PIKEVILLE – The Michigan man arrested in Pikeville last week and charged with drug trafficking has now been indicted on federal drug charges. Donald Adams was arrested in Wal-Mart park-ing lot in Pikeville last arrested in Wal-Mart parking lot in Pikeville last week after police said he fled from them during a traffic stop. More than $17,000 in cash was taken from Adams as evidence, along with more than 100

Oxycontin tablets.
Now federal investigators are putting together the pieces of that traffic stop, saying that Adams has been selling the pills in Floyd and Pike counties for the last eight months.
According to the indictment handed down against Adams this week, the Michigan man is alleged to have been traveling from Kentucky to his home state to fill prescriptions for some $500 Owners to blets, and then returning Kentucky to distribute

Investigators are saying Adāms made this trip every two or three weeks and picked up roughly the same amount of pills, which they now allege he had been selling for $60 each

PSC approves RECC rate increase

by SHELDON COMPTON

FRANKFORT - Big Sandy Rural Electric Cooperative Corporation has been given a green light from Frankfort to raise their monthly rates in order to increase the company's revenue.

to raise their monthly rates in order to increase the company's revenue.

The Kentucky Public Service Commission has accepted a settlement based on a request from the local provider to raise the rates for customers in order to increase revenue by $1.74 million, according to a statement issued from commission spokesman Andrew Melnykovych.

The settlement was negotiated with the Attorney General's Office, which ended with Big Sandy RECC receiving $161,500 less than the amount of additional revenue asked for.

Big Sandy RECC representatives asked that a flat monthly charge be increased by $15, up from the current monthly rate of $7,70. However, the commission granted an increase for $10 instead.

$10 instead.

The new rate equals out to seeing the monthly rate for customers increased by $2.30.

In addition, the rate for electricity use will rise, from 7.48 center per kilowatt-hour to 8.13 cents.

The local provider applied to the commission for the increase in December 2008, then attended a public hearing on May 12 concerning the set-tlement.

The new rates took effect yesterday, which will see a customer using 1,000 kilowatt hours each month pay about $8.80 more a month for their electric service, an increase of approximately 10 percent. A kilowatt hour is the amount of electricity used-by a 100-watt light in 10 hours.

MAYTOWN - Maytown residents, like those in Martin and Eastern, are worried that their local post office could be closing for good good.

Those living in Martin, Eastern and Langley, which includes Maytown, have already expressed concern that the temporary closings due to recent flood damage could become permanent.

Now one man has decided to get organized. "It's terribly inconvenient," said Bill May, a 30-year veteran of the U.S. Postal Service and Maytown post master for half of that time.

FRANKFORT — Four Floyd
County schools have been selected to participate in a federal program to promote fruits and vegetables to elementary students.

Duff Elementary, McDowell Elementary, McDowell Elementary, McDowell Elementary and Stumbo Elementary have funds allocated for the Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Program.

Duff Elementary was allocated $14,800, McDowell Elementary was allocated $17,350, Osborne Clark Stumbo Elementary was allocated $15,100 and Stumbo Elementary was allocated $15,850. According to information provided by the Kentucky Department of Education, the participating schools will make fresh fruits and vegetables available at no charge to students during the school day at times other than meal times.

"We are excited about the potential of the program, as it can be an important tool in our efforts to combat childhood obesity." said Supt. Henry Webb. "The Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Program can assist students with learning more healthful eating habits and students may also benefit from the introduction of a variety of produce they otherwise might not

Checkpoints

During that time, police stopped more than 500 vehicles and wrote a total of 34 citations, arresting two. The citations were for no seat belts or for not having children in car seats, police said.

The high cost of not reforming health care

A lot of the debate about reforming health care revolves around a false choice — the simplistic idea that transforming the health system would be far more expensive than sticking with the current system.

A growing body of scholarly evidence points to the fallacy of that agument. Two new studies underscore that doing nothing would carry significant new costs in both the short and long terms. A study in the journal Health Affairs estimates that by next year, the number of uninsured Americans could top 52 million — not counting those who lost coverage when they lost their jobs in the current recession.

