5 to lose jobs with Arch Coal layoffs

Jack Latta
Staff Writer

Another massive round of layoffs hit the region Thursday, when Arch Coal announced they would be furloughing 500 employees. The news of the layoffs was confirmed by Bill Bissett with the Kentucky Coal Association early Thursday. Bissett said more information about the mine closures would be released later Thursday. In a letter addressed to and provided by Judge-Executive R.D. "Doc" Marshall, the president of

Arch Coal outlined some of the facilities to be closed and the reasons for their closure. "Due to the continuing decline for steam coal in the Central Appalachian market, ICG Hazard LLC will idle its entire Rowdy Gap mine," said William G. Feltner, president and general manager of ICG Hazard. Approximately 93 people are employed at the Rowdy Gap mine. According to Feltner, the company will also idle the entire Flint Ridge complex in Breathitt County, which employs 150 people, and ICG Knott County will idle its entire Knott County and Raven complexes, which employ roughly 250 more. "The idling of these sites will result in workforce reductions among the administrative staff serving those sites," said Feltner. "As a result, we will be closing the entire Prestonsburg office." Feltner says that no "bumping rights" will exist at the mines, and that these terminations are expected to be permanent.

"It's sad that we're seeing a time that major companies such as Arch Coal are having to do this reduction, which is not temporary, but permanent," Marshall said. "Many families from Floyd County into Knott County that work in these mines will be affected." It is unknown what effect the layoffs will have on ancillary industry and business in the region. Marshall said while he hates that Arch Coal is having to make these drastic reductions, he is still happy to have a partner in ICG

Hazard, which donated the land for the new Harold sewer project. This is the second major reduction in the coal industry this month. Earlier this month, Alpha Natural Resources announced it would eliminate 436 jobs in Kentucky, while giving 286 of those workers the opportunity to relocate to open positions in Kentucky, West Virginia and Virginia. Kim Link, a media representative with Arch Coal, did not immediately return calls seeking further comment.

BRINGING THEIR BEST

Bentley, Jamerson riding local support to music careers

Ralph B. Davis
Managing Editor

PRESTONSBURG — It wasn't too long ago that Nick Jamerson and Kris Bentley were simply two local youths, growing up in Prestonsburg and playing music together in church.

A lot has changed over the last few years for the two young men, who returned home Tuesday to sign autographs and chat with fans who lined up at Billy Ray's Restaurant to buy CDs and t-shirts from their group, Sundry Best.

"I just love their music," said Michelle Couch, who said she was the first of their fans ever to get a t-shirt autographed.

Couch said she has several ties to Sundry Best. Her son went to school with Jamerson and her husband went to school with Jamerson's father. And they were neighbors at one time. But it isn't simply familiarity or hometown pride that attracts her to their music. Couch said part of the group's appeal is how they started out on their own and "worked their way through the ranks" to get to where they are now.

Couch's description of the group's beginnings can be clearly seen in how their first album came together. Bentley and Jamerson posted an advertisement on Kiektstarter, a "crowd-sourcing" website that allows artists and other creative types to seek funding for projects, promising anything from stickers for a $5 contribution to a private performance for a $1,000 donation.

Sundry Best was seeking $6,000 to produce their album. Instead, they got over $15,000. There were even three $1,000 donations.

"I feel like this is our big break, making this album," Jamerson said.

"I see them going a long way," Couch said. "They're just starting a journey that will take them a long way. I can see them living in Nashville someday."

The group describes their music as folk Americana.

"A lot of people call us country, but we're by no means mainstream country," Jamerson said.

Jamerson and Bentley formed Sundry Best two years ago, and since then they've been overwhelmed with how rapidly their music careers have progressed. The group released their first album, "Door without a Screen," June 2. They now have a regular gig playing twice a week at Redmon's, a popular college bar in Lexington. And their influence is beginning to grow, with the duo set to play gigs in Indianapolis, Nashville and Knoxville.

"You know stuff is going good when you have to step back and get your breath, because that's how fast things are happening," Bentley said.

Jamerson and Bentley now play music full time, and they have a strong following both in Eastern Kentucky and in Lexington. The group's sole goal now is simply to reach out to new fans.

"We're just trying to play in front of as many people as we can, whoever will listen to us," Jamerson said.

And that includes people near and far. Sundry Best is scheduled to headline a concert July 13 at the East Kentucky Expo Center.

TINKER FORK — A woman was arrested last Friday after police allegedly found her intoxicated while operating an ATV on a roadway, with two small children aboard.

According to Kentucky State Police records, Brittany Story, 23, of Beaver, was traveling west on Route 3380 near Tinker Fork last Friday. Story was riding an ATV with two young children aboard, ages 5 and 12, when she was stopped by Trooper Brian Watson for operating on the roadway.

Watson says when he made contact with Story, he noticed her acting "nervous," and that when she removed her dark tinted glasses, "she had bloodshot eyes and constricted pupils." Watson also noted that Story had pill residue

Story allegedly told the officer that she had snorted a Percocet and smoked marijuana approximately one hour before being stopped.

Story was arrested and transported to Highlands Regional Medical Center, where she refused all tests. She was later transported to and lodged at the Floyd County Detention Center. Story was later released on a surety bond.

Lawsuit alleges breach of coal sales contract

By Ralph B. Davis
Managing Editor

PIKEVILLE — A Pennsylvania company is accused of renegeing on contracts to purchase coal, in order to buy lower-priced coal from other suppliers, in a lawsuit filed last week in U.S. District Court.

Southern Coal Sales Corporation filed the complaint against Xcoal Energy and Resources and its owner and managing partner, Ernie L. Thrasher, alleging breach of contract and fraud.

According to the complaint, filed by attorneys Barry D. Hunter, Paul E. Sullivan and Medrith Lee Norman, of the Lexington firm Frost Brown Todd, SCS negotiated a deal for Xcoal to purchase coal over a one-year period, based on assurances by Xcoal that it "could handle any quantity" of coal produced by SCS, because the company had existing relationships in China, Japan and Korea. The complaint alleges Thrasher told Southern representatives, "I can buy it all because I have an unlimited marketplace."

"Based upon Thrasher's representations and performance, SCS shifted a majority of its coal sales relationship from its existing customers to Xcoal, in some cases away from customers that had been customers of SCS's affiliates for decades," the complaint says.

Southern agreed to four purchase orders, totalling nearly $186 million, for 1.77 million tons of coal, with the coal originating out of Pike and Harlan counties, in Kentucky, and Lee and Wise counties, in Virginia. However, the complaint alleges Xcoal began refusing delivery of orders less than 60 days after the contracts were signed and would not respond to email, telephone and text inquiries.

