Floyd man gets year for guns, moonshine

By SHELDON COMPTON

PIKEVILLE — A Floyd County man was sentenced to at least a year in federal prison this week after being found guilty on firearm charges and moonshining.

The U.S. Attorney's Office, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives and the Kentucky State Police made a joint announcement for the final sentencing of Leroy Handshoe, 48, Monday.

Handshoe was convicted on charges of stolen firearms, possession of moonshine equipment and production of moonshine in federal court in Pikeville.

Handshoe was sentenced to 15 months in federal prison on the charges and must serve, according to sentencing guidelines agreed upon Monday, at least 85 percent of the sentence.

In March of this year, Handshoe pleaded guilty to the charges and admitted that he possessed 23 stolen firearms, various pieces of equipment used for making moonshine and, in addition, produced 27 gallons of untaxed moonshine.

After his release, the Hueysville man will be

Patton, Eller disagree on coal's importance for future of East Ky.

By JOHN JAMES SNIDOW

PIKEVILLE — When Lyndon Johnson declared war on poverty from the front porch of an unemployed Kentucky coal miner, three of every five families in Eastern Kentucky lived in poverty, and children ate chimney soot to ward off hunger. While considerable progress has been made since, Appalachia is still the nation's poorest region, and Appalachian Kentucky has more persistently poor counties than any other state.

The peculiar circumstances of Eastern Kentucky — vast stores of mineral wealth, a fabled history of cultural and artistic achievement and a virtually all-

But each journeyed here in search of answers. But Johnson's poverty war has devolved into a series of local skirmishes, the idealism of the past has faded and discussion of the future brings uncertainty and debate.

University of Kentucky historian Ron Eller, author of the recent Appalachian history Lineven Ground, argues that tourism and other industries could replace coal mining and lead to greater prosperity. But former

Food prices decrease for third consecutive quarter

LOUISVILLE — Prices paid to livestock and dairy farmers have been dismal this year and consumers are beginning to see the effect in the form of lower prices for meat and dairy products.

Kentucky Farm Bureau Federation's quarterly survey of food prices throughout the state shows a dramatic decline in the price of dairy and beef products over the past three months, with smaller cuts in the cost for pork and poultry. Overall, the total cost for the 40 basic grocery items was down a whopping 17.9 percent from April, at a total cost of $102.26.

The July survey shows the average price for a gallon of milk at $2.86, which is 21 cents below the April average. Other reductions in the dairy case include a 59-cent drop for a gallon of ice cream and a 53-cent cut for a 24-slice package of American cheese. All told, the average cost for the six dairy products on the list fell by 12.7 percent.

Meanwhile, the average on the five beef products declined by 9.5 percent. The biggest dip was for rib-eye steak, which plunged from $9.95 per pound in April to $8.57. A pound of ground beef fell by 31 cents on average.

As is typical for the summer months, the price of fruits and vegetables was lower. The cost of apples rose by 16 cents, but corn, potatoes, cucumbers, lettuce, peppers and tomatoes were cheaper. The overall average among the produce items was down 8.7 percent from April. Among the 40 items in the survey, only nine were prices higher in July than in April.

Kentucky Farm Bureau Federation has conducted the survey for four decades as a tool to reflect retail food pricing trends and their relationship to what farmers receive for their raw commodities. On average, the farmers' share of the retail food dollar is around 19 cents.

DOE awards $49 million for energy programs in Ky.

WASHINGTON, D.C. — U.S. Department of Energy Secretary Steven Chu announced Monday more than $49 million in American Recovery and Reinvestment Act funding to support energy efficiency and renewable energy projects in Kentucky.

Kentucky is receiving $28.3 million for its weatherization program and $21 million for its State Energy Program. Under the Weatherization Assistance Program, these funds, along with additional funds to be disbursed after the state meets certain Recovery Act milestones, will help the state achieve its goal of weatherizing more than 6,000 homes.

Under the State Energy Program, Kentucky proposed a statewide plan that prioritizes energy savings, creates or retains jobs, increases the use of renewable energy, and reduces greenhouse gas emissions. This initiative is part of the Obama Administration's national strategy to support job growth, while making a historic down payment on clean energy and conservation.

In addition to Kentucky's funding, Secretary Chu also announced a total of more than $153 million for State Energy Programs in seven states and territories including: Arkansas, Georgia, Mississippi, Montana, New York, and the Virgin Islands. Each grantee is receiving 40 percent of their total State Energy Program (SEP) funding authorized under the Recovery Act.

"These awards demonstrate the Obama Administration's strong commitment to moving quickly as part of the country's economic recovery — creating jobs and doing important work for the American people — while ensuring that taxpayers' dollars are spent responsibly," said Secretary Chu. "Today's investments will save money for hard working families, reduce pollution, strengthen local economies and help move America toward a clean energy future."

With the announcement, Kentucky has now received 50 percent of its total Recovery Act State Energy Program and Weatherization Assistance Program funding. The initial 10 percent of total funding was previously available to support planning activities; the remaining 50 percent of funds will be released once it meets reporting, oversight, and accountability milestones required by the Recovery Act. After demonstrating successful implementation of its plan, the state will receive an additional $26 million for its State Energy Program and $35 million for Weatherization, for a total of more than $123 million under the Recovery Act.

Kentucky will utilize State Energy Program funding from the Recovery Act to advance energy efficiency and renewable energy initiatives, creating and saving jobs across the state. Kentucky will reduce energy consumption through energy efficiency and education assistance to state and local agencies, schools, non-profits, and the commercial, industrial and agricultural sectors. These programs will include energy audits and funding assistance for building retrofits in schools and public buildings to reduce operating expenses and save taxpayers money.

Recovery Act State Energy Program funding will also be used to educate students, teachers, and administrators on energy issues, which will expand the knowledge base of younger generations and help provide an understanding of how personal habits can affect energy consumption. Equipping the public and the state's youth with the ability to assess the effects of these habits can greatly reduce our energy dependence.

Under the Recovery Act, DOE expanded the types of activities eligible for State Energy Program funding, which include energy audits, building retrofits, education and training efforts, transportation programs to increase the use of alternative fuels and hybrid vehicles, and new financing mechanisms to promote energy efficiency and renewable energy investments.

Kentucky will use its weatherization funds under the Recovery Act to weatherize more than 8,900 homes over the next three years. The state will give priority to households with children under 6 years of age, and those homes where the housing conditions are sub-standard and the children are at a risk of being removed from the family. The state will also prioritize homes with elderly and disabled family members and low income households that spend a disproportionate amount of their income on energy costs, along with those households that use the highest cost fuels for the amount of energy provided.

