KENTUCKY & WEST VIRGINIA POWER CO., INC.

TO OUR CUSTOMERS:

When we remind you that the national bill for tobacco was $12 per capita in 1933 and $5.40 per capita in that year for household electricity in this country, it is with no thought of begrudging the amount spent on tobacco. We are too mindful of tobacco's dual role as both a sedative and a stimulant to criticize those who enjoy it.

Electricity also plays a dual role in any community. It is both a servant of the people and a leader of progress. The dollar you spend for electricity not only provides an essential service but it also contributes to a permanent local prosperity. A substantial part of that dollar must be paid as taxes for the upkeep of Government: maintenance of schools and public buildings, police and fire protection.

It pays the salaries of local people, for the purchase of materials from local merchants - in countless ways the money paid for electric service yields additional returns to the customer in the welfare and development of his community.

CIT BACK in the rear seat of the 1935 Ford V-8 —and change your idea of what an automobile ride is like!

A way has been found to give rear seat passengers the comfort of "a front seat ride!"

Ford has done this with a new engineering development-Full-floating Springbase with Comfort Zone Seating.

You might have been satisfied with nothing more than Comfort Zone Riding and the proved Ford V-8 engine together in one car. But the 1935 Ford V-8 offers you many other features almost as important.

It is a roomier car-with more leg roomwider, deeper seats. It strikes a new note in streamlined beauty. Interior fittings are almost sitting on this stymied golf ball figuring how to get away ! "Look down, now," said a different voice, "at the street." It was a young man's voice, carefully controlled, but in spite of its constraint, ringing with an unusually vibrant and vital quality. Tony recognized a recruit whom he had not himself selected. It was Eliot James, an Englishman from Oxford, and a poet. By profession and by nature, he was the most impractical of all the company; and one of the most attractive, in spite of his affectation-if it was that-of a small beard. The beard became him. He was tall, broad-shouldered, aquiline in feature, brown.

The baleful moonlight of the Bronson Bodies glinted up from the street. 'Water," some one said.

"Yes; that's the tide. It's flowing in from the cross streets from the Hudson, and from the East river, too." 'There's some coming up from the Battery along the avenues-see the flow down there i"

"How high will it rise tonight? Oh, how high?"

"Not above the bridges tonight. But of course the powerhouses will go." "And the tunnels will be filled?" "Of course."

We've business here." "So had they-they supposed, and as important to them as we imagined ours to be to us. Besides, they're safe enough tonight. They can climb three stories in almost any building and be safe. The tide ebbs, of course, in six hours."

"Then comes again higher !"

"Yes-much higher. For the Bronson Bodies are rushing at us now." "Exactly how," asked Eliot James,

"do they look through the telescope?"

"The big one-Bronson Alpha," replied Jack Taylor, as they all looked up from the street, "not very different from before. It seems to be gaseous, chiefly-it always was chiefly gaseous, unlike the earth and Mars, but like Jupiter and Saturn and Neptune, Its approach to the sun has increased the temperature of its envelope, but has brought out no details of its geography, if you could call it that. Bronson Alpha offers us no real surface, as such. It seems to be a great globe with a massive nucleus surrounded by an immense atmosphere. What we see is only the outer surface of the atmosphere."

"Could it ever have been inhabited?" the poet asked.

"In no such sense as we understand the word. For one thing, if we found ourselves on Bronson Alpha, we would never find any surface to live on. There is probably no sudden alteration of material such as exists on the earth when air stops and land and water begin."

"But the other world-Bronson Beta -is different?"

"Very different from its companion up there, but not so different from our world, it seems. It has a surface we can see, with air and clouds in its atmosphere. There are fixed details which do not change, and which prove a surface crust exists. The atmosphere was frozen solid in the journey through space, but the sun has thawed out the air and has started, at least, on thawing out the seas."

More blocks were black; the light from the awful orbs of the Bronson Bodies slanted sharp across the streets, their shadows unbroken by the last lamps of the city's defiance.

Now the street gave up sounds-the rush of water as the loud edge of the flood advanced, filling the last floor of the canyons between the buildings. All over the world at the seaboard It must be the same, except that some already were overswept. Eliot James moved closer to Eve.

"What does it do to you?" he said. She answered: "Too much."

"Yes," he said. "And it's only begun?"

"It's not begun," whispered Eve. "This-this is really nothing. Tonight, the waters will merely rise over the lower buildings of the city, and then subside. We will all leave in the ebb tide.'