Since the contracts were signed, SCS says Xcoal has only accepted delivery of 450,000 tons of coal and has only paid $20.8 million of the $45.3 million cost of that coal.

SCS accuses Xcoal of making false representations during and after negotiations.

"Defendants, at various times, have declined to purchase coal, telling SCS that they did not have a market, when in fact they were then buying coal from other suppliers at reduced prices in order to profit from their breaches," the complaint says. "Defendants made these misrepresentations intentionally, in an effort to cover up their misconduct."

SCS is seeking unspecified compensatory, consequential and punitive damages against Xcoal.

The case is being heard before U.S. District Judge Karen K. Caldwell.

Disappointment

Worth Repeating...

A liberal is a man who is right most of the time, but he's right too soon.

— Gregory Nunn

Amendment I

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people to peaceably assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances.

Our View The beast is starving

Presumptive Republican presidential nominee Mitt Romney is attempting to sell the American people a bill of goods in his quest for the White House. Seeking to be all things to all people, he proclaims he can balance the budget, continue war-level defense funding and put folks back to work, all without raising taxes. Plus, he's going to lower the price of gas, too.

Of course, any sensible person sees Romney's exclamations and proclamations for what they are: Bunk. We have all come to expect a certain amount of shall we say, embellishment in the promises candidates make, but we generally demand they at least be believable. Romney's aren't, unless you're the sort who is still wonders what the Tooth Fairy does with all those teeth.

But the Romney campaign's credibility problem is symptomatic of a larger but similar dilemma facing the Republican Party as a whole — too much success.

Since the 1980s, Republicans have been nothing if not successful in setting a national agenda that is equal parts tax cuts and government reduction. "No new taxes," the campaign mantra of a failed, one-term president, is the new national motto. Any suggestion that the federal government needs to increase revenue from somewhere, anywhere, is immediately shot down as — gasp! — socialist, perhaps even treasonous.

And that message has resounded with the American voter. Reagan was able to slash the top tax rate from 70 percent to 50 percent, and that lower rate seems unreasonably high by today's standard. Today, that same rate stands at 35 percent.

All of it was part of a strategy to "starve the beast," a term coined in the 1980s by an unnamed Reagan staffer, but since adopted by conservative ideologues like Grover Norquist, Paul Krugman and Sarah Palin. The theory was to first cut taxes to unprecedented levels, in order to manufacture a fiscal crisis, which would, it was believed, result in slashing Congressional spending and cutting government programs.

But that isn't quite the way it worked out. Washington politicians were more than happy to bring tax cuts home to their constituents, particularly the wealthiest ones who funded their campaigns, but were less eager to pull the trigger on cutting the programs upon which many of their constituents depended. Instead of producing a smaller government, the result has been to balloon the national debt.

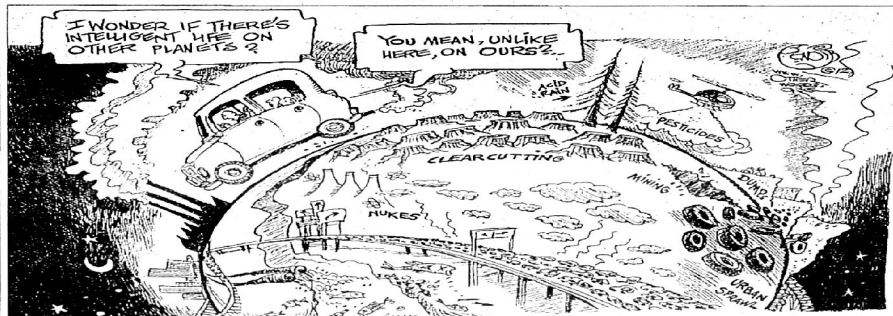

Now, three decades later, the beast is truly starving. Our nation's roads and bridges are crumbling. Social Security and Medicare are constantly in need of "fixing." The middle class, what little of it that's left, has been languishing with stagnant wages for decades, while a new and seemingly permanent underclass has taken root. Our educational system continues to lag the rest of industrialized world. Washington appears unable to respond to any problem until it reaches the crisis stage, and one has to wonder how much longer the government will be able to effectively deal with crisis.

The federal government does need a shakeup, but it does not need the same recipe that has been preached for over a generation. Certainly, there is waste, fraud and abuse in government spending, but even if there were a way to accomplish the impossible goal of eliminating those things entirely, that would not solve the country's budget crisis. It wouldn't even make a dent.

America needs to look to its past as a guide, back to a time when we were able to build dams, bridges and the interstate highway system; back to a time when we were able to eradicate the diseases that threatened us; back to a time when we were able to defeat evil itself in World War II and then turn around to send an entire generation of veterans to college on the G.I. Bill; back to a time when we could send a man to the moon. If America wants to see a return to that level of accomplishment, then the federal government must address the increasingly inequitable tax burden that has shifted an ever larger share of the federal budget away from the wealthy and onto the backs of the middle class. And, yes, that means taxes must be raised on those who are best able to pay them, not to a pro-Reagan top rate of 70 percent, but certainly higher than the bargain-basement 35 percent rate of today.

Also, when Romney and the Republicans parade down the campaign trail, singing the same tired song that the nation needs more tax cuts and smaller government, our first inclination is to laugh, either at their gall or their cluelessness. We're not sure which. But then we're reminded of the damage that has been wrought by 30 years of these same failed policies, and we can only feel a nervous hope that the American people will not get suckered by the conservative siren's song again, and mortal fear for what will happen if they are.

Beyond the Beltway Running for magician-in-chief

Donald Kaul

Our long national nightmare is over. Mitt Romney has won the Republican nomination for president. Let the etching begin.

Romney was officially put over the top by the Texas primary last month, although in truth his victory had been a foregone conclusion ever since Rick Santorum (remember him?) packed it in weeks before.

His task now is to persuade moderates and independents that he's not as crazy as he's sounded so far, while simultaneously convincing the Republican right wing that he is. It's not an easy task, but it's one he's well suited to.

Pick your issue — health care, abortion, gay rights, immigration, gun control, Planned Parenthood, Libya — and at one time or another Romney has been on two sides of it. Sometimes three.

It's likely, however, that he'll try to finesse the question of what he's for in favor of attacking the incumbent. President Barack Obama just can't seem to do anything right, according to Mitt. He's too soft on Russia and China, too hard on Israel, too mean to business, and too nice to unions. Romney admits the economy is getting better, but he thinks that's Obama's policies rather than because of them.

