Hall resigns Chamber to take Ky. Power job

Ralph B. Davis
 Managing Editor

PIKEVILLE — The head of the Southeast Kentucky Chamber of Commerce is leaving his position, shortly after accepting an economic development position with Kentucky Power.
 Brad N. Hall was hired as president and CEO of the Pike County Chamber of Commerce and grew that organization into an eight-county regional Chamber of Commerce.

 "Brad is one of the most dedicated, passionate, and hardworking individuals I have ever had the privilege of working with," said Chamber Chair Tracy Psyke, of Shred-All Documents. "It is hard to imagine continuing working without him, but we have to believe God has a plan for his future and for the future of the Southeast Kentucky Chamber. We want our Chamber member businesses, and our future members, and the community to know that the Southeast Kentucky Chamber of Commerce will continue to grow with the same passion."

 Current Vice President Jared Arnett will be taking Hall's place as CEO.

"Jared has played a vital role in the expansion of the regional chamber. He has the talent and skills that are necessary to continue the mission of the Southeast Kentucky Chamber. I know that I am leaving the Chamber in the best possible hands," said Hall.
 Hall will serve as Kentucky Power's new manager of external affairs. He will work out of the company's Pikeville office, but will have economic development and community affairs responsibilities throughout the company's 20-county eastern Kentucky service area.

 "I am very pleased to appoint Brad to this new position with Kentucky Power," said Greg Pauley, president and COO. "I think his economic development experience, his familiarity with eastern Kentucky issues and concerns, and his past education and achievements make him the ideal person to lead our economic development activities."
 "I am excited to have the opportunity to work for a wonderful company like AEP-Kentucky Power," Hall said. "AEP has a long history in eastern Kentucky and it is an honor to become a part of that history."
 "In my new role, I will have the opportunity to represent Kentucky Power in the communities of eastern Kentucky, working to make a difference and assist in creating and expanding opportunities for growth in the region. This will be an extension of what I was doing in the chamber and it is a role that I am passionate about and eager to take on. I look forward to the challenge," he said.

 Hall is a 1996 graduate of Pikeville College and earned his masters degree in business administration from Morehead State University in 2000. He begins his duties with Kentucky Power June 11.

Guest View Appalachia is more than the stereotypes

Bailey Richards
Heartland News Service

As the summer nears, many volunteers will fill the hills of Eastern Kentucky to build homes, plant trees and mission. While the intention of these volunteers is always good, being a former volunteer in Eastern Kentucky myself, I can say with confidence that they will never see the real Appalachia in a week of hammering nails.

I volunteered with the Appalachia Service Project in high school in Knott County and in Tazewell, Tenn., and then worked for a summer in Knott County. While the experiences were incredibly memorable and wonderful, since spending the last year of my life in the mountains, I have learned that my idea of the area was completely wrong. And I am glad it was.

When volunteering, you see the neediest people. You see the stereotypes of the area, and this just perpetuates these notions as being true. Every family I worked for was sweet and very appreciative, but being an outside volunteer I thought we were seeing a good representation of the area.

When volunteering we never saw town centers with businesses and flourishing communities. I never found out about all of the programs to help people throughout the communities. I just thought the entire region depended on volunteers like me coming in and saving the world, one leaky roof at a time. I never realized how wrong I was.

I never saw organizations like Community Ministries, the Housing Development Alliance, LKLP or the Foundation for Appalachian Kentucky. These organizations are locally based, using mostly local people and funding. They spend every day working with and in the community and see all aspects of the region.

The Appalachia Service Project is an amazing organization that helps a lot of people. I will never criticize their message or what they have been able to do. However, the nature of their work doesn't allow the volunteer to get a true sense of the community. Since living here I have learned that while many people are poor, most of them take care of themselves and their neighbors without the intervention of volunteers. Volunteering and receiving help are wonderful things, and in fact they often bring people back here to stay. I am an example of this. I moved to Eastern Kentucky because of my time as a volunteer, and so have many other people I have met in Hazard.

Using volunteer labor to help out with a need is also a great thing, but it needs to be made apparent to the volunteers that not everyone in Appalachia lives in little homes with crumbling porches. They don't all love bluegrass, the Dukes of Hazard, and whittling in rocking chairs. For anyone coming down to mission to people, you will find some of the most religious in the world that will teach you a thing or two.

It also needs to be said that any of the issues in the area, like anywhere else, do not strictly stem from something as simple as a hole in the floor. Fixing one porch, while very meaningful to that family, is not the same as helping the region, and you cannot change the lives of the everyone in Eastern Kentucky with your presence.

The needs of the region have changed. While volunteers and charitable organizations are still needed, the greatest good they could do would be running a homeless shelter, working with recovering addicts, or even helping to encourage business growth.

We should always continue to try to make a difference, and continue to work, but be mindful that Appalachia also is so much more than just what you see while volunteering.

A few weeks ago, I wrote a column about my attempt to become a vegan — that is to say, one who partakes neither of meat nor fish nor dairy.

It's not an easy life, I said. It seemed like a fairly non-controversial thing to say, although I was sure that meat-eaters would respond with scorn and vitriol.

