More Than 400 Homes Are Flooded In Floyd

2,000 TEMPORARILY HOMELESS, RESULT OF HEAVY RAINFALL

Mining Towns on Right Beaver Swept by Water; Relief Agencies Aid Sufferers

A two-day rain welcomed by farmers as a Godsend in the form of relief to a sub-soil made arid by months of light rainfall since the "big drouth" turned into a force of destruction Tuesday when Floyd county streams went on a rampage, inundating approximately 175 homes in the Right Beaver section and causing almost county-wide property damage.

The rain was general, and throughout the state similar damage is reported. Highways were blocked and motor traffic halted. The Clear Creek section of Left Beaver is reported as being hard hit, but news from there is meagre.

After conducting a survey in the Right Beaver section Wednesday, Dr. Marvin Ransdall, director of the Floyd county health department, estimated that 425 houses in Wayland, Glo, Estill, Lackey, Garrett and West Garrett were flooded and that more than 2,000 persons have been rendered homeless.

"Fully half of these families have lost from a half to three-fourths of their household belongings," he said, adding that "if they sleep in these homes tonight (Wednesday) they will lie on wet beds."

Rehabilitation of homes was made a special relief project, and relief workers Wednesday were at work under the direction of the health department, and by Thursday 200 were expected to be at work on the project.

Food for stricken families at Glo Tuesday night was furnished from Wayland, and the

LOCAL MAN ANNOUNCES BIRTH OF 24TH CHILD

In announcing, a few days ago, the birth of a son on March 1, B. F. Stamper, of this place, told a story in which is embraced a rather unusual family record.

The latest addition to his family is his 24th child, 20 of whom are living. Seventeen of the 20 are at his home here. Three are married. Five of his sons saw service in the World War.

Mr. Stamper has been twice married. Of his first marriage, nine sons and one daughter were born; of the last, eight daughters and two sons. His eldest child is 43 years old, his youngest, as this is written, exactly 11 days old. Mr. Stamper himself is 64 years young.

TODD'S STORE ROBBED 4TH TIME IN A YEAR

For the fourth time within a year, the store of W. J. Todd was robbed here last week. The robbers' loot consisted of a large quantity of groceries and wearing apparel.

Entrance to the building was effected through a room of the building used by the Home Bottling Company. A window of this room was removed, making the way clear for the looters. Identity of the burglars has not been determined.

TO HOLD NEW TYPE TOURNAMENT HERE

Floyd County Forensic League Competition To Be Held March 29

Recently athletic fans and school patrons have been thrilled by tightly contested games in basketball as the representatives of the various schools vied for county or regional championship and other honors.

An innovation in county tournaments is seen this year in the premier debate tournament organized by the Floyd County Forensic League.

This tournament will climax the active debating season of five of the high schools of Floyd county and will serve to determine the county champion to whom will be awarded a suitable trophy. The team or teams representing each school will be prepared to discuss either side of the regular state-adopted question. The different sides will be chosen by lot.

This contest in "wit-matching" and skill in argumentation will be held at Prestonsburg, Friday, March 29. Schools represented will be Wayland, Lackey, Garrett, Wheelwright and Prestonsburg.

While forensic activities do not possess the fascination and the appeal to the public which is claimed by athletics, they are an invaluable and necessary part of the school program, forensic league officials point out. The Floyd County Forensic League, therefore, solicits your interest and co-operation in its attempt to bring to a higher level this sort of training.

As a part of the League activities the annual county oratorical contest is being continued. The final contest this year will be held Friday, April 26. Subjects of the orations must be limited to some phase of the "NEW DEAL." Anyone desiring further information should address Palmer L. Hall, president of the League, Auxier, Ky.

DR. RIGGLEMAN TO ADDRESS KIWANISANS

Dr. Leonard Riggleman, president of Morris-Harvey College, Barboursville, W. Va., will be guest speaker at the Friday evening meeting of the Kiwanis Club, C. D. Womenfolk of club members are invited to attend the meeting.

OSBORNE RELEASED ON HABEAS CORPUS

Youth in Reform School Since 1933, Freed When Trial Held Defective

McKinley Osborne, who was convicted in September, 1933 in the Floyd circuit court of manslaughter for the slaying of Den Chaffins at Ligon and given a 21-year sentence in the Greendale reformatory and the penitentiary at Frankfort, was released last week on direction of Judge King Swope, of the Fayette circuit court, following a hearing of a habeas corpus proceeding filed by young Osborne's attorneys, Bond and Bond and W. G. Goble, of Prestonsburg.

Young Osborne was to have remained in the reform school until he attained the age of 21, after which he was to have been transferred to the pen. At the time of the slaying his age was given as 16.

In ordering the youth's release, Judge Swope held that the trial proceedings in the Floyd circuit court were fatally defective.

YOUTH SLASHED IN DISPUTE OVER DIME

Bert Helton, Middle Creek youth, was arrested Sunday night by Sheriff M. T. Stumbo and Deputy Sheriff J. D. Fitzpatrick after he had slashed Henry Fitzpatrick, a son of Taylor Fitzpatrick, following a dispute over a dime, it is reported. The cutting took place near Hillsdale, on Middle Creek.

The injured youth was able to walk to his home, near the scene of the altercation, and is not seriously hurt, it was said Monday. Young Helton was placed under $500 bond.

Mrs. E. P. Hill has been chosen county chairman by Ben Williamson, district chairman. The various committees will be announced later.

Harrington Brothers and Pack Released from Johnson Jail Last Week

Homer Harrington, alleged slayer of Estill Butcher, was placed under $10,000 bond and his brother, Clyde Harrington, and Wink Pack, who were held as his accomplices, were released under $5,000 bond each last week following examining trial held at Paintsville. The three men are from Drift, this county.

Butcher, who was shot on Greasy Creek, Johnson county, February 23, died five days later. He was a son of Prof. George W. Butcher. His alleged slayer was captured at Cannel Coal Gap by Sheriff M. T. Stumbo and Deputy Sheriff J. D. Fitzpatrick, a few hours following the shooting. The accused man claims he fired when Butcher was advancing upon him, armed with a large knife. Butcher is said to have made a statement to the effect that he was offering no offense when shot.

