

Wage Scale Hearing Set March 27th

No Further Work At Present Rates Seen for Schools

The Floyd County Board of Education held a special meeting Saturday to make final its rejection of the $367,737 low bid on a three-shop addition to the Garth Vocational School.

George Lee Shannon, architect, was authorized to readvertise the project for bids, but the work will in all probability never be done if the wage scale now prevailing stands unchanged, Superintendent of Schools Charles Clark said.

"We want the laboring man to have an adequate wage scale and know that he must have it," Supt. Clark said, "but if the present scale stands there will absolutely be no further school construction in Floyd county."

The current wage scale, established after a hearing here April 19, 1972, is around $10 an hour for two wage skills. This amounted, it is said, to an increase of approximately $5 an hour and provides $1.03 per hour vacation pay.

The new wage scale was granted despite the fact that the time federal wage controls holding pay increases to 5 1/2 percent were in effect, it is claimed.

A wage scale hearing has been scheduled for 10 a.m. March 27 in the grand jury room of the courthouse here. The Elliott Glass & Electric Company was low bidder on the Garth work. The bid was approximately $30,000 above estimates.

Workshop Session At New Hospital

Doctors at workshop held in the laboratory of Dr. Ballard Wright at the Highlands Regional Medical Center, near here, during the seminar on chest diseases last week-end are, from left, Dr. Phillip Morrison, Bristol, Va.; Dr. Alvin Thomas, University of Michigan; Dr. Gunnar Strom, University of Uppsala, Uppsala, Sweden; Dr. Wright, program director and head of the cardio-pulmonary laboratory at Highlands Medical Center.

Lecture sessions of the seminar were held at May Lodge, Jenny Wiley State Park. The two-day program attracted 78 physicians and featured medical men of national and international repute in lectures and workshop demonstrations.

The seminar was so successful that already the lodge has been booked for the second annual session, the last week-end of May, 1974.

$578,500 Sought Of Railway Firm In Hall's Death

Mrs. Audrey Hall, administratrix of the estate of her late husband, Bobby Hall, last week filed suit in the Floyd Circuit Court asking of the C. & O. Railway Company and its locomotive engineer, Donald Hutchinson, of Hunter, a total of $578,500 damages.

The action alleges that Mr. Hall's death last Oct. 16 at a railway crossing resulted from the careless, negligent and reckless operation of the company's train by Hutchinson. Hall was driving his truck across the railway tracks, near Drift, when the vehicle was struck by the train.

Plaintiff alleges that no lookout was maintained and no whistle or bell sounded, that the train speed was not slackened and the air brakes not applied when rail employees saw, or by exercise of ordinary Weight Limit Revision Asked On Daniels Cr.

The Floyd fiscal court was asked last week to consider the adjustment of the 10-ton weight limit which it has established on the Daniels Creek road, so that a petroleum plant may be built there.

Jerry Bingham, of Pikeville, owner of the Pikeville Oil & Tire Company and the Mountain Petroleum Co., Paintsville, owns property a short distance up Daniels Creek on which he hopes to build a bulk petroleum plant for the distribution of Texaco products. If the plant is built, the Pikeville and Paintsville plants would be consolidated with the new distribution center.

Joe Justice, Pikeville, attorney for Bingham, told officials here that the maximum load of company trucks would be 8,600 gallons and the effect of these loads on the road would be minimized by the fact that oil and gasoline trucks have a long wheelbase and wide tires. He said no more than two trips would be made daily on the sector of road proposed for use.

If the plant is built, offices of the company will be located in Prestonsburg, Mr. Bingham said.

The court a few months ago placed the 10-ton load limit on the Daniels Creek road to afford protection from damage by coal trucks. A study of the Bingham request is being made.

This Town . . . That World

I'm a little disturbed. Spring fever hasn't hit me yet. No feeling of lassitude, general debility, longing for a dark, shady spot, no glimmering before the eyes or any of the usual symptoms. If I could find a doctor who hasn't already taken to his bed with the malady, think I'd book an appointment.

PUCKER UP!

As you may suspect, I am not one to go gambling and tra-la-ing, hither and yon, just because the weather is so great and the birds, flowers, frogs and other wise things of nature are bursting into song and bloom, but even I can't be blind to it all.

And what is happening makes of me a down-at-the-mouth misanthrope as I pessimistically predict that the flowers will be pistil-deep in snow before spring really comes.

The birds, without a shirt to their backs or a guarantee of a meal tomorrow, aren't worrying but are singing their fool heads off. Why shouldn't you and I show a little happiness, too?