"Obamacare" is a terrible idea. Romney would get rid of it on "Day One" of his presidency. Oh yes, he would also cut the deficit and lower the price of gas, all the while spending more on the military without raising taxes.

In other words, Romney isn't running for president. He's running for Magician-in-Chief.

So far it seems to be working pretty well for him. He's nearly even with Obama in the polls and the election is five months away. Anything can happen.

I must admit, I don't quite get it. The Republican Party has turned its back on immigrants, gays, blacks, Latinos, unions, and women. Who's left? Most white guys, I suppose. Homophobes, women threatened by feminism, people who don't believe in the separation of church and state, and those who don't believe in evolution or global warming. Rich people.

It puts me in mind of the passage from Huckberry Finn where one con man says to the other:

"Hain't we got all the fools in town on our side? And ain't that a big enough majority in any town?"

I suppose both candidates will, at some point or other, announce that this is the most important election of our lifetime. Presidential candidates always say that.

It's not. Campaign rhetoric always overstates the power of the president, who is hostage to events beyond his control. If the European Union says down, for example, we go down with it, regardless of who's residing in the White House.

And that doesn't even factor in the dangers of Marxism embraced by Republicans in Congress. I mean the philosophy Groucho espoused, of course.

Our Republican legislators resemble nothing so much as the faculty of Huxley College in the 1932 Marx brothers film Horse Feathers.

The opening scene features Groucho Marx as Quincy Adams Wagstaff, the school's newly installed president, bouncing around in his academic robes singing:

I don't know what they have to say,
It makes no difference anyway —
Whatever it is, I'm against it!

No matter what it is or who committed it,
I'm against it.

Your proposition may be good,
but I've had one thing understood —
whatever it is, I'm against it!
And even when you've changed it or condoned it,
I'm against it.

Now we know where Mitch McConnell and John Boehner get their material.

This could be an historic election if the electorate were to rise up and throw the Republicans out into the middle of the street, but I can't see it happening.

And even then, we'd still be left with Democrats, who look good only when compared to Republicans.

The election is less than five months away. A new nightmare begins.

Reminders of a sinking ship

Jack Latta
Managing Editor

I tend to get a little preachy in my columns. They are less storytelling, and more trite little rants espousing my own, immoral authority or idiosyncratic assurances. My editors would like less finger-pointing and more, I don't know, something else. But it's hard out here in the void. Just stepping outside to look around or have even the most casual of conversations with one's neighbor exposes some part of the great machine with which to take objection.

It's clear that our future is grim. That's what I told. There are often discrepancies in the "who is responsible" category, but it seems clear that the good ship lollipop we all sail on here in the coalfields has sprung an inordinate number of leaks. Appalachia is the name painted on the side of our sinking vessel; now listing to one side, covered in barnacles and rust, that hasn't moved under its own steam in over 50 years. Everyone knows it's going to sink, just a matter of when. Those who are able jump ship and look for better opportunities. The rest of us cling to hope that we can fix this bigger and get underway.

Saturday I tried to get out of it all. Take a holiday from worry and just forget about the B movie-esque, overly dramatic demise of the coal industry, a founding education system, governmental incompetence, politics in general, and environmental calamities. I went to the one place we all can lose ourselves, fade into the crowds and just "be," if but for an hour or two, Wal-Mart.

But before I could round the bases of housewares and the garden center and make my way into electronics, even the quiet meditative confines of Wally World were interrupted with the stink of water bailers.

The multitude of same-shirt-wearing teens pushing shopping carts loaded with grape soda told me that the summer home-repair volunteers were back in town, with busloads of crusaders here to nail up a couple of gutters, hang a few shingles, and see how the other half lives.

Several groups organize these types of efforts, and their view of us can be summed up in one sentence taken from one group's website: "And when you don't even have money to put shoes on your kids' feet, fixing a hole in the roof is low priority." 2012 and still with the shoes. Where are these barefoot people? Seriously, it's hard to find anyone around here who has to suffer the economic disaffection that comes from dial-up internet service, let alone unable to buy shoes. But I digress.

Apparently, Appalachia shares an interesting fun fact with our most frequently traveled interstate route, I-75. We're always under construction. Most notably, and often, by well intentioned, northern, upper middle class church groups and social activists. Every year, this tempestive bunch is overcome by their feelings of guilt and shame in view of their abundance of simple pleasures, like literacy and running water; that they stir from their 9-to-5 jobs to spend a week vacationing in Central Appalachia; fixing the steps of someone's front porch. When will they learn that we don't need more help bailing water? We can bail our own water. What we need is our own boat.

It's been nearly 50 years since Lyndon Johnson first declared his War on Poverty, which specifically targeted Central Appalachia. Since then, all that measure successfully accomplished was to strip the populace of the one thing we once had in abundance. Willingness. The mountain version of the English stiff upper lip. We were willing to do whatever it took. Live in the worst conditions, work the worst jobs, eat the worst food, travel the worst roads, all in order to tend to our families and community. We were the Waltons. Fifty years later, we're still living in the worst conditions, we're all filing for disability, the worst food is killing us, the worst roads lead to the pill mills of Florida, and John Boy has skipped town.

There are still those here trying to cling to our heritage, that independent mountain pride. You catch glimpses of them in between their two full-time jobs, hustling to and fro, advancing their education, managing careers, seeing to their children, and never a word of complaint. They do what has to be done. Mountain boys and girls who were raised to value an honest day's pay for an honest day's work. But in these dishonest days, there is less and less of either, and more and more marketing of prescription drugs, children raised to seek a life on social welfare, and a political system plugged into feeding our wants instead of our needs.

Then here come the volunteers with their hammers and nails ready to fix us. Bailing a few more buckets of water, just to brighten up our floating coffin.

When did it become popular to come here and fix things we can rightfully fix ourselves? We have no shortage of people who can swing a hammer in these parts. We are fully capable of fixing our own roofs, and painting our own homes. Oh, and we have shoes.

The volunteers are like that irritating friend who knows entirely too much about your personal finances, and is unrelenting in his offers to lend you money. He never offers to help you find work, or teach you to improve your own life. He merely shows up every so often with a few nickels to serve as a reminder that your boat is sinking. You're a broken thing and your shame feeds his conscience.

There is a lot that needs fixing in these parts. Sadly, the ingredients for it won't be found in the volunteers' toolbox. They're just here to make a sinking ship sparkle.

So much for my quiet Saturday free from angst. Maybe next week I should try to find a Target.