A second study predicts that figure probably will reach at least 57 million people in a decade, about 10 million more than were unin-sured in 2007. That research, by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, suggests the number of uninsured could easily reach 66 million by 2019 if worst-case assumptions about the economy are met.

Meanwhile, business spending on health insurance for workers would more than double, as would spending for Medicaid and the State Children's Health Insurance Program.

Most Americans get private health insurance through their jobs. But most uninsured Americans come from families with at least one full-time worker. So why are they uninsured?

The most important factor, it turns out, is the relationship between overall health spending, health insurance premiums and and premiums - rise, it becomes prohibitively As spending -

As spending — and premiums — rise, it becomes prohibitively expensive for employers to offer coverage to low-wage workers. The number of uninsured workers goes up as a result.

The Health Affairs study found that the number of uninsured workers rose from about 15 percent of the workforce in 1980 to 25 percent in 2006. It probably will reach 26.4 percent next year, meaning almost 7 million more Americans will be uninsured.

If you add in those Americans who lost their health insurance when they lost their jobs in the current recession, the number of uninsured would be about 57 million in 2010.

The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation predicts that the number of middle-class families without health insurance probably will jump 45 percent by 2019. That would drastically increase the amount of uncompensated care — medical treatment provided by doctors and hospitals without getting paid. Those costs would jump by at least 72 percent, and perhaps by as much as 128 percent over the next decade.

Much of that will be shifted onto those with private insurance. A the next decade.

Much of that will be shifted onto those with private insurance. A new analysis by the group Families USA estimates that people with family health insurance coverage are already paying an extra $1.000 a year to help pay for treatment provided to the uninsured.

The Johnson Foundation study estimates that individuals and family spending on premiums and out-of-pocket costs will increase between 46 and 68 percent over the next decade — much faster than the overall economy is expected to grow.

The amount businesses spend probably would double, putting American companies at a greater disadvantage when competing with foreign firms.

Simply extending coverage to the uninsured won't be enough to Simply extending coverage to the uninsured won't be enough to rein in costs. Study after study has shown that in parts of the country where spending is highest — St. Louis ranks in the top 20 percent for Medicare spending — patients are less likely to get inexpensive treatments that have been shown to improve outcomes. Instead, doctors are more likely to prescribe extra tests and expensive treatments simply because they're available.

More care is not necessarily better care, and it may lead to fewer people getting any care. Understanding this is difficult; not understanding it will bankrupt us all.

Sotomayor: A trap for Republicans

by DONALD KAUL MINUTEMAN MEDIA

Minuteman Media

We're about to see just how dumb the Republican Party in general, and conservatives in particular, really are. I'm betting pretty dumb.

In one of his characteristically shrewd political moves, President Barack Obama last week nominated Sonia Sotomayor to replace David Souter on the U.S. Supreme Court. Judge Sotomayor, for those of you who may not be up to speed on your Appeals Court Judges, is as close to bulletprof as you can get when it comes to Supreme Court nominees. First of all, she is Hispanic and a woman, both politically good things to be, given that there have been only two women on the court before her and no Hispanies.

Second, she has a resume out of Horatio Alger. Grew up in public housing in the South Bronx. Lost her father at the age of 9. Won a scholarship to Princeton, that toffee-nosed bastion of the Establishment. Finished at the top of her class. Went on to Yale Law, where she was editor of the law review.

Became a federal prosecutor in

Became a federal prosecutor in New York City, Later went into pri-vate practice, then on to the federal bench, first at circuit court level, then appellate.

Academic credentials, practical experience, compelling personal narrative; she's got it all.

And Republicans are making noises as though they'll oppose her nomination—indeed, perhaps block it—on grounds that she is a judicial activist.

nation—indeed, perhaps block it—on grounds that she is a judicial activist.
Senator Jon Kyl, a snarky Republican from Arizona, said as much. Mitt Romney and Mike Huckabee — what passes for leading contenders for the Republican presidential nomination these days—have been singing the same song.