Come to think of it—when have you heard anybody whistle, around here? That may be just what this country needs—more whistlers. The record does not show any man fighting his neighbor as long as he was whistling.

DOOTNEY BRINGS A BRACER

"Dootney" Horn has just pranced in from Florida, bringing me possibly the most unusual gift I will ever receive. It was at one time a bestseller, although it isn't a book. It at one time had oldtimers clicking their heels and vowing, by cracker, that it was the best thing ever invented. It made a millionaire of the man who put it together, and was said to have created hangers for some who used it too freely.

This gift is, among other things, 12 percent alcohol. That's 24 proof, man! No wonder it perked the old boys up.

On his way up from Florida Dootney ran into it at a country store and immediately decided he knew the man who needed it.

So it is that I have in my possession a bottle of the genuine, original, oldtime Hadacol.

Three Murders, Two Robberies Unsolved

The recent holdup robbery here of Kroger's brings to five the number of unsolved crimes which involve the attention of county, state and federal officers.

The slayers have not been identified in three murder cases. Victims in the slayings were Jimmy Chaffins on Arkansas Creek two years ago, Lawrence Conley at Garrett last year, and Clayton Conley whose bullet-riddled body was found on a deserted road, near Wayland, a few days after the Garrett shooting.

The murder cases are being investigated, mainly, by state detectives and police, and one or more of the killings is almost certain to be a subject of the April grand jury probe into crime. At the last session of the grand jury several persons were questioned in the Garrett and Wayland cases, but no definitive evidence was procured.

Lawrence Conley, a deputy sheriff, was killed by a shotgun blast fired from a passing car. Clayton Conley's death, a few days later, is linked to the officer's killing, investigators hold.

The body of Chaffins was found, shortly after he was shot on Arkansas Creek. He was killed while en route from his home in Louisville to visit his parents in the Garrett vicinity.

The unsolved robbery of the Martin Branch of the First National Bank, a year ago, is the hands of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The federal agency also may be more heavily involved in the Kroger robbery investigation than any other, since those guilty are believed to have escaped into another state.

When the grand jury convenes next month it also is expected to take a hard look at the drug problem in this county. A substance believed to be LSD was found recently at Prestonsburg high school but the report on laboratory analysis has not been received, County Detective Sam Hale said. Officers are interested in two or three persons who have left the vicinity since the discovery.

Stanville Man Faces Michigan Robbery Charge

Tommy Spradlin, of Stanville, who was jailed here last week by State and County Detectives Gary Rose and Sam Hale, was later booked as a fugitive and for armed robbery. He was held for Michigan authorities.

Spradlin, Hale said, is accused of a 1969 robbery in Michigan. He was arrested by the two officers as a suspect in the theft of an automobile which had been found burned in the Stanville vicinity and of a motorcycle which was recovered.

Kermit Martin was jailed Monday by Deputy Sheriffs Howell and Hamilton on a charge of transporting alcoholic beverages. He was later released under bond by Magistrate Bill Wells.

Violation of the Controlled Substances Act (drugs) was alleged against a James Slone who was jailed last week by State Troopers Estep and Stumbo.

Five counts—no registration plates, no operator's license, speeding, reckless driving and eluding a police officer—were chalked up by State Trooper Newsome against Kenneth Ratliff.

Arnold Bob McKinney and Doug Roberts were jailed Sunday by Deputy Sheriff Milt Hunt and were charged with shooting into a school bus stop and school vehicle.

Paintsville Man Victim in Wreck Near Blue River

William Scott Lewis, 22-year-old Paintsville man, was almost instantly killed Saturday evening in a single-car accident on Highway 404, near Blue River, and a passenger was slightly injured.

The victim, brother of Jack Lewis, Johnson county attorney, died of a skull fracture and multiple injuries after losing control of his late model Ford at about 7:30 p.m. while traveling east on 404. The car apparently ran off the road and turned over, coming to rest on its top. A passenger, James Chris Haney, also of Paintsville, escaped with superficial injuries.

A son of Corby Dempsey Lewis, of Paintsville, and the late A. I. Lewis, he was born at Williamsport, Ky., March 13, 1950. A graduate of Mayo State Vocational School and a printer for Hurst Printing Company, Lexington, he was a member of the Missionary Baptist Church.

Surviving, besides his mother and brother, are three other brothers, A. I. Lewis, III, and Galen Lewis, both of Warren, Mich., and Robert Marion Lewis, of Lexington.

Flood Insurance May Depend Upon Zoning

Floyd countians can get flood insurance, if certain governmental requirements are met, County Attorney James R. Allen has been told in response to his recent inquiry made to the Department of Insurance, Frankfort.