Armed robbery suspect arrested in Pikeville

Jack Latta
Staff Writer

PIKEVILLE — A suspect in an armed robbery was arrested for shoplifting in Walmart later that same day, this week in Pike County.

According to Pikeville Police officials, they received a report of a robbery at the Town Mountain Gas N Go Wednesday afternoon.

Jeffrey Holbrook, 28,

Jeffrey Holbrook

of Van Lear, allegedly approached a female as she was putting gasoline into her vehicle. Police say Holbrook showed the woman a gun and demanded money. The woman reportedly told the accused that she had no cash to give him. He then demanded she sit back in her vehicle as he left the scene in his own vehicle.

According to police, Holbrook was later found at the Wal-Mart Supercenter, where he had reportedly been shoplifting. Holbrook was found in possession of a handgun.

Holbrook was arrested by Patrolman Tim Roberts and lodged in the Pikeville Detention Center.

Holbrook is charged with first degree robbery, possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, receiving stolen property, and theft by unlawful taking under $500.

Professor Jan Tolar Modisette presented the Floyd County Library with a copy of "Professor Mayo's College - A History of East Texas State University." The book was given to the library by Texas A&M University-Commerce, the institution founded by William Leonidas Mayo as East Texas Normal College in 1889. Mayo was a Floyd County native. Professor Modisette presented the volume to Floyd County Library Director Jonathan Campbell, after using the library to research Professor Mayo's Prestonsburg roots for her dissertation. Texas A&M University-Commerce is now the second largest branch of the Texas A&M University system.

Lawmakers learn about veteran training program

FRANKFORT — Members of the Interim Joint Committee on Veterans, Military Affairs and Public Protection learned Thursday about a training program for veterans transitioning out of the military.

The program, Veterans in Piping (VIP), was created in 2009 by the United Association (UA). It prepares soldiers leaving the military for careers in welding, plumbing and HVAC. Participating veterans complete an 18 to 20 week training course and then are directly placed into an apprenticeship.

The program is provided at no cost to participants but has an estimated value of $35,000 per apprentice, according to Bruce Dantley, a UA training specialist. VIP helps the UA address an anticipated labor shortage of skilled craftsmen expected in the next three to five years. "The best place to get the new workforce [we're looking for is from] the military," he said.

Dantley told lawmakers the UA feels like veterans have earned training opportunities by serving our country. "It's the right thing to do," he said. The program partners with contractors across the United States and Canada, including some here in Kentucky, to ensure graduating veterans will have employment after their training is complete, Dantley said.

The goal of the program is to provide veterans with an option for a lifelong career, he said.

Nationwide, more than 235 veterans have graduated from the program.

Carl D. Perkins Job Corps Center carpentry instructor Ricky Yates is teaching students about the environment and recycling during his "green lessons" each week. But this week, Yates and his class have been learning how to recycle wood pallets normally found wasting away behind many businesses. Yates and his class have made several Adirondack-style pallet chairs out of the wood pallets. Yates wanted to teach the students about using materials in many different ways and being creative, all while helping the environment.

Extension agents still helping East Ky. recover from tornado

WELLINGTON — Back in late winter, many people in Menifee County were preparing for the 25th annual Mountain Memories Festival. They were celebrating a grant from the Brushy Fork Institute that allowed them to fund a tour of local artisans and farmers during the festival and enjoying improvements to Broke Leg Falls, a natural area that was a popular place to hike and picnic.

But then March 2 changed the plan, and most people in Menifee County won't forget the EF-3 twister that ripped through part of the county, and then stayed on the ground for more than 80 miles, destroying everything in its path. The storm left many homeless, injured and in shock. Courtney Jenkins, lifelong resident of Morgan County, knew she had to push emotion aside for a time and help those affected.

Jenkins is the University of Kentucky Cooperative Extension agent for agriculture and natural resources and 4-H in Menifee County. She and her colleagues acted quickly to meet people's basic needs immediately after the storm.

"We worked hard trying to help everyone get their things back in order," Jenkins said. "At the time, it wasn't about emotions, it was about helping people."

Chamber of Commerce Executive Director Lola Thomas started out the day after the twister helping at a school and didn't think much about Broke Leg Falls until someone asked her if she'd seen it.

"They told me it was really bad," she said. "So we drove up here the following Sunday afternoon and I just cried; I couldn't hold my emotions." Broke Leg Falls sustained severe damage, hundreds of trees leveled, trails and bridges destroyed and recently improved areas decimated. Oddly though, the storm revealed prominent cliff lines formerly hidden by thick vegetation — a site that Thomas now believes is a "rock climber's dream."

"The area is one of my passions," she said. "I still get emotional, but we will rebuild."

As the Mountain Memories Festival began June 1, rain and clouds hovered over the area before the sun began to find its way into the Frenchburg streets. It's a little synonymous with the way the tornado brought darkness to the area, but the light is beginning to shine again.

"Having the festival so quickly after the tornado really shows the resolve of this community," Jenkins said. "People are still coming together, working together to do things the county has done in the past, to provide a sense of normalcy — even if it is a new normal."

She also believes that because of this disaster, Extension is better equipped to deal with any disaster in the future.

There have been extension agents from across the state come to help and volunteers from surrounding counties that worked for days on end," she said.

She added that there is a bright future for the area. "Though there were a lot of things we had hoped would remain the same, they will be different now," she said. "I'm sure this community continue coming together, make sure people have what they need."

NCAA announces academic progress report

Times Staff Report

LEXINGTON - The NCAA released its academic progress rate report Tuesday, showing that all 22 of the University of Kentucky sports teams surpassed the NCAA cut score and that 15 of the 22 squads exceeded the national average for public universities in their sports.

The men's golf team led the way with a perfect 1,000 score, followed by women's cross country (994), men's cross country (993), women's golf (993) and women's tennis (992).

The marks are a four-year composite covering the 2007-08, 2008-09, 2009-10 and 2010-11 school years, that measures academic eligibility and retention of student-athletes. The NCAA cut score for each sport is 930, which is an increase from the previous years' cutoff of 925.

The 15 Wildcat teams that exceeded the national average among public universities in their sports included the five teams listed above, along with baseball (975), men's basketball (963), women's basketball (980), football (951), softball (984), men's tennis (987), women's indoor track (984), women's outdoor track (986) volleyball (990) and the combined men's/women's sport of rifle (982).

Another highlight of the report was eight UK teams that notched a perfect 1,000 score for the 2010-11 school year: women's basketball, men's cross country, women's cross country, men's golf, women's golf, men's tennis, women's tennis and volleyball.