"If she's confirmed, said the she's confirmed, said the she's confirmed, said the she she's confirmed, said the she's s

Benjamin Cardozo, a Franklin Delano Roosevelt appointee in 1932, as the first. Except that Cardozo cane from a family of Sephardic Jews who had emigrated here from Portugal by way of England in the 18th Century. Some Hispanic. He wouldn't have known salsa from seltzer.

Personally, I kind of hope the Republicans do fight Sotomayor's nomination to the bitter end. In the last election, John McCain drew 31 percent of the Hispanic vote, down from the 44 percent that Bush got four years earlier. What is the GOP doing, shooting for single digits?

When Sotomayor arrived on the Princeton campus in 1972, she was one of only a handful of Hispanic students there. Alumni were still protesting the presence of women, who had been admitted to the school only a few years before. One of the protesters was now-Justice Sam Alito, Jr., who had graduated earlier that year. That's what this nomination fight is about, not activism versus formalism, but a tired old conservative vision of society, Is it something run by an exclusive men's club, or is it something in tired old conservative vision of sociey, Is it something run by an exclusive men's club, or is it something in which a tough Puerto Rican kid from the Bronx can use her smarts to get a seat at the table?

Absent tax problems or scandal, the Republicans are on the wrong side of this in every way you can be on the wrong side of something. Which is getting to be a habit with them.

Flood project borders on criminal'

I wish to comment on the debacte created by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers on the so-called "Martin, Ky., Flood Project."

The project was funded through the good works of Rep. Hal Rogers as a means of solving the chronic recurring flood disasters that have plagued Martin throughout the 20th century.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers has now had the project for nine years. Most of the downtown businesses are gone and the buildings razed, leaving a shell of the city which at one time was a bustling haven of activity and production.

The Corps has taken thousands of man-hours, tons of dirt and transported it by dump trucks from the south end of the city to the north end. Dirt hauling has been through the middle of town, apparently without regard to damages that such activity would do to the remaining homes and businesses. And now, after millions of dollars and thousands of man-hours spent, what element of flood control do we have? Zero! Zilch!

The Corps now says they have no more money with which to complete the project, and the devastating effect of flooding has once again been visited to the remaining homes and businessed by flooding to the sat 30 days. What a waste of money and effort, and what a dirty deed dished out to the remaining people of Martin.

The prospect of devastating flood-remaining people of Martin.

The prospect of devastating flooding remains and control is still the issue. Many of the town's people believe, as I do, that dredging and channeling of the creek, diversion when feasible and floodwalls would be the most direct, cheapest and expeditious way to solve the problem. This was previously proposed, but for some reason or another was rejected. Why not allow a forum of town citizens, coupled with the powers that be and perhaps include the Corps, to rethink this entire project and find the most immediate and lasting solution to the problem?

To this point, what has happened in To this point, what has happened in Martin borders on the criminal, and believe me, its citizens will be looking to the court system for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to make necessary compensation if a reasonable solution cannot be found.

Pikeville High School's football field — will benefit UNITE's anti-drug youth programs throughout the region. Each of the two-day camps, which begin at 10 a.m. and end at 6 p.m., will focus on basic fundamental skills and some advanced techniques for both offense and defense players. Throughout the day participants will receive positive, anti-drug and self-esteem messages. "We want to have some fun with this camp." said Yeast, the Southeastern Conference's all-time receptions leader when drafted by the Cincinnati Bengals in 1999. "We'll go through skills and end with an obstacle course the first day. On day two we'll go through com-bine-style drills and end with a

by STEVE LeMASTER SPORTS EDITOR

PIPPA PASSES – Allen Central High School graduate Justin Jacobs (Martin) was one of three players honored when the Alice Lloyd College baseball program hosted its annual Senior Day activities. JT Coleman (Jonesville, Va.) and Lamar Williams (Hazard) were also honored. The day's activities included a ceremonial first pitch thrown by the fathers of the seniors and the final regular scason game versus Berea. Each senior was presented with a framed jersey featuring their last name and number.