The program will also analyze the primary fuel type used in the household, with homes heated with electricity receiving a higher priority than those that use coal.

DOE's Weatherization Assistance Program will be available to families making up to 200 percent of the federal poverty level — or about $44,000 a year for a family of four. Weatherization projects allow low-income families to save money by making their homes more energy efficient, which results in average savings of 32 percent for heating bills, and savings of hundreds of dollars per year on overall energy bills.

A frugal generation

They're calling it the Recession Generation. It's also the generation previously known as Generation Y or the Millennials. But whatever you call these young people, chances are you know one of them or even have one in your family. They range in age from those who are still in elementary school to those in their early 20s.

And, according to research, anecdotes, and a little common sense, many of these young people are learning hard but valuable lessons from the financial mistakes and miscalculations of their elders. Many young Americans are bracing for a simpler lifestyle so as to avoid living paycheck to paycheck or, one day, watching their retirement savings wither away. Currently living through one of the worst economic downturns since the Great Depression, many teenagers and 20-somethings are teaching themselves to live more cautiously, save more, spend less, and eschew materialism.

In an interesting turnabout, whereas previous generations saw wealth and the accumulation of material goods as an expression of freedom, today's young people are just as likely to define freedom as not feeling compelled to achieve economic prosperity or maintain material goals. Job satisfaction is something that remains very important to young people, many of whom tell pollsters they define happiness as doing something you love. Yet, they're realistic enough to know that this might mean living more frugally.

When they do spend money and buy things, they say, they're going to try to be much more thoughtful about it than their parents were. Marketers have long made it their mission to try to persuade U.S. consumers that they deserve the biggest house, the coolest gadget, the newest car, the nicest clothes they could afford -- or, thanks to credit cards, really couldn't afford but could purchase anyway. Many baby boomers fell for that line, and now many of them have very little in retirement savings and have no choice but to keep working.

Young people are right to look at this sort of economic instability as something to guard against. They're on the right track. They need to keep making sound economic choices and plan for a future that could be even more economically unpredictable than what they're experiencing now. The only thing smarter than learning from your own mistakes is learning from the mistakes of others.

A new era may be upon us. No more Keeping up with the Joneses. For the children of the recession, the more accessible -- and more admirable -- goal may just be to keep living within their means. This kind of philosophy is sure to pay dividends for those individuals but also for the entire country. If Americans are looking for a silver lining in the current economic troubles, that will have to do.

Republican candidates melting away

by DONALD KAUL
MINUTEMAN MEDIA

We're beginning to see a pattern developing. Democrats cheat on their taxes; Republicans cheat on their wives.

You remember back when President Obama was trying to put together a cabinet earlier this year. He had to keep shuffling through candidates like a deck of cards before he could find a few who seemed to know the address of H&R Block.

On the other hand, some of our most prominent Republicans, while in good standing with the IRS, are adopting a lifestyle well to the left of whoopee. The latest to fall victim to the deadly sin that's the most fun is Gov. Mark Sanford, of South Carolina, of all places.

The governor disappeared from office a couple of weeks ago, leaving behind stories that he was out on the Appalachian Trail, writing a book. Apparently this is what passes for a credible excuse for going AWOL in South Carolina.

As it turns out, Sanford was in Argentina. With a woman. Not his wife. Caught out, he did what politicians do in situations like that; he held a press conference and issued an apology to his wife, his children, the people of South Carolina, the press corps, strangers passing through the state and the birds in the trees.

This followed closely on the heels of Republican Sen. John Insign, a religious rightist, confessing that he'd had an affair with a former aide and the revelations that Sen. David Vitter, of Louisiana, another card-carrying moralist, had prostitution services on his speed-dial.

The only shocking thing about these stories is that those first two men were identified as "Republican presidential hopefuls."

Who knew? Being a Republican presidential hopeful these days is the political equivalent of being in the witness protection program.

But really, isn't this whole thing a case of role reversal? Aren't Democrats supposed to be the guys who fool round, in the not-so-proud tradition of Kennedy, Kennedy, Hart and Clinton?

Republicans are supposed to be the party of stuffed shirts, whose idea of a satisfying sexual experience is a good round of golf.

And taxes ... Democrats are the people willing to pay taxes to provide for crucial public services -- health care, public transportation, national parks. (I suppose Republicans would say it's easy to be for taxes when you don't pay them.)

Republicans are against taxes in all their forms, for any reason. They would be happy to run the Post Office with volunteers. You might think they'd cheat on their taxes as a form of protest if nothing else.

But that's not the way it is.

I'm getting a little worried about the Republicans, though. If their stealth presidential hopefuls keep dropping by the wayside, they're going to be stuck with the presidential hopefuls in plain sight -- Sarah Palin and Newt Gingrich.

Having Ms. Palin as a vice-presidential candidate was fine, a good joke well done, but contemplating her as an actual president is more than our fragile public psyche, still reeling from the loss of Michael Jackson, should have to endure.

And Newt Gingrich, while an experienced politician, has his own hanky panky history, enlivened by his rumored liaison with a secretary on an office desk.

I am not one to give political parties advice but it's pretty clear the GOP needs help. If Republicans expect to have any hope at all in the next presidential election they're going to have to do more than simply oppose every move President Obama makes. They're going to have to find a candidate.

To cut to the chase, I think they should choose the person who is the very heart and soul of the party as well as its brains -- Rush Limbaugh.

He's smarter than Palin, not as snarky as Gingrich (or, at the very least, no snarkier) and better known than either of them.

It's an old political adage that you can't beat somebody with nobody. Barack Obama is somebody. Rush Limbaugh is about as close to being somebody as the Republicans can muster right now.

Meeks, a 6-foot-4 guard, played three years at Kentucky. He averaged 15.4 points in 81 games with the Wildcats. Starting today, the 41st overall selection in the draft will participate in the NBA Summer League in Las Vegas.

Meeks was an explosive offensive player last season, netting a team-record 54 points against Tennessee. He finished the year as the Southeastern Conference's leading scorer. The proven scorer ranked as one of the country's top college basketball players.

Meeks is expected to back up guard Michael Redd.

ARCA teams turn laps during test at Kentucky Speedway

TIMES STAFF REPORT

SPARTA — Eight of the top 10 teams in the ARCA RE/MAX Series championship standings rolled to Kentucky Speedway Monday to test their wares in preparation for the July 18 Click It or Ticket. Buckle-Up! Kentucky 150.

Current championship leader Parker Kligerman and second-place driver Justin Lofton were on hand to mentor teammates, while nine-time series champion and four-time Kentucky Speedway race-winner Frank Kimmel was hard at work turning laps in his No. 44 Ford.