As it turned out, I was wrong. Everybody responded with scorn and vitriol — meat-eaters, vegetarians, vegans, and organic farmers, as well as people who think of Big Macs as health food.

Where did I go wrong? Probably my worst mistake was admitting I cheated on my diet once in a while. Who doesn't cheat on a diet, I asked myself. Vegans, apparently.

"It's not OK to cheat from the viewpoint of the dead abused animal you ate," one woman wrote. "This includes fish that were suffocated to death."

"You're going to have to take my word on this, lady, but I never suffocated a fish in my life. Anyway, if you did it, wouldn't the pillow get wet?"

But the shots kept coming from all directions: The vegetarian: "Sorry but your article is filled with half-truths and distortions, the biggest one being that a vegan diet is healthier than a vegetarian diet."

The faith-based: "I know you are not only a weak, weak, weak person but you don't know what it is you are really trying to do... You should start by reading your BIBLE to find out."

The secular: "I really doesn't help that the author put this in terms of 'sin' and 'cheating.'"

The environmentalist: "Did you know that 98 percent of pollution and destruction of habitat is caused by corporations and the rich?"

The racial: "Strange how so many militant vegans always seem to be white."

The anthropological: "Humans are designed by evolution to eat meat. Your diet will lead to neurological decline and an early death."

The counter-anthropological: "Wrong, wrong, wrong. Not designed by evolution but by Madison Avenue, McDonald's, and the meat industry."

The people who were commenting on my column at AlterNet.org just started arguing with each other about everything, pretty much without reference to anything I'd written. For example, the person who chimed in with "Adolf Hitler was a vegetarian" was immediately checkmated by someone who wrote:

"Hitler was not a vegan and that's what we're talking about."

I felt as though I could steal out of the room at that point without anyone noticing, so I did. No one noticed. They may still be arguing for all I know.

I found the experience dispiriting. There were nearly 300 comments posted in response to the column. As far as I could tell, not one betrayed so much as a hint of a sense of humor.

Well, if that's what it takes to be a vegan or a vegetarian, count me out. Life without funny is too great a price to pay for good health. I mean, what's the sense of going on a diet if you can't cheat on it once in a while? A life without guilty pleasures is hardly worth living.

Let me make myself clear, or at least try to. I'm not a committed vegan, even less one who seeks to change the way you eat. I am an experimental vegan who admittedly falls off the wagon from time to time. I'm trying to see if it works for me because I've seen the health improvements it can produce in others and I have several areas that need improvement.

If you're interested at all in the topic, I suggest you get the film "Forks Over Knives," which is available on Netflix, or read "The China Study." If you don't find these arguments persuasive, no harm done.

As for me, I'm going back to writing about something non-controversial, like politics.

Letter to the Editor

An open letter to the EPA

As a citizen of the United States and a long-time resident of the State of Kentucky, artist and the Kentucky Riverkeeper, I am very concerned for the health of our people and our rivers. My concern is heightened by a series of Clean Water Act violations that have been discovered by the Riverkeeper, Appalachian Voices, Kentuckians For The Commonwealth, Waterkeeper Alliance and several individuals. The Environment Cabinet has substantiated many of our charges and discovered more.

From our standpoint, the KPDES violations are real. Regulators have done little to bring polluters into compliance which has led to a breakdown of the safeguards put in place to protect the waters of the commonwealth. More importantly, it prevents us from knowing what's in the water. In such a situation, any attempt to improve environmental quality is severely hampered due to false information and misleading assumptions.

A cursory review of government records indicate that many Eastern Kentucky coal counties are among the poorest in the nation. If other emerging research is reliable, they are also among the sickest in the nation. Researchers have only begun to understand the connections between clean water and healthy communities in Eastern Kentucky, but it is clear that we have lost hundreds of miles of streams in our headwaters.

We know abuses of the Clean Water Act are rampant in the state. It appears that acceptance of environmental crime has become business as usual in our great Commonwealth. In the face of massive media blitzes, propaganda and divisive misinformation from many sources, it is challenging for our people and institutions to come up the resources and courage to enforce the Clean Water Act. We need the United States Environmental Protection Agency to do its job of protecting our people from the atrocities and lawlessness of these mega corporations.

the amount of pollution entering waterways as effluent from coal mining operations.

Over 30 people addressed the panel, most pro-coal supporters with harsh words for the EPA. When the few voices of representatives from groups like the Sierra Club spoke, they were greeted with boos or, in one instance, empty seats, as most of the audience got up and left during one environmental advocate's address.

According to EPA officials, the event was not designed to be a question-and-answer session, but to offer people of the region an opportunity to share their thoughts on the controversial mining permits.

Jim Giattina, director of the Water Protection Division, USEPA Region 4, provided opening remarks for the EPA members on hand.

Giattina highlighted recent mining innovations which have been making coal mining environmentally friendly.

"The EPA and the Kentucky environmental cabinet, have been working for the last two years to apply common-sense practices," Giattina said.

According to Giattina, the permits in question, a heated water discharge permits, are a "basic control for determining water pollution." Giattina tried to reassure attendees that the EPA is not anti-coal when he said the division has issued 87 surface mining projects and 28 underground mining projects, but stated that new environmental concerns are being discovered in the last several years in water quality. Sediments, salt and metal runoff from mines can destroy waterways, Giattina told the audience.