P'BURG HI SCHOOL GRADS RANKS FIRST

Among Alumni of Four Big Sandy Schools, 1934 Report Shows

Excellence of the work being done at the Prestonsburg and Floyd county high school is shown in the 1934 report of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

There are four Big Sandy high schools which are members of the Association, and which have an enrollment of 200 or more. Of these four, Prestonsburg high school students, at college during 1934, had the smallest percentage of semester hours failures.

P'Burg's semester hour failure percentage was 3.6, the school ranking next to it, in scholastic excellence had a percentage of 3.8, and the school having the highest failure record had an average of 28.4.

The Kentucky high school average, the report shows, is 10.8.

There were, during 1934, about 25 Prestonsburg high school graduates attending college.

FEDERAL HELP FOR PEOPLE ON FARMS

Louisville, Ky., March 6—After several months of careful planning under the direction of Earl Mayhew, Kentucky's program for Rural Rehabilitation, an integral part of the KERA, is ready for action.

Applicants for Rural Rehabilitation now are being selected from Relief Rolls by the Social Service Department of the KERA in each county. These applications are placed in the hands of the foreman who, in turn, makes a proper investigation and a definite plan with the family to be rehabilitated. Finally the supervisor passes upon the completed application and work begins.

Prospective rehabilitants are classified as: full time farmers; part time farmers and rural industrial workers, cropper; share cropper and farm labor; stranded industrial workers; rural indigent families from sub-marginal land purchase areas.

Under the plan for Kentucky Rural Rehabilitation the general aim is to assist in bringing about social and economic security for distressed families through a long-time program of adjustment, which includes the right to use land in relation to agriculture, the production of subsistence, forestry, food and erosion control and the reviving of old and the promotion of new industries.

Rehabilitation clients who can be rehabilitated where they are will be supplied with the necessary physical requirements and expert supervision as a means of reaching the goal of a higher standard and self-support. Clients residing on submarginal lands will be aided in making a shift to favorable localities where goods and services will be most advantageous, Mr. Mayhew said.

Debt adjustment of Rural Rehabilitation clients will be brought about through the Farm Credit Administration.

Goods to be advanced to rehabilitation clients consist mainly of limes, fertilizers, seeds, live stock, farm equipment, household equipment, farm machinery, materials for repairs or building farm buildings, and subsistence goods. Allocation and use of all such goods will be under strict supervision of his department of the KERA.

AGAIN WIN RIGHT TO ENTER STATE NET TOURNAMENT

Betsy Layne in Runner-up Role in Hotly Contested Basketball Tourney Here

Superior man-power and an edge in shooting ability Saturday afternoon and night enabled the Inez Indians to stave off defeat before the determined onslaughts of Cumberland and Betsy Layne high schools in the regional basketball tournament here, and thus won for them the right for the second successive year to represent the 15th Kentucky basketball region in the state net tournament at Lexington.

The Bobcats of Betsy Layne, winners of the Floyd county district tournament at Garrett, ran into unexpected difficulties in all of its games, though they had from the first been considered certain winners in their bracket. Betsy Layne and Cannel City both gave them the toughest sort of opposition before they reached the finals and the champion Inez five.

In the first game of the tournament, which started Thursday night, Cumberland defeated the Prestonsburg Blackcats, runners-up to Betsy Layne in the district tourney at Garrett, 18 to 8. "Cats were badly off from shooting and not until closing minutes of the contest did they start hitting the basket with any regularity. Guarding of Smith, who held the high-scoring Deskins, star Cumberland forward, scoreless, was a bright spot from the local viewpoint. Powell, a guard, led the winners' attack with 11 points.

The second game of the evening found Inez scoring almost at will on Frenchburg whom the Indians defeated, 54 to 8, the tournament's largest score and probably the highest point total to be amassed in any regional meet in the state this year. Mills led Inez in point-making with 15 but was closely followed by Kirk, a sub, with 14.

Cannel City found Louisa an easy mark in Friday night's curtain-raiser, winning by a 32-19 score. Roberts, Louisa center, was the game's high scorer, however, with 14 points. The Laceys, E. and R., of Cannel City, with 11 and 9 points, respectively, did excellent work for Cannel City. Haney also scored 9 points for the winners.

Only in the dying minutes of the game did Betsy Layne gain a winning margin over Betsy Layne. This was a rousing

Cost of Gasoline Tax Rising As Levy Goes Into 17th Year

Gasoline taxes, which cost the average taxpayer $2.55 in 1923, cost $23.35 in 1933 and at present rates of growth may cost $337.18 by 1943. The total cost in 16 years since February 25, 1919 exceeds $4,600,000,000.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—If gasoline taxes increase as rapidly in the next 10 years as in the past decade, it is estimated they will cost the average taxpayer $337.18 per year by 1943. Since the average car consumes 600 gallons of fuel yearly, the levy would represent a sales tax of 56c. per gallon, or more than four times the retail price!

Gasoline taxes cost the average taxpayer only $2.55 in 1923 when sales alone were taxing motor fuel, records of the American Petroleum Industries Committee show. In 1933 with the federal government, all states, and even some counties and municipalities collecting cumulative taxes on each gallon, the average taxpayer paid $23.35. This amount was equivalent nearly to 15 per cent of the value of the average car!

February 25, 1935 is recorded as the 16th anniversary of this tax, which first was imposed by Oregon on February 25, 1919 to finance highways. In the 16 years it has cost the taxpayer more than $4,600,000,000, or about $1,500 for each of the 3,000,000 miles of highway in the United States. Since only about 900,000 miles have been improved, the actual tax cost per mile has been close to $5,000.

Actually this huge tax income would have built 460,000 miles of $10,000 per mile road, particularly in the rural areas, but the revenue from federal, county and municipal levies has been used for other purposes. In recent years the states have curtailed highway programs in order to use gasoline tax money for general purposes. Construction of unnecessary expensive highways in many states also has reduced the mileage improved.

A supplementary band, orchestra and glee club festival will be held at Western State Teachers' College, Bowling Green, April 20. TWO WOUNDED IN PIKE GUN BATTLE

Deputy Sheriff Pinson and Ben Thornsburg Are in Hospital

Pikeville, Ky., March 9—Ben Thornsburg was brought to the hospital here tonight suffering from bullet wounds in the abdomen and left leg and Deputy Sheriff W. B. Pinson is suffering with a shattered arm said to have been inflicted by Thornsburg at Henry Clay, late today.