Kligerman, who owns a 55-point lead over Lofton after collecting a series-leading three wins and a total of five top-five and eight top-10 finishes through nine events, was advising stock car newcomer Dakota Armstrong, but remained intensely interested in the information gained from his team's test laps.

"Dakota has done a little bit of stock car stuff and just wanted a little help getting used to this place; it's the fastest place he's been," Kligerman said.

The 18-year-old Penske Racing developmental prospect saw his original part-time campaign convert to a full-season scenario when he came out of the gate with two top-five and a total four top-10 finishes through the first four races of the season.

While unexpected, his full-time cushion hasn't changed his go-for-brace mentality that has helped him claim victory in three of the past four series events.

"We're coming to every race with the intention to win because we didn't think we'd be here for the full season. We're focusing on the points, but we're also focusing on winning. We really feel we should have won one more in addition to our three," he said.

The Connecticut native's only finish outside a race top-10 this season was a 17th-place showing in the May 9 "Drive Smart, Buckle-Up! Kentucky 150." He plans to make amends for that performance.

"I think it will be hotter than the last race, so the tires might be a little slower and we might move around a little more. I think we have a good package from last race, which is one of the races I feel we at least should've finished second. I kind of threw it away coming of Turn 4 on the inside with a couple of laps to go trying to catch the leaders. We want to come back and get vengeance on this place," he said.

Lofton, who has picked up a win and a total of seven top-five finishes this season, served as lead consultant for his Eddie Sharp Racing teammates Craig Geiss, currently fifth in the championship standings, and Tim George, Jr., ranked 10th in standings.

"I made a couple of laps, but it's actually fun having people wanting you to come out and help them, but it's not as much fun as being in the racecar and doing your own thing," Lofton said.

He'll also be searching for Kentucky Speedway redemption in the "Click It or Ticket, Buckle-Up! Kentucky 150" after placing second in a May event he feels he could've won.

"I'm hoping I'll make up for the first race by being in the finished second with such a strong racecar. We hit something on the track and put a hole in the nose. It's beneficial for me to be here to spend some time on the track and some time off it to see the different changes everyone is making and which way the track is going," he added.

Kimmel will make a run at his fifth Kentucky Speedway victory in the upcoming 150-mile affair.

The Clarksville, Ind., driver and team owner earned his series track leading 11th top-five and 13th top-10 finish with a fifth-place May showing.

"The track was awesome last time we were here. It had a lot of grip. It was a night race and we were running really fast. We were really happy with the car. We probably had a top-three car, but ended up fifth the way things fell out. I'm looking forward to coming back. We're testing today and hopefully we can make the car even better," he said.

Kimmel enters the series' July 11 race at Iowa Speedway third in the series standings after collecting two top-five and four top-10 finishes. The veteran sits 230 points back of the leader, but plans to make a strong run at the young gun in the remaining 12 races on the schedule.

"Parker's been tough and he's going to be hard to beat all year long. He's doing a great job, but he's not really had any problems. We'll just keep plugging along, doing our thing. If we can be more competitive, we'll just push him as hard as we can," he added.

NASCAR Sprint Cup Series driver Kasey Kahne was a surprise guest in the Kentucky garages where he worked on transitioning ARCA RE/MAX Series hopeful Brad Sweet to stock car racing. Kahne set up Sweet's car and turned the second fastest lap of the morning session at 172.712-mph (31.266 seconds). Joey Coulter topped the first session with a 172.767-mph (31.256 second) trip around the 1.5-mile Kentucky Speedway tri-oval.

UK women announce non-conference schedule

TIMES STAFF REPORT

LEXINGTON — Thirteen games against teams from 11 different conferences, including high-profile matchups against Louisville, Middle Tennessee and UC Santa Barbara, highlight Kentucky's 2009-10 non-conference women's basketball schedule, head coach Matthew Mitchell announced Wednesday.

Eight of Kentucky's opponents posted winning records during the 2008-09 campaign, including six with 20 or more wins. Six teams — Boston University, Butler, Louisville, Middle Tennessee, UT-Chattanooga, and UC Santa Barbara — advanced to the postseason.

"We work really hard to construct a schedule that will prepare us for success in the SEC," Mitchell said. "We feel like we have accomplished that this year as our non-conference schedule includes very exciting and formidable opponents."

The non-conference slate includes nine home games, including contests against first-time opponents Boston University and Middle Tennessee and the annual rivalry game against Louisville on Sunday, Dec. 20.

UK Hoops opens its 36th season of varsity women's basketball, its third under Mitchell, with a home game against first-time foe Boston University on Friday, Nov. 13. The Terrers are looking to continue their success from last season after finishing 25-8 overall and compiling an unblemished 16-0 record in America East play.

"Nine non-conference home games should give our fans a great opportunity to get to know our team," Mitchell said. "We are excited about hosting Boston University in our home and season opener and really we just can't wait for the season to start."

One of the highlights of the non-conference season will be a road trip to Santa Barbara, Calif., on Nov. 25. The Cats met the Gauchos last season in Lexington, defeating the Big West regular season and tournament champions, 69-58. Other notable road games include Morehead State (Nov. 17) and Middle Tennessee State (Dec. 28). The Wildcats have not traveled to either school since 1989.

The Wildcats will play host to first-time foe McNeese State of the Southland Conference on Saturday, Nov. 28 followed by a matchup in Memorial Coliseum again the RedHawks of Miami Ohio on Tuesday, Dec. 1. First-year head coach Jamelle Elliott and her Cincinnati Bearcats welcome Kentucky on Friday, Dec. 4 for the first time since 2004.

UK returns five letter winners from a team that finished 16-16 overall, 5-9 in the SEC and advanced to a school-record fifth straight postseason tournament last season. The notable returnees are junior All-SEC selections Victoria Dunlap (Nashville, Tenn.) and Amber Smith (Winter Haven, Fla.) along with senior Amani Franklin (Stone Mountain, Ga.). The trio represents the leading returners in almost every category, including scoring and rebounding. Dunlap averaged a team-high 12.8 points, 9.1 rebounds, 1.2 blocks, and 1.8 steals per game while Franklin averaged 11.3 points and 4.9 rpg. Smith, UK's leader in assists (114) followed with 7.8 ppg. Mitchell and his staff also welcome nine newcomers to the squad, including six freshmen and three Division I transfers.

Season tickets for UK's entire 17-game home schedule, to be completed and released later this summer, are just $45. Fans interested in season tickets can go to UKathletics.com or call the UK ticket office at 1-800-928-CATS.

