Prat reported he found Hall "passed out" in the vehicle.

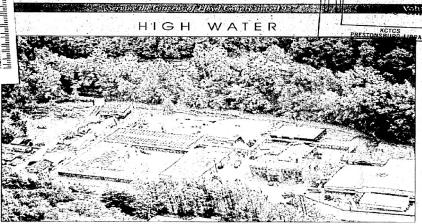

"I had to yell to wake up (Hall) and he had a $20 bill in his hand," Pratt wrote in his citation.

In his hand," Prat wrote in his citation. Hall allegedly exited the vehicle and, while doing so, dropped a Xanax on the ground in the process. Pratt said he gave Hall several sobriety tests, stating the Wheelwright resident was "unable" to perform several of these and adding that Hall refused a blood test when later transported to McDowell ARH emergency room.

Before Pratt transported Hall to the hospital, he says in his report, Hall admitted to abusing drugs prior to being taken into custody. (See ARREST, page 8)

Eating local: Farm-to-school gaining ground as way to fight childhood obesity and otherwise improve students' nutrition

by TARA KAPROWY KENTUCKY HEALTH NEWS

With the faint hue of green appearing in thou-sonds of gardens and farms, the growing season has offi-cially begun in Kentucky. While most of the resulting produce is destined for store shelves and personal While most of the resulting produce is destined for store shelves and personal pantries, there is growing demand for it to appear in kitchens that haven't seen locally-grown fruit and veg-etables for decades but are keys to children's nutrition. Schools are the newest frontier in sustainable farm-ing, with their collective power not only capable of transforming the agricultural landscape, but also fighting childhood obesity, one of the biggest health crises facing the nation. On April 26, the U.S. Department of Agriculture established a rule that will bet schools give preference to local, unprocessed farm products when they buy for the National School Lunch Program and other USDA programs.

While farm to school is gaining traction, it is not a new concept. Julie Tuttle, food nutrition coordinator at Count Montgomery County Schools, is one of a handful Schools, is one of a handful of food-service directors who have been serving locally-grown produce for several years. Farm-to-school programs have been slow to start in many places because they face logistical, legal and other challenges. Many school districts want their suppliers to carry a S1 mil-lion liability insurance poli-cy, which they may not be able to afford, and be certi-fied through the Good Agriculture Practices Program, education they may not be able to get. Farm to school's biggest drawback is that it takes more work. Unlike food delivered to schools by huge providers, locally-raised produce may need to be washed and processed, which takes more staff or volumes.

The market has evolved "The market has evolved a very convenient system," said Mark Swanson, an assistant professor in the University of Kentucky College of Public Health. He said school food-service directors "have one or two providers they can call and they can get what they need. Farm to school gets a lot more complicated. ... It takes a really motivated per-son to tackle that on their own."

"Even when wholesale apples are available for less, they continue to buy our apples because of the quality and supporting locally grown. . . Probably the biggest compliment we've gotten is talking to some cafeteria managers who said they're seeing more apple cores in the trash bin instead of apples with one or two cores in the trash bin instead of apples with one or two bites out of them." While farm to school is gaining ground in Kentucky, it is more established in the upper Midwest, the Northeast and California. Kelly Crossley, food-service director at Independence School District in Iowa, started her program in 2008.

main goal is the same as most food-service directors in the program: healthier cating. "If you can get kids to eat more fruit and vegetables, hopefully those items will replace something more fat-tening they would have eaten otherwise," she said. To reinforce the effort, stu-dents meet the farmers in the classroom and travel to the farms, and Crossley posts in the cafeteria signs noting where the local foods were grown. Crossley said her staff only casually monitors what students take in the lunch line, not what actually gets eaten, but "The cooks have told me ... that they can tell which kids have been exposed because they're tak-ing more." g more. ## Reaping what we sow