Leonard K. Peters, Kentucky Energy and Environment Secretary said the hearings were unprecedented. He said his office has had concerns with EPA practices for two years.

"Environmental permitting is not designed to stop legitimate business activities," said Peters. "Regulations need to be fair and reasonable."

U.S. Sen. Mitch McConnell and Sen. Rand Paul were not present, but issued statements read during the hearings. McConnell called the policies of the Obama administration "especially irritating," and said the administration's continued "regulatory assault on Eastern Kentucky" is an attempt to "crucify me."

Jim Milliman, with Sen. Paul's office, gave a heated oratory, questioning how the people of Eastern Kentucky can expect fair hearings when the Obama administration says it wants to "bankrupt the coal industry."

Gwen Keyes Fleming, a regional administrator with the EPA, said in a statement released earlier this week that the people in Kentucky should not have to choose between a clean healthy environment to raise their families, and jobs they have traditionally worked to support them.

In the past three years, Kentucky has issued permits for 115 mining projects. An estimated 2,500 additional coal mining projects in Kentucky proceed under a general permit," said Fleming.

"EPA's objections are limited to 36 water discharge permits for coal mines in Kentucky, because of a concern that they do not contain limits to prevent pollutants, including toxic heavy metals, salts and sediment, from contaminating Kentucky's waterways."

Giattina said that the public comment period to express concerns with the EPA's objections will end on June 21. The EPA regional administration will review the objections, and if they choose to withdraw any of the objections, KIDOW will be able to move forward and issue the mining permits.

Senators fan the flames of discontent in regard to coal permit hearings

Jack Latta
Staff Writer

WASHINGTON, D.C. — U.S. Sen. Rand Paul added more fuel to the fire of criticism aimed at the Environmental Protection Agency Tuesday, releasing a statement chastising the federal agency for its practices.

Due to the Senate voting schedule, Sen. Rand Paul said he would be unable to attend Tuesday's hearing concerning coal mining permits in Frankfort. Paul issued a statement by proxy to be entered into the record of the Senate.

"These hearings are long overdue. As you know, the state of Kentucky has been requesting hearings on the Environmental Protection Agency's permit objections since December 2010. It has taken EPA nearly two years to respond to their legal obligation to do so. In the meantime, jobs were lost, severance taxes went unpaid, and, according to the Energy Information System, coal production in Eastern Kentucky dropped by 1.5 percent," Paul said in the statement.

Paul says the denial of the permits is an attempt by the Obama administration and the EPA to stifle the coal industry of Kentucky. "Under the Obama Administration, the coal industry has been subject to 'regulation by ambush' on multiple fronts."

Paul estimates that the objections to 19 of the 36 permits will cost 3,800 coal-related jobs and more than $123 million in coal severance taxes.

"It is time for these practices to end, and these policies to stop. The Clean Water Act and the major mining statute, the Surface Mining Reclamation and Control Act, have strong federalism components that allow states to take the lead over permitting and enforcement," says Paul. "The EPA needs to honor the intent of the statute and allow Kentucky to exert its primacy authority over these 36 permits."

Kentucky's other senator and Republican Leader Mitch McConnell also had strong words for the administration Tuesday taking to the floor to state that the coal producing community of Kentucky is under attack by the EPA.

"Like most of the country, Kentucky is suffering from very difficult economic times," McConnell said. "Far too many Kentuckians are unemployed and the prospect for future employment remains daunting. That's why it is especially irritating that this administration has blindly followed ideological policies that eliminate jobs in our communities. The people of Kentucky are amongst the hardest-working people on the planet but how can we be expected to compete if our own government is working against us?"

Sen. Paul acknowledged the second meeting Thursday in Pikeville, but was noncommittal on whether or not he would attend those hearings.

istic," he complained.

Rutherford noted this is just the latest in a history of attacks on coal. He said that the war on coal in the 1960s directly preceded the War on Poverty spearheaded by President Lyndon B. Johnson.

"The EPA is trying to put us back into poverty," said Rutherford.

"America needs to understand this affects everyone's quality of life, not just ours."

Rutherford, who has been a past champion of coal and its impact on the future of Eastern Kentucky, was a strong proponent for clean coal technology and coal-to-liquid fuels, neither of which have gained much traction during the Obama presidency. Clean coal was suspiciously absent from Obama's campaign page highlighting fuel efficiency, until an outcry from Republicans led to the inclusion of "clean coal."

Rutherford says that Obama and Energy secretary Lisa Jackson need to do their job, "and do it correctly."

"They need to get off our backs."

Rutherford spoke during both the EPA hearings and again at a coal supporters' rally held across the street from the Pikeville Expo Center.

road somewhere."

Brown says something must be done to stem the flow of kittens and cats being left to unchecked breeding.

"Two cats can make a hundred," in a very short amount of time, says Brown. Unchecked breeding is also leading to genetic deformities due to inbreeding. Kittens and cats are showing up at the shelter with missing toes or extra toes, and other physical deformities.