Coal

Gov. Paul Patton of Pikeville, now back in the mining business, says the region cannot support its current population without coal. Recent reports showing less recoverable coal in the region than presumed have only intensified the long-standing debate and made more urgent the answer to the old question, "What do we do when the coal is gone?"

In his keynote address to the East Kentucky Leadership Conference in April, Eller said he saw "growing potential for local and regionally coordinated tourism." He acknowledged in an interview that Kentucky has precious few "mountain vistas" like those in Tennessee and North Carolina, but the region could still have "cultural tourism based around folk traditions, music or arts and crafts." Eller also says the region could support summer camps, mountaineering sites and weekend escapes for young professionals who live in Kentucky's cities.

Eller is among those who want to wean Appalachia from its historical dependence on coal. "We have to do two things," he said when asked about the future of the Appalachian economy: "Look for other alternatives [to coal mining] and stop limiting those alternatives by destroying the terrain." In order to ready the region for transition to tourism, Eller urges the state to "stop giving out permits to surface mines above 2,000 feet" above sea level — an act that would end most Eastern Kentucky strip mining.

The Mountain Association for Community Economic Development, based in Berea, says promotion of entrepreneurship and "microbusinesses" with five or fewer employees is the key to the region's economic future. MACED President Justin Maxson argues, "If you add just one job at 10 percent of the microbusinesses in Kentucky, that's 5,800 new jobs in the state," and current economic-development strategies "overlook an important swath of entrepreneurship in the mountains."

For decades, the best-known entrepreneurs in the Appalachian coalfield were coal operators. Paul Patton was one. Eight years in Kentucky's highest office has made him less optimistic - or as he puts it, more realistic - about a non-coal economy.

Patton was never a strip miner, but says surface mining isn't an obstacle to economic diversification. "It's a trade-off," he says, holding up his hands like a pair of scales. "You can't have a modern society and a pristine environment. You can't say you want all the benefits [of development] and then ban something every time human life is affected. You just can't."

Patton dismisses Eller's visions of tourism for the region. Leaning over his desk as if to indicate he'd answered this question before, he said, "Travel has a minor — and I mean minor — place in our economy. People in Cleveland don't want to come to Eastern Kentucky for vacation. We're too heavily populated, for one." Nor does Patton think that other parts of Appalachia, those without coal, serve as a realistic guide: "People ask, 'Why can't we just be like Gatlinburg?' ... Well, there's already a Gatlinburg and we don't need two of them." Unlike coal, says Patton, "Tourism is just not viable as a base industry."

Asked about his own administration's progress on Appalachian development, he sat back in his chair for a moment. "Well," he smiled, "it's a lot harder than I expected. I didn't really get the results I wanted." Pressed to say what happens when the coal runs out, he was frank. "Virginia City," he said, naming the Nevada boom town that became a ghost town when its silver ran out.

Without mining in Eastern Kentucky, "the population will be severely decreased," Patton said. "There's not an alternative source of base income aside from coal. Transfer payments will be a source of income, but it will be a much older society. There will be lots of abandoned buildings, schools, houses." Asked if he meant to paint such a bleak picture, Patton shrugs his shoulders sadly. "Well, once the coal goes away, I just don't see what you do to keep the show going."

Sissy Cawood of Pineville, who helped oversee Family Resource and Youth Services Centers during the Patton administration, is also skeptical. "We have to come to terms with the fact that for much of Appalachia — situated away from I-75 and any other major thoroughfare, there is not much hope for attracting industry," she says. "The infrastructure is in place in every little town and county with industrial development sites ... but still they sit idle."

Still, Eller maintains, "public resources have not gone toward looking for an alternative to coal mining" for economic development in Eastern Kentucky.

Though they have different visions of Appalachia's post-coal potential, when asked to identify the biggest impediment to economic development, Eller and Patton both responded with a single word: "education." Cawood agrees, and says the push for job creation too often obscures the more basic problem. "When I hear county judges and chamber of commerce types speaking, it's not about our education system," she says. "It appears to me that they do not understand the connection between education and any kind of development or job-producing success in the region."

Unfortunately, most young people who leave Eastern Kentucky for a college education never come back. Patton said the "brain drain" in the region is "the same as in the cities. Once you get a core of poverty established, it's hard to get rid of and the distillation process starts. The less competent will stay near home where they feel more comfortable while the talented will leave." Eller agrees: "Without opportunities economically, it is easy for young people to lose a sense of purpose, especially when their options are (a) leave or (b) make do in a depressed area."

But what about MACED's vision of entrepreneurship? Economist Ken Troske, head of UK's Center for Business and Economic Research, isn't buying it. "Only 10 percent of these people have college degrees. What kind of businesses are they possibly going to run?" But Al Cross, director of UK's Institute for Rural Journalism and Community Issues, argues that if communities could get even two members of each graduating class to come home after college and go into business, their communities could move forward. And Eller takes heart from a change he has seen in his students from Appalachia. "In the '90s, I was nearly hopeless because my students seemed so uninterested in helping their home region — it was a very 'me' generation," he said. "Now, students are much more interested in the social good rather than their own careers and fortunes — and there's the hope."

Although Patton has been out of the governor's office for six years, he chairs the state Council on Postsecondary Education, and he's still thinking about ways to improve Kentucky's schools. "Teacher pay is the big problem," he said. "We've gotten used to cheap labor in the classrooms because we eliminated opportunities for women in other occupations." Because women now have other options, Patton says, public schools are unable to recruit the same quality of teachers.

"If I could snap my fingers," he said, "we'd have school eleven months per year, with vacations scattered around the calendar." He also believes that a longer schedule would eliminate the teacher pay problem: "If you could increase to $50,000 starting wages, then you could probably extend the school year to eleven months." For Patton, this change would have significant benefits for the state: "If you could pull it off, it would be the single biggest achievement for Kentucky and for American society."

Besides education, Eller and Patton agree on at least one other thing: Local leadership is crucial. As Eller put it, "The greatest tragedy in Appalachia today is the absence of leadership that really has a vision for the future of the region — and for the survival of its people."

Patton seems to agree. As he pointed out, the modern amenities of Pike County, he was asked if other mountain counties are as nice. He grinned and responded with a joke — a telling one. "No," he laughed, "the other counties aren't nearly this nice. But you have to remember — none of those other counties have ever had a governor."

MOVIES FROM THE BLACK LAGOON

'Savage Streets'

by TOM DOTY TIMES COLUMNIST

Revenge flicks got a shot in the arm from this 1980s melodrama that changed up the formula by pitting your typical gang of hoods against a female high school senior.