Jacobs, who wore jersey No. 20 and played second base for the Eagles, batted .343 in 33 games during his senior season, finishing with 36 hits in 105 at-bats. The Martin native had seven doubles, three triples and 20 RBIs.

GOLF: The Daly Show

John Daly — golf's most curious attraction since busting onto the scene in 1991, when he won the PGA Tour Championship as a ninth alternate — is back: His suspension served (six months off for "conduct unbecoming" a PGA pro, namely missing his tee-time after spending a rain delay getting hammered in the Hooter's tent last summer) and his lap ting hammered in the Hooter's tent last summer) and his lap dances traded in for lap bands, "Long John" – a character of immense proportions at 5-foot-fit, 225 pounds and (formerly) a fifth of whiskey each day – is back on the links.

My two sons represented the family in that tournament, and they, too, were missing from the winner's circle. Both are nursing what they describe as second-degree burns, and are recuperating from harder work than either had done in the last five years.

Their motor conked out, some miles away from the dock, and they spent the better part of the day paddling in the trough of passing boats. Finally, like Bogart in "The African Queen," the younger took to the water, pushing the boat ahead of him along the shoreline, while his brother kept an eye out for submerged objects, approaching craft and, perhaps, a likely spot to drop a lure.

They join me in inviting Roland Martin, Bill Dance, and any other expert available, to come to Dewey Lake for next year's bass tournament. We have an idea those guys are getting to be just a wee bit too cocky.

Dairy Queen to host monthly classic car show

PRESTONSBURG — Ice cream and classic cars will come together in Prestonsburg on Saturday for the "Cruiz-In" in the parking lot of Dairy Queen.

The car show is a joint effort between Prestonsburg Renaissance and the city, and the first of many events will take place on Saturday, June 6.

According to Brent Graden, director of economic development for Prestonsburg. Dairy Queen is sponsoring the event and will be providing trophies to the winners and car-side services in the manner of classical control of the present and car-side services in the manner of classical care in the manner of classical care with the present and car-side services in the manner of classical care in the

"There are a lot of enthusiasts in the area for cars and the event will really bring the community together." Graden said. "We expect this event to grow. We're looking for big things, and it's good to bring an event like this to downtown. It also gets exposure for local businesses. Anytime I can think of an event that will bring 200 or more people into the downtown area, that's key. They will see the things that down Prestonshurg has to offer. I think that the car show is the kind of event that will be very beneficial to the city, and the Cruiz-In association is just going to get bigger and better. Good things are going to Graden also said that classic music from the 1950s, 1960s and 1970s will be played throughout the day to set the mood for the event, and that plenty of classic cars, hotrods, rat-rods and bikes are expected for

DINNER DIVA

Don't like cooking?

I have received a lot of letters from readers who plain and simple just do not like cooking. Cooking for them is on the same pur as toilet cleaning. Because other options exist for dinner (going out, fast food take out, etc.), they aren't incorporating cooking into their daily routines.

So why write me to tell me if what they are doing is working for them? The deal isn't that it isn't working for them. It's just not working WELL for them. They are concerned about the cost and the nutrition aspects of doing this on a regular basis. I have received a lot of letters from

The cost is astronomical, both financially and health wise. Most families do not have the financial means to eat out every night, period, whether it is healthy or not. A recent study revealed that for every dollar spent on food eaten out, only 27 cents worth of food was actually served. What does that tell you about the economics of eating out? Is going out to dinner every night a worthy investment of your family's dollars?

Lest you think I'm dumping on restaurants, let me assure you I am not. I love going out to dinner and around here, we go out once a week as a family or get pizza or take out. My sweetic and I go out alone (date night) or with friends reg-ularly, too. I'm always on the prowl for a new restaurant and new dining experience.