by DR. WILLIAM SMITHWICK President and CEO Sunrise Children's Services

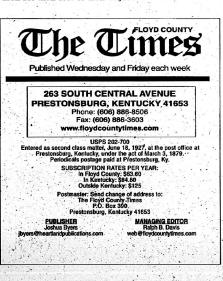

It's that time of the year when gardeners are out-side planting, weeding and doing the hard work to grow the produce and flowers they will enjoy the rest of the year. It takes a lot of nurturing and care to have a successful garden, but any amount of abuse and neglect can bring ruin. Families are much like gardens, but what we pro-duce in our homes is much more valuable and often more fragile than what we have growing outside. Our children need proper nururing and care, they need love and understanding and they need to feel safe and secure in their home. Sadly, for thousands of children in Kentucky, abuse and neglect have taken their toll.

taken their toll. Left to suffer in these conditions, our children will

Left to suffer in these conditions, our children will struggle like a flower overtaken by weeds. Sometimes the only hope is to transplant the flower into a better environment where it can be properly cared for and given the attention it deserves. Likewise, children who suffer from abuse or neglect often need to be removed from their environment and placed into a home where love abounds and they are made to feel valued. May is National Foster Care Awareness Month and Sumise Children's Services would like to extend best regards to the wonderful people who open up their homes and their hearts to children in need. Giving a child a stable home allows them the oppor-unity to grow and thrive and to realize the potential they have in life.

unity o grow and thrive and to realize the potential they have in life. Sunrise has been caring for children since 1869, and today we have over 500 children in our care through a statewide network of foster homes and residential programs. Our aim is to provide the absolute best support and assistance to our foster parents and the children we serve. We realize the effort put forth in these foster homes can truly deter-mine the future of these children, and they deserve the best we can offer. The need continues to be great. Thousands of children across the Commonwealth still suffer from abuse and neglect and more foster homes are needed to give these young people a safe refuge and a fresh start.

to give these young people a safe refuge and a fresh start. While a good gardener is rewarded by the fruits of his or her labor, a good foster parent's sense of satisfaction is even greater when they realize the dif-ference they can mean to the life of a child. Maybe you'll watch a child learn to trust, see him smile, hear her laugh or watch them begin to excel at school and begin to believe in themselves. The joy foster parents receive when they see a child blossom with potential is a thrill unlike any other. • If you'd like more information about becoming a foster parent, I invite you to check out our website at www.sunrise.org or you can call toll-free, 1-855-33-I-CARE. Thanks again to all the foster parents who may be reading this. The harvest of your work will not be temporary, but rather will be felt in the lives of chil-dren for their rest of their days.

Making an exception for Osama bin Laden

by DONALD KAUL OTHERWORDS

OTHERWORDS I don't like to exult in the death of people, not even people I don't like. I think it's bad form. I'm making, an exception in the case of Osama bin Laden, however. From the point of view of a comfort-able middle-class American (which I certainly am), he was evil incarnate -a ruthless mass murderer who inspired the massacre of thousands of innocent men, women, and children without a trace of remorse. He was our implacable enemy and I'm glad he is dead. To many on the other side of real-be is dead. To many on the other side of real-ity, however - a stateless Palestinian or an aggreived Arab nationalist - he was a great hero. This was no tin-pot dictator lining his pockets with money stolen from the Arab people, after all. No, he was a rich kid, a billion-aire's son, who forsook the easy life to dedicate himself and his fortune to returning the Islamic world to its for-mer glory. His worldview called for accomplishing this by crushing Israel, driving Western "Crusaders" from Muslim soil, and resurrecting an Islamic caliphate that harkened back to the Middle Ages. There are many street-corner imams in the Middle East who want the same things, but they, don't have what Osama bin Laden had: Money, which he spent to finance paramilitary operations and training centers around the world.