According to Brown, the lack of care being taken with cats is also leading to increased number of kittens carrying panleukopenia, a terribly contagious disease that, if unnoticed, can kill all the cats and kittens in the facility. Brown says the shelter now vaccinates all cats for the disease.

Brown's message is a simple one. People need to spay and neuter their animals, and penalties for animal cruelty need to be increased. "We need some kind of spay or neuter policy in this country, and stronger cruelty to animal penalties."

Misty Dawn Hollbrook, 33, of Prestonsburg, was charged last week with a third degree cruelty to animal after she allegedly left a minipincer in a cage to starve to death over a number of days. According to Brown, Hollbrook spent only four hours in jail for the offense.

After checking with the Floyd County Detention Center, it was confirmed that Hollbrook spent less than four hours in jail, and was released on a $5,000 surety bond. Hollbrook is scheduled to be arraigned June 13.

Calls seeking comment from Judge-Executive R.D. "Doc" Marshall about how the county's animal control office efforts to control the growing unwanted cat populace were not returned.

State looking to give away the bridge at Glomawr

Heartland News Service

GLOMAWR — Want a bridge? If so, you're in luck, because the Kentucky Transportation Cabinet is ready to give away one of Perry County's oldest bridges.

The Cabinet currently plans to replace the Glomawr bridge, which spans the North Fork of the Kentucky River and connects Route 451 to Highway 15 in the Glomawr community. The Parker truss bridge was built in 1927, originally as a steel deck bridge, but was paved over in 2005. The structure has been deemed eligible for the National Registry of Historic Place, and is 270 feet long.

The bridge's 85-year run at its present location will come to an end next year, however, as state officials say the old bridge must be removed in order to make room a new, safer structure. That's where a new owner could come into play, as the Cabinet and the Federal Highway Administration are seeking a new owner to take possession of the bridge and reassemble it elsewhere.

The Cabinet undertook a similar effort for the former bridges that crossed at Main Street and Woodland Park a few years ago.

A program through the Federal Highway Administration (FHWA), State Historic Preservation Office and the Transportation Cabinet (KYTC) allows government agencies, historic preservation organizations or individuals to re-erect the bridge if its original characteristics are retained at the new site. Historic organizations and individuals must be approved by the state historic preservation officer to be eligible for the program.

Under the program, KYTC and FHWA will pay the costs of marking parts of the bridge, disassembling it, transporting it to the new site, and off-loading it. The recipient is responsible for all other costs, including site preparation, reassembly, replacement of parts suitable for the proposed use at the new location and construction of approaches. The recipient also becomes responsible for maintenance, liability and permits associated with the bridge.

Officials say possible uses for the bridge include becoming part of a walking or bicycling trail in a city or county park, or being used by a property owner as a unique stream crossing for a private driveway.

"The last time we advertised a bridge in Perry County for relocation, we received inquiries from all across the United States as well as internationally," said Jeff Allen, environmental coordinator for the Department of Highways District 10 in Jackson, who oversees the bridge relocation program for the district. "The costs for moving the bridge such a long distance are prohibitive and impractical. Therefore, we are seeking in-state applicants for the possible relocation of the Glomawr bridge."

Eligible recipients can request additional information from Allen at the District 10 office located at 473 Highway 15 South, Jackson, by writing him at P.O. Box 621, Jackson, KY 41339, by emailing him at jeff.allen@ky.gov or by calling him at (606) 666-8841. Letters of interest and written proposals for relocation of the bridge will be accepted until Aug. 13.

PIKEVILLE - In the entire history of the program, he has missed a total of four football games. He is the voice of the Bears for all home basketball contests. Clearly, Charlie Pinson is an integral part of the athletics department at the University of Pikeville.

On Tuesday afternoon, he learned the entire Mid-South Conference appreciates him as well when he was named the league's Media Member of the Year.

It's the second time Pinson has been so honored, having also taken the title for the 2006-07 school year.

"Charlie is a Bear through and through," said Dr. Reginald F. Overton, director of athletics at Pikeville. "He is very deserving of this honor and we're thrilled for him. We appreciate his efforts both personally and professionally on behalf of our institution."

On a daily basis, no one works closer with Pinson than the sports information director.

"We're fortunate to have several members of the media who are generous both with their time and their allotted space; it's one of the best things we have going for us in our community," said Rick Bentley, sports information director at UPIKE. "Charlie is certainly a leader in that regard."

"Charlie is as beneficial to me as anyone at the school. In our travels, he's like having an assistant on site. It's not uncommon for him to help me set up or break down equipment, share stats and offer any help I may need. I'm very pleased the rest of the Mid-South Conference is also appreciative of his efforts as well."

Pinson, who is the owner of Charlie Pinson Insurance located in downtown Pikeville, was pleased with the honor.

"It has been great year at UPIKE. Along with the transition from college to university status we have had growth and success from our sports programs," said Pinson, who can often be found in the crowd at Bears' events he isn't telecasting.

"This award from the SID's of the MSC caps off a great year. I want to thank the league for this honor and GO Bears!"

UPIKE head coach Kelly Wells is looking to guide his team to its second national title in three seasons.