But the day to day of feeding a family (especially if you have teenagers!) is expensive. We just couldn't afford to feed everyone well (as in healthy, fresh food) if we went out all the time. And while I do love to cook for the most part, there are days when it frankly, is a chore.

A couple of weeks ago 1 had a cold. Then, for a day or so, 1 was dizzy every time 1 got up. It is much better now, but 1 still notice some dizzy spells. I am a basicalty healthy college student, and none of my friends feel like this. What could be wrong?

The most common cause The most common cause of dizziness in otherwise healthy people is an inner ear inflammation, called labyrinthitis. The inner ear is essential in maintaining our balance and spatial orientation. For example, if you spin around in circles, the fluid in your inner ears becomes disturbed, which can create the feeling of dizziness — like the world is whirling around you. Head colds and sometimes middle ear infections cause inflammation of the inner ear, which similarly disrupts the motion of inner ear fluid and causes dizzy spells, often referred to as vertigo.

The inner ear is also called the vestibular labyrinth. It lies deep inside moving.

Acute labyrinthitis, or inflamma-Acute labyrinthius, or inflamma-tion of the vestibular labyrinth, upsets this delicate process. A common theo-ty is that inflammation increases the amount of fluid in the canals, causing excess fluid motion when you move you head and scrambling signals to the brain that create a false perception of movement.

Acute labyrinthitis comes on sud-denly and usually starts a week or two following a cold. As you have discov-ered, it typically comes and goes, and frequently it will heal itself. However, some residual dizziness associated with certain activities may last for several weeks after.

Your doctor would diagnose acute labyrinthiits through taking a medical history and conducting a physical exam. To do so, he or she would move your head in different ways in an attempt to reproduce the dizzy sensation. If there are other factors, like advanced age or a recent head trauma, your doctor may order a head CT scan or other lab tests.

Once acute labyrinthiits is diagnosed, your doctor may suggest medications that help relieve nausea and vomitting, if necessary. If a bacterial infection is causing the problem, prescription antibiotics can help clear it up. Avoiding alcohol and smoking are advisable too. Some people require bed rest or even hospitalization if the dizziness is severe, especially if it causes intense nausea and vomiting. Normally, the vertigo goes away on its own as either the inner ear inflammation heals or your body adjusts to the confusing signals from the inner ear. Staying physically active can help this adjustment process, known as compensation. Eventually, most people make a full recovery.

His story begins with a cow animal of the male persuasion whose bellowings kept householders awake of nights, and whose tossing of his long, sharp horns sent passersby scurrying to distant hillsides. Generally speaking, he made of himself such a fuisance that his owner decided to have those horns off.

But his job was like that of belling the cat—who would do it? The owner of the bull was promptly turned down when he approached men who did odd jobs for him. Finally, he thought of this burly character who was a jack-of-all trades, and wasn't too particular about the trade. He offered the man

$10 if he would saw the animal's horns off short—real short, down below the hairline. It was a deal, and the man went home, sharpened his handsaw and returned for what turned about to be the longest dehorning operation on record. GOOD HEALTH

What to drink when exercising in the heat

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I am taking my two teenage boys backpacking in the Southwest this August. It will be hot and dry, and I am preparing for those conditions. preparing for those conditions. I need some guidance on what fluids to drink. I was taught that drinking plain water is the best way to stay hydrated. My older son says his class was told not to drink plain water, because it could cause brain damage. What is this all about? — F.W.

ANSWER: It's all about

ANSWER: It's all about becoming sodium-depleted and having the brain swell as a result. The condition is hyponatremia.

It used to be taught that, when exercising in hot weather, people should guzzle water at every opportunity, even when they don't feel thirsty. That can be dangerous if the exercise lasts for hours and hours and if the only liquid drunk is water. Too much water dilutes body sodium. That, in turn, can cause brain swelling and, in the extreme, death.

