beth said weakly, "Sure, maybe I'll run into Jack for you," Steve said, holding his anger back. As Steve walked up to the sanck counter he noticed that it was Brook Hanover's night to work. Steve had always had a secret crush on her. He had liked her ever since he first met her.

Who wouldn't like her. She was gorgeous She had reddish brown hair, a really good figure, and she was real smart. "Hello Steve. What are you doing, here? You haven't been around lately." asked Brook. "I'm here on a stupid date with a git!" he said. "So who's the lucky gir!?" she questioned. Just then Steve paused. He thought to himself. Could all of these questions.

Brook said as Steve turned around to see Beth and Jack standing behind him. Beth then said, "Well if you feel that way. Jack and I will go some place else." "Come on Beth. Let's go." Jack said in a musculor ioce. "Looks like you gotyour wish." Brook said with a laugh. After that song stopped playing Brook said with a laugh.

After that song stopped playing Brook went to get some punch. While she was over there she ran into Beth. "Hi Brook. Are you having fum? I know! am. Jack is such a good dancer. You know. I think you could be very pretty if you just knew how to wear make-up? Brook stopped her and said. "Who are you to say I can 't wear make-up? 'You listen tome you little brat. If you don't want my fist in your face you better layoff." Brook said furiously, "Don't you dare. I can have you arrested for harssement. I've got enough money." Beth said with a smirk.

After that Brook pushed Beth with enough money." Beth said with as mirk.

After that Brook pushed Beth with all of her might. Beth started tumbling backwards and she fell into the punch bowl. "You idiot. What do you think you are doing? This is a one hundred dollar blouse. You're going to pay for this one way or another." Beth said as everybody laughed. Then Brook, Steve, Derick, and Shelia left. The next day when Brook came back from school her dorm room was torn to shreads. The windrows were broken and the lock on the door was mashed. The next day before the bell rang Jessica and Missy stand in the main hall talking. "Missy guess what, I heard that Derick is breaking up with Shelia. "Jessica said excited, are you sure? They seemed so happy together.

Did you ask one of them?" asked Missy. "Since when do you care where the news comes from. Just as long as you get it. "Jessica said magrily," by the way, I don't gossip like you anymore. Good-bey, "said Missy. Then she took of down the hall as Jessica yelled, "I don't need you anymore! I've got plenty of friends!"

The next day Beth sat in her room doing ber hair as a knock came to the door. "I'm coming. Who is it?" she yelled. "It's the police ma'dam. We have to ask you some questions," said a female police officer.
"Now you listen to me," said Beth,

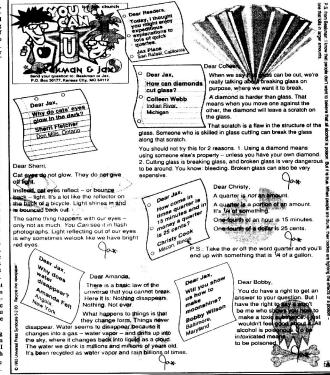

"Now you listen to me," said Beth.

"I didn't do anything. If you don't have a warrant then leave." Excuse me but we do have a warrant. We have to ask you some questions, said a police officer in a strong voice. In an arraying voice Beth then said. "I'm not talking without my lawyer so you might as well leave. "After that the police left but said they would be back tomorrow. Then she called Jessica. "Jessica they're on to us. We've got to get out of here." Beth said in a panie," O.K. pack a few things then get over here. We'll drive on my house," said Jessica. DANCES WITH WOLVES Characters: Kevin Costner, the wolf, the Indians and the soldiers.
In the beginning of it Kevin left to a big valley where the Indians are. Then they went after him. In the middle, Kevin met a wolf and they made good friends. The end was sad when the wolf died and the soldiers destroyed the place.

Sister Act is totally awesome. The characters are Whoopi Goldberg, cops, and nuns. People chased to kill her. The beginning was she sang at the bar. The middle, she went to the church and began singing in the choir. Whoopi Goldberg was saved after a while. Oh va. It was one in a million. It was awesome, cool, sweet, I think that's enough. It is hilarious. I fell out of my chair, it was so funny.

Since Sunday is Mother's Day, we thought this a fitting time to reflect on the joys of motherhood from a dad's perspective.

First, we should point out that moms and dads have completely different ideas about the purpose of fostering children.

Moms do it because it's the natural thing for them to do.