"With the increase of the cut score, achieving the APR has become even more challenging," said Mitch Barnhart, UK Director of Athletics. "Our coaches and support personnel have done well in adjusting to the requirements and I'm proud of our student-athletes for their work in posting strong scores."

With each team exceeding the NCAA target score, no Wildcat squads are subject to penalties, such as scholarship reductions or postseason restrictions. None of UK's 22 teams have incurred a penalty during the nine-year history of the APR.

Over 14,000 boys participated in football during the 2011-12 school year.

More high school athletes are competing statewide

Times Staff Report

LEXINGTON - For the 2011-2012 school year, participation in high school sports in the Commonwealth ballooned to more than 70,000 students according to data collected from the membership and reported to the National Federation of High Schools (NFHS) as part of their annual participation survey.

For the first time, actual participation numbers were determined by school sport rosters as submitted electronically by the membership, versus a triennial survey in past years. This past school year, 40,103 boys and 30,774 girls were part of a high school level team in KHSAA sanctioned sports and sports-activities, compared to 32,886 boys and 18,286 girls in the 1989-90 school year.

Football participation is at an all-time high in the Commonwealth, with 14,042 boys listed on rosters compared to 7,195 in 1989-90. Baseball, basketball, soccer and track all have more than 6,000 boys competing this year. Basketball, soccer, softball, track and volleyball each had more than 5,000 girls competing, with volleyball showing the highest level of participation (6,147 girls).

"I think our schools are really seeing the fruits of their labors with our emphasis on girls sports, and reporting and awareness related to Title IX," said Tackett. "In 1989-90, we had only basketball with more than 3,000 girls participating and now in KHSAA sanctioned sports and sports-activities, compared to in each. These opportunities show vast improvement for the girls in our schools but we still have plenty of work to do. I am particularly pleased with the fact that we have more than 6,000 students playing fast pitch softball (1,000 more than slow pitch softball) and more than 5,600 in girls' soccer, two sports we didn't have in 1989-90; and volleyball participation has exploded from 70 schools with 780 participants in 1989-90 to 255 schools having 6,147 participants in 2012-13.

"Interscholastic sports is the absolute best opportunity to ensure students stay involved representing their school and maintain better academic and attendance records, all of which are critically important of the academic goals of our Commonwealth."

KHSAA Dead Period begins on Monday

LEXINGTON - High school student-athletes will be able to get some rest and relaxation, beginning next week. The Kentucky High School Athletic Association (KHSAA) Dead Period begins at Midnight on Monday, June 25 and runs through 11:59 p.m. on Monday, July 9.

The Dead Period was adopted nearly 20 years ago by member schools in response to concerns about year-round play and practice and parental and coaching desire for some down time from interscholastic play. Member schools adopted the period of June 25 to July 9 as a time of inactivity, which followed the pattern of the historic idling of southern textile mills and this time allows administrators, coaches, student-athletes and their families a time where they

Dawahares/KHSAA Hall of Fame class of 2013 introduced

Times Staff Report

LEXINGTON - Members of the newest class of the Dawahares/KHSAA Hall of Fame were introduced to the public and enjoyed a round of golf at the 26th Annual Dawahares/KHSAA Hall of Fame Golf Scramble on Tuesday at the Marriott Griffin Gate Resort Hotel.

"It's amazing to see the support this Hall of Fame enjoys from the people who participate in the scramble every year," said KHSAA Commissioner Julian Tackett. "We have Hall of Famers who were inducted more than 20 years ago and they still come back and play every year. It's such an honor to see the new Hall of Famers introduced for the first time. It's a great time but it's also very humbling when you see just how much this honor means to them."

Representatives of eight of the nine members of the 2013 Class of the Dawahares/KHSAA Hall of Fame were in attendance at Tuesday's festivities. Members of the 2013 class are Pascal Benson, Julie Ditty, Tyson Gay, Burney Jenkins, the late Roger Klein, Frank Mikkavcic, Ron Myers, Jamie Walz Richey and John Dee Wilson.

Two other individuals have previously been voted into the KHSAA Hall of Fame but declined induction at that time. Kelly Coleman (1989) and the late John Reynolds (1994) have yet to accept the honor. They or their representatives would be added to the induction class the year the honor is accepted.

All MSU athletic teams reach NCAA multi-year APR threshold

Times Staff Report

MOREHEAD - All 16 Morehead State University athletic teams have reached the National Collegiate Athletic Association's multi-year Academic Progress Rate (APR) threshold of 900. The NCAA's latest study covers the 2007-08, 2008-09, 2009-10 and 2010-11 school years.

Morehead State's volleyball program managed a 1,000 during all four years included in the cohort, while men's cross country, men's golf, men's tennis, women's cross country, women's tennis and women's outdoor track also turned in perfect scores during the report's most recent school year.

"Congratulations to all of our student-athletes, especially those associated with the perfect scores," MSU Assistant Athletic Director for Student-Athlete Services & Senior Woman Administrator Sara Larson said. "Our coaches do a great job of recruiting quality student-athletes here at Morehead State. We are certainly looking for individuals who can help us win championships, but we are also interested in finding young men and women who want to earn a college degree."

In the multi-year column, the Eagles had five teams score above 990 on the 1,000-point scale - volleyball, soccer (993), women's tennis (992), co-ed rifle (992) and women's outdoor track (991).

"It's awesome to see so many high scores across the board," MSU Head Tennis Coach Kevin Fulton said. "I am a former school teacher, so education has always been very important to me. We have so many student-athletes at Morehead State who are truly dedicated to their efforts in the classroom, and our academic support staff does a tremendous job keeping everyone focused. Every coach here wants to win, but we also want to see these young people earn a college degree."

The NCAA's multi-year APR is part of the overall Division I academic reform effort and is intended to highlight teams that demonstrate a commitment to academic progress and student-athlete retention.

The APR provides a real-time look at a team's academic success each semester by tracking the progress of each student-athlete on scholarship. The APR takes into account eligibility, retention and graduation, and provides a full assessment of each team's academic performance.

Volleyball will be the first 2012-13 Morehead State athletic program to play at home when it entertains Xavier on Aug. 28, while the football team welcomes Southern Virginia on Aug. 30 and the soccer squad hosts Ohio on Aug. 31. All three home openers are set for 7 p.m.

during this period. These restrictions shall not apply to any postseason wrap-up activities, celebrations and recognition events relating to a spring sports team at a school which participated in KHSAA state championship play in that particular sport during that particular year."