According to Deputy Sheriff Vernon Sanders, who was present when the shooting occurred, Thornsburg was drinking and earlier today had shot at Emmett Powell. Sanders, James Crawford and Roy Phillips, later met Thornsburg in front of Artrip and Bartley's store at Henry Clay. Thornsburg was armed with a high powered rifle and threatened to kill Pinson, the officers reported. He fired two shots, one breaking Pinson's arm, according to Sanders, before the officer returned the fire.

Thornsburg was a former deputy sheriff. The shooting had no connection with the recent mine strike trouble, Sanders said.

WHEN YOU TAKE A LAXATIVE

... use a spoon

It isn't what brand of laxative you take that's so important—it's the form. A liquid laxative can be taken in any required amount. If only a little is needed, you need never take a bit too much.

Doctors favor the easily measured liquid laxatives. Instead of any form that does not encourage variation from the fixed dose. A fixed dose may be an overdose for you—or your child.

Always remember this one thing about constipation: the secret of any real relief is in the dosage.

Give the bowels only as much help as may be needed, and less help as the need grows less. You will find Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin an excellent aid in regulating the bowels. It contains senna and cascara (natural laxatives) and it will clear-up any bilious, sluggish condition without upset. Delightful taste, and pleasant action. Your druggist has it.

O, CONSISTENCY!

One opponent of a primary for the selection of candidates for state office quite brilliantly argued that the press of the state wanted a primary in order to reap a rich harvest from political advertising and printing.

Well, the Governor, arch-foe of the primary recently signed the bill making not only one primary but TWO primaries compulsory.

And The Times, in all sincerity, joins a majority of other Kentucky newspapers in stating without equivocation that a single primary remains its favorite means of choosing candidates. Two primaries may increase our printing income. We want all the business we can get. But give the newspapers credit for being guided at least part of the way by conscience and principle.

"Economy" was the Administration's battle cry in its fight for a convention before Lieutenant-Governor Chandler made his surprise move and convened the Legislature while Governor Laffoon was in Washington. Initial cost of the two-primary measure represented by pay to legislators, mileage allowances, and other items, is $40,000. On top of that, Kentucky's 120 counties will have their election expense burden heavily increased. And the two-primary law is the Governor's own brain-child, even if it does fall short of his "Economy" slogan.

This is not to prate and carp. The Bill is now law. We are pleased that the convention is abolished. But we can't resist the temptation to point out a few inconsistencies and to remind the public that it will find the press of the state not as mercenary, as a usual thing, as some might want to paint it.

OBSERVE THE SAFEGUARD

That traffic light at the intersection of Court street and the Mayo Trail, as dangerous a corner as one may want to encounter, is one of the finest public improvements to be made here. Fatalities have been narrowly averted in auto crashes at that intersection before the light was installed. Tragedy hovered there, day and night, while there was no warning signal.

And, if that warning signal is not observed, if its orders are not enforced, tragedy yet will have its inning. Unobserved, a traffic light is a hazard instead of a protection. If one motorist heeds the green light permitting him to drive ahead, and if the other disregards the stop signal for intersecting traffic, a crash, sooner or later, is inevitable. That would be making reality of a paradox, "Dangerous to be safe."

Any person capable of driving an automobile should not need instruction in this matter. An educational campaign is unnecessary. Arrests, convictions and fines will more quickly do the work.

Internal Revenue to the effect that taxpayers in Kentucky are not entitled to deduct the amount of sales tax paid by them from their gross incomes, was made recently by the Kentucky Tax Commission.

This ruling states that the sales tax in Kentucky is a tax upon the vendor of merchandise, and not a tax upon the consumer.

The opposite was held recently, however, by the court of appeals of Kentucky, the commission pointed out, namely, that the sales tax is a tax upon the consumer and that the vendor is simply the collector of the tax.

Judge Dietzman, attorney for the commission, advises that any taxpayer is justified in deducting the sales tax from his gross income, especially items that he can prove definitely as to the amount and the vendor of the merchandise.

CROP LOANS FOR KENTUCKY FARMERS

Twelve new agencies with representatives in every county are making crop loans to Kentucky farmers this spring. In many communities, the lack of credit from customary sources is making loans through production credit associations attractive, points out C. J. Bradley, of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky.

Five per cent interest, plus nominal inspection and other costs, is charged on these loans. Borrowers are in addition required to purchase stock equivalent to 5 per cent of loans. Fortunately, the money needed for purchasing stock is also loaned to farmers. Of decided advantage to borrowers is the fact that control of the production credit alliances rests in the class B stock owned by them.

Loans may be had on all kinds of growing crops. Primary security is a lien on the crop itself, but additional chattel security, such as workstock and farm machinery, is also required.

Of special interest is the fact that loans are advanced on a budget basis as needed, and interest is charged only from the dates of these advances. Interest charges are by this means kept to a minimum, and loans may thereby be said to be made on a cost basis.

Production credit associations usually supplement rather than compete with established local agencies. Through them, farmers are furnished with credit which might be difficult to obtain elsewhere, and furthermore on a cooperative basis.

Production credit associations are located at Paintsville, Flemingsburg, Williamstown, Lexington, Danville, London, Louisville, Owensboro, Glasgow, Elizabethtown, Hopkinsville and Mayfield, but there are representatives of these associations in nearly every county.

Further information concerning both loans through production credit associations and local representatives of production credit associations within counties may be obtained from county farm agents.

INEZ COPS NET CROWN

Scrap from the start, the first quarter ending with the Bobcats leading, 4-3, and both teams having 9 points at the half. Betsy Layne forged ahead, 15 to 11, at the close of the third quarter, but with less than two minutes to go Belfry came back and knotted the score. Two field goals in rapid order won the game for the Floyd countians as the game ended. Hunley's 10 points was high for Inez with six points, while Runyon, Belfry's center, led his five's attack with six points.

Though trailing through the contest, the Cumberland five threatened Inez at all stages of the first game of the semifinals Saturday afternoon. Both teams played the entire game without a substitution. Deskins, though missing many shots from well within the foul circle and on tosses in front of the basket, led both teams in scoring with 8 points. Kirk and Cassady tied for the scoring lead for Inez with six points each.

