"Back in 2003, other legislators and I were d by KBML that it would be able to identify those doctors who are abusing their power to prescribe controlled substances and then act to stop this from happening." Stumbo said during a meeting of the General Assembly's Program Review and Investigations Committee. "To date, I have seen no proof that this has taken place. The problem is worse than ever. All you have to know is that more people die from prescription drug overdoses now than in car accidents."

However, KBML officials told committee members that they do not believe the board has the authority to drill down into the data, a point Stumbo disputed.

'Essentially, the board is flip-flopping on what it promised in 2003." he said.

Stumbo, who focused on limiting misuse of oain medication when he was attorney general.

The Floyd County Sheriff's Office says a Pike County man used this truck to steal diesel fuel from a local mining compney.

Pike man charged with stealing diesel fuel

MARTIN — A Pike County man was arrested this past week-end after officials say he stole roughly 200 gallons of diesel fuel. According to a Floyd County Sheriff's Office report, Danny Stewart, of Elkhorn City, was arrested Sunday, after deputies caught the man stealing fuel.

"The violator took approximately 200 gallons of off-road diesel fuel from NFC mining fuel tank," said Deputy Robert Caudill is his report.

According to Caudill, "Fuel was pumped into two tanks and a 55 gallon drum that was strapped on to the violator's rollback truck."

According to the report, Stewart is an employee of Blackhawk Mining, in Martin.

Stewart is charged with theft by unlawful taking over $500; a Class D Felony. If found guilty, he could receive 1-to-5 years in prison, and a $1,000 to $10,000 fine.

Weaknesses remain, despite better numbers

FRANKFORT — A projected $192 million surplus this fiscal year and future modest growth predictions should be tempered by reality says the leader of a state research organization.

The numbers may put Kentucky back to prerecession revenue levels many states would envy, says Jason Bailey, director of the Kentucky Center for Economic Policy, but further investigation reveals another story.

Kentucky Center for Economic Policy, but further investigation reveals another story.

"What is continuing, unfortunately, (and) is expected to continue, is the decline in revenue as a share of the economy, which is a measure of how much we have relative to our needs."

According to Bailey, the idea of cutting or eliminating corporate and personal income taxes would be the wrong approach at the wrong time because those taxes have returned more quickly because those taxes have returned more quickly than sales taxes nationwide.

"What we need to do is broaden the base of our tax system, which means that the sales tax and the income tax both have too many exemptions and exclusions. These need to be taken out, so it's more fairly and broadly applied."

Bailey says the Bluegrass State has gained about a third of the jobs lost from the 2008 recession, adding only about 1,500 a month. Bailey believes the stalled economy needs a government boost to help turn the corner on job creation.

"We can invest in infrastructure. The U.S. needs a significant improvement in a wide range of infrastructure that can create jobs now. We can extend unemployment benefits. We can provide assistance to the states that have higher Medicaid enrollment."

vide assistance to the states that have higher Medicaid enrollment."

According to Bailey, part of Kentucky's economic fate, will be determined by any further cuts in federal spending that reduce or cut services and programs many Kentuckians depend on Bailey concedes that could be a possibility as part of the budget-cutting plan in the new debt-ceiling agreement.

The answer lies with reforming the state's tax code says Bailey.

According to Bailey, the state's unemployment rate creates a need for public services which can put pressure on revenue.

It is these forces, says Bailey, that will create a slim-budget for lawmakers to work with in January.

Marcum selected to participate in AP reading program

PIKEVILLE — Brad Marcum was selected to participale in the annual Reading and scoring of the College Board's Advanced Placement Examinations this June in English Language.

Each year, the AP Program, which is sponsored by the College Board, gives more than 1.5 million capable high school students an opportunity to take rigorous college-level courses and examinations. Based on their exam performance, successful students can receive credit and/or advanced placement when they enter college. More than 2.9 million examinations from more than 30 AP Courses were evaluated by over 10,000 AP Readers from universities and high schools. Representing many of the finest academic institutions in the world, these educators come from the United States, Canada and abroad. The AP Reading is a unique forum in which academic dialogue between high school and college educators is fostered and strongly encouraged. "The Reading draws upon the talents of some of the finest teachers and professors that the world has to offer," said Trevor Packer, vice president of the Advanced Placement Program at the College Board. "If fosters professionalism, allows for the exchange of ideas, and strengthens the commitment to students and to teaching. We are very grateful for the contributions of talented educators like Brad Marcum."