KHSAA member schools benefit from royalty program

Times Staff Report

LEXINGTON - KHSAA member schools benefited for the second consecutive year through the royalty program with the National Federation of State High School Associations (NFHS) and Licensing Resource Group, a trademark licensing company with nearly 20 years of experience managing trademark licensing programs for more than 150 colleges and universities, athletic conferences and athletic organizations nationwide.

The KHSAA benefited more than $23,000 in royalties over the distribution to member schools for sales during the 2011-12 school year. The program was created to help the KHSAA's 279 member schools collect revenues from royalties collected on merchandise sold at local and national retailers featuring a proprietary NFHS logo. The officially licensed hang tags, a creation of LRG similar to hang tags that appear on collegiate merchandise, are individually numbered and track the sale of each apparel item, as well as where it originated.

Among the national and regional retailers who belong to the LRG program are Wal-Mart, Kohl's, Walgreens, Lids, Meijer, Dollar General, Hibbett Sports, Dunham's Sports and Kroger.

Operation Dry Water helps keep Kentucky waterways safe for boaters

Times Staff Report

FRANKFORT - Conservation officers with the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources will team with law enforcement agencies at the federal, state and local level for Operation Dry Water June 22 through June 24.

Operation Dry Water is a national effort devoted to boating law enforcement and education, now in its fourth year. It is an initiative of the National Association of Boating Law Administrators and the U.S. Coast Guard along with partnering state and federal agencies.

During the Operation Dry Water weekend, safety messages will be included at the boat ramps on the water. Law enforcement officers conduct courtesy boat inspections and answer questions about boating laws and boating safety equipment.

"The overall goal of Operation Dry Water is to minimize Boating Under the Influence (BUI) and alcohol on the water," said Zac Campbell, boating education coordinator for the Kentucky Fish and Wildlife. "We are not trying to surprise and arrest people. The goal is no BUIs through education."

Last year, during Operation Dry Water, Kentucky Fish and Wildlife conservation officers encountered 1,207 vessels and 3,180 boaters and issued 188 boating safety warnings. Officers also issued 84 citations with 7 BUIs. Nationwide, officers contacted 42,253 vessels with 8,589 safety warnings issued during Operation Dry Water. Collectively, these officers also issued 4,338 citations, including 321 BUIs.

"Although thousands of Kentuckians boat that weekend, there were no accidents," Campbell said. "It was a safe weekend. Boaters conducted themselves in a safe, responsible manner during last year's Operation Dry Water."

Injured boaters are a danger to everyone on the water, including skiers, anglers and other boaters. Alcohol can accelerate the condition known as "boater's fatigue." The environmental conditions of boating such as the sun, movement, noise and vibration can impact the coordination, judgment and reaction time of a boat operator.

"Accidents can quickly turn a great weekend on the water sour," Campbell said. "We want to try and prevent accidents and everyone enjoy their time on the water."

Kentucky's boating laws and regulations are contained in the 2012-2013 Kentucky Fishing and Boating Guide, available free wherever fishing or hunting licenses are sold, or request one by calling 1-800-858-1549. Newer Subaru is far safer than old Jeep Cherokee

Tom and Ray Magillozzi
King Features Syndicate

Dear Tom and Ray:
Please settle a marital dispute. I currently drive a 2001 Jeep Cherokee 4x4 with 165,000 miles. She ain't what she used to be. I would like to get a very zippy Subaru Impreza. My husband believes this would be a poor choice for the safety of myself and my daughters. He believes that the older Cherokee is a safer vehicle than the new Subaru because of its size and construction. I say the new safety equipment makes the newer Subaru a wiser choice. We need a 4x4 or all-wheel drive to haul our future Olympic skiers to the mountains this winter. Please advise as to which car is safer. — Angela

TOM: There's no question that the Subaru is safer, Angela. The 2001 Cherokee got mediocre safety ratings, and has only two air bags for the entire vehicle.

RAY: The 2012 Impreza, on the other hand, has so many bags, you'd think it just got back from a going-out-of-business sale. It's got front air bags, side bags, roof bags and knee bags. Plus, it's got anti-lock brakes, stability control and emergency brake assist. It's got a lower center of gravity, so it's less likely to flip over during an emergency maneuver, and it's got a modern all-wheel-drive system, which won't cause unpredictable handling on dry roads.

TOM: It's more structurally sound, too, with better passenger-compartment protection and door reinforcement. And because it's new, it'll be more reliable, so you and the kids won't get stranded in a blizzard on a meday and freeze to death.

RAY: Other than that, they're pretty much equivalent. Angela:

TOM: There is one danger with the Subaru, which your husband obviously has identified: That new set of golf clubs he had his eye on is in grave danger, since you're going to need that money for the down payment on the new car.

RAY: But this is a no-brainer. Between these two, you'd be safer in the Subaru. Get four good snow tires for the winter, and this Subaru ought to get you and your family around safely for years.

The dangers of running on empty

Dear Tom and Ray:
I am a 76-year-old woman, recently engaged to an 80-year-old man. We are truly best friends and agree on everything, except one thing. He drives a 2004 Lincoln Town Car that we affectionately call the "Pimp Mobile." He won't fill up the gas tank until the light comes on and it ping. I tell him this is hard on the fuel pump and that I have heard you state this. Would you please clarify this? Our future wedding bliss is in jeopardy. We both enjoy your radio show and your columns. Thanks. — Annie and Jack

TOM: Gee, Annie, we have mentioned that, in our opinion, habitually driving a car on empty can shorten the life of the fuel pump.

RAY: The reason we think that is because the pump sits inside the gas tank, and so it's cooled by the gasoline it's submerged in. Or not cooled by the gasoline it's not submerged in, if you never put more than two gallons of gas into the car.

TOM: Now, by how much might it shorten the life of a fuel pump? We have no idea. It just makes sense to us that a pump that's constantly running hot will conk out sooner than a pump that is properly cooled.

RAY: But as long as he's filling the tank completely when it's empty, he's probably doing little to no damage. And at a certain age, you have to worry more about HIS pump failing than the Pimp Mobile's!

TOM: I'm guessing what really bothers you, Annie, is the anxiety that comes with running precariously low on fuel all the time. If you're not someone who's eager to hike five miles back to the nearest gas station if he miscalculates, this can cause a certain amount of continual, and unnecessary, stress.

RAY: So, we think that in the interest of marital harmony, Jack should be less concerned with how often he has to stop for fuel, and more concerned with his future wife's peace and comfort.

TOM: That may mean altering his habits a bit, but so what? He's still a young fella. You can't tell me he's stuck in his ways at a mere 80!

RAY: So, instead of making this a mechanical argument, Annie, if driving on fumes causes you stress, tell Jack that. And ask him if, for your peace of mind and comfort, he would be willing to fill up the tank when it gets to a quarter-full.

