PRESTONSBURG – Road work in Prestonsburg is causing traffic delays on Route 114 between Glen View Plaza and Route 1428, as crews work to pave the road. The work began on Monday and is expected to con-clude Friday evening. "A significant portion of this road has to be milled due to the traffic signals," said Matt Moore, section engineer for Highway District 12, "In order to maintain clearance under the lights we cannot raise the road, so we mill out the same donth of aschalt as we are putting

The actual paving of the road will begin today.

In an effort to reduce impact on traffic, a portion of the road will be paved in the late afternoon bours," Moore said. "The section between the Glen View Plaza entrance and the Wal-Mart entrance will be paved late Friday afternoon." Due to expected delays, officials with the highway department are recommending that commuters avoid the work area if possible.

Kentucky food prices show slight decrease in first quarter

LOUISVILLE — The latest Marketbasket Survey, con-ducted by the Kentucky Farm Bureau Federation in March, indicates that retail food prices supermarkets across the te declined in the first quarter of the year. According to the survey, the total cost of 40 basic gro-cery items was $103.62 - down by S1.66, or approxi-mately 1.6 percent, from the same list of items reported in the fourth quarter of 2009. While 27 of the items actually experienced minor increases in average price, the composite Marketbasket average price dropped due to major dips in cost found in the13 items that decreased.

This quarter's average price of Marketbasket items is the lowest it has been since the numbers reported in the third quarter of 2009, reflecting the downward trend of food costs that Kentucky consumers have enjoyed for the last nine enjoyed for the last nine months. National media report that Saturday mail delivery may go the way of the milk wagon, and that a wide majority of Americans think that's ok. Hold on. Congress must act first, and that is not likely to happen soon. Some Congressional leaders worry about trimming mail service, even if only 35 percent of people surveyed by Gallup last summer disapprove. Poll results are guided by the way questions are taked. They don't give a full picture. Knowing that, Congress is not yet ready to decide. The poll questions ran like this: would you rather give up Saturday mail. To possible or lay off postal workers in the worst recession in 70 years? Cast that way, Saturday mail loses every time. But that may not be the 70 years? Cast that way, Saturday mail loses every time. But that may not be the wisest choice. USPS is in grave financial danger. It lost 53.8 billion last year and would have lost over 57 billion if Congress had not delayed payments into a retirce bealth care fund. USPS is under pressure from competitors. It expects far less mail, down from 213 billion pieces in 2006 to maybe 150 billion in 2020. So USPS needs to close some post offices and mail processing plants, regardless of what happens with Saturday mail. Approving 5-day delivery will not spare these offices, unless Congress artificially paops them up. But it must not. The system has to reshape itself. USPS is also required to prepay, its retirce health benefits, leading to annual payments of about $55 billion, along with $2 billion in current payments. These go into the federal treasury and make the deficit look lower. Other federal agencies have far better payment terms. Some worry USPS funding so far up front. Congress may have created a self-fulfilling prophecy. One worrisome issue is that USPS interited a compensation system for its huge workforce from Congress in 1970, when post offices were governed by patronage. Since then, USPS worker organizations have successfully bargained for one of the richest benefits packages in the nation. USPS contributes 100 percent of life insurance benefits and 85-88.75 percent for health insurance, compared to 33 percent of life insurance and 72-75 percent for most federal workers.

most federal workers. Labor contracts typically call for a cost-of-living increase and an increase in base pay each year. Last year the price of labor was up about 7 percent. Those decisions are often made not by postal management but by labor arbi-trators. The result is a per-employee cost about $81,000 yearly. No fair blarning the workers, Pari of collective bargaining is to get the best deal. In the Golden Age of letters, people and businesses buying postage were inured to regular rate increases to pay for raises and benefit increases. But life has changed: USPS now has a price cap on postage to suppress rate increases. The bad news is that e-mail has sucked away personal and business letters.

rate increases. The bad news is that e-mail has sucked away personal and business letters. The good news is that USPS is corning up with new products like the suc-ressful Priority Mail flat-rate box. In-county periodicals mail is growing as some daily newspapers convert to mail. Many have Saturday editions, both daily and non-daily, and need Saturday delivery. That will require workers, and create jobs. USPS labor is 80 percent of its total cost, about 30 percent higher than rational competitors. Admittedly, it has to reach every household, which percentage on the next generation of workers may have no jobs at all. Much of the workforce will retire in the next fly evers. USPS can restructure its compensation system without pulling the rag out from under not just with the rest of the government but with the businesses that are the primary buyers of postge. There are still nearly 300 million reasons to keep a viable mail service because every American needs the mail. We still need public and when it comes-when the Internet falls parcy to evideors. Also, you may have received this newspaper, a greeting card or a catalog you wanted by mail. We believe this newspaper, a greeting card or a catalog you wanted by mail. We believe this newspaper, a greeting card or a catalog you wanted by mail. We believe this newspaper, a greeting card or a catalog you wanted by mail. We postal Service's mission to bring it to you. Perhape Saturday mail will vanish. But that should be the final step, not believe the Saturday mail will wantsh. But that should be the final step, not method was and will wantsh. But that should be the final step, not the rest in reinventing USPS, because cutting service never helps a business grow. It is a national treasure. We need to keep it viable. - National Newspaper Association