finance paramilitary operations and training centers around the world. 9-11. If the War on Terror is really a journey of the world of the world of the world of the world's strates in the history of the most brilliant and successful unlitary attacks in the history of warfare. It as single stroke, an army of less than two-dozen barley trained troops, armed mainly with box cutters, prough the world's greatest military prover to its knees. It wasn't merely that the attack of the lives of nearly 3,000 Americans. Nor, astonishingly, that it utterly destroyed the most iconic symbol of our capitalist system. It was that it attacked our self-confidence and delivered a blow to our sease of well being from which we have yet to recover a decade later. Many Americans now find themselves in secure and nervous in the world's mericans now find themselves inscure and nervous in the presence of people who look like they might be Muslims. We allow ourselves to be subjected to all manourselves to be subjected to all man-ner of indignities at airports in the name of security. We go to war with-out hesitation and spill endless blood and treasure in an attempt to ensure it won't happen again. We are afraid as once we were not, not even in the darkest days of World War II when the Nazi monster threat-ored us:

War II when the Nazi monster threat-ened us. War II was what bin Laden accom-lished is. It is life's work. If he wasn't the certaind of the 9-11 assaults, the certaindly was its iminating force. And that is why I'm glad he's dead. Will be denise end the Global War on Terror? I yery much doubt it. But he was the global face of terror-ism and, as such, a powerful symbol. That symbol is no more. Certainly, there will be retaliation. But you can't fight a war by being afraid of retaliation. I was much amused by the fential candidates to bin Laden's assassination. They praised the work of our troops, of course, but it was. Ard to find the name of President Obama in their statements. It was as though the troops had done it all' on their own, without leadership. As much as they would have it totherwise, Barack Obama is the pres-ident of the United States and our commander in chief. He deserves full

That's right, there is indeed a new. royal couple gallivanting the whimsi-cal streets of Lordon. Prince William and Catherine's wedding went off without a hitch, as it slowly drove all of us mad out of, our collective gourds. There was no end in sight. Thankfully around that time, Osama bin Butthead got double-tapped in the brainpan by a hardcore, yet-to-be-identified Navy SEAL who I can only imagine is just as cool as Jesse "The Body" Ventura. We should have sent Ventura over there to sort

Jesse "The Body" Ventura. We should have sent Ventura over there to sort this whole mess out to begin with after 9/11 — him and Chuck Norris. The end. Roll credits. Except in my movie, I don't think America will dump Osama bin Fish Food into the ocean only a few hours after his death. That doesn't sit well with me.

with me. So, let me get this straight, we throw billions of dollars, tens of thou-sands of troops and wait nearly a decade before we capture Osama bin Floatin'. And what do we do once we have him? We showe a few cotton swabs in a few terrorist body orifices and nudge him off an aircraft carrier as his sorry carcass drops 20,000 leagues under the sea, presumably to become a member of the marine food chain.

chain. Pretty good idea as far as potential government cover-ups go. Before long, Donald Trump will be asking to see a death certificate. And when has dumping a body in the ocean ever solved a problem? I seem to recall that not working out so hot for Teddy Kennedy. Besides, aren't autopsies, dental records and preserving evidence all overrated endeavors in the scope of world history?

records is a prosection system and the control of the scope of overnited endeavors in the scope of overnited endeavors in the scope of movernited endeavors in the scope of th Involved.) While my knowledge of the Muslim faith is largely exaggerated, it's safe to assume dumping a corpse into the sea isn't a part of any reli-gion's burial customs, except maybe pirates. I mean, who does that besides Jack Spartow?