Up-to-date advice is to let thirst be a rough guide for how much liquid you drink. If people are engaged in prolonged exercise, it is good to include some salt in the program. Half a teaspoon of salt and half a teaspoon of baking soda (sodium bicarbonate) in a quart of water can keep body sodium levels from dropping. For you and your sons, it would be advisable to salt your food and to eat some salty snacks—another way to ensure body sodium doesn't bottom out.

Hyponatremia is uncommon. Dehydration is common. Por most, drinking water as a replacement fluid in hot weather is fine. It's not going to lead to a dangerous drop in body sodium. Only those who lose lots of sweat for long periods of time run the risk of hyponatremia by drinking pure hyponatremia by drinking pure

This is advice that doesn't apply only to athletes or back-packers. It applies to all those who are out working in hot weather and sweating up a

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I have hypernesion, and I go to the beach often. Can salt in salt water get through the skin as medical patches get through the skin? My doctors have increased my dose of medicine and have added additional medicines without much improvement in my blood pressure. Could the salt water I swim in be keeping my blood pressure high? -- G.S.

ANSWER: G.S., I know I answered this question before, but you must not have seen it. I'll do it again.

The salt in salt water doesn't get through your skin. Swimming in salt water doesn't raise blood pressure. It improves it. All exercise does. If you miss the answer this time, G.S., I have to drop the question. People will think I'm obsessed with it.

RAY: Then you can try it out and see if the problem recurs. If the problem disappears, then have your guy replace the solenoid. And if the problem comes back, and your wife and kids scream at you, blame us! Good luck, Jim.

Dear Tom and Ray:

On one of the many frigid days

this past winter, my husband and I had a discussion about using (versus not using) the rear defrost in our Buick Century. He rarely uses it and tried to convince me that the rear defrost is one of the biggest energy guzzlers in the car (as compared with the radio, heater, etc.), so he tends to turn it off as soon as he can see out a little. I still contest that visibility should be more important than energy use anyhow. I'm just wondering if indeed the rear defrost actually uses any more power/energy than most of the other standard features in the car. — Kari

You might be surprised to learn that Dalmations, too, were once used to herd livestock. In fact, that's why they've become an icon of firefighters everywhere. Back when fire engines were actually wagons drawn by teams of horses, Dalmations accompanied the firefighters to the scene of a disaster in order to herd the horses to a safe place until the blaze was brought under conblaze was brought under con-

If, like many Americans these days, you're carrying around some extra weight, here's an added incentive to lose those love handles: For every 50 pounds your car loses from its payload, you'll get about a 1 percent improvement in gas mileage. Of course, you could just clean out any junk that's been cluttering up the trunk instead.

"He's Just Not that into You" — This one is good, despite the fact that it has all of the earmarks of a turkey. It's based on a self-help book that was inspired by a line of dialog from "Sex in the City." Nevertheless, this is a funny look at relationships and adult relations. The metropolitan setting — here it's Baltimore — is the perfect backdrop for 20- and 30-somethings to stumble in and out of relationships while wearing the latest fashions. Somehow it works and is worth a look if you like this kind of thing.

a deep haired of people, Legend states that most fled the earth rather than share it with human beings, Unfortunately this one is here and spirits take no prisoners. The men's troubles begin stowly with their radios betching static, though they can sometimes hear distressed voices crying out for help. The men begin to suffer from intense nightmares which reveal the horrors they are carrying around with them. One soldier is constantly reminded of the young child he was forced to kill when she couldn't understand his command to stay still, while another is haunted by the destroyed face of a fellow soldier he accidentally shot. Keller gets to have the most vivid dreams, which tend to star their captive and always end with her mornhine tend to star their captive and always end with her morphing into a monstrous form.

The men are already close to the edge, so it's no surprise that they soon become killing instruments for the Dijin, who then uses them to destroy each other in graphic fashion, producing copious amounts of gore. The demonic spirit appears to delight in making the men kill each other but that doesn't stop it from getting its own hands dirty either.