Overconfidence on the part of both the team and its coach almost cost Betsy Layne victory in the other semi-final. After the Bobcats had taken an early lead and increased this as they went well into the last half, two substitutions were made. Then Cannel City, a team of long, rangy boys with considerable natural ability, started a scoring spree that was checked only by the gun ending the game. They shot from all angles, and became unusually proficient in connecting. With the crowd in an uproar, and the tide turned against them, the Bobcats, however, refused to become demoralized and contrived to score enough to stay ahead. With the end of the game a matter of only seconds away, a long, desperate Cannel City heave hit the basket, dipped into it—and popped out. The final score: Betsy Layne, 30; Cannel City, 29.

Both finalists were a bit worse for the wear and tear of their afternoon's endeavors as they went into the championship tussle Saturday night, but this deterred them none in making a red-hot struggle of it all the way. The Inez team, larger and with the poise gained by a sensational record, found the smaller Bobcats undismayed. Again the Indians played through a complete game without a substitution—which is at once a tribute to the cleanness of their guarding and to the strength of the Floyd county team in forcing the Martin countians to keep their regulars unrelieved.

Disregarding the sensational play uncovered during the meet, the tournament was perhaps the best event of its kind ever conducted in this section. The attendance was good, perfect order was maintained at all times, and the officiating of Ellis Johnson and Ernie Chattin, former Ashland high school stars and later college basketball and football stars, received the highest commendation from players, coaches and fans. Visiting teams and other followers were particularly gracious in expressing their appreciation of the conduct of the tournament under the direction of Coach C. V. Watson, of Prestonsburg, and of the hospitality shown them here.

The all-tournament team this year consists of eight men, as selected by coaches by coaches of teams entered in the tourney:

- Hunley, Betsy Layne.
- Deskins, Cumberland.
- Griffith, Betsy Layne.
- Cassady, Inez.
- Ward, Inez.
- Sloan, Inez.
- Smith, Prestonsburg.
- Powell, Cumberland.

Hallard Wheeler, coach of the Betsy Layne five, was selected as all-tournament coach and was awarded a trophy.

Gold basketballs were awarded members of the all-tournament team.

The championship trophy to Inez was awarded by Combs and Combs, Prestonsburg law firm; the trophy to the Betsy Layne Bobcats as runners-up, by Morell Supply Company; the trophy to Deskins, Cumberland forward, as most valuable man to his team, by Hughes' Drug Store; Francis Cash Store contributed the trophy to Cannel City for team sportsmanship; the high individual scoring trophy, donated by the Modern Drug Shop, was presented to R. Lacey, Cannel City center, who was tied for scoring honors by Ward, of Inez, with 25 points, who will be presented with the same trophy later by J. W. Howard, Prestonsburg attorney. R. Lacey also won the best foul shot trophy. The individual sportsmanship award was won by Clay, of Cumberland.

Autos and other property of fans were given protection by Prestonsburg police and members of the Floyd county organization of the militia recently organized in the state. Militia members were called into service by Joe P. Tackett, captain of the Floyd county unit, upon request of Mayor A. C. Carter.

THE NARRATIVE

CHAPTER I.—David Ransdell, approaching New York on the liner Europa, receives a succession of radiograms offering him $1,000, finally $20,000, for an exclusive newspaper interview divulging the mission that brings him from South Africa. Ransdell, noted aviator, has been secretly commissioned at Capetown by Lord Rhondin and Professor Bronson, the astronomer, to fly across the Mediterranean to the fast liner, with a large traveling case containing photographic plates. His instructions are to deliver them to Dr. Cole Hendron, in New York. Tony Drake calls at the Hendrons' apartment. Ransdell arrives and Eve Hendron, with whom Tony is deeply in love, introduces Tony to Ransdell.

CHAPTER II.—New York newspapers publish a statement made by Hendron and concurred in by sixty of the world's greatest scientists. The prepared statement says that Professor Bronson has discovered two planets, which must have broken away from another star or sun and traveled through interstellar space for an incalculable time, until they came to a region of the heavens which brought them at last under the attraction of the sun. The statement ends: "Their previous course, consequently, has been modified by the sun, and as a result, they are now approaching us." The result of the inevitable collision must be the end of the earth. The approaching bodies are referred to as Bronson Alpha and Bronson Beta, the latter being the smaller—about the size of the earth.

CHAPTER III.—"It's going to be doomsday, isn't it?" Tony Drake asks Eve. "No, Tony—more than doomsday. Dawn after doomsday," she tells him. She explains that the first time the Bronson Bodies approach the earth they will not hit it, but the second time, one, Bronson Beta, will pass, and the other will hit the earth and demolish it. To devise means of transferring to Bronson Beta, so much like the earth, is what is occupying the minds of the members of the League of the Last Days.

CHAPTER IV.—Hendron tells Tony he is to be a member of the selected crew of the projected Space Ship which Hendron plans to build, with the idea of landing on Bronson Beta, and the scientist advises him to gain a knowledge of agriculture and proficiency in manual arts and elementary mechanics. Tony rounds up suitable men and women to build the ship at a cantonment Hendron established in northern Michigan.

CHAPTER V.—Hendron has not been able to find a metal or an alloy which will withstand the heat and pressure of atomic energy to be used in propelling the Space Ship. The night before Hendron and his immediate party are to fly to Michigan the ideas rush through the streets of New York.

CHAPTER VI

Eve was at a tiny table where a blue flame burned below a coffee percolator, and where an oil lamp, following the failure of electricity, augmented the faint gray of approaching dawn.

Was it the light, Tony wondered, or was Eve this morning really so pale? He came to her, and whatever the rules for this day, he claimed her with his arms and kissed her.

"Now," he said with some satisfaction, "you're not so pale." She did not disengage herself at once; and before she did, she clung tightly to him for a moment. Then she said, "You've got to have your coffee now, Tony."

"I suppose so—but there's no stimulant in the world like you, Eve."

She turned the tiny tip of the silver coffee pot, filled a cup for him, one for herself. A few minutes later they went down together.

The rushing ebb of the tremendous tide was swirling less than a foot deep over the pavement, and was falling so rapidly that the curb emerged even while they were watching. From upper floors, where many automobiles had been stored against the tide, cars were reaching the street. One drove up to Tony and Eve and stopped. The driver turned it over to them; and Tony took the wheel with Eve beside him.

