THE people of Kentucky have no af-I finity—they have, rather, an allergy -to machine politics.

The Democratic and Republican parties, please take notice.

In the last gubernatorial election the deux ex machina became the "sprag" in the flywheel and Lyter Donaldson and the Democratic party went down to defeat in a political era when the party should have been at its strongest in a traditionally Democratic state.

Although obviously a candidate with little popular appeal and with some mud from the highway department machine smudging his political countenance, Donaldson was the choice of the machine, which was represented by the Administration. The unorganized voter spoke his little piece in the primary, but his voice was lost in the clank and whir of the

So, tired of the Chandler-Johnson regime which smacked of a hierarchy as it offered Mr. Donaldson for the Succession, thousands of Democratic voters staged a quiet rebellion and upset the

Not much is left now of that old machine, but here and there rusting parts lie about the Commonwealth. And there are some "plug" mechanics in the party who would pick up the pieces, wire them back together and get them running in time for the coming primary.

This newspaper doesn't go in for politics. Least of all, the machine brand. And that kind of thing is what we would advise the voters to shun. You can't blame any candidate for accepting support wherever he can find it, but you can keep an eye out for the Old Gang. It's not hard to recognize.

And it is certain that whomever it supports will be expected to "go along" as a machine man, and not necessarily as a man of the people.

MINOR TRAGEDIES NECESSARY TO PREVENT GREATER ONES

NEIGHBORING Pike county last week had its first conviction under the new state law declaring war on guntotin'. The defendant drew a two-year penitentiary sentence.

In this county several indictments have been made for the same offense, but not yet has a trial been had under the new law. Fighting desperately for time, defendants have contrived continuances. Yet Circuit Judge Hill and Commonwealth's Attorney Cornett have indicated that, despite all pleas by defendants and their friends, the court is determined not to permit friendship or influence, or both, to interfere with the processes of

This is no easy task court officials face, that of enforcing a new law that hits hard citizens of the county, some of whom are influential. The defendants and their friends find it hard to see in the carrying of the traditional ".38" anything criminal as long as it is not belching flame and bullet. They cannot see the ends of justice met in sending to the penitentiary from two to five years a man who has done no more than carry a revolver, his own personal possession.

But this law was not enacted impulsively, without thought of its effect. It was enacted to attain an exact effect-to stop men and women from carrying death-dealing weapons and thus to halt a disgracefully tragic murder rate. This new pistol law did not creep upon us stealthily. It was heralded by the press; all who could or would read or listen to the radio knew of it, of its effective date, of the penalty it provided.

Then there is no excuse for the offendor. And there is no excuse for any citizen to seek to defeat its aims.

Because of the sometimes onerous duties this law devolves on public officials, peace officers and officials of trial courts should have the support of good citizens to the end that the new law may receive a thorough and fair trial. What part will you plan in the matter—the role of a good citizen of courage or of a weakling who is always ready to whine about conditions but unwilling to stand up and be

It is true, enforcement of this law will remove a few men from homes and families for a year or two. By any yardstick, that is a circumstance fraught with unhappiness. But such minor tragedies created by law enforcement may prevent those darker tragedies wherein men and women are removed forever from homes and loved ones by the bullets of their gun-totin' fellow-humans.