Kelly Wells happy to stay at Pikeville Recruits, transfers could make this a big season

GOODY - University of Pikeville head coach Kelly Wells recently had a big decision to make about his future and career.

Stay at Pikeville or move up a level to Division One and on top of that, get a chance to coach at his alma mater Morehead State.

When all was said and done, Wells decided it was best for him and his family to stay in Pikeville.

Just two seasons ago Wells led UPIKE to the school's first-ever NAIA national basketball championship. Most recently former Kentucky Mr. Basketball and Shelby Valley alumnus Elisha Justice transferred from Louisville back to his home town.

Wells also had a couple of other D-1 transfers and a couple of top-notch recruits. See WELLS | B2

Fields wins Tug Valley Bass Anglers' tourney

Times Staff Report

MOREHEAD - On June 3, the Tug Valley Bass Anglers held its fourth tournament of the 2012 season on Cave Run Lake. Twenty-four (24) anglers competed in the event. Veteran angler Lynn Fields finished out in, claiming first-place.

Cave Run Lake was at summer pool with clear to lightly stained water on the entire lake. Water temperature was around 80 degrees.

Weather for the tournament was great with mostly sunny skies and an air temperature around 75 degrees. The wind blew a consistent 25 mph which made fishing and boat control somewhat of a challenge.

The fishing was fair, the cold front that made the weather so nice seemed to give the fish a slight case of lock jaw.

The fish were caught two-10 feet of water on the main lake as well as in the pockets and creeks. You had to work hard for every bite.

The main pattern for this tournament was to fish topwater baits early then when the sun got bright fish shad colored crankbaits and jerkbaits. Finesse fishing with small worms "shaky head" accounted for most of the fish weighed in. Total fish weighed in was 69.21 lbs.

The top finishers are as follows: 1st - Lynn Fields (5 fish), 16.55 lbs.; 2nd - Greg Maynard (5 fish), 6.76 lbs.; 3rd - Paul Owens (4 fish) 4.93 lbs.; 4th - Michael Salyer (5 fish), 4.89 lbs.; 5th - Kevin Runyon (5 fish), 4.76 lbs.; 6th - Don

Highlands Foundation hosts 'Changing Lives' 5K

PAINTSVILLE — The Highlands Foundation hosted the third annual "Changing Lives" 5K run/walk on Saturday, June 2, benefiting the Highlands Center for Autism. The run/walk began at the Highlands Medical Office building, on Broadway, in Paintsville.

Approximately 250 people registered for the event, and over $15,000 was raised for the Highlands Center for Autism. One hundred percent of the proceeds went toward scholarship funds for current and future children to receive treatment at the Center.

The event began with a Kids' Fun Run, with approximately 10 children participating. This year's winner was Hannah Ousley, daughter of Jack and Jonni Ousley. Second place went to Aaron Lawson, son of Shane and Kelly Lawson, and third place was awarded to Camryn Helton, daughter of Brian and Jamie Helton. All participating children received a goodie bag, with the winners receiving trophies.

The 5K race began at 9 a.m. with an excited group of participants.

The men's category received strong competition from Blake Burchell, who won first place in the 2010 Changing Lives 5K.

Burchell repeated his win again in this year's race, coming in first place with a time of 17 minutes, 56 seconds. Second place went to Randy Caudill, with a time of 20 minutes flat. Coming in a close third was Randall Watts, with a time of 20 minutes, 15 seconds.

The women's category also received strong competition, with all three winners crossing the finish line within seconds of each other. First place went to Susan Miller, with a time of 24 minutes, 21 seconds. Second place went to Susan Crum, with a time of 24 minutes, 24 seconds, and third place was awarded to Kelly Lawson with a time of 24 minutes, 45 seconds.

The Highlands Center for Autism provides a highly structured treatment program dedicated to children with Autism Spectrum Disorder, and is the only program of its kind in the state of Kentucky. The Center operates as a year round day treatment center and accepts students from earliest diagnosis through school age. The program has a low student to staff ratio (virtually 1:1) and each child's program is tailored to their needs.

Volunteers needed for Cancer Society's 'Road to Recovery'

Floyd County residents are invited to help save lives and fulfill their own by giving time to eliminate cancer as a life-threatening disease for future generations.

The American Cancer Society is recruiting volunteers to help make a meaningful difference in the community by assisting cancer patients and their families, while building relationships that last a lifetime.

To learn how to become a valuable volunteer, call the northeast Kentucky office in Ashland at (606) 325-8251 or 24 hours a day through a free call to (800) 227-2345.

Volunteer opportunities include: Driving cancer patients to and from their treatments in Northern Kentucky. Cancer survivors who can give patients an opportunity to talk about their fears and concerns. Recruiting teams, raising money and planning activities for the annual Relay For Life. Helping to fight for increased funding for research and screening programs. Assuring local, state, and federal lawmakers hear the voices of those affected by cancer.

An estimated 25,160 people in Kentucky will be diagnosed with cancer in 2012. They will have many questions and emotions. A newly diagnosed patient may have questions about how to tell his or her family, about what treatment options are available, or help understanding the complex medical system.