They went with all possible speed, no longer encountering the tide itself, but lurching through vast puddles. Debris from offices, shops and tenements swept by the tides bestrewed the streets.

A few people appeared; a couple of motorcycle police, not in the least concerned with cars, were making some last inspection of the city.

Bodies lay in the street; and now on the right a haze of smoke drifted from an area that had burned down during the night.

The East river, when they reached it, was a turbulent bay in its channel, being sucked dry toward the sea. Wreckage strewn the strangely exposed bottom. The bridge, a few miles more of flood debris in steaming streets. Then towns and villages which also had been overswep.

Now the country with its higher hills, where Tony and Eve marked the line left by the water at its height. They dripped through empty villages and rose to hamlets whose inhabitants still lingered, staring in a dazed wonderment at the speeding car. The effect of the vast desolation beat into soul; desolate, helpless people, occasional burning houses.

They climbed a slope with a sharp which was blocked; and there sprang at them. Tony jerked out his pistol; but today—and though he was on his way to his mother who was murdered—he could not pull the trigger on these men. He beat down one with the butt, instead, and with the barrel cowed the other.

He got the car clear and with Eve drove on. Ah—here was the road home! Home! His home, where he had been born and where he was a little boy. Home, the home that had been his father's and his grandfather's and before that, for four generations. Down this road from his home, some man named Drake had gone to fight in the World War, the Civil War, in 1812, and to join the army of Washington.

Two Men Sprang at Them, Tony Jerked Out His Pistol, He Beat Down One With the Butt, and With the Barrel Cowed the Other.

Tony tried not to think about his mother yet. Eve placed her hand over his which held the steering wheel. "You'll let me stay close beside you, Tony," she appealed.

"Yes. We're almost there." Familiar landmarks bobbed up on both sides, everywhere: a log cabin he had built as a boy; here was the way to the old well—the "Revolutionary well."

"Here we are." The house was before them, white, calm, confident. Tony's heart leaped. How he loved it—and she who had been its spirit! How often she had stood in that doorway awaiting him! Some one was standing there now—an old woman, slight, white-haired. Tony recognized her—Mrs. Haskins, the minister's wife. She advanced toward Tony, and old Hezekiah Haskins took her place in the doorway. "What happened?"

Old Haskins told Tony, as kindly as he could:

"She was alone; she did not feel afraid, though all the village and even her servants had fled. The band of men came by. She did not try to keep them out. Knowing her—and judging by what I found—she asked them in and offered them food. Some of them had been drinking; or they were mad with the intoxication of destruction. Some one shot her cleanly—once, Tony. It is certain, Tony, she did not suffer."

Tony could not speak. Eve clung to his hand. "Thank God for that, Tony!" she whispered.

Briefly Tony unclasped his hand from Eve's and met the old minister's quivering grasp. He bent and kissed Mrs. Haskins' gray cheek.

"Thank you. Thank you both," he whispered. "You shouldn't have stayed here; you shouldn't have waited for me. But you did."

Old Hezekiah and his wife, and Orson the sexton, and Tony Drake and Eve Hendron stood on the hilltop where the men of the Drake blood and the women who reproduced them in all generations of memory lay buried. A closed box lay waiting its lowering into the ground.

"Hear my prayer, O Lord; and with thine ears consider my calling. . . . For I am a stranger with thee, and a sojourner as all my fathers were."

"Oh, spare me a little, that I may recover my strength before I go hence, and be no more seen."

Old Hezekiah Haskins held the book before him, but he did not read. A thousand times in his fifty years of the ministry he had repeated those words. "Thou turnest man to destruction; again thou sayest, Come again, ye children of men."

Men and children of men on Bronson Beta, too. Men millions and thousands of millions of years in the making. Azolic time—proterozoic time, hundreds of millions of years, while life slowly developed in the seas. Hundreds of millions more, while reptiles ruled the land, the sky and water. Then they were swept away; mammals came; and man—a thousand million years of birth and death and birth again before even the first brick could be laid in the pillars of the Bronson Beta, which now on earth had been last night with their telescopes.

"For a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday; seeing that is past as a watch in the night."

"For when thou art angry, all our days are gone; we bring our years to an end like a tale that is told."

The sexton and old Hezekiah alone could not lift the box to lower it. Tony had to help them with it. He did; and his mother lay beside her husband.

Tonight, when the huge Bronson Alpha and Bronson Beta with its visible cities of its own dead were on this side of the world again, the tide would rise over this hill. What matter His mother lay where she would have chosen. A short time now, and all this world would end.

"I'll take you away," Tony was saying to the old minister and his wife and the older sexton. "We're flying west tonight to the central plateau. We'll manage somehow to take you with us."

"Not me," said the old sexton. "Do not take me from the will of the Lord!"

Nor would the minister and his wife be moved. They would journey today, when the water receded, into the higher hills; but that was all they would do.

The airplane settled to earth on the high ground between Lake Michigan and Lake Superior, just as the Bronson Bodies, appallingly large, rose over the eastern horizon. Nearly a thousand people came from the great cantonment to greet Tony and Hendron's daughter. The scientist had given up his New Mexico venture entirely, and brought his congregation of human beings all to his Michigan retreat.

Greetings, however, were not fully made until the Bronson Bodies had been observed. Beta now exceeded the moon, and it shone with a pearly luster and a brilliance which the moon had never possessed. Around it was an aureole of soft radiance where its atmosphere, thawed by the warmth of the sun it so rapidly approached, had completely resumed its gaseous state.

But Bronson Beta did not compare with the spectacle of Alpha. Alpha was gigantic—bigger than the sun, and seemingly almost as bright, for the clouds which streamed up from every part of its surface threw back the sun's light, dazzling, white and hard. There was no night. Neither Eve nor Tony had seen the camp in its completion; and when wonderment over the ascending bodies gave way to uneasy familiarity, Eliot James took them on a tour of inspection.

Hendron had prepared admirably for the days which he had known would lie ahead of his hand-picked community. There were two prodigious dining halls, two buildings not unlike apartment houses in which men and women were domiciled. In addition there was a building resembling a hangar set on end, which towered above the surrounding forests more than a hundred feet. At its side was the landing field, space for the sheltering of the planes, and opposite the landing field a long row of shops which terminated in an iron works.