Dads do it to get out of washing dishes, cutting grass and carrying out the garbage.

Moms are there to bandage scraped knees, wipe snotty noses and read bedtime stories which, with some creative editing, offer lessons on real life.

For instance, at our house Snow White and Prince Charming "lived happily ever after" after Snow awoke from her trance, graduated from college, went to medical school, became a doctor, bought her own Mercedes and discovered a cure for the common Dads provide valuable lessons, too, on a more realistic footing. Such as how to burp the tune to the National Anthem after guzzling a 16 ounce Pepsi.

Moms devote hours of patient attention to instructing their children on manners and polite-

Dads offer crash courses on the proper word choices to describe drivers who pull out in front of you and drive five miles per hour.

Moms fill the scrapbooks with photographs of every conceivable event in the child's life.

Dads pay to have the film developed.

Moms offer a shoulder to cry on when things go bad.

Dads think you should cry only if you can't stop the bleeding or if it's raining on the day you had a big golf game scheduled.

Finally, Moms provide that all important childrearing service they call love, which covers all the bases Publicly, dads will claim that love is a fouretter word.

Family stays away in droves from father in nursing home

DEAR ABBY: Five months ago DEAR ABBY: FIVE months ago we placed my father in a very nice nursing home. My father, who was greatly loved by his nices, nephews, brothers and sisters-inlaw, as well as many, many friends has not had one visit from any of these people. Can it be that we are supposed to 'invite' them to visit him? They all know he's there.

be that we are supposed to "invite" them to visit him? They all know he's there.

When I visit my father, I stop in to say "hello" to other elderly folks on his floor. They are so grateful for company, I have trouble getting away.

Abby, the plight of our elderly who are living out their lives feeling unwanted, unloved and abandoned just breaks my heart. Please tell your readers who have someone in a nursing facility to visit them as often as possible. It takes time and energy, but the rewards for them—as well as for you—will be gratifying.

SAD IN STUDIO CITY

DEAR SAD: Your letter is well DEAR SAD: Your letter is well worth space in this column. By all means, issue an invitation to friends and relatives that a visit would be welcomed—also, cards, letters and telephone calls.

I hope your letter motivates the many well-intentioned procrustinators to visit family members and friends—soon. It's later than you think

DEAR ABBY: Let me tell you why some of us grown children dread visiting parents and parents: in-law: When was the last time you told your daught/son-in-law that you were glad they married into the family? Have you ever told them they did a fine job mising your grandchildren—ord you complain about their hairstyles, tight jeans and their music?

Why can't you recall some happy stories about your family? Surely all those years were more than a series of funerals. We'd love to hear about how Dad had to assemble a tricycle at 3 a.m. on Christmas morning; the a .m. on Christmas morning; the time you were carving a turkey and it sid off the platter and onto the floor; the costume parties; and the time your luggage was lost and you had to wear the same suit for three days. Get the idea?

Think about it another way: How would you like to visit your daughter and be greeted with: 'Oh, these hot flashes are kitling me' 'Junior has run away with a belly dance teacher'; 'The neighbors are poisoning our cats'; 'If I'm not pregnant, it must be cancer'; 'etc.

Frankly, my dears, you weren'; try nice to me for the past 30 years and I'm a little gun-shy, so I've learned over the years to hold my tongue and keep my distance.

Forgive me, but enough is enough.
NO NAME OR CITY, PLEASE

DEAR ABBY: Last summer my husband and I had a friend visit us for three days. We had a nice visit. He called yesterday and said he was coming to visit us again this summer. We figured another short stay (three or-four days), which would be fine with us, so we said we would be glad to see him.

The Prestonsburg Blackcats (9-6) • ried to stay above > 500 as they played their first shome game since April 12.

The Blackcatts had a 2-0 record on their home field following their opening day two-game sweep of the Mulins Tigers.

The Pikeville Panthers came to town Vednesday afternoon and when the dust cleared, the Panthers took a 4-1 victory from the Blackcats.

The Panthers took the lead in the bottom of the first inning as Coleman drew a walk to lead off the game. Coleman moved to third on an error and scored on J. P. Blair's sacrifice fly to left field. A double-play ended the first inning as Prestonsburg's Ortega caught a pop fly and gunned down the runner at first.