Jack Sparrow? There is certain finality to that option, isn't there? Was throwing him into an active volcano off the table? Heck, we might as well have shot him into space or fed him to Kirstie Alley (she would consume him, bones, beard and all). At least they took a picture of Osama bin Headshot's body before re-enacting a perverse version of Ernest Hemingway's classic, "The Old Man and the Sea." Like any dorm room dweeb with an iPhone and a pirated copy of Photoshop can't alter a digital photograph these days; I came across a convincingly authen-tic photograph last week that depicted Theodore Roosevelt sporting a machine gun as he battled Chewbacca. Now, I don't remember that chapter of American history. that chapter of American history. But what if I'm wrong? What if he

But what's if I'm wrong? What if he is dead? And more importantly, what if OBL is chilling down at the bottom of the Arabian Sea like Jason Voorhees was doing at Camp Crystal Lake, bidling his time before making an undead encore performance on an unsuspecting world. Either that or parts of his body — once they reached the ocean floor — will (and somewhat ironically) turn into oil over time to fuel automobiles. This will take thousands of years, of course, and I shudder to think what a gallon of gas will cost then. But imagine going to the gas station and pumping $20 of unLaden-ed gaso-line. But that's if he is really dead. And any suggestions? Thanks. — Andrew & Chrissy TOM: How should your daughter clean the headlin-er, Andrew? Very, very carefully. RAY: You're right to worry about it. Somehow, headliner technology hasn't managed to keep up with, say, the physics they're using in the Large Hadron S u p e r c on d u c t in g Supercollider. TOM: And we won't really know if the technolo-gy has improved until the current generation of cars gets to be 15 or 20 years old.

But that's if he is really dead. And if he isn't, then it means only one thing: Obama bin Lyin'.

Tom and Ray offer solu-

Iom and Hay offer Solute tion to slippery problem Dear Tom and Ray: I have a 1998 Chrysler Town and Country Minivan with the six-cylinder engine. Whenever I drive through a puddle, the belt slips off. All of the original undersariage guarde are engine. through a puddle, the slips off. All of the original undercarriage guards are still present and in factory condition. I have replaced the water pump, idler pulley and tensioner, to no avail. This occurs so often that I must carry a specially mod-ified wrench underneath my driver's seat so I can stop belt back on. I Scient driver's seat so I can sto and put the belt back on. have become so driver's seat so I can stop and put the belt back on. I have become so proficient at this that I can put the belt back on in less than four minutes. The slightest amount of water will cause the belt to slip off. During the winter melt and spring through a field of land mines and avoid all pools of water, regardless of size. I have a sked numerous mechanics, both shadetree and dealership, but have stumped them all. Can you explain the cause and pro-vide a solution so that I may hang the wrench back up in my garage? — William RAY; Well, we can't fix your car, William, but if you really can change a belt in four minutes flat, I'd be happy to offer you my brother's job. TOM: Actually this is a common problem with the help of something slip-pery – like some water – it often can succeed in pulling off the belt. TOM: And in fact, Chrysler issued a Technical Service Bulletin for this problem. For $300, Chrysler will replace the mounting bracket of the idler pulley to better align it with the other pulleys. RAY: Unfortunately, we've been told that often this doesn't solve the prob-lem. TOM: So about five years ago, Gates came up with a set of replacement parts you can have installed that WILL solve the prob-lem.

that WILL solve the prob-lem. RAY: The Gates kit con-tains a special double-sided, grooved belt and matching grooved tensioner and idler pulleys. So the belt mathes tock and the place of the tock of the place of the makes it much harder for the helt to come off.

makes it much harder for the belt to come off. TOM: The kit costs just over $100, and your mechanic can get it from his Gates supplier and install it, for you (we're told. Goodyear has a similar kit). Then you can hang that wrench back up until the next thing breaks. Good luck, William.

Her fielding percentage is. 890 and her batting average is 260. She is the most solid player on our team. More importantly, she is the one that the other girls seek out when they are having any problems. She has set a fine exam-le for our school." When asked about her ordeal. Case reptied, "Through the nume day I would play softball again and that one day my vision would return. It was at tough battle, for I faced the real-ity dual to learn to do the simple things in my life all over again, because my depth perception was off due to the blindness in my eye. When I was at timy worse in my battle, I undo to God for an answer. It it wasn't for the faith and myters of many, I would have never made it through this hor-ible time in y life and the softball field nonce again to play the oportunity to step on the softball field nonce again to play the sport I love so much.