It was to the machine shops and foundry that Eliot James last took his companions.

"The crew here," he said to Eve, "has already finished part of the construction of the Ark which your father is planning. If we wanted to, we could build a battleship here; in the laboratories anything that has been done could be repeated; and a great many things have been accomplished that have never been done before. By tomorrow night I presume that the entire New York equipment will have been reinstalled here."

Tony whistled. "It's amazing, Genius, sheer genius! How about food?" Eliot James smiled. "There is enough food for the entire congregation as long as we will need it."

"Now show us the Ark."

Eve's father came out from the hangar to act as their guide.

From the hysterical white glare of the Bronson Bodies Eve and Tony were taken into a mighty chamber which rose seemingly to the sky itself, where the brilliance was even greater. A hundred things inside that chamber might have attracted their attention—its flood-lighting system, or the tremendous bracing of its metal walls; but their eyes were only for the object in its center. The Ark on that late July evening—the focal point, the dream and hope of all those whom Hendron had gathered together—stood upright on a gigantic concrete block in a cradle of steel beams. Its length was one hundred and thirty-five feet. It was sixty-two feet in diameter, and its shape was cylindrical. Streamlining was unnecessary for travel in the outer reaches of space, where there was no air to set up resistance. The metal which composed it was a special alloy eighteen inches in thickness, electroplated on the outside with an alloy which shone like chromium.

After Tony had looked at it for a long time, he said, "It is by far the most spectacular object mankind has ever achieved."

Hendron glanced at him and continued his exposition. "A second shell, much smaller, goes inside; and between the inner shell and its outer guard are several layers of insulation material. Inside the shell will be engines which generate the current, which in turn releases the blast of atomic energy, store-chambers for everything to be carried, the mechanisms of control, the aeration plant, the heating units and the quarters for passengers."

By the time he had finished, Tony was staring at him from the sight. "How many will she carry?" he asked suddenly.

Hendron hesitated; then he said, "For a trip of the duration I contemplate, she would be able to take about one hundred people."

Tony's voice was still quieter. "Then you have nine hundred idealists in your camp here?"

The older man smiled. "Unless I am greatly mistaken, I have a thousand." "They all know about the ship?"

"Something about it. Nearly half of them have been working on it, or on apparatus connected with it."

"You pay no wages?"

"I've offered wages. In most cases they've been refused. I have more than three million dollars in gold available here for expenses encountered in dealing with people who still wish money for their time or materials."

"I see. How long a trip do you contemplate?"

Hendron took the young man's breath. "Ninety hours. That is, provided," and his voice began to shake—"provided we can find proper materials with which to line our blast tubes. Otherwise we wouldn't be able to propel this thing for more than a few minutes."

Eve looked at her father. "Dad, you've got to go to bed. And don't worry so. We'll find the alloy all right. We've done everything else."

Hendron nodded; and Tony, looking at him, realized for the first time how much the scientist had aged recently.

Tony escorted Eve to the women's dormitory. Eve bade him good night, then went inside. Tony walked with slow strides to the top of a neighboring hill. Hendron's village looked on the northern side like a university campus, and on the southern side like the heart of a manufacturing district. All around it stretched the Michigan wilderness. The ground had been chosen partly because of the age and firmness of its geological base, and partly because of its isolation.

He sat down on a large stone. The hot night wind blew with increasing violence, and the double shadows, one sharp and one faint, which were cast by all things in the light of the Bronson Bodies, were abruptly obliterated by the passage of a dark cloud.

Tony's mind ran unevenly and irresolutely. "All these people," he thought, "these brilliant, temperamental men and women, have subsided and made themselves like soldiers in Hendron's service—amazing man—Only a hundred people—"

Fears assailed him: "Suppose they don't complete the Ark successfully, and she never leaves the ground? Then all these people would have given their lives for nothing. Suppose it leaves the earth and falls—falls back for hundreds of miles, gaining speed all the way, so that when it hit the atmosphere it would turn red-hot and burn itself up just like a meteor."

Tony thought of the tides that would rise that night and on following nights; and faintly, like the palpitation of a steamer's deck, the earth shook beneath his feet as if in answer to his meditation. And Tony realized that the heart of the earth was straining toward its celestial companions.

On the night of the twenty-fifth, tides unprecedented in the world's history swept every seacoast. There were earthquakes of varying magnitude all over the world. In the day that followed, volcanoes opened up, and islands sank beneath the sea; and on the night of the twenty-sixth the greater of the Bronson Bodies came within its minimum distance from the earth on this their first approach.

No complete record was ever made of the devastation. Eliot James, who made some tabulation of it in the succeeding months, could never believe all that he saw and heard, but it must have been true.

The eastern coast of the United States sustained a tidal wave seven hundred and fifty feet in height, which came in from the sea in relentless terraces and inundated the land to the very foot of the Appalachians. Its westward rush destroyed every building, every hotel, every skyscraper, every city, from Bangor in Maine to Key West in Florida. The tide looped into the Gulf of Mexico, rolled up the Mississippi valley.

It roared around South America, turning the Amazon basin into a vast inland sea which stretched from what had been the east coast to the Andes mountains on the west coast. The speed of this tide was beyond calculation.

Every river became a channel for it. It spilled over Asia. It inundated the great plain of China. It descended from the Arctic regions and removed much of France, England and Germany, all of Holland and the great Soviet empire, from the list of nations. Arctic water hundreds of feet deep flowed into the Caspian sea and hurled the last of its august inertia upon the Caucasus.

Western Asia and Arabia, southern India, Africa and much of Australia remained dry land.

More than half the population of the world died in the tides that rose and subsided during the proximity of the Bronson Bodies. But those who by design or through accident found themselves on land that remained dry were not necessarily spared.

The earthquake which Tony had felt in Michigan was the first of a series of shocks which increased steadily in violence for the next forty-eight hours, and which never afterward wholly ceased. Hendron had chosen his spot well, for it was one of the relatively few portions of the undeluged world which was not reduced to an untenable wasteland of smoking rock and creeping lava.