Over 1,000 readers this year evaluated over a million English Language essays. "Only a dozen readers were from Kentucky this year, so it was an honor to be there," said Marcum. "The AP Reading has become my favorite professional development opportunity as high school teachers and college faculty are able to come together to discuss writing standards. I always enjoy the interaction, seeing old friends and meeting new colleagues. It was our first year in Louisville after being held in Daytona Beach the previous 10 years, but I was glad to hear how many readers enjoyed their time in Kentucky."

Marcum, who also serves as a reader of SAT essays online, is an administrator for the Pikeville College School of Osteopathic Medicine (PCSOM) where he is the director of Academic Data Services, working closely with the PCSOM faculty and students. He has also been administrating online learning since 2002. Marcum serves as a volunteer assistant women's basketball coach for the He that lived in Pikeville since 2002 after teaching English for 16 years at Wright State University and Central State University in Ohio.

Fix the broken bail bond system

by TIMOTHY MURRAY

Every day in America, half a million people sit in local jails awaiting trial. They are there because they can't afford to make bail. Two of every three of these people are charged with nonviolent offenses and are simply waiting to face their

Meanwhile, well-publicized and well-off defendants like Meanwhite, well-publicized and well-off defending the former International Monetary Fund head Dominique Strauss-Kahn can make bail easily, no matter how high, and are released before court action. In effect, they have purchased their freedom until their trial begins.

The cost to local taxpayers to feed and house those who can't make bail is $9 billion a year. We could save those dollars, ease prison overcrowding and bring more justice to the entire system with some relatively simple reforms.

entire system with some relatively simple reforms.

Nearly 50 years ago, then-Attorney General Robert F.
Kennedy convened the country's first national conference on this issue, describing the pretrial justice and bail system in America as "unsafe, unfair and ineffective." Unfortunately, that description remains accurate today. This outdated and dangerous system only benefits the special-interest, for-profit bail bond industry. It favors those who have the money to obtain bail, regardless of how dangerous those people are.

Recently a group of prestigious criminal justice organizations, together with the Office of Justice Programs at the U.S.
Department of Justice, convened another national meeting on pretrial justice and bail reform. The 2011 conference examined the nation's progress toward a fair, safe and accountable system and sought to outline proven solutions.

States like Illinois and Kentucky banned for-profit bail bonds decades ago. Instead, they substituted a system that relies on family and community supervision for those charged with nonviolent offenses. This includes frequent contact with with nonviolent offenses. This includes frequent contact with a supervising officer, mandatory assessments for substance abuse, and mental health and drug testing. The reforms also included simple court reminder programs so that nearly everyone – 92 percent of those awaiting trial in Kentucky -- shows up in court to face their charges.

We need to fix the unjust pretrial system in which dangerous criminals who happen to be wealthy can purchase their freedom while nonviolent offenders must remain behind bars freedom while nonviolent offenders must remain behind bars. We must move to a system based on danger to the public, not dollars. Judges must be empowered with the best possible tools to determine who should be held and who can be released with appropriate supervision pending trial. Our local jails are increasingly overcrowded, at tremendous cost to our already-strapped local governments. Sensible reforms of state and local pretrial justice procedures should focus on safety while containing costs to the taxpayer 465 words

A legislative perspective

by REP. GREG STUMBO

It has been a little more than a decade since the General Assembly revamped the state's adult education programs, a high point in the legislature's ongopoint in the legislature's ongo-ing efforts to improve the class-room from preschool to the room from preschool to the workplace.

While a lot of work remains, the past decade has been exactly what we had hoped. In fact, from 2005 to 2009, adult educa-tion enrollment grew by 30 per-cent - faster than any other state over the same period. There are now about 40,000 citizens who are helped academically each year.

now about 40,000 citizens who are helped academically each year.

One of the key programs offered by adult education is the GED. Since 2000, nearly 106,000 Kentuckians have received this diploma, which was 13th best nationally when theasuring that as a percentage of the eligible population.

Just as the numbers of GED students are increasing, more are passing the test as well. The passing rate was about 70 percent in 2000 but now hovers around 80 percent. Of those taking the test, more than half are between 18 and 34, and about a third are between than half are between 18 and 34, and about third are between 34 and 64.