"We do everything we can to improve quality of life for patients, caregivers, and survivors during and after diagnosis and treatment," said Tiffanie Buckner, northeast Kentucky health initiatives representative for the American Cancer Society.

"Whether it's matching people with appropriate clinical trials, providing information on managing side effects of chemotherapy, helping people get to their treatment appointments, or providing a free place to stay during treatment far from home, we offer help and hope throughout the cancer experience," said Buckner.

Many different forms of support are available, both online and in person. All American Cancer Society services are offered free of charge.

The American Cancer Society is dedicated to eliminating cancer as a major health problem by saving lives, diminishing suffering, and preventing cancer through research, education, advocacy, and service. For more information anytime, make a free call to 1-800-227-2345 or visit www.cancer.org.

recruits coming in this season to go along with some solid returning players including Trevor Setty.

"When you have those opportunities you reflect on the great things you have," Wells said during an interview prior to speaking at a basketball camp at Belfry High School. "I've always been told not to mess with happiness and we are certainly happy where we are at." There are a lot of things we can accomplish at Pikeville and we want to see this thing out," Wells added.

Donned in a Bears orange polo shirt, Wells always one to promote his school, Wells said not only did his family help him make the decision to stay at Pikeville, but so did his players.

"Certainly the class we have coming in is very exciting," Wells said of the new members of his squad. "But we still have some work to do with recruiting. But, we're excited with where we're at. And the move to the Expo Center is almost completely. There are just a lot of great things happening with the university."

"We are getting ready to explode here and I want to be a part of that," he added.

As for his lineup, Wells is excited about Justice coming in as point guard. He says he can put Setty back at his natural position as a wing and shooter. "Adding Chris Johnson another Division One transfer at a two guard really gives us a lot of options."

Wells also has brought in a 6-8 post player Terrance Santill, who should help down under the basket. Johnson is from St. Francis (Pennsylvania) and is a 5-10 guard.

Cody Malicoat is a 6-5 swingman from Jellico High School, and Zach Howard is a 6-2 guard from Science Hill High School in Johnson City. Both will join the Bears in time for the fall 2012 semester to continue their educational opportunities and to play basketball. They will be joined by Trevon Flores, a 6-11 junior from Columbus, Ohio, who played at James Madison University. Both Justice and Santill, who transferred from VCU, played in the NCAA Final Four.

Wells said he has been able to recruit positions that the Bears needed, but he is not finished yet. He said this week he had some kids coming in and he hopes to sign one more player.

Besides Justice, who is returning to his Pike County roots, a couple of other local players should see action this season. They include former Pike Central guard Hobo Mc-

The kids are definitely not all right in this eerie thriller that sees a bunch of ungrateful brats ruin their family Christmas with a murder spree.

The film opens with a family of five arriving at the home of relatives for a Christmas celebration. Elaine and Jonah are the parents and they seem nice enough. They are visiting her sister, Chloë, and her husband Robbie. When Elaine's son begins tossing his Christmas cookies into the snow, everyone chucks it up to car sickness. They don't assume it is a new virus that begins with vomiting before escalating into acts of murder perpetrated against adults. Too bad they didn't think outside the toy box.

The first night sees the kids opening presents and enjoying themselves, while the adults drink alcohol and one up each other. The holiday cheer turns to fear, however, by the middle of the next day. It all starts with the off-screen death of the family cat, Jinxie (proving that nine lives are not enough when you are doomed by your name).

The kids apparently develop telepathy and begin executing traps to kill the grown-ups, which proves that children shouldn't be allowed to watch "The A-Team." Uncle Robbie gets it first when his sled picks up too much momentum going downhill to avoid the three-bladed hoe that one of the ragamuffins leaves at the bottom of the hill. The result is a bloody mess that is in sharp contrast to the snowy landscape.

Turns out, this area is pretty remote, so the police and ambulance won't be there anytime soon. This proves most unfortunate as the adults slowly realize they are in for it. Elaine gets the worst of it when she is tricked into climbing on playground equipment. The resulting compound fracture is brutal and a very harsh lesson in staying off the jungle gym if you exceed the height requirement.

The film finally degenerates into a bloody battle between the models of maturity and the juvenile psycho squad. These bits will be hard to watch for parents (kids should not be seeing this at all), but the film does an excellent job of looking away when the little ones are done in. On the other hand, they zoom in for great close-ups when the caregivers buy the farm.

You'll want to stick around for the finale which hints that the end is nigh, now that teens are susceptible to the virus. Then again, the teens might just be acting in character when they opt to help take out those meddling parental units who don't know texting from smoke signals.

This one is so well made that you'll stop comparing it to the 1980 film of the same name after 10 minutes. The 1980s version blamed a radiation leak for the killer kids, who rocked black fingernails that caused adults to go up in smoke like cheap cigars. That said, it took place in New Jersey, so the idea of punk kids going Goth and scaring adults seemed natural enough to me.

This version is also British, so they talk better, but the real reason to watch is that this one gets it right. They build the suspense well and never even try to explain where this is coming from and whether or not it will ever end. Good stuff but definitely keep the young ones at bay, I mean away.

Best Lines "There was puke in the woods." "Paulie was going to stab me in the face." "You're married to a knob."