Prestonsburg recorded their first base namers of the game in the bottom of the second inning as Thomas Ratliff and Cory Reitz reached on back-to-back one-out singles. Jason Crisp walked, loading the bases with one out. Prestonsburg left the runners stranded as the next two batters went down swinging.

Pikeville took a 2-0 lead in the top of the third inning as Anderson led off the inning with a single. Back-to-back pop-ups to the infield left Anderson at first with two outs. Moccy's single moved Anderson over to third base. Blair ripped a double down the third base line scoring Anderson. Afly out to left ended the inning.

Prestonsburg second their first run of the game in the bottom of the third following Seth Hyden's leadoff single. One of Prestonsburg's top running backs in football, Hyden streaked down the third Seth Hyden's leadoff single.

The thought of getting lost is a recurring nightmare for a lot of hunders, hilters, campers and other folks who venture into the woods.

Since I've never been lost, I have no personal knowledge of what the experience is like. But judging from what I've heard and read, it apparently is one of the most horrifying ordeals anyone can ever undergo. Supposedly many people, upon becoming lost, are swept by a hysterical panic that shatuers all power of reasoning. Quite often, victims throw away the very equipment they need to survive. If their misfortune lasts long enough, the panic can evidently turn into something resembling temporary insanity. Lost people have been known to hide from rescue parties or even flee from them in blind terror

There have been a few times when There have been a few times when I've lost my bearings in the woods and gotten turned around. It is a be-wildering sensation. You feel as though you'veentered a mirror world where everything is backward from what it's supposed to be. Fortunately, I've always managed to get back on track quickly enough to experience nothing more than temperature.

to experience nothing more than tem-porary uneasiness. But that was enough to give me some inkling of how it must feel to be marooned in the woods with no idea of how to get out and no knowledge of how to

Most of the eastern United States is so throughly dominated by civili-zation that it's hard for me to under-stand how anyone could become se-riously lost there. Few remaining tracts of woodland are vast and un-tracts of woodland are vast and un-proken enough to rank as wildemess in anything other than the artifical sense conferred by legislation.

And yet people still somehow manage to get lost. Not only do they get lost: more often than you would think, they fall to survive the ordeal.

One of the places where it happens most frequently is right at my own back door in the Great Smoky Moun-tains National Park back door in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

In the 30 years I've lived near the Smokies, dozens of people have been lost there. The most recent was a 13tost there. The most recent was a 13-year-old boy who vanished on a fam-ily hike about a month ago. Some 300 searchers scoured the woods for a week before the boy's body was found. Evidence indicated he'd panicked and fallen off a cliff shortly after he disappeared.

The Smokies park entends for 70 miles along the Tennessee-North Carolina border in a northeast-south west direction. At no point is it more than 20 miles wide going from east to west. From the crest of the mountains along the state line, the average distance to the park boundary on either side is only eight or nine miles.

side is only eight or nine miles.

Admittedly, the terrain is some of the most nugged in the eastern United States. But even allowing for that, a person in good physical condition who doesn't lose his head should be able to start from the most remote point in the park and hike out of it in no more than a couple of days.

In other words, no one with good sense should ever get seriously lost in the Smokies. Yet during the time I've lived near the park, to the best of my recollection, there have been half a dozen people who went astray in it and never came out. In three of those cases, victims' bodies were never found.

Even more baffling is a case that happened several years ago in Southwest Virginia's Mount Rogers Notional Recreation Area. Being a Virginia native, I've made many hunting and camping excursions to Mount Rogers. In no way could it be classed as remote.

Rogers. In no way could it be classed as remote.

Compared to the Smokies, the terrain is gentle, and it's crisscrossed by numerous old logging roads and an interconnecting network of horse, hiking and jeep trails. Moreover, much of the crest area is untimbered, providing vistas that extend for miles.

Like the Smokies, the Mount Rogers area is clongated in shape, but whereas the Smokies are 20 miles across, Mount Rogers is only half a dozen miles wide with well-used paved roads bounding it on either side.

When water temperatures begin to consistently hold in the mid-dosass will move into shallow water areas to nest. And during this period, catch and release can play a very important role in helping maintain good bass populations in Kentucky's major reservoirs and smaller lakes. Fisheries biologists with the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources (KDFWR) encourage anglers to strongly consider keeping crappie or bluegill that can also be realily caught in April and May, instead of taking home largemouth or smallmouth. Crappie and bluegill are generally considered better tasting fish, according to most fishermen.