The hope is that we can get even more Kentuckians to join them this decade. It's estimated there are still about 786,000 adults in the Commonwealth without a high school diploma.

or a GED, and more than a half-nillion of those are 64 or younger.

Those who return for their GED cannot only take pride in their accomplishment; they are also in line to see their income jump significantly, too. A 2007 report by the U.S. Census said the salary difference between those without a high school diploma and those who have one or its equivalency is $8,700 a year.

arpioma and those who have one or its equivalency is $8,700 a year.

For the 9,357 Kentuckians.
For the 9,357 Kentuckians.
For the 10,000 more of 10,000 annually - the goal adult education officials have set for 2020 - this number would rise by well over $1 billion.

Not surprisingly, salaries increase even more for those who move on to college. About 20 percent of GED graduates do just that, with all but a handful staying relatively close to home at a KCTCS school.

Just as we want more citizens staying relatively close to home at a KCTCS school.

Just as we want more citizens taking the GED, we also need more to go on to college. The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics says that most jobs now require at least some postsecondary training, and by 2013 it's expected that 90 percent of the fastest-growing jobs will need it. The easiest way to boost our college-bound numbers, of course, is to do all we can to lower the number of high school dropouts to begin with. It's something the Kentucky House has tried several times over the last couple of years by proposing to increase the dropout age from 16 to 18.

The need to do that became much clearer earlier this month, when education officials of the control of the cont mula.

Another way we're getting more people into postsecondary school is Project Graduate. This was started several years ago by our public four-year universities, and it is designed to attract those Kentuckians who have at least 90 credit hours but had to leave school before getting their diploma.

least 90 credit hours but had to leave school before getting their diploma.

The latest statistics show that almost 500 students re-enrolled through Project Graduate have completed that journey. Last fall and this past spring, hundreds of others were on the path to follow in the special part of the spring a GED or college diploma is something you would like to see in your future, there are a couple of places where you can start. ### House week in review

by REP. HUBERT COLLINS

New air quality regulations handed down by the Environmental Protection Agency are going to cost Kentucky businesses and residents money, state lawmakers heard recently in Frankfort. State Division for Air Quality Director John Lyons told the Interim Joint Committee on Natural Resources and Environment that final and proposed EPA air quality standards regulating so called "criteria" pollutants such as sulfur dioxide—which is breated by burning of coal—lead, ozone, particulate matter, nitrogen dioxide ing of coal—lead, ozone, partic-ulate matter, nitrogen dioxide and carbon monioxide will likely make it harder for Kentucky communities to remain in com-pliance with future Clean Air rules. Kentucky communities that have historically had diffi-culty complying with air quality standards are Louisville, Northern Kentucky and those in the Ashland area.

the Ashland area.

Ironically, Kentucky has no violations in air quality based on current monitoring of the criteria pollutants, Lyons said. But that will change with the new standards, particularly standards affecting ozone, although the full effect of the change is yet unknown.

"Most likely we will have more non-attainment areas," said Lyons.

"Most likely we will have more non-attainment areas," said Lyons.

Under new rules being put into effect by the EPA this summer, states will be required to meet more stringent ozone standards and more stringent particulate matter standards. In addition, changes being made under the EPA's Cross-State Air Pollution rule for electricity generating power plants that were issued on July 7 of this year issued on July 7 of this were issued on July 7 of this state lines by at least half of what was allowed in 2005 by 2014, and sets emission limits to reduce airborne ozone and fine particulate matter that moves over state lines.

Under the Cross-State Air Pollution rule, companies in Kentucky and in other states will be able to trade credits to meet a set cap on emissions for utilities in each state. Lyons said Kentucky's sulfur dioxide and nitrogen dioxide emissions will be limited to 273,000 tons in 2012-2013 for existing utilities. There will be "some hard decisions to be made" over the next few years as utilities try to reduce their allocations of sulfur dioxide, nitrogen dioxide, and reduce their allocations of sulfur dioxide, nitrogen dioxide, and install needed controls under changing EPA rules, Lyons said. Some utilities might find it easier to switch to natural gas or biofuel as part of their operations, he said. Electricity prices will likely rise, older plants may be shut down, the cost of environmental permits will. increase, and, last but not least, Lyons said energy prices will increase for both businesses and residen-

Key lawmakers on the committee reiterated what they have said in previous meetings—that they do not believe unelected officials (officials) at the EPA) should be passing regulations that affect the future of the coal industry, utility costs and the average taxpayer's pocketbook.