"Eve. we've got to marry !" "My dear, what would marriage mean now?"

"But you feel it, don't you?" "Need for you-"

"As never before, Eve?"

"Yes, Tony. It's as he said-oh, my dear! The waters overwhelm youthe flood rising and rising, and those two yellow discs doing it! And no one can stop them! They're coming on, Tony! They're coming on, to lift the waters higher and higher; they're coming on to crack open the shell of the earth! Tony-oh, hold me !"

"I have you, Eve. You have me! Here we are, two of us together . . . they're in pairs wherever they are in New York tonight, Eve. Didn't you see them? Wherever they waited, a woman waited with a man. There's only one answer to-annihilation. That's it."

"Tony !"

"My dear-"

"What's that-your name? Some one's searching for you."

In the yellow light on the roof, they could see a uniformed boy. He had arrived at the building an hour ago, the boy was saying; with the elevators stopped, he had climbed to the roof by the stairs. Tony took his telegram, tore it open and read:

"Mrs. Madeline Drake Murdered By Looters Who Raided Several Connecticut Farms and Estates Late Today."

The paper dropped from Tony's fingers. He slumped to a bench and covered his face with his hands. He felt Eve's hand and looked up, utter despair on his face. "Read that." He saw that she held his telegram.

"I have read it. Tony-'

Hendron had arisen; and as through the wall he had read Tony's defiance, he opened the door and entered. He offered his hand. "I have heard, Tony, the news which reached you after I retired. I am sorry."

"You're not," returned Tony. It was no morning for perfunctory politeness. "You're right," acceded Hendron. "I'm not. I know it is altogether better that your mother died now. I am sorry only for the shock to you, which you cannot argue away. Eve tells me that she goes home with you. I am glad of that. . . . Last night, Tony, the Bronson Bodies were studied in

"Cities?" said Tony.

"On Bronson Beta. Bronson Alpha continues to turn like a great gaseous globe; but Bronson Beta, which already had displayed air and land and water, last night exhibited-cities. . . . We can see the geography of Bronson Beta quite plainly. It rotates probably at the same rate it turned, making day and night, when it was spinning about its sun. It makes a rotation in slightly over thirty hours, you may remember; and it happens to rotate at such an angle relative to us that we have studied its entire surface. Something more than two-thirds of the surface is sea; the land lies chiefly in four continents with two well-marked archipetagoes. We have seen not his group in the removal of their baggage, and in directing its disposal. Every one left the street reluctantly. The Bronson Bodies were hypnotic.

In the laboratories there was the utmost confusion. No longer was the inner door closed. Only a skeleton crew had remained in New York under Headron. The scientist himself was introduced by Tony to each of the new arrivals, and to each he said a few words of welcome. Several were already known to him.

Then Hendron made an announcement-a stater. -+ - Mich writ innat. "Lishies and goodler op-you in file dormitor is al ve here tement. Temorrow we will remove by of te my field station in Michigan. The others are already there. In bai you good night, I must also request no one to leave the building. A splendid view of the firmament may be had from the roof. But the streets are entirely unsafe. The last wave of emigration left New York at sundown this evening. The people who remain are either law officers or marauders."

Jack Taylor was beside Tony when they reached the roof.

"As God lives, that's a marvelous thing!" He stared at the two ye'low discs in the sky. "Think of It! The avens are falling upon us-and a undred men, here and there, are

"Have you seen," asked the poet, "anything like-cities?" "Cities?"

"The ruins of cities, I mean. That globe lived in the sunshine of a star that was an octillion miles away. I thought just now, looking at it, that perhaps on it were cities like this where people once watched the coming of whatever pulled them loose from their sun, and dropped them into the black mouth of space.'

Some of the company about him were looking up and listening; others paid no attention to him. He did not care; a few had shared his feeling; and among them was Eve, who stood near him.

"Would you rather we went that way?" she said to him.

"Slipping into space, falling away, all of us in the world together, retreating farther and farther away from our sun, gradually freezing as we went into darkness?" Eliot James shook his handsome head. "No; if I had my choice, I think I'd elect our way. Yet I wonder how they faced it-what they did?"

"I wonder," said Eve, her eyes upon the yellow orb, "if we'll ever know." "Look," proclaimed some one else who was gazing down, "the lights are beginning to go." He meant the street lamps of New York, which had been switched on as usual and maintained to this minute. Thousands of them still prevailed, indeed; but a huge oblong, which had been lighted before, was darkened now.