Pretty soon the group is whittled down to Keller, but appearances can be deceiving and this film boasts a final scare that makes you rethink the whole film and comes off as a horror movie version of the final reveal in the classic crime film "The Usual Suspects." The tongue and its explosive destruction

While watching a message from Creflo Dollar and taking notes, it was time once again to share the subject of "the tongue" and the explosive destruction that share the subject of "the tongue" and the explosive destruction that may result from:it.

"The nuclear bomb is a world of immorality and sets on fire the course of nature. It is set on fire of hell, full of deadly poison." Those strong, words about the world's no one. But, if we should make one small change in the first sentence and insert the world "tongue" instead of "nuclear bomb," would it still be true? God evidently thought of "nuclear bomb," would it still be true? God evidently thought one of His disciples to write those very words about the tongue" (James 3:6. 8).

We seldom think in terms of anything being more evil or destructive than a hydrogen bomb indicate that the unsanctified words which foll so easily from a chattering.

Heard it? Or have you perhaps said it?

Do we have any reason to believe that God draws such distinctions in the qualifying of sin? The answer is found right in the middle of the Bible where with the middle of the Bible where with the God hates. Among the depressing catalog of offenses we find this one: "A false witness who pours out lies, and a man who stirs up dissension, (trouble) among brothers." Proverbs 6:19, This is just another way of describing a whisperer. Think about that word for a moment. It has a soft, pleasing sound to it. Whisperer. A whispers speaks in all languages, he crosses all boundaries, and he is a member of all churches. He is the bearer of false rumor and report. We cannot deny that there is a natural, perverse "quirk" if you will, to every human mind to speak evil of other people. Probably no one will ever be able to explain it fully, but we know it is there because we have all more than likely indulged in it at some time. The usual explanation may not be totally adequate, but it certainly is true as far as it goes. The per-

'Til next week, God bless!

FLOYD COUNTY OPENS REGISTRATION CENTER WHERE PEOPLE AFFECTED BY THE MAY DISASTER CAN APPLY FOR ASSISTANCE

People in Floyd County are now eligible for Individual Assistance from the Commonwealth of Kentucky and the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) as they recover from severe storms, flooding and mudslides that struck the region May 3rd through May 20th.

"We are pleased to receive the federal support in our county approved by this disaster declaration and know FEMA staff are in our area contacting individuals and businesses," said Judge/Executive R.D. "Doc" Marshall. "The people in this area have been looking for the help these disaster programs can provide while they recover."

Judge/Executive Marshall urges anyone who suffered damages in Floyd County to complete an online application at www.disasterassistance.gov or apply by phone by calling 800-621-FEMA (3362) or TTY 800-462-7585 for the hearing or speech-impaired. The toll-free numbers are available seven days a week, 7 a.m. to 10 p.m., until further notice. Help in other languages is available.

A special county disaster registration center staffed by volunteers also will open in Floyd County, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., at the following location, beginning June 1, 2009, and will close on June 5, 2009:

> Martin Community Center Martin, Kentucky

"No one has to wait for an insurance inspection to begin the registration process," said Judge Executive Marshall. "We encourage everyone who needs assistance to take advantage of this service to help speed their recovery efforts."

He said this step also is important to take before anyone visits with state, local, and federal aid specialists who soon will visit the area in a specially equipped mobile disaster recovery center. The date and times will be announced as soon as they are available.

When applying for help, be sure to have the following information available:

- A current telephone number where they can be reached;
- The address at the time of the disaster, and the address where an individual or family is now staying;
- · A Social Security number, if available:
- · A general list of damages and losses suffered;
- If insured, the name of their insurance company or agent, contact information and policy number;
- Bank account coding if they wish to speed up their assistance with direct deposit.

FEMA's Individual Assistance program can help eligible applicants with temporary housing assistance, uninsured personal property and medical, dental, and funeral expenses caused by the disaster, along with other disaster-related experiences and serious needs.