This issue will continue to be discussed in depth and often in Frankfort as lawmakers try to fairly and evenly balance our concern for the environment and industry. Many lawmakers are upset with the EPA for moving the ball, so to speak, on emissions reduction as Kentucky falls into noving the ball, so to peak, on emissions reduc-on as Kentucky falls into compliance. More stringent regulations affecting fossil fuels at a time that the coal tuels at a time that the coal industry is struggling is also a sore subject for many liv-ing of us in the coal regions of Kentucky.

As the next Regular Session starting in January grows ever near, we will hear more about the effect of EPA regulation on our state, and how we plan to react to it.

Have a good week.

Local advisor says market still a good bet

PRESTONSBURG Despite last week's stock market madness, one local financial advisor sees opportunity for long-term investors.

According to Rob
Shepherd, financial advisor with Edward Jones in Prestonsburg, local investors should not allow short-term stock market fluctuations to derail their long-term investment decisions of the stock of the stock a well-diversified portfolio of quality investments and a long-term perspective."

Shepherd does not see recent market volatility as a repeat of 2008, when the country was in a recession and a financial crisis.

According to Shepherd, "Because there are now fundamental differences in economic and market conditions, we believe this has the potential to present good opportunities for long-term investors to purchase quality investments at a lower price.

Shepherd cites positive economic growth, the creation of an additional million jobs this year, and record high corporate earnings as indicators of strong market fundamentals.

"In addition, oil prices are lower, giving consumers some help, and nesses," said Shepherd.

"The sidelines are no place to be when it comes to one's long-term money."

Commonwealth in the coming academic year.

The launch event, held at the University of Kentucky's Craft Center,
was attended by Coach Calipari, U.S.

Representative Hal Rogers,
U.S. Representative Ben
Chandler, Kentucky First Lady Jane Beshear,
Kentucky Education

Vault — Understanding
Money is EverFi's interactive, new-media learning, platform specifically designed to introduce financial literacy skills early in a child's cognitive development. The course features interactive lessons, games, and story-based activities that challenge kids to make choices in real-life scenarios to best achieve-important goals around saving, job
planning, and budgeting.
The 2.5-hour curriculum is designed for students in 4th through 6th grade and aligns with both state and national standards. "The significance of understanding sound financial practices is especially relevant in the volatile economic environment we live in today", said First Lady Jane Beshear. "Teaching children quality financial management. skills at a young age is the best way to help them grow to be conscientious consumers and financially responsible citizens later in life. Thanks to Coach Calipari and everyone involved in this initia-tive in helping to implement financial literacy education in Kentucky classrooms." Kentucky Education Commissioner Terry

Kentucky Education
Commissioner Terry
Holliday added that financial literacy is critical to student success and in helping young people throughout their lives. "This partnership is an excellent example of how we can work together to support public schools as they prepare students for college, careers and adult lives."

Wine

wine industry that took years to develop is now firmly established. "I've been working with them for 17 years and at no time has it been healthier or looked brighter than it is now," he said. Kentucky wines are expected to have a spot on the menus at several Kentucky State Resort Parks, which plan to begin selling alcoholic beverages soon, Stone said.

Sen. Julian Carroll, D-Frankfort, described the growth of Kentucky's wine industry as "phenomenal," and noted that Kentucky was once a top wine producer.

"Kentucky was a leading wine producer in 1900 in the United States, and then prohibition put us out of busi-ness," he said.

Now that the wine industry has returned in Kentucky, hard-won gains must be protected, Leasor said. "We must defend the things that are working and not take any step backward."

EVERYBODY'S SCIENCE

Garbo, Bergman and now another 'Swedish sensation'

by SANDY MILLER HAYS AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH SERVI

I remember almost to the minute ien my love affair with history

I remember almost to the minute when my love affair with history began.

It was tied to the most amazing (and true) "boy meets girl" story you're ever likely to hear. Here's how it goes: Boy meets Girl so older sister. Boy figures "What the heet" and proposes to Girl, who accepts.