A better than average week saw four diverse stories hitting the shelves. "John Carter" — You heard that this was terrible, and that it may get bankrupt the studio that made it, but this sci-fi action tale is nowhere near as bad as all that. The story comes from a series of books by Edgar Rice Burroughs ("Tarzan"). The title character is a Civil War veteran who finds himself transported to the planet Mars, where he runs into another civil conflict and falls for an alien princess. Too bad they spent so much making this and now are in the hole, because Burroughs wrote 11 books and they were all fun.

"Breaking Bad Season 4" — This excellent series continues to chart the criminal career of a high school chemistry teacher, Walter White, who deals with mounting medical bills by becoming getting into the drug trade. Season four finds White fighting for his life when his crime lord boss discovers that White's brother-in-law is a DEA agent. White resorts to acts of savagery to protect his family, but one gets the feeling that he has developed a taste for the criminal lifestyle. Bryan Cranston is amazing in this role and he is well matched by Aaron Paul as his associate, Jesse. The real revelation here, though, is Giancarlo Esposito as a button-down, fast-food restaurant manager who moonlights as a ruthless crime boss. The final episode of the season is downright Hitchcockian, as White pins all of his hopes on bomb jury-rigged to the wheelchair of a handicapped accomplice.

"Safe House" — Spy flicks don't get much better than this high-octane flick that casts Denzel Washington as a seasoned spook who is entrusted to a young turk, Ryan Reynolds. Lots of action and some great chemistry erupts when these two characters find themselves out in the cold with only each other to trust.

"Machine Gun Preacher" — Gerard Butler stars here as a biker thug who finds religion. He winds up moving to Sudan when he learns of the plight of children there who are forced to serve in the army. He becomes a liberator and hero to these kids and makes a lot of enemies along the way. There is a lot of action here, but the best part is that this is a true story. This all happened and they actually toned down the narrative. Butler is good in the role but I also liked Michael Shannon ("Boardwalk Empire") as a biker buddy.

Next week brings a pair of sequels with Nicholas Cage returning as the "Ghost Rider" and Robert Downey Jr. back as "Sherlock Holmes."

Three ALC student-athletes honored

Times Staff Report

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—The NAIA has announced that 121 Women's Tennis student-athletes have been named 2011 Daktronics-NAIA Scholar-Athletes. Alice Lloyd College standouts Lydia Harris and Rebekah Bevins have both been named as recipients of the prestigious honor.

In Men's Golf, 133 student-athletes have been named 2011 Daktronics-NAIA Scholar-Athletes.

Alice Lloyd College senior standout Casey Dalton has been chosen as a member of the select group.

In order to be nominated by an institution, a student-athlete must maintain a minimum grade point average of 3.5 on a 4.0 scale and must have achieved a junior academic status to qualify as an NAIA Scholar-Athlete.

Bevins, a native of Logan, W.Va., and graduate of Logan High School, has maintained a 3.75 GPA at ALC where she is a Business major.

Bevins is the daughter of Gene and Teresa Bevins. A native of Manchester, Harris is a graduate of Clay County High School and has maintained a 3.61 GPA at ALC where she is majoring in Biology. She is the daughter of Clint and Malvery Harris.

A native of Nancy, Dalton is a graduate of Pulaski-Southwestern High School, has maintained a 3.58 GPA as a Social Studies major. He is the son of Danny and Sharon Dalton.

We value his efforts, but most importantly we cherish his friendship."

Pinson's award was announced at the league's summer meeting, held Monday and Tuesday in Georgetown. It was one of three individual honors presented. In addition, Chris Wells of Lindsey Wilson was named winner of the Bill Sergeant Award as SID of the Year, while Lindsey's Willis Pooler and Cumberland's Randy Vernon were named Co-ADs of the Year.

Mid-South Conference Commissioner Steve Baker, who announced the honors, was pleased to recognize the group for their efforts and dedication to the league.

"I would like to congratulate Willis, Randy, Chris and Charlie for earning their respective honors," Baker said. "I'm grateful for their service to the MSC and all of our administrators, coaches and student-athletes to continue to make the Mid-South Conference the top conference in the NAIA."

Sorg steps down as MSU head coach

Times Staff Report

MOREHEAD - Morehead State University head baseball coach Jay Sorg has resigned after completing his fifth season with the program.

A Louisville native and former Eagle standout, Sorg finished the 2012 campaign with the program's first winning record since 2005 and a trip to the Ohio Valley Conference Tournament. The Eagles wrapped up the season with a 28-27 overall mark and 13-14 conference record.

"Jay has not only meant a lot to our baseball program, but he has offered so much to our athletics program and even more to me personally," Morehead State Athletic Director Brian Hutchinson said. "Jay is the consummate professional and we are better from his involvement at his alma mater. He overcame every obstacle to build us into a high-level program with an extraordinary foundation." The Eagle baseball program saw a resurgence under Sorg's leadership.

MSU earned a trip to the OVC Tournament in 2009 and 2012, and several Eagles earned national recognition for their accomplishments on the field and in the classroom.