Tom Doty Times Columnist

The film sets up its story in short order. We meet Brenda (Blair) as she's enjoying a night on Hollywood Boulevard with her girlfriends.

The point of the evening is to entertain Heather, Brenda's little sister, who also acts as the group's mascot. They're over-protective of Heather, a deaf mute, but this was before political correctness.

The evening goes well until Heather is almost run over by a gang of hoods, who call themselves the "Scars" and like to rock leather vests and more eye make-up than a "KISS" cover band.

Editor's Note: For years, Floyd County Times founder and former publisher Norman Allen wrote a weekly column that looked at Floyd County through his eyes.

And now comes the fall after the storm, an attempt to settle down and make an effort not to transmit the jitters to those who may chance to read.

If you think things are rough, consider this description of the unhappiest place on earth—where it was happiness, not to be crying.

CAREFUL, MISTER... Richard D. Howard, another friend whom I miss, is doing graduate work at the University of Alabama, but remembers my need for a lot of levity.

"I happened to be in a local drug store the other day when a lady came in who looked like she'd been grown in the cotton fields. I didn't think there was a mule anywhere outside the hills of Kentucky, but her remarks to the druggist reminded me that rural folk all over, are pretty much the same.

BROADWAY KIDS

Youth from around region are stars of new program

by JARRID DEATON FEATURES WRITER

PRESTONSBURG - Jenny Wiley Theatre is continuing its tradition of innovation in the arts with a new program for area youth known as Broadway Kids.

Broadway Kids was created by Martin Childers, executive director of the Jenny Wiley Theatre. "In the fellowship hall of Saint Martha's Catholic Church, 28 kids and 12 adult cast members from ages 8 to 18 began putting together the show," Childers said.

Mickey Fisher, the writer behind Jenny Wiley Theatre productions "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow" and "Frankenstein," as well as the upcoming "Dracula," wrote "Broadway Kids."

Janice Schreiber returns to Jenny Wiley Theatre after a long hiatus for "Broadway Kids." Schreiber played Miss Hanagan in the 2002 production of "Annie" and presently is the Director of Theatre at Arendell Parrott Academy in Kinston, North Carolina.

Dana Maddox, director and choreographer for "All Shook Up" and last's season's "The Wizard of Oz" and "Honky Tonk Angels," heads up choreography.

Anna Ebbsen, Jenny Wiley Theatre's musical director, is in charge of teaching all the music, and Dave Kazee, of Salyersville, has created musical tracks for the production.

According to Childers, the Broadway Kids Camp has been made possible by a grant from Equitable Resources. The Broadway Kids production is sponsored by Boyd Pediatric Dentistry with additional support from the Kentucky Arts Council.

Frugal grocery tips

When you hear the government is buying "toxic assets" from banks, it really makes you wonder what's next? To me, the words toxic and assets don't belong in the same sentence together—how does an asset become toxic or the other way, how do you assign toxic to an asset? I don't get it and honestly, I don't want to. Between economic stimulation packages, bailouts and big fat bonuses, I just want to scream. "Enough already!"

Our own home economies may be taking a hit and you know what my answer to that is! Take it out on your grocery budget! This is the ONE place that you can hit hard and make a huge difference. Here's another list of 6 things you can do now to make a difference on this week's food budget: 1. Shop EARLY. How early? Well, get there about an hour after the store is open and before the crowds get there. Why? This is when you get your choice of markdowns. I bought a package of 4 plump chicken thighs on sale for about $1 a package—they had a $2 off sticker. I bought all 6 packages and am using them in place of boneless skinless chicken breasts till they're gone. Marked down produce is equally abundant early in the morning. It's worth going early!

Make your own spaghetti sauce off of marked down tomatoes or BOGO canned tomatoes. Make your own everything—it doesn't take much and it will save you significantly. It's not hard to make chicken broth out of the roasted leftover chicken you had Sunday night and that will give you another meal in the form of soup! 2. Make your own baby food. Check out the savings on this one: I bag of carrots is about .89 at my grocery store. A jar of strained carrots is about the same price. You can get about 12 servings out of that

Associate Professor

Q During a recent physical exam, my doctor told me I have a baker's cyst behind my knee and I should "just watch it." He didn't really explain what it was. Can you tell me more about this and whether there is any danger in just watching it?

A A Baker's cyst, also called a popliteal cyst, is a soft swelling that bulges out behind the knee. The cyst is created by excessive production of the knee's synovial fluid (joint fluid), typically caused by either arthritis or a knee joint injury, such as a meniscal (cartilage) tear. Baker's cysts are relatively common. About 20 percent of people with knee problems develop them.

The Baker's cyst, named after the first physician to describe it, is a benign growth that feels a bit like a water-filled balloon. Sometimes a large cyst causes discomfort/stiffness or pain—particularly when standing and sometimes when bending the knee—but typically the cyst presents no symptoms or very mild symptoms.

Baker's cysts occasionally do rupture and cause pain, swelling, warmth and redness or bruising in the back of the leg. These symptoms are very similar to those of deep vein thrombosis, or blood clots, which can be very serious. Severe complications can occur if a blood clot breaks loose, travels through the bloodstream and causes a blockage of blood vessels in the lung. This can cause difficulty breathing and even death. If you notice pain, redness or bruising in the back of your knee, seek immediate medical attention to rule out deep vein thrombosis.

A physician typically will look for a soft mass behind the knee during physical exams. If a small cyst is found, he or she compares the affected knee to the normal one and tests for pain and range of motion to look for signs of a meniscal tear or a tearing of the knee cartilage. If there are signs of such a tear, an MRI test may be done. If the mass grows rapidly or if you experience severe pain or fever, your doctor should run more tests to check for noncystic tumors. Often, though, transillumination—shining a light through the mass—will show that the mass is fluid-filled and, therefore, a benign cyst.

Treatment can range from simply observing the cyst over time, as in your case, to draining the cyst or removing it surgically if it becomes too large or painful. Generally, physicians avoid removal or drainage because these procedures can damage surrounding blood vessels and nerves. Most commonly, the treatment is aimed not at the cyst itself, but at the underlying cause, such as repairing damaged cartilage or treating arthritis. RICE—rest, ice, compression and elevation—can help reduce any inflammation that may have contributed to the cyst. If that is the case, your physician also may advise anti-inflammatory medication.

Over time, cysts frequently disappear on their own. Unless you notice sudden redness and bruising, there is no harm in just watching it.

GOOD HEALTH

Stress tests help detect heart disease

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I have recently been diagnosed with fibromyalgia. Before I was diagnosed, I enjoyed playing many sports and was a very physically active person. Since then, I have had to stop most of my activities. I wish I could be as active as I once was. Every time I try to play or exercise, my muscles ache unbearably. How can I get back to where I was? --R.C.