During May, both largemouth and smallmouth can be found in almost any kind of shoreline cover such as stump rows, flooded bushes and standing timber. Bass are susceptible, too, to almost any large worms being two top choices. Later in May, bluegill will begin bedding, which usually means they are more concentrated in shallow water and easier to catch.

Kentucky has numerous smaller

"If a runner or thrower doesn't succeed, he or she can't blame anyone but themselves.

WHEN WATER TEMPERA

TURE DROPS, BASS OFTEN HIT JIGS
One of the nice things about wineter bass fishing, says tournament pro Chiff Craft, is that it narrows your choice of lures considerably.
"Basically, all you need is a jig and pork chunk, or possibly a spinnerbait or spoon," laughs the Evinnude Outboards Pro Staff angler, "Other lures may work at different times, but one of these three will almost always catch bass in cold weather."

"You can hop them along the bottom, bounce them down steep channel drops or even drop them into thick cover.

"With the silicone skirts now used on many jigs, the lures really do look alive, too," continues Craft. "I think every bass angler owes it to himself to learn how to fish jigs."

Another lure Craft often uses in cold weather is a jigging spoon. It resembles an injured shad and can be extremely effective when bass are suspended in deep water somewhere between the top and bottom.
"You can work a spoon at various depths and at different speeds," explains the Evinrude pro, "and you usually have to experiment with different speeds until you find the correct presentation.
"I believe many fishermen work spoons too fast, That is, they jig them too much with their rod tips. A spoon actually jumps much higher than most too much with their rod tips. A spoon actually jumps much higher than most anglers realize, and bass don't usually want it that way."

Another tip Craft offers to spoon fishermen is to let the lure fall on a slack line so it will wobble from side to side and appear more natural. Many rishermen let the lure fall on a tight line, which keeps it from moving freely.

If bass don't want jigs or spoons, Craft turns to a big spinnerbait. For deep winter fishing, he prefers a heavy 3/4 or one-ounce spinnerbait with large Indiana or Colorado blades. This is most effective when fished around rocky riprap or steep channel drops and bluffs.

"One of the best ways to fish a spinnerbait like his is to let it wind-mill down a steep drop," says Craft.

"You can stair-step it down by letting it touch the bottom occasionally, but basically, you pull it down a slope with your rod tip.

"If you're after big bass, this is one of the best lures to use."

If it has been a while since you last readed your outboard to a tune-up, consider scheduling an appointment with your Evirnude or Johnson dealer this winter, rather than waiting until next April or May when most service departments will be swamped. Service managers are often looking for work to do in December and January, and many offer off-season specials. Tune up now and you'll be ready to go next spring.

BUZZ BAITS MAY CATCH COLD WEATHER BASS
As a professional tournament angler and fishing guide, Randy Dearman is expected to catch his share of big bass.
He's not expected to catch then on a buzz bait in the winter, but that's exactly what the Johnson Outboards FO Staff angler does, and with surprising regularity.
"The biggest bass lever caught on a buzz bait weighed over 10 pounds and in weather so coldice had formed on the shallow bushes I was fishing." Dearman remembers. "It was in a national bass tournament, too, when everyone else was fishing deep jigs around thick vegetation, if you can findit, or rock ipran, "asys Dearman." The seen bass move so shallow around rocks their downsel fins were nearly out of the water."

Even with the fish shallow, explains the Johnson pro, the key to getting a strike on a buzz bait is to retrieve the lure as slowly as possible and actually bump the cover during the retrieve.

"You can't use a stop-and-go retrieve with a buzz bait because the lure will slink when you stop," says Dearman, "but you can retrieve so slowly the lure is on the verge of sinking, and this is the type of retrieve you need to make in winter.

"Run the lure right into whatever cover you're fishing, too, and make repeated casts to the same spot. If there is a bass there, you'll probably get some action."

Dearman believes a buzz bait

Dearman believes a buzz bait brings wintertime strikes primarily because bass don't see many of them in cold weather. Later in the spring

"I really believe bass are able to cognize lures in the sense that some-

"I really believe bass are able to recognize lures in the sense that something they see a lot may frighten them," he says. "That's why I don't mind fishing something different, like a buzz bait in cold weather.

"A buzz bait is traditionally a big bass lure, too," he concludes, "not only in the spring, summer and fall, but also in the winter."