Then Boy goes off to The Big City to try to improve his career prospects, meets a different girl who can help his career, and dumps the hearbroken fiancee back home. But Boy his to keep running into the dumped fiancee at family get-togethers (remember, his older brother is married to her older sister), which is awkward and embarrassing, so he and other family members try to get her married off to someone else. Girl marries her new boyfriend, he becomes King of Sweden and Norway, and she becomes Queen (oh. did I mention that the ex-boyfriend had became the Emperor of France?).

Perkins teams with the Kentucky Blood Center for quarterly blood drive

PRESTONSBURG — Just two short months after a blood drive that saw 70 students at Carl D. Perkins Job Corps Center turn out to donate blood to the Kentucky Blood Center, an August 9 blood drive held in the gymnasium on center at Perkins again saw students come out to save lives.

Kentucky Blood Center Recruitment Specialist Richard Davis said 55 students came out on August 9 to donate blood, a number that will save more than 100 lives.

"This was a huge success and will have the potential to save over 150 lives," said Davis, who has noted Carl D. Perkins Job Corps Center as often being one of the most involved locations they work with year in and New Boyfriend helps beat Old Boyfriend on the battlefield and Boyfriend's family tree dies out with his son, but Girl's descendants still rule Sweden and Norway to this day.

And some people think history is boring!

If you love history, too, you'll recognize this as the story of the former Désirée Clary, later Queen Desideria of Sweden; her husband Jean-Baptiste Bernadotte, King of Sweden and Norway (the union between Sweden and Norway was dissolved in 1905, but another descendant of Désirée and Iran.

union between Sweden and Norway was dissolved in 1905, but another descendant of Désirée and Jean-Baptiste was elected King of Norway), and Napoleon I, Emperor of the French. My introduction to this amazing story was the historical novel and international best-seller "Désirée," by Annemarie Sclinko. And although it's been more than 40 years since I first-read it, I still remember the descriptions (by a character descriptions (by a character in the book) of Sweden which so piqued my interest that I thought, "I must go what I thought, "I must go there where there was apparent to the theone sapparent to the throne of Sweden is Grown Princess Victoria Ingrid and the trip. Since, as the would have it, he's. Scandinavian by descent (although Swedish versus-Norwegian has never been sorted out). Lately, I've come across another intriguing fact about Sweden: They apparently grow soybeans that are the plant equivalent of The Terminator—they shrug off every stress that shrug off every stress that Mother Nature throws at Scientists with Scientists with the Agricultural Research Service (ARS) came across these soybeans when they were researching the family tree of North American soybeans. The scientists analyzed thousands of soybean types to create that family tree, and found 30 ancestors which together account for 22 percent of the genetic material in North American soybeans.

material in soybeans.

They then screened these ancestors for salt tolerance. Those tests showed that two sines of vegetable soybeans—Fiskeby 840-7-3 ines of vegetable soy-cans—Fiskeby 840-7-3 ad Fiskeby III—were the most salt-tolerant. Both of those lines come from a little village in the far northern reaches of Sweden.

Next, the scientists screened the various soybean lines for aluminum tolerance, and again the Fiskeby plants stood out. They then screened the bean lines for drought tolerance tolerance to high levels of ozone, and iron deficiency—and I'll bet you can guess which plants scored highest.

guess which planthinghest.

This is big news for two reasons. First, global chimate change, with its increases in greenhouse gases like carbon dioxide increases in greenhouse gases like carbon dioxide and ozone, is going to affect how the world gets fed in the future, because of its impact—which is already occurring—on crops like soybeans and wheat.

Second, an investigation by the ARS scientists of soybean plant breeding records has revealed that only a very few U.S. soy-means from FISKeby. This means there's a tremendous potential to increase tolerance to ozone and other stresses in North American soybeans by adding genes from the Fiskeby beans.

The ARS scientists crossed Fiskeby III with an ozone-susceptible soybean called Mandarin Ottawa and have developed 240 new breeding lines. Now the team is mapping the genes in the new lines to see which ones are connected to resistance to ozone and the other stressess.

Let's hear it for those Swedish soybeans!

The Agricultural Research Service is the chief in-house scientific research agency of the U.S. Department of Agriculture. You can read more about ARS discoveries at http://www.ars.usda.gov/ne ws.