ANSWER: (R.C. is a high-school-age young woman.) Fibromyalgia causes people to retreat from their usual activities and makes them yearn for the days before it struck.

It's a peculiar disorder, with more unknown about it than known. Its cause hasn't been discovered. More women come down with it than men -- another unexplained fact. No lab test detects it. X-rays, scans and ultrasound show no abnormality.

People afflicted with it complain of widespread body pain. They hurt all over, especially muscles, bones and joints. Exercise aggravates the pain. Joints are stiff early in the morning. Fibromyalgia patients are tired all the time. They never get a decent night's sleep, and that adds to their fatigue.

During an examination, doctors can detect tender points, specific body sites where pressure of the examining finger elicits pain out of proportion to the pressure. There are 18 of these sites, nine on each side of the body.

More than 70 medicines have been used in treating fibromyalgia. Tylenol and anti-inflammatory medicines such as Aleve, Advil and Motrin are helpful for some. Cymbalta and Lyrica are two medicines that have won Food and Drug Administration approval for treatment of this condition.

Exercise is important, but it must be started at a low level and gradually increased. Water exercises are well tolerated. If a person can't keep up with the rest of the class, he or she shouldn't try to do so. Keep exercise at a level that's tolerable.

The booklet on fibromyalgia deals with it in greater depth. To order a copy, write to: Dr. Donohue -- No. 305, Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. Enclose a check or money order (no cash) for $4.75 U.S./$6 Canada with the recipient's printed name and address. Please allow four weeks for delivery.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I have what the doctors call black hairy tongue. Can you tell me about it? --Anon.

ANSWER: Black hairy tongue, aside from its looks, is an innocent condition that comes from the elongation of tongue papillae, tiny projections from the tongue's surface. Gently brushing the tongue three times a day with toothpaste, baking soda or 3 percent hydrogen peroxide can usually get rid of it. If it's not gone in a month, return to the dentist or doctor for a follow-up exam.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: We were told to drink six to eight glasses of water a day. A doctor on television said to drink water only when you are thirsty. Which is the right advice? --R.L.

ANSWER: It's not necessary to drink six to eight glasses of water a day. Most people can let thirst be their guide. In very hot weather, a couple of extra glasses of water keep a person hydrated.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him or request an order form of available health newsletters at P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475.

Salome's Stars Weekly Horoscope

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Don't be surprised if, in spite of your well-made plans, something goes awry. But don't worry. Your knowledge of the facts plus your Arian charm will help you work it out.

Taurus (April 20 to May 20) A personal relationship seems to be demanding more than you feel you're able to give. Best advice: Confront the issue. You could find the situation surprisingly easy to work through.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Resist being pressed into meeting your self-imposed deadline. This is important if you really feel that taking more time to finish a project could save time in the long run.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) A vacation choice seems less interesting than when you first made it. Could it be a matter of the place or the people going with you? Find out before you consider a change of plans.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Someone might be overriding your Leonine logic to get you to agree to "favors" you would normally avoid. Take a new look at what you've been asked to do and see if you've been misled.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Try to keep that emerging "judgmental" aspect in check this week. Too many critiques on relatively unimportant issues could create a lot of negative bounce-back reactions.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Facing unpleasant facts about an associate isn't easy. But ignoring them isn't wise. Ask a trusted (and neutral) friend to help guide you on what to do and how you might do it.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) A shift in opinion regarding a workplace situation could go a long way in vindicating the stand you've taken. But be aware that a satisfactory resolution could still be a long way off.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) It's not like you to choose the easy way rather than the right way to do things. So, follow your instincts and feel assured they will lead you to the right decision. Good luck.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Hold off on making a personal commitment until you find out what it really entails and whose interests are actually involved. There could be hidden facts you need to know.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) A new friend offers an unexpected opportunity that could lead to a career change. Check it out carefully and consider getting an assessment from someone familiar with this field.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) A surprising discovery leads to mixed reactions from those involved in the "revelation." But as you come to appreciate the truth, you'll be able to also come to terms with your feelings.

BORN THIS WEEK: Your love of travel helps you appreciate the wonders of the world. You would find a satisfying career in any travel-related industry.

NOT JUST ANOTHER DOG

Now I learn that some folks, some miles from here, are interested in learning what became of the little cocker which had me on the verge of going back into the dog business, some weeks ago. Well, the dog appears to have been like many of us humans: it was so anxious to make friends that it couldn't stay in one place long, and soon disappeared from our back door. My last sight of it was outside a local grocery store where it was darning back and forth, trying to escape being run down by a car—and, I suspect, still looking for a friend. Don't ask me how I managed to drive away without stopping for a word.

Now, let me tell you about another dog. I am not a fickle sort of a critter—the fickle—but this overgrown Boxer pup is the greatest. He first showed up at grade school here, and adopted, and was adopted by, most of the children. Then he began dividing his time between the homes of Dan Rowland and Carl Watson, on our street, and in his idle time during a bit of tail-wagging at my place.

This dog is a gentleman. I mean to say, a gentle dog. He will chase a cat in long, joyous bounds if the cat will run, and will even give tongue if a cat gets its back up and tries the old spitting game with him. But no wolf's want, but I've seen spices there for next to nothing (2 for $1) and dairy and what-have-you just marked WAY down. Watch it though—some stuff is actually more than the regular grocery store—especially the canned stuff.

After calibration, Dad's wrenches can live on

by TOM and RAY MAGLIOZZI

Dear Tom and Ray:
My father taught me a lot about cars by having me do the work while he "supervised." I don't remember how old I was, maybe 8 or 10, but I was young enough that I had to stand on a crate to reach over the hood to the engine. The lesson of the day was how to change spark plugs in the old family Chevy. I was determined to show my dad how "big and strong" I was, so I cranked on the plug probably more than he thought I could at my young age. As he was standing there smoking his pipe and watching, I snapped that baby off in the block. He never yelled, just kept looking at the engine, and finally said, "Run in and tell your mother we'll be a little late for dinner." That started the next lesson, on how to use a torque wrench (he spared me the task of extracting the old plug and fixing what I had done). I am now 53 years old, my dad is long gone, and I still have the torque wrenches of my dad's that I made sure I got when he passed. They have been treated with respect, and are both the "bar" type and the "clicking" adjustable type. Can I still trust them? Is there any way to check or calibrate them? I still get emotional every time I use them, remembering my dad and the many automotive lessons he taught me. But I know he would be upset to learn that I was using a tool that was no longer fit for the job. Thanks for any advice you can offer. — Jim

TOM: Your dad sounds like a wonderful, patient man. Jim, my dad was like that, too — until my brother came along.