TOM: And then you can do something equally considerate for him. Like not swap his Preparation H with his Dentu-Creme when he's not looking. Have a wonderful time, you two!

Ways to control irregular heart

To Your Good Health

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: Last fall, my heart started to jump around, and I took it that I had palpitations, although I wasn't sure what palpitations were. It turns out I had atrial fibrillation. Since then, I have been on many medicines for the atrial fibrillation plus Coumadin, a blood thinner. The Coumadin requires frequent trips to the lab. I have a hard time getting around. I don't drive. My doctor suggests ablation. What are your thoughts? — H.M.

ANSWER: Atrial fibrillation is in either first or second place when it comes to heart questions. It means the heart beats rapidly and irregularly. The rapid heart pumps less effectively, and the irregular beat promotes the formation of blood clots in the upper heart chambers. Those clots, or pieces of them, can be carried through the circulation to the brain, where they cause a stroke.

Treatment for atrial fibrillation aims to slow the heart, get it to beat regularly and prevent clots from forming if a regular rhythm cannot be attained.

Medicines sometimes can both slow the heart and restore a normal rhythm. If a normal rhythm is not achieved, the patient will still do well if the heart beats slowly. That patient, however, must add to his or her treatment a blood thinner like Coumadin to prevent clots and a stroke.

Your doctor has suggested a way to restore a regular beat — ablation. A heart doctor inches a special catheter — a thin, pliable tube — from a surface blood vessel to the heart. The catheter is equipped to emit radio waves, which make a series of scars to prevent the generation of erratic signals that spawn atrial fib. The result, when the procedure is effective, is a normal, regular heartbeat.

The patient can then kiss Coumadin goodbye. My thoughts are that it's worth serious consideration.

You can also get rid of Coumadin by switching to Pradaxa, a blood thinner that doesn't require lab testing. It's new and is somewhat expensive.

The booklet on heartbeats irregularities explains atrial fibrillation in detail. To order a copy, write to: Dr. Donohue — No. 107W, Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. Enclose a check or money order (no cash) for $4.75 U.S./$6. Canada with the recipient's printed name and address. Please allow four weeks for delivery.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I'm a 34-year-old male and am going bald. What is your opinion on hair transplants? Do they last? How successful are they? — L.K.

ANSWER: Male hair loss occurs because male hormones shrivel hair follicles, the home for each hair. The hair thins, is shorter and falls out well before its time. Sensitivity to this male hormone action is genetically programmed, and in some men, it takes place at young ages.

Have you considered using minoxidil, which is applied to the scalp, or finasteride, an oral medicine?

Hair transplantation works well. The hair is taken from the back of the head, where hair follicles have a long life. It's very successful.

It would be wise to check with a doctor to see if your hair loss really is something you inherited, or if it's a sign of something else.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him or request an order form of available health newsletters at P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475.

Report name changes to social security

Jennifer Hopkins Claims Representative
Social Security Administration

This time of year, we see a lot of weddings, and in many cases that means name changes. If you need to change your name due to marriage, divorce, or any other reason, you will want to report the change to Social Security.

There are several reasons to report the change. First, IRS and Social Security match computer records. If the name and Social Security number you report on your tax return do not match the name and Social Security number in our records, it could delay the processing of your return as well as any tax refund you might be due.

The second reason it is important to make sure your Social Security records are up-to-date is because your potential Social Security benefits are based almost entirely on the earnings record we maintain for you. If your employer reports earnings to the government under your new name, and your Social Security record still shows your old name, those earnings may not get credited to your Social Security earnings record. Missing earnings can lead to lower future Social Security benefits.

To change your name in Social Security's records, you must apply for a new Social Security card. To make the application process faster and easier, just go to www.socialsecurity.gov/ssnumber/ and print out the form for a Social Security card, "Application Form SS-5." That's also the form you need if you simply want to apply for a replacement card. The application form also tells you what evidence you will need to submit.

Graduate lands job under the 'Top 100 Places to Work in Healthcare'

PIKEVILLE — "It was like a dream come true," said Jamee Blankenship, a Pikeville Campus graduate, of landing her new job as a registered medical assistant at the Pikeville Medical Women's Care Center. "I never thought that I'd get hired on there."

Pikeville Medical Center was recently voted one of the "Top 100 Places to Work in Healthcare" by Modern Healthcare Magazine. As a single mother, the stability, great atmosphere and exceptional benefits that a job at Pikeville Medical Center offers means peace of mind for Jamee, who previously worked as a hairstylist.

"I went to beauty school and I said 'I am not going back to school' but I decided to give it a try and it has changed my life," said Jamee who enrolled at National at the urging of her sister who also attended the college.

She felt that medical assisting would be a good fit for her because she liked hands-on work. She enjoyed her clinical classes and found her instructors to be very accessible. "Everybody's so helpful — the teachers, especially," Jamee said. "You don't have to be afraid to ask a question sitting in class ... or you can have one-on-one with the teacher."

She was placed as an extern at Akers Family Chiropractic Center where she had an opportunity to put her skills to use in the field. "I really liked it there ... they let me do a lot — like ultrasounds," said Jamee.

She worked closely with Career Center Director Kelly Raupach during her job search. "She was basically talking to me every day about new jobs," Jamee recalled. "She was great."

Jamee, who is working primarily on the administrative side of the center, plans to become certified in phlebotomy and hopes to eventually move into more clinical work there. She looks forward to a long career with Pikeville Medical Center where she feels opportunities for growth are plentiful.

Jamee Blankenship is satisfied with her education at the Pikeville campus of National College, which allowed her to change careers from being a hairstylist to working in medicine.

Movie Review: Ancient Rome's 'The Arena'

Tom Doty
Times Columnist

Ancient Rome gets rocked by a pair of statu- esque gladiator women in this sword-and-sandal epic from the prolific Roger Cor- man.

The formula here is a simple enough concoction. Take one part "Sparta- cus" action flick, one part social commentary movie, and sprinkle the mixture with liberal doses of sexy femmes (a la Cormoran's "Nurse" flicks) and serve it all up on a drive-in double feature.

The story (or excuse to show women in various stages of undress) finds Ro- man soldiers raiding Africa and bringing back a Nu- bian dancer, Mamawi, be- fore kidnapping the sultry blonde, Bodicia, "closer to home. The women are soon sold to a slave trader, the appropriately named Pro- ssius, who turns them over to his female arena manager.