SPRAREP OF THE HOUSE When the Kentucky House of Representatives gaveled in the 2010 Regular Session at the start of the year, my colleagues and I knew that our top priority would be to balance the state's budget in the face of a $1.2 billion deficit while saving existing jobs and creating new ones in Kentucky. I am proud that the budget passed the House was able to meet both these goals. It protected our class-rooms and shielded our most vulnera-ple citizens from deep cuts while investing in needed schools, roads, water and sewer projects and creating 22.000 jobs for Kennuckians. Our investment in Kentucky's future is an important part of the House's badget. The "Kentucky Jobs for Kentucky Families" program would provide the infrastructure our state needs to move forward. We would provide the infrastructure our state needs to move forward. We believe that by investing now, when hoth construction costs and interest rates are low, we can replace our old-est schools and complete other needed projects in our communities while providing good paying construction jobs for our citizens. The materials purchased and wages paid for these projects will touch and improve every part of Kentucky's economy. Unfortunately, our jobs program has not found much support in the

It is very difficult to even discuss the realities that many women do not wish to cause total turmoil in the life of the person they are seeking relief from. Many times, women don't want a man to lose his job. They really don't want him to have taken away the privilege of hunting, perhaps with his children. Many times, they want something less than the catastrophic charges that go on a man's record and will affect him from getting a job the rest of his life.

It also would severely restrict our ability to help recople when they need it the most as we struggle through the aution's worst economic crisis in decades.

Second, much of what the House would borrow would be used to help school districts rebuild or replace the state's very oldest school buildings, buildings our children and teacher should not be using for classrooms. So, for less than one cent of each state tax dollar, we can put tens of thousands of people back to work and replace every dilapidated school building in the state, while providing improved infrastructure to thousands of Kentucky's families and business-es. Although face-to-face budget negotiations between House and Senate leaders ended a little more than week ago, the House is committed to having a fair, workable budget in

There's a little flagstone pad about four feet square just inside the front door (so you don't step right ont the hardwood floors with sop-ping-wet feet), and I stepped onto that little pad and said. "This is it" — and door, and I stepped onto that ittle pad and said. "This is it" — and door. The agent thought I was having a meldown after just two days of looking, but I knew what every room in that house would look like even before I walked through it; that's how certain I was that this sup vice." . I's not a new house (built in 1936), and it certainly has its quirks (such as closet doors that mysteriously open by themselves in the dead of night... and we won't even go into the joys of a 1936 toilet). But I've never regretted buying the house. Brian loves to won't even have to buy any furnitare" comment. And Brian himself turned iffor a gardening flond overnight; sneakinghome from the garden center with another half-dozen rose bushes. . I was bitten by the gardening bug. to. I even built a kidney-shaped stone flower garden (well, it hot's kidney-shaped to me) at the corner of our lot, where every year I plant a whole flock of stoplight-red geraniums. In fact, it's by far the most destruc-tive pest of ornamental and turf plants in the eastern United States, with more than $450 million spent each year to control it and replace damaged plants. But here's some amazing news: It turns out that if I could just somehow shove my dry-rock geranium garden a little closer to Brian's rose bushes, his beetle problem might be solved! According to scientLists with the beetle problem might be solved! According to scientLists with the Agricultural Rk-search Service (ARS), geraniums are one plant that the Japanese beetle might want to avoid. That's because if a Japanese beetle eats geranium petals, within about 30 minutes of chowing down on these lowers, the beetle rolls over on its back, with its legs and antennae slow-y twitching, and is paralyzed for sev-eral Muns!

But if they're out in the field when this happens, they're helpless prey for any predator that comes along while they're inca-pacitated. pacitated.

pacitated. It's not actually "new news" that gerafium petals can poison Japanese beetles; that was reported in scientific papers as far back as the 1920s. But nobody's taken a closer look at this phenomenon in many, many years. That's changing now, with ARS scientists in Ohio working on a natur-al botanel foremulation for control.

Joseph Sammons found the tire and what he said appeared to be a school bus door several years ago buried on property he bought from Ottis Cesco.

"Very Worst Thing" producer Scott Hall worked to uncover the tire recently. Sammons contacted tilmmakers about the pieces shortly after seeing the documentary in February.

PRESTONSBURG - A tire may be a simple object made out of rubber, but a tire uncarthed in Prestonsburg could be much more than that, accord-ing to Michael Crisp, director of "The Very Worst Thing," a documentary about the 1958 school bus disaster.

Very Worst Thing," a documentary about the 1958 school bus disaster. "I was contacted by a gentleman in Floyd County named Joseph Sammons, and he said that he owns the property where they pulled the school bus into the backyard," Crisp said. "He said that in his yard a few years ago, he found the school bus tire and the sliding door while doing some landscaping, but he covered them both back up. Mr. Sammons bought the property from Ottis Cesco, who lost two children in the crash." According to Crisp, Sammons decided to uncover the lire after watching the debut of "The Very Worst Thing" at the Mountain Arts Center in February. "The and his wife saw the film and they asked us if we would like to come

"He and his wife saw the film and they asked us if we would like to come out and see the bus door and tire," Crisp said. "We were able to locate the tire, but not the bus door. We've since cleaned it up a bit and have been investigating if it's the bus tire or not, and all preliminary indications are that it is. This is fairly big news because the fate of the bus after it was brought up from the river has always been a mystery, and there was a popular belief that it was buried, on the river-bank after being extricated from the river.

It was also reported that the bus was destroyed after being transported out of the area, leading to speculation that a malfunction in the bus could have caused the accident. Crisp hopes to donate the tire to the Floyd County Rescue Squad. The squad was formed in response to the bus disaster.

bus disaster. "Our intent is to find out if it's indeed a piece of the bus and then we'd like to donate it to the rescue squad or some kind of historical group that would be interested in preserving and displaying it. We might bring it with us to a few of the upcoming showings of the film, including the next time we're at the MAC." The film will be shown again at the Mountain Arts Center on June 25.

Filmmaker Michael Crisp said he might put the tire on display dur ing upcoming showings of "The Very Worst Thing."