RAY: You have two different types of torque wrenches, Jim. The old "bar and pointer" type were never extremely accurate. But the good news is that they almost never went out of calibration from where they started. And they're good enough for most automotive work. So I think you can continue to use those for things like spark plugs and wheel nuts.

TOM: Right. If you were writing to us about working on your Exelon pressurized water nuclear reactor, we might be concerned. But your bar-and-pointer-style torque wrenches probably are still fine.

RAY: The "click" type are more accurate, but they can go out of calibration over time. Those should be recalibrated if you're doing any kind of precise work.

TOM: If you go online and search on Google for "torque wrench calibration," you'll find a number of labs that you can send your wrenches to. They'll recalibrate them and send them back to you.

RAY: There are even some that will come to your house or place of business and do the calibration on the spot. And since your wrenches are irreplaceable and have great sentimental value, you might want to do that, rather than take the chance of having them get lost in transit somewhere.

TOM: You also can ask at a good local auto-parts store. They may have somebody nearby whom they recommend. Then you can stand over him, and make sure he doesn't mess with Dad's torque wrenches. Good luck, Jim.

Bonehead mistake probably did no damage

Dear Tom and Ray:
Last week, I was cleaning the interior of my '04 Ford Escape. To reach a part of the console between the two front seats, I had to raise the emergency-brake lever. Stupidly, I forgot that I had done so, and drove the car about five miles. How much damage did I do to my brake linings? I must not have had the emergency brake fully engaged, because I was not aware of any braking sensation as I was driving. — Jim TOM: Don't worry, Jim. You're certainly not the first moron to have done this.

RAY: My brother may have been the first. You probably did no damage at all, Jim. You must have had the parking brake loosely applied. If it had been really engaged, one of two things would have happened:

RAY: One, you would have felt resistance when you tried to drive. It would have felt like ... well, like the brakes were on. Or two, you would have smelled the brakes burning after a mile or two. And you noticed neither.

TOM: I guess you didn't notice the big, red light on the dashboard that said "Brake!" either, huh?

RAY: My guess is that, in five miles with the brake loosely applied, you hardly did anything. You were a little bit of surface off the parking-brake drum. On this car, it's a separate unit from the regular brakes, so it would have no effect on your normal stopping.

TOM: To give yourself peace of mind, next time you're on a hill, put the car in neutral and apply the parking brake so it's fully on. Then see if the car rolls. If it does, you can ask your dealer to have a look. If not, forget all about it.

Rental Central

by TOM DOTY
TIMES COLUMNIST

This turned out to be a great week for renters who wanted to get outdoors and hit the beach, while four forgettable flicks joined the DVD ranks.

■ "Knowing" — Always start at the top and this megabudgeted accounts for the biggest waste of money for this round of films. Nicholas Cage (who has been specializing in PG-13 graners for a few years now) stars as a teacher who suspects that a time capsule unearthed at his son's school contains messages that point to his family's involvement in an upcoming disaster. Nothing new here.

■ "Push" — Psychic Americans hide out in the Orient to escape a clandestine organization that wants to recruit them for nefarious purposes in this action-fest that owes a lot to the "X-Men" movies. Chris Evans makes for a decent hero and there are plenty of flashy sequences here, but no attempt to cover any new ground.

■ "The Unborn" — So-so remakes of Asian horror movies are a trend that began with "Shutter" and continues with this lackluster remake of Korea's "A Tale of Two Sisters." Luckily, the original film is easy enough to find for sale or rent, as this effort is only interesting enough to encourage viewers to seek out the original. Enjoy that flick but skip the step of suffering here (alongside a young woman who thinks she is being possessed by the spirit of her twin brother, who dies at birth).

■ "One Missed Call 3" — This horror flick isn't half-bad, though it's nowhere near as good as the first film. It is a little better than the second effort. All three offer a great scenario for techno-phobes, as cell phone calls from the future broadcast the last words of victims before they are killed. If you enjoyed the first film then you'll have an okay time here, but don't expect anything new. That said, the atmosphere is suitably creepy and there is an homage to the "Final Destination" films.

Next week you can come back inside for the American DVD premiere of "REC" and "A Haunting in Connecticut."

Strange ... but true

by SAMANTHA WEAVER

It was comedian and TV host Jay Leno who made the following sage observation: "Give a man a fish and he will eat for a day. Teach a man to fish and he will eat for a lifetime. Teach a man to create an artificial shortage of fish and he will eat steak."

■ Those who keep track of such things say that the most popular name for pet pythons is, perhaps unsurprisingly, "Monty."

■ You've probably heard of haggis, the Scottish dish that is considered (by few, I imagine) to be a delicacy. Unless you're a Scot yourself, though, you probably don't know what's in it. Well, you may not thank me for enlightening you, but here's a rough description: Haggis consists of the lungs, heart and liver of a sheep, mixed with onions, suet, oatmeal and seasonings, then boiled inside the sheep's stomach.

■ Fashion historians claim that England's Queen Elizabeth I owned 3,000 of the elaborate dresses popular during her time.

■ If you're like the average American, you own approximately 10,000 words in your vocabulary.

■ Without a bottle opener, a drunk homeless man in Belgrade, Serbia, was at a loss as to how to open his beer. So he hit upon the bright idea of using a hand grenade to pop the top. A live hand grenade, as it turned out. He popped his own top as well, dying in the incident. There's no word at hand to explain how he got the grenade to begin with.

■ The Great Pyramid of Cheops in Egypt is so large that its base would cover 10 football fields.

time television with two films about social issues (alcoholism and teen crime) before cruising into the 1980s with a slew of popcorn films. She proved she was just as comfortable in trash like "Chained Heat" and "Roller Boogie."

This is one of her better genre pictures, and it also features two other B-movie stalwarts, John Vernon has a great time here as the beleaguered principal at Blair's high school. It's a step down from Vernon's work as Dean Wormer in "Animal House," but he still ekes out a few laughs when he confronts the Scars on school property.

Linnea Quigley is also on hand as Heather and does well as the demure character. She would later land her best role as "Trash," a sexually-obsessed punk rock diva, in 1985's "Return of the Living Dead."

"Savage Streets" is definitely a keeper. Now if they would only give "Chained Heat" a similar treatment.

Beis line: "You're exciting."

It's like you're always going to blow up or something.

They apologize to Heather but have a hard time comprehending that they did anything wrong. Instead they see this as an opportunity to pick up a gaggle of high school girls. The Scars are rebuffed, go figure, and they return to their business.