The ladies are first intro- duced to Roman society at an orgy, where they are as- saulted. The really creepy thing about this scene is how the party goes barely any attention to such acts of savagery. The women rebel while fixing plates for another party and wind up giving a food fight. This gives their captors the idea to allow women to fight in the arena and the word goes wild.

The ladies quickly sur- mise they will die quicker now, so they hatch a plan to rebel. The only problem is their two best fighters, Mamawi and Bodicia, are scheduled to fight each other — to the death. They are also tempted by a shady promise of freedom for the winner should the emperor feel disposed to grant such a boon.

Pretty soon our leads are brought to the titular site and begin fighting, but we are not sure whether or not they will stick to their plan. The ensuing fight packs a bit of drama, but these ladies "re not at home to misogynistic Romans with empty promises and enor- mous guts (hidden under their togas, which were designed to cover up their grotesque bodies — histori- cal fact or Lagoon fiction? You decide or just Google it).

This all works thanks to excellent locations, decent fight scenes and the cin- ematic appeal of Pam Grier and Margaret Markov. Grier and Markov were reunited to play Mamawi and Bodicia, after star- ring for Cormoran in "Black Mama, White Mama." The "Black Mama" flick saw the pair cast as female pris- oners who escape from a harsh prison and then go on to shoot a bunch of guys and occasionally lose their clothes. A classic.

The good news is that these Cormoran flicks are all available, for a reasonable fee, from The Shout Fac- tory. They are a cool DVD outfit that likes to release B-flicks and cool TV shows, like "Route 66" and "Mys- tery Science Theatre 3000." There are always cool extras on their discs and this one is no exception. The making of "Arena" documentary includes in- terviews with Cormoran and Markov, as well as Mark Damon (who produced the film and fell in love with Markov, who he married and is still devoted to).

The film also includes a second disc with two other exploitation flicks from the house of Cormoran. A true bargain.

Best line: "Once, in In- dia, I saw a half-dozen men squashed by a herd of elephants."

Rental Central Strange but true

Tom Doty
Times Columnist

One major release paled in comparison to three lower budgeted efforts.

"Seeking Justice" — A desperate man unwisely puts his faith in a stranger, after his wife is assaulted, in this derivative thriller. Nicholas Cage stars as a devoted husband who freaks out when his wife is attacked. That part is understandable. What happens next is a little weird. A complete stranger approaches him in the emergency room and offers to have the as- sultant killed by a complete stranger, as long as Cage returns a favor to be named later. I guess this guy never saw "Strangers on a Train" if you never saw Alfred Hitchcock's classic about a guy who makes the same offer, then rent it and enjoy yourself. On second thought, rent it even if you've already seen it before scoping out this stuff.

"Project X" — William Castle was a gimmick pro- ducer who made flicks like "The Tingler" and got patrons to buy tickets be- cause of his savvy advertis- ing campaigns that relied heavily on carnival tricks. One of his best was having nurses present at screen- ings of a horror flick, in case patrons had a real- life fright attack. Despite the fact that the nurse was whichever usher fit the uniform, this gag brought in audiences. Here, you have one of his straight-up flicks that gets by without such monkeyshines. A se- cret agent survives a crash but awakens to find him- self reprogrammed by his own people and sent on a dangerous mission not knowing his true identity. Great stuff with a good leading performance by Christopher ("The Rat Patrol") George.

"Cat Run" — A high- class call girl witnesses a mass killing at a posh and very naughty party. She finds herself on the run from the mob, a power- ful senator and a ruthless female assassin. You have seen this kind of thing be- fore, but it is flashily con- structed and benefits from the casting of Paz Vega ("Boardwalk Empire") as the untidy hooker.

"The Colossus of New York" — 1950s sci- fi flicks don't get much better than this take on the "Frankenstein" women. Ross Martin ("Wild, Wild West") stars as a scient- ist who dies but awakens to find that his brain has been retransplanted into a hulking mechanical body. Lots of angst ensues, as he pines for his old life, while shey're losing his marbles to a homicidal rage. Good stuff that also reminds us that science fiction is at its best when melding out- rageous ideas with real- life human behavior.

Next week brings the high budgeted sequel "Wrath of the Titans."

If you ever have occasion to refer to an item that pertains to the world of antiquities at all, disposal. It's well-known that the United States is a melting pot of nationalities. At the end of the 1800s, New York City was so diverse that it had more Irish than any city except

Dublin, and a larger Russian popu- lation than was to be found at that time in the city of Kiev. The only two cities in the world that had more German speakers were Vienna and Berlin, and Milan and Naples had fewer Italians than New York. If you're like the average American, you will eat 1.5 tons of food this year. Beeswax candles are valued largely because they don't drip as other candles do, but they're also very durable. Archaeologists have found still-pliable beeswax candles in Egyptian tombs, and some have been recovered in good condition from sunken ships. Iowa has the highest literacy rate in America. In the grocery store of today you might find a half-dozen varieties of apple, if you're lucky. In centuries past, though, there were more than 350 varieties that were grown just for the purpose of making cider. Horoscope

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Be prepared to face some challenges stirred up by an envious colleague. Your best defense is the Arian's innate honesty. Stick with the truth, and you'll come out ahead.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Your sensitivity to the needs of others is admirable. But be careful to avoid those who would take unfair advantage of your good nature, especially where money is involved.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Having an optimistic attitude is fine, as far as it goes. But don't be lulled into a false sense of confidence. There are still problems to deal with before you can totally relax.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) You might feel somewhat "crabby" as you fuss over plans that don't seem to work out. Maybe you're trying too hard. Ease up and let things happen without forcing them.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Heed that keen Leo- nine instinct. It's trying to tell you to delay making a decision until you're sure there are no hidden problems that could cause trouble later on.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) This is a good time to reach out to those who might be nursing hurt feelings over recent events. Best advice: Ignore any pettiness that could delay the healing process.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Your understanding helps a colleague get through a difficult period. Although you didn't do it or you might be assured that your actions will be repaid down the line.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) You score some high marks in the workplace, which will count in your favor when you face the possibility of changing direction on your career path.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Your goals lie straight ahead. Stay focused on it and avoid distractions that could throw off your aim and cause potentially detrimental delays.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Keep that burst of exuberance in check and resist pushing through your new project before it's ready. In your personal life, a family member again needs help.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Paying attention to your work is important this week. But so are your relationships with those special people in your life. Make time for them.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Good news. Someone is about to repay a long-standing debt. But be warned: That same someone could try to charm you into lending it back unless you say no and mean it.

BORN THIS WEEK: You are sensitive to matters that involve your home and family. You would make a fine family-court judge or social worker.