These requirements may demand action by the fiscal court which would amount to

Cynthiana Pastor To Lead in Revival At Methodist Church

Dr. Robert L. Anderson, pastor of the First United Methodist Church at Cynthiana, will lead the First United Methodist Church here in revival, March 25 through April 1, it was announced this week.

Dr. Anderson is a former director of the Big Sandy Larger Parish, superintendent of the Maysville district and pastor at Shelbyville, Wilmore and Ashland.

The pastor, the Rev. Howard Coop, and congregation invited the public to attend all services during the week of revival.

zoning and a land-use plan for the entire county.

Wrote Jack C. Goins, chief examiner, Property & Casualty Division, to Mr. Allen:

"In order for Floyd county to qualify for flood insurance, your fiscal court must officially evidence positive interest in securing flood insurance and give satisfactory assurance to the Secretary of the U. S. Department of Housing & Urban Development that adequate land use and control measures will have been adopted as consistent with the comprehensive criteria for land management and use development."

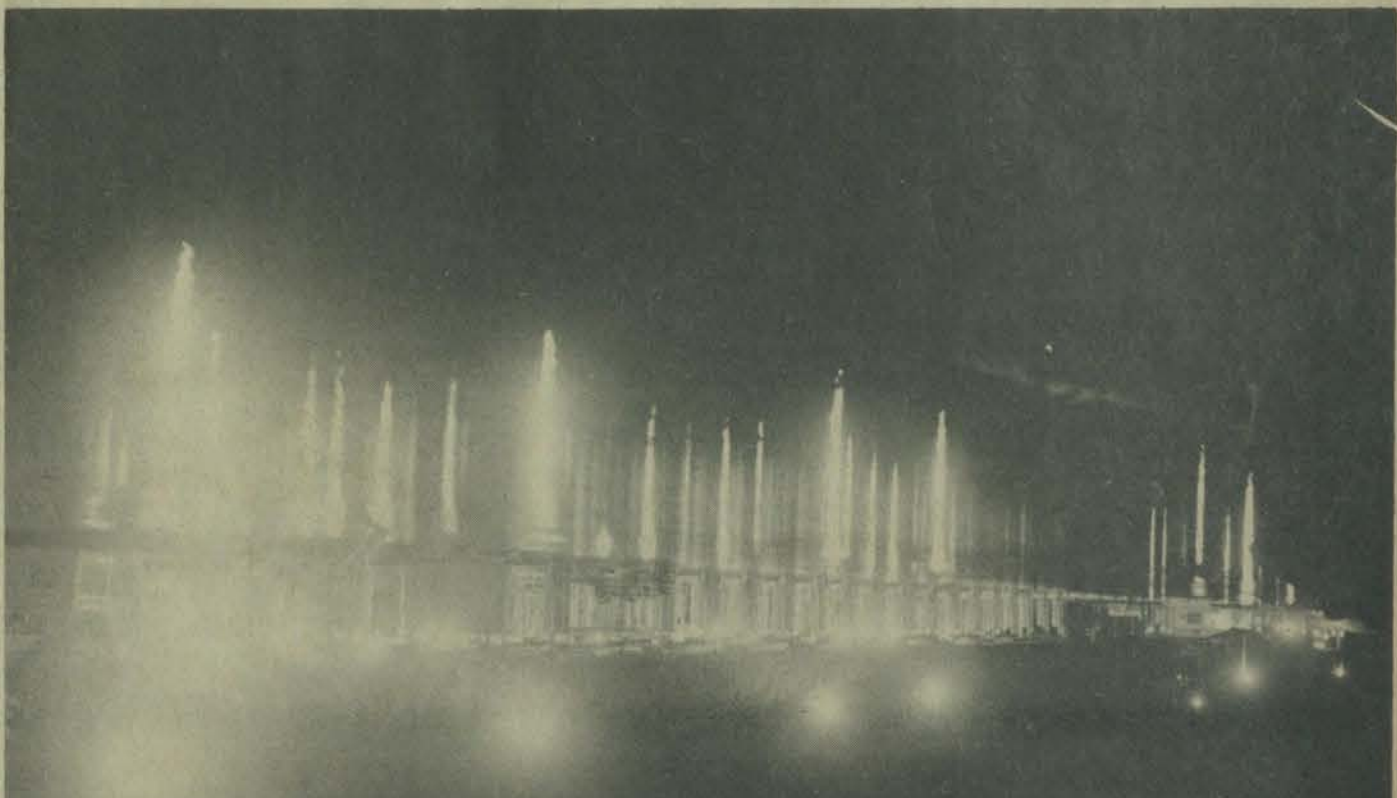

The fiscal court has considered zoning but hesitates to take any action until an education program is carried out and the people are made fully aware of what such regulations would mean.