As hour by hour the earth presented new surfaces to the awful gravitational pull of the Bronson Bodies, a series of stupendous cataclysms took place. Underneath the brittle slag enduring the thousands of miles of dense compressed molten material. The earth's crust does not hold back that material. It is kept in place only by a delicate adjustment of gravity; and the interference of the Bronson Bodies distorted that balance. The earth burst open like a ripe grape. From a geological standpoint the tides which swept over were a phenomenon of but trifling magnitude.

The center of the continent of Africa split in two as if a mighty cleaver had come down on it, and out of the grisly incision poured an unquenchable tumult of the hell that dwells within the earth. Chasms yawned in the ocean floor, swallowing levels of the sea and returning it instantaneously in continents of steam. The great plateau of Inner Tibet dropped like an express elevator nine hundred feet. South America was riven into two islands, one extending north and south in the shape of a sickle, and the other, roughly circular, composed of all that remained of the high lands of Brazil. North America reeled and shuddered, split, snapped, boomed and leaped. The Rocky mountains lost their immobility and danced like waves of water. From the place that had been Yellowstone park a mantle of lava was spread over thousands of square miles. The coastal plain along the Pacific disappeared, and the water moved up to dash itself in fury against a range of active volcanoes that extends from Nome to Panama.

Gases, steam and ashes welled from ten thousand vents into the earth's atmosphere. The sun went out, the stars were made invisible. Blistering heat blew to the ends of the earth. The polar ice melted and a new raw land emerged, fiery and shattered, mobile and catastrophic.

Those human beings who survived the world's white-hot throes were survivors for the most part through good fortune. Few escaped through design—on the entire planet only a dozen places which had been picked by the geologists as refuges remained habitable.

Upon millions poured oceans of seething magma carrying death more terrible than the death which rolled on the tongue of the great tides. The air which was breathed by other millions was suddenly choked with sulphurous fumes and they fell like gassed soldiers, strangling in the streets of their destroyed cities. Live steam, blown with the violence of a hurricane, scalded populous centers and barren steppes impartially. From a sky that had hitherto deluged mankind only with rain, snow and hail, fell now burning torrents and red-hot sleet. The very earth itself slowed in its rotation, sped up again, sucked and dragged through space at the caprice of the bodies in the sky above. It became girdled in smoke and steam, and blasts of hot gas; and upon it as Bronson Alpha and Beta drew away, there fell torrential rains which hewed down rich land to the bare rock, which cooled the issue from the earth to vast metallic oceans, and which were accompanied by lightnings that furnished the infernal scenery with incessant illumination, and by thunder which blended undetectably with the terrestrial din.

At Hendron's camp forty-eight hours in the Pit were experienced; and yet Hendron's camp was on one of the safest and least disturbed corners of the world.

The first black clouds which Tony had observed marked the beginning of an electrical storm. The tremor he felt presaged a steady crescendo of earth-shakings. He left his hilltop soon and found that the population of the colony which, an hour before, had retired for the night, was again awake. He met Hendron and several scientists making a last tour of inspection, and he joined them.

"The dormitories," Hendron said, "are presumably quake-proof. I don't think any force could knock over the buttresses we have put around the project."

Even as he spoke, the wind increased, lightning stabbed the sky, the radiance of the Bronson Bodies was permanently extinguished, and the gusty wind was transformed to a steady tempest. As shock followed shock, people began to pour into the outdoors.

Tony tried to locate Eve, but was unable to do so in the gathering throng. It was difficult to walk on the wide cleared area between the various buildings for the ground underfoot frequently forced itself up like the floor of a rapidly decelerated elevator. The lightning came nearer. The thunder was continual. It was hard to hear the voice of one's nearest neighbor. Tony, with half a dozen others, rushed into the brightly illuminated women's dormitory and hurriedly brought from it into the tumult and rain those who had remained there.

By ten o'clock the violence of the quakes was great enough so that it was difficult to stand. The people huddled like sheep in a storm in the lee of the buildings. Lightning hammered incessantly on the tall steel tower which surrounded the space-flyer, moved through the assembled shouting words of encouragement did not feel.

Shortly after eleven an extraordinarily violent shock lifted one end of the men's building so that bricks and cement cascaded from its wall. Tony had the floodlights thrown on the landing field, and every one migrated thither.

Before midnight some caprice of the seismic disturbance snapped off the power. At one o'clock in the morning a truck from the kitchen of the dining halls floundered through the mud with sandwiches and coffee. At two o'clock the temperature of the wind dropped, and the wet multitude shivered and chattered with cold. Hail fell in place of rain.

Half an hour later the wind stopped abruptly; it puffed, veered, and came back from the southwest. It blew fifty miles an hour, a hundred, and then rose from that velocity to an immeasurable degree. Every man and woman was compelled to lie face down on the muddy earth, the undulations of which increased.

They lay for an hour, more, shivering, gasping for breath, turning their faces. Then a particular violent shock suddenly separated the building field into two parts, one of which rose eight or nine feet above the other, leaving a sharp diminutive precipice across the middle of the field.

There was no dawn, no daylight, only a diffused inadequate grayness. The people lay on the ground, each man wrapped in the terrors of his own soul, with fingers clutching the grass or buried in the earth. And so the day began. The air grew perpetually more warm. An augmented fury of the gale brought a faint odor of sulphur. Midday held no respite. It was impossible to bring up food against the gale, impossible even to stand. The sulphurous odors and the heat increased. The driven rain seemed hot. Toward what would have been afternoon, and in the absolute darkness, there was a sudden abatement; and the wind, while it still blew strong, allowed the shaken populace to rise and to stare through the impenetrable murk. Fifty or more of the men made a rush for the dining halls. They found them, and were surprised that they had not collapsed. The low hills around had furnished them with protection. There was no time to prepare food. Snatching what they could, and loading themselves with containers of drinking water, they fought their way back to the field. There, like animals, the people drank and ate, finishing in time only to throw themselves once again on the bare ground under the renewed fury of the storm.

Night came again. The sulphur in the air, the fumes and gases, the heat and smoke and dust, the hot rain, almost extinguished their frantically defended lives. The dust and rain combined with the wind to make a diagonal downfall of foetid mud which blasted them and covered the earth.

The respite brought by the second morning was comparative rather than real. The wind abated; the torrential rain became intermittent; and the visibility returned, though no one could have told whether it was early morning or twilight.