"The flood has caught the conduits!" And with the word, the little gleaming rows which etched the streets throughout another district died; but t on in beautiful deto city - 's tally was abandoned; orn remained. Seene men, whatever the warning, whatever the danrer, refused to surrender; they stuck' to their duties and to their services to the last. Some men and some boys; and some women and girls, too. And so, on this night, New York had lights: it kept communication-telephone and/ telegraph, too.

But now another pattern of block disappeared; Brooklyn went black Beacons burned-airplane-guides and lighthouses. Ships, having their own electric installations, could be seen seeking the sea.

That, too, thought Tony, was on'y a splendid gesture; yet the sight of the ships, like the stubborn persistence of the city and the coast away from the sale at the Times office.

should have, taken her away-but I believed it best to leave her in her home as long as possible. I was going to her tomorrow. Now-now-"

She checked his flow of recrimination, sitting on the bench beside him and reaching up to smoothe his hair as if he were only a child. "You couldn't have done a thing, Tony. All over the country, bands of men have been running like wolves."

Tony leaped to his feet. "I'll go to her, and find them, and kill them !"

"You'll never find them, Tony. Besides, Tony, they'll be punished without anyone raising a hand. Perhaps already they are dead."

"But I must go to her !"

"Of course; and I'll go with you; but we must wait for the tide to fall." "Tide?" He stalked to the edge of the roof. Now he saw the streets running full, not with the foul water of the harbor, but with a clean green flood. The Bronson Bodies lit it almost to dim daylight, Tony gazed up at them, aghast. "My mind can understand it, Eve; but, good G-d, she was my mother Murdered! The d-d cowards-" He did not finish. He was racked by a succession of great sobs.

Eve caught his hand and brought him again to the bench. Still they were alone, and she sat close beside him, holding him in her arms.

For a long time they said nothing; then they arose, returned to the parapet and gazed down at the water. Strange sounds arose with the flow of the flood; the collapse of windows under the weight of water; the outrush of air, the inrush of the tide. Away on other streets not citadaled by the massive towers whose steel skeletons reached down to the living rocks, the walls were beginning to fall. Smoke drifted like a mist between the buildings as the water, the final ene my of fire, began to cause conflagra tions. But there w us so the flood lso d there a bulling d but the huge terraced towers stood dark and silent, intact. "You must try to sleep, Tony.

"And you!" "Till the tide goes out; yes, Tony,

I'll try, if you will." She kissed him, and they went in together, to separate at the door of the room where she was to sleep. Tony went on to the bed al lotted him, and lay down without andressing. In the next room Cole Hendron was actually asleep.

When Tony awoke, he stalked to the plants later. window to look down at water, now rushing seaward. The roll of the world, while he had slept, had turned merely the seas and the lines of the shores, but the mountain ranges and the river valleys.

"At points upon the seacoasts and at points in the river valleys where intelligent beings-if they once lived on the globe-would have built cities, there are areas plainly marked which have distinct characteristics of their own. There is no doubt in the minds of the men who have studied them; there is no important disagreement The telescopes of the world were trained last night, Tony, upon the sites of cities on that world. Tony, for mil-Hons of years there was life on Bronson Beta as there has been life here. For more than a thousand million years, we believe, the slow cautious but cruel process of evolution had been going on there as it has here.

That is the significance of the cities that we have seen. For cities, of course, cannot 'occur.' They must have thousands and tens of thousands of years of human strife and development behind them; and, behind that, the millions of years of the mammals, the reptiles, the life in the seas.

"It is a developed world-a fully developed world which approaches us, Tony, with its cities that we now can

see. "Not inhabited cities," objected

TORY. "Of course not inhabited now; but There can be no possible once. doubt that every one on that world is dead. The point is, they lived ; so very likely we also can live on their world -if we merely reach it.'

"Merely," repeated Tony mockingly. "Yes," said Hendron, ignoring his tone. "It is most likely that where they lived, we can. And think of stepping upon that soil up there, finding a road leading to one of their citiesand entering it."

ALLEGED ROBBER JAILED HERE BY FLOYD SHERIFF

Sheriff M. T. Stumbo Monday night returned E. L. Brown to jail here from Pike ville, where he had been held for Floyd county authorities on a charge of robbery. A waroant sworn out by Sam Wells, of Alphoretta, charges him with stealing $80 in cash.

Brown's parents live in Pikeville, and Sheriff Stumbo notified Pike officers to watch for him there. He was captured shortly afterward.