While the red tape of flood insurance was being considered, a meeting of representatives of the U. S. Corps of Engineers' district office at Huntington with Martin city officials and county officials was scheduled here Tuesday in an effort to get the Martin flood protection project activated.

Funds have been available for months for the work, but rights of entry on several pieces of real estate in and outside Martin remain to be acquired. County Judge Henry Stumbo said he hopes to get a Corps representative to remain here long enough to explain to property-owners the boundary lines of property needed. Some have told officials that they need to know exactly how much of their property is required.

Judge Stumbo said it is important that the protection project be saved and that, if necessary, condemnation proceedings will be instituted by the county on necessary easements outside the city limits of Martin. Inside Martin, the city would be responsible for acquiring easements, he said.

The work planned there would involve channel straightening and deepening and some riprapping. The project would begin near the confluence of Right and Left Beaver Creeks, above Martin, and extend downstream to a point near the Sammy Clark Branch, below Arkansas Creek.

Like the Proverbial Christmas Tree

Jenny Wiley State Park's boat dock is mostly deserted by day, this early in the season, but at night, as this photo attests, it's lit up like the proverbial Christmas tree. Dewey Lake will remain at or below seasonal level till around April 15, but warmer days begin to attract fishermen, and this scene will soon take on daytime activity.

Reed Badly Injured Near Emma Sunday In 3-Car Smashup

An auto mishap involving three vehicles on U. S. 23, near Emma, Sunday afternoon left Charles Reed, of Lexington, formerly of Price, critically injured.

Reed, 22, with his wife, Janet, and year-old daughter, Christie, were travelling north, according to State Police sources, when a southbound vehicle, driven by Gary B. Sexton, 19, of Kendallville, Indiana, swerved into the left (driver's) side of the Reed vehicle and proceeded to strike a third car, driven by Elmer Jackson Lewis, 22, of Paintsville, headon. The accident occurred at around 2:30 p.m.

Furnaces Reflect Colorful Period In Kentucky History

By DAVID KENNAMER
Can you visualize Kentucky, an agricultural and industrial state, as a major iron center of America?
A century and a half ago, many Kentuckians may have argued that the state's future hinged on iron production.
By 1837 the state ranked third in the nation in iron production, and at one time there were more than 70 stone blast furnaces producing tons upon tons of iron.
The ruined furnaces now stand as mute witnesses to a fascinating period of Kentucky history.
Nearly all of these furnace sites have been identified in 23 counties spread throughout the state. Most important to Kentucky's iron age were the northeast corner of the state known as the Hanging Rock Iron Region which includes Greenup, Boyd, and Carter counties; and Lyon and Trigg counties in what is now the Land Between the Lakes Region. There are 15 furnaces and furnace sites marked in Greenup county alone.

The technology of the 19th century required vast amounts of charcoal to produce the high temperatures needed in the iron smelting process. A unique combination of shallow ore deposits, vast forests, and navigable streams gave Kentucky its early advantage and opportunity.
The first furnace west of the Allegheny Mountains was built in Bath county, near Owingsville, in 1791. Designed to cast iron kettles, it was used to make cannon balls during the War of 1812. Today it is known as the Bourbon Iron Works.
The iron furnaces provided the economic base for many thriving towns. The residents of these towns made their livings by cutting trees, making charcoal, digging ore, and working at the furnaces. When the industry died so did these communities.
Mt. Savage, in Carter county, is one of these Kentucky ghost towns. Its furnace, built in 1848, was a technological marvel of its day. At its peak, 500 people occupied 100 buildings in the village. Today, only the furnace and a few tumbledown structures remain.
Fitchburg in Estill county is very similar. The Fitchburg furnace, a magnificent, 60-foot-high, double-stacked structure, reputed to be the largest in the world, was built in 1868. In the 1870's over 1,000 men were employed here and at another furnace nearby. Today the majestic Fitchburg furnace stands watch over a cornfield.
The remains of furnaces in the Land Between the Lakes region have become major attractions. Center furnace, the last charcoal-fueled furnace to operate in Kentucky, was built in the 1840's and was used periodically for 65 years. This operation required the labor of 250 to 300 men who lived in the nearby community of Hematite. During this era, Chinese laborers were imported to work at this furnace and at others in the area.
At nearby Eddyville, William Kelly experimented at his Suwanee Iron Works and in 1847 discovered a method of making steel by forcing cold air into molten iron. In England, Henry Bessemer was doing the same thing. Kelly was granted a patent for the process in the United States but Bessemer got the credit—the fame and fortune that went with it.
Even during the iron industry's heyday, not every furnace was a roaring success. Perhaps the most spectacular failure was the Airdrie furnace, near Paradise in Muhlenberg county.
In 1855, Sir Robert Alexander spent over $300,000 to build the furnace, which he named after his home in Scotland. His Scottish workers could never make the furnace yield and, according to a nearby highway marker, it finally closed without producing a single pound of salable iron. The ruins of Alexander's furnace still stand on a bluff above the Green River.
By 1860 the iron industry had begun its decline. The iron ores found in Kentucky were of generally poor quality and transportation was often a problem.
Because the manufacture of iron took such huge quantities of wood, vast areas of forest land were devastated. In the Land Between the Lakes area almost every tree over two inches in diameter was cut. At this rate it did not take long to eradicate the native forests and the fuel supply.
When large deposits of high quality ore were found near the Great Lakes, Kentucky's iron age came to a close.