"I feel like I am leaving the program in a good place," Sorg said. "The future is very promising. Many great things have been accomplished. The program has improved every year with the exception of one. We are close to 90 RPI spots better than when we started. We have also seen several players break single-season and career records over the past five years."

Sorg is an MSU graduate and played three seasons at third base for the Eagles. He was selected in the 15th round of the 1994 Major League Baseball First-Year Player Draft by the Cincinnati Reds and spent five years in the Reds farm system before becoming a professional coach. He became MSU's 11th head baseball coach in June 2007.

"There are so many people to thank," Sorg added. "I want to especially thank (MSU President) Dr. Wayne Andrews and Brian Hutchinson for this tremendous opportunity to coach at my alma mater. I appreciate all the assistance from the athletic department and alumni. I am forever indebted to the coaches and players who have been a part of the program over the last five years." A national search for Sorg's replacement will begin immediately.

Kyle Busch wins Prelude To The Dream

Times Staff Report

ROSSBURG, Ohio - After knocking on the door to victory lane countless times in his five previous runs in the Prelude To The Dream at Eldora Speedway in Rossburg, Ohio, Kyle Busch finally broke through Wednesday night to score his first win in the all-star dirt Late Model race benefiting Feed The Children.

"This is cool," said Busch, who outlasted strong challenges from Kasey Kahne and Clint Bowyer before finishing 2.283 seconds over runner-up Tony Stewart. "This is what it's all about when you go dirt racing. It's a lot of fun. I can't say enough about (team owner) Scott Bloomquist and all these guys. They give me great racecars every time we come here and I've torn them up a few times, including tonight (in qualifying). We were able to come back through, get a good heat race, get a good starting spot for the main event and run up front there with the leaders all night."

Busch started the 40-lap feature event in second place and duelled with Kahne and Bowyer, who together led the first 24 laps (Kahne 1-12; Bowyer 13-21; Kahne 22-24) before Busch took over the lead on lap 25 when Kahne crashed into Bobby Labonte. Busch then checked out, beating three-time Prelude winner Stewart to nab his first career victory at Eldora.

"When Kahne had his mishap, we inherited the lead and just were able to set sail from there," Busch said. "I felt like Kahne had a fast car tonight. He was probably the class of the field. Bowyer was really hustling hard and making it work through traffic and got by him. Then we caught the lapped cars and everybody just slowed down, the pace slowed up and everybody got loose trying to slide each other. Crazy, freak deal there with Kahne sliding (into the No. 44 car of Labonte) in (turn) three. I don't know if he didn't see him, or what. They called the caution a little late and I bet he didn't even have time to react. From there, we had 16 laps to go and it felt like the longest 16 laps of my career here at Eldora."

Finishing third was Austin Dillon in just his second Prelude start. Four-time World of Outlaws Sprint Car Series champion Donny Schatz finished fourth in his dirt Late Model debut. Stewart's NASCAR teammate at Stewart-Haas Racing, Ryan Newman, finished fifth. Aric Almirola, Cruz Pedregon, Dave Blaney, Ty Dillon and Justin Allgaier completed the top-10, all of whom will get a tractor trailer filled with food from Feed The Children delivered to their hometown or city of choice.

Stewart, owner of Eldora Speedway, took great pride in seeing the sixth different winner take the checkered flag in the charity race he created back in 2005.

"We had another first-time winner tonight. That's what the fun part is," said Stewart. "The three-time and reigning NASCAR Sprint Cup Series champion who like the rest of his Sprint Cup counterparts had to commute between a test at Pocono (Pa.) Raceway and the Prelude To The Dream at Eldora. "There's a lot of stuff going on. Five days in a row at Pocono, and for these guys to leave practice at the end of the day today, fly here and race, and then fly back to Pocono tonight and be back in cars at Pocono at nine in the morning, I think that speaks volumes to what this event is all about and what it means for these guys to be here. I know as a promoter and a fellow driver in the Cup series, I'm honored they were that committed to doing this with us tonight to benefit such a good cause as Feed The Children. Really, 'honored' is the best word I can think of to describe it. It's truly an honor with the week we've got this week at Eldora and Pocono."

Rebels

Jon Carraway. Senior leadership will once again be key for the Rebels. Allen Central will return bruising fullback Zach Murphy, a successful ballcarrier who rushed for 11 touchdowns and nearly 1,000 yards last season. Murphy will also anchor the Allen Central defensive line. Also returning for the Rebels is senior safety/wide receiver JD Toole. Numerous underclassmen are expected to emerge for the Rebels in the 2012 season.

The Rebels compete in Class A, District 8 along with longtime frontrunner Pikeville, county rival South Floyd and Phelps. Allen Central is scheduled to open the 2012 campaign at non-district foe Jenkins on Aug. 24.

Revolutionary idea gets heart patients back on their feet fast!

The experts at King's Daughters are taking a new approach to cardiac catheterization - through the wrist. Called radial access, this advance allows patients to get back on their feet - literally - and back to their lives with less discomfort and fewer complications.

It's all made possible by the latest technology, advances in miniaturization, and, of course, the forward-thinking cardiologists at King's Daughters.

If cardiac catheterization is in your future, ask your cardiologist about radial access.