Tony rose to his feet the instant the wind slackened. Through all the long and terrible hours he had been absent from Eve. It would have been utterly unthinkable to attempt to locate her in the midst of that sound and fury. He found, however, that there was no use in looking for her immediately. So heavy had been the downpour of rain and ashes from the sky, that it not only reduced the field to a quagmire, but it covered the human beings who had lain there with a thick chocolate-colored coating, so that as one by one the people arose to sitting and standing postures, he found it difficult even to distinguish man from woman.

He was compelled to put Eve from his mind. It was necessary to think of all and not one. Many of those who had been in the field were unable to rise. Several had been injured. Of the older men a number were suffering perhaps fatally from exposure.

Tony found that his limbs would scarcely support him, but after he had staggered for some distance through the murk, his numbed circulation was restored, and his muscles responded.

Out of the subsiding maelstrom he collected some thirty or forty persons, most of them men.

"Any of you men working on the power plant?" he shouted. . . . "Right. You two come over here. Now who else here was in the machine shop? Good. You fellows get to work on starting up the lights. They'll be the first thing. Now I want half of you to get beds in shape in the women's hall." He counted the number he required. "If they don't look safe," he shouted. "If they disappear, men, find a place that is safe, and put the beds there. We'll have to have a hospital."

TRUCK WRECK WRECKS WRECKER, HURTS TWO

After one man had been injured in an auto wreck at Sugar Loaf, near here, Monday, the same wreck figured in the injury of a second man an hour later.

Norman Hays, of Lackey, was hurt about the head and chest when a truck in which he was riding left the road. Two wreckers arrived from Allen, and while efforts were being made to get the wrecked truck back onto the highway the wrecker owned by Webb and Preston, of Allen, turned over, breaking a bone in the ankle of Bernard May, its operator. Hays was able Tuesday to leave the Beaver Valley hospital, Martin, whither he was taken for treatment.

PRESTONSBURG B TEAM IS WINNER AT ASHLAND IN TORRID ENCOUNTER

The Prestonsburg high school “Little Team” had its chance last week to show its wares before Ashland basketball fans as a reward for their faithful practice and excellent play through the season. And they made good in a torrid battle with the Fairview Junior high school five of Ashland, coming from behind in the last half to win, 18-16.

Held scoreless in the first quarter and to one field goal and four foul tosses in the second, the Prestonsburg boys waxed exceedingly hot in the third, scoring 11 points while holding Fairview to one. Stidham, Fairview forward, led the two teams in scoring with eight points, and was closely followed by Joe Prater, Prestonsburg guard, who scored six.

Adeptness of the “Little Team” at handling the ball and the boys’ fine all-round play has given local fans hopes of these boys giving Prestonsburg a strong five when they graduate, as most of them will next year, to the first-string team.

An Important Call Awaited Him...

A TELEPHONE SUBSCRIBER who was out of a job came to the office and ordered his service discontinued. Returning home, he found a telephone call summoning him back to work. Needless to say, he kept his telephone, realizing that without it he might have missed this opportunity.

Such a coincidence is unusual, but it suggests that while the natural measure of the telephone's value is the many calls placed each day by the family, there are often times when incoming calls are equally important.

In other words, your telephone service is a two-way road leading to as well as from your home or office. It keeps your message to a friend—it gives your order to the grocer or druggist—it stands ready to summon the doctor, fire department or police in emergencies, and just as readily brings business and social messages to you.

People who have considered the value and importance of this two-way telephone service to every member of the family know it is well worth the low cost, and that it really doesn't pay to try to do without it.

Pain Rashes Off When your head aches; when Neuralgia tortures you; when Muscular Pains make you miserable—take a Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pill. Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills—The Favor of Other Men

HOW WOMEN CAN WIN MEN AND MEN WIN The Favor of Other Men Unless two parts of bile juice pass daily from your liver into your bowels, your food digests in your bowels. This process your bowels' movement. If bile juice is not eliminated, you get yellow complexion, low spirits, nervous, ill eyes, headache, bad taste, constipation, indigestion. You have become an old-looking, four-somethings, some think of you. You have lost your personal charm. Everybody wants to run from you. But don't take salts, mineral waters, oils, laxatives, pills, or use any cathartic or chewing gums and expect them to get rid of this poison that destroys your personal charm. They can't do it, for they only move on the tail end of your bowels and that doesn't take away a portion of the decayed poison. Cathartics work in both directions. Only a free flow of your bile juice will stop this decayed poison in your bowels. The one mild vegetable medicine which acts a free flow of your bile juice is Carter's Little Liver Pills. No calomel (mercury) in Carter's. Only fine, mild vegetable extracts. If you would bring back your personal charm to win men, start taking Carter's Little Liver Pills according to directions today. See at drug stores. Refuse "something just as good" for it may grip, loosen bowels or send rectum. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name and get what you ask for. © 1935, C. M. Co.

200 HOMELESS Continued from page one American Red Cross is expected to furnish aid. The county health department is already chlorinating wells in the flooded area, and taking other measures against the spread of disease.

At Lackey the water at noon Tuesday had risen above the railroad tracks at the C. and O. depot and had flooded almost every building on the lower side of the tracks. In West Garrett the flood had reached the eaves of several houses. In Maytown and Martin a number of families moved from their homes in anticipation of the rise in Right Beaver Creek, but few homes in these towns were invaded by water, it is reported. At McDowell Tuesday the water over the railroad tracks was four feet deep. It was said, and several homes were flooded. The water at Wayland was at its highest at 5 o'clock Tuesday morning, and reached a depth of as high as five feet in some homes there. Right Beaver Creek did not begin to fall at Garrett until noon.

To add to the discomfort of those dislodged from their homes, heavy snow fell throughout Tuesday afternoon. Neighbors luckily situated on higher ground found their homes taxed to capacity in sheltering their unfortunate townsmen. In Prestonsburg, backwater from the Big Sandy crept dangerously near basements and did not begin to fall until late Wednesday morning.

Between 40 and 50 men on relief employment were put to work Wednesday on the task of rehabilitating flooded homes on Right Beaver.

Motorists from Prestonsburg, en route home from Lexington, found the Garrett highway blocked in several places Tuesday from Mt. Sterling, and were obliged to detour by way of Flemingsburg, Morehead and Ashland.