Turns out their business is providing drugs to local dealers. Actually, we only see them deal with one pusher who owes them money, so maybe they're in over their heads. While the Scars make their rounds Brenda and company opt to teach them a lesson by bowtiring their car and going for a joyride. After they have their fun, they fill the vehicle with the contents of a rancid garbage can and leave it parked on a dark street.

The Scars retaliate by assaulting Heather. It's a brutal sequence that is surprisingly well executed and raises the jewel of the film briefly before it degenerates into a "Death Wish" clone.

When the Scars toss one of Brenda's gal pals off a bridge, she goes ballistic. First she steps off at home to sit in a hot bath while the camera lingers on her buxom figure. Then she's all business as she pours herself into a skintight leather jumpsuit and makes for the warehouse that the Scars call home.

It's one heck of a finale that delivers on the violent retribution that has been promised. This is accomplished by employing bear traps, turpentine and a crossbow in ways that are severely profitable to their respective warning labels.

All this and you also get some great one-liners from Blair that punctuate each killing, a genre staple normally attributed to Arnold Schwarzenegger. But Linda did it first.

This film took its time getting to DVD, but it was worth the wait. It arrives in a two-disc special edition that includes plenty of extras, which include a lengthy interview with Ms. Blair. She's the reason to catch this one.

Blair's had a wonderful career that started with what is arguably the greatest horror film of all time. During the late 1970s she conquered prime-

WOULD YOU WANT TO KILL HIM?

Cycling is one the best ways to improve your health, protect the environment and reduce consumption of Foreign Oil. But even if you don't ride a bike, you can help do your part by watching for cyclists on the road and driving with care. In Kentucky, bicycles have the same rights to use roads and highways as cars and trucks. But keep in mind that cyclists are at greater risk of injury or death in the event of a wreck. That is why it is important to use caution and courtesy when you encounter a bicycle. Pass them only when it is clear, give them a few extra feet when passing, and never do anything to startle a cyclist, such as blowing your horn, passing too close or yelling at them.

Save a life. Share the road.

Knowing when God is in the situation

by KIM LITTLE FRASURE

Tuesday morning checking emails, the daily "Prime Time with God," by Os Hillman, made the mind begin to think. It was titled, "The Lord's not in it."

Oh, the times in our lives when we pray for a situation or "certain" thing and then something so close to what we are praying for happens and then we begin ...

"Is this it Lord? Is this what you wanted me to do?" The analyzing hat is put on and we begin to weigh every single aspect and detail of every little thing. Grab our pens and paper and start jotting the pros and cons.

If this scenario doesn't sound familiar to you, then give a big "Hallelujah!" shout. But I can tell you I know more than a few that experience it. God is so amazingly wonderful to bless us with answered prayers and we have discerning those answers and directions are coming from him and not something otherwise.

A few years ago there was a situation with a certain person and his/her job. This person was so distraught and so frustrated and aggravated. Knowing heart, mind and soul they were where God intended them to be. However, every corner turned there was strife, turmoil and tribulation. The days and nights spent on their knees in prayer for answers and direction on what to do, where to turn. And then they receive a call and an opportunity that sounded so awesome was laid right before them. You know the kind, one of those sounding too good to be true opportunities. But, this person thought it had to be from God. It was coming to them at a time when they had stood and believed and prayed for change in their life.

So, the person took the opportunity, left the place knowing heart, mind and soul where God had put them only to jump from the frying pan into the fire.

Oh, to only be blessed with God's discernment ...

Os Hillman wrote, "The LORD said, 'Go out and stand on the mountain in the presence of the LORD, for the LORD is about to pass by'" (1 Kings 19:11).

"I don't believe that God is in it," I said to a friend. A situation had arisen in which a friend was about to engage in something they felt God was leading them into. Later, the truth of the situation was revealed and our friend made a bad mistake. God was not in it.

Elijah was in a crisis in his ministry. God had just corrected him about his perspective of his situation. If any man needed a touch from God, it was Elijah because he was in such distress he wanted to die.

The Lord intervened and told Elijah that He was coming to talk to him. However, God did not tell Elijah how He was going to reveal Himself. It was up to Elijah to tell whether God was in the situations about to take place.

"Then a great and powerful wind tore the mountains apart and shattered the rocks before the LORD, but the LORD was not in the wind. After the wind there was an earthquake, but the LORD was not in the earthquake. After the earthquake came a fire, but the LORD was not in the fire. And after the fire came a gentle whisper. When Elijah heard it, he pulled his cloak over his face and went out and stood at the mouth of the cave (1 Kings 19:11-13).

We often think God is in our grand projects only to discover that He is not. We may also assume because of the success or visibility of a situation that God is in it. He may, in fact, be in the project. However, God's ways are not always highly visible. Sometimes He chooses to come in the soft, gentle whisper. It is sometimes difficult to recognize it as the Lord because He shows Himself in such subtle ways.

We need to be able to discern when God is actually part of our situation. Only then can we avoid being deceived in thinking God is not behind our projects. Ask God for wisdom in knowing when He is involved in it.

"Til next week, God Bless!

HAVE PUPPETS, WILL TRAVEL ABC puppets adds traveling show

Times Staff Report

The Allen Baptist Puppet Ministry is ready to take their show on the road.

Director Frank Chambers came to the church three years ago with his idea to spread the gospel of Jesus Christ through puppetry.

"I had a vision of what the puppet ministry could mean for Allen Baptist and its youth as well as its adults," Chambers said. "Pastor Arnold Turner got on board very quickly with the ministry noting that its vision could touch the entire congregation."

The Allen Baptist Puppet Ministry performs every third Sunday, adding a traveling show this year with performances for vacation Bible schools, picnics and other occasions.

"We want to extend the ministry by performing at any area churches can extend God's blessings to all in the community," Chambers said. "The puppet ministry sets the tone for the serve and puts a Unfortunately, some parents skip important step number three: Booster seats. Because their children have outgrown toddler seats, they mistakenly assume a safety belt is the next step. However, safety belts alone can be dangerous for kids who are under 4'9". Because safety belts don't fit these children properly, they can cause serious injuries to their face, neck and abdomen during a crash or sudden stop. In fact, kids 2-5 who wear safety belts alone are 4 times more likely to suffer head injuries than kids in car seats and booster seats. In addition, children 4-7 who use booster seats are a whopping 59% less likely to be injured in a crash than those only restrained by a safety belt. Booster seats raise your child up so that a safety belt (designed for adults) will fit and protect them properly. Remember, 4'9" is the magic number. Until then, kids really need to be in a booster seat. Booster seats work like... well, you know.