Today, many of the old furnaces have disappeared and those left are slowly deteriorating. A few are attractions at roadside parks and several stand on state park land.
The remains of Buffalo Furnace stand at the entrance of Greenbo Lake State Resort Park. Long-range plans exist for its restoration but, according to Richard Money, assistant director of construction and maintenance for the State Department of Parks, these plans are "very indefinite. There aren't many plans on the boards now. Quite a bit of work is needed to restore it to its original condition."
Built to withstand tremendous heat and pressure, the iron furnaces deteriorate very slowly while standing idle. Col. George Chinn, Director of the Kentucky Historical Society, says, "They aren't like covered bridges that fall apart. They don't need a lot of maintenance."
A project completed last year by the Kentucky Historical Society, the State Highway Department and the Armco Steel Company of Ashland has resulted in placement of highway markers at each known furnace site.
Most of the restoration and preservation work being done on the furnaces is conducted by the Department of Highways. Bourbon Furnace has been made the center of a roadside park and several others are being maintained in similar settings.
Wallace Williamson III, president of the Big Sandy Valley Historical Society, says he is not aware of any other plans for preservation in Kentucky. He points out that actual rebuilding of the furnaces is a very formidable undertaking. "There are always people who want to restore a furnace to its original condition but they have no idea of how much money it takes. The actual restoration of a furnace is an exceedingly expensive proposition."
Although Kentucky's mineral emphasis has shifted to coal, blast furnaces still operate in the state. These are large modern installations such as Armco's Amanda Furnace near Ashland. Iron is no longer mined in Kentucky, so these furnaces depend on ore from other areas.
Kentucky's colorful iron era is reflected today by the place names still in use around the state. Argillite, Hematite, and Pactolus are just a few of them. Iron Works Pike, built to transport iron from the Bourbon Iron Works to the Kentucky River at Frankfort, still carries traffic. Winding just north of Lexington, one of the state's most populous and modern areas, it shows that history is always nearby for those who take a minute to look.

Leads State Group In Per Capita Giving

The Prestonsburg Branch of the American Association of University Women, met March 8, and heard a report by the president, Helen Ankrom, and the first vice-president, Kathryn Frazier, on the convention held March 2-3 in Frankfort. Of special interest to members was the report that the Prestonsburg Branch was praised for its contribution to the Fellowship Fund, having been the only branch in Kentucky to contribute more than $5 per member.
New topics for the biennium were discussed at the convention and were explained to Prestonsburg Branch members at the meeting. These topics will be subject matter for programs and projects for the next two years: (1) Global Interdependence: Budgeting for Earth; (2) Woman: Searching for Self; (3) Dynamic Learning: Releasing Human Potential; (4) Media: Issues in Communications.
The Prestonsburg Branch was asked and accepted the responsibility of co-hosting with the Pikeville Branch for the state workshop to be held at May Lodge, Sept. 22.

Needed: Strip-Mines At Work, Back of Officials' Homes

Everybody—and that includes Ralph Nader and President Nixon—is interested in coal. The concern of everybody in Eastern Kentucky and other coal-producing areas stems from the fact that for them it is (to mix a metaphor) a matter of bread and butter.

As a consumer advocate, Nader says the government should shut down atomic reactors and spend more money on research of other forms of energy, including coal. We think he is right. Atomic reactors are a greater pollution threat to air and soil and water than coal at its worst has ever been. A nation that can send men to the moon and devise electronic marvels to correct flight patterns and mechanical failures, thousands of miles outside the earth's atmosphere, can surely develop the know-how needed to clean coal of its sulphur emissions and other objectionable features.

President Nixon is, of course, aware that coal is the nation's most plentiful fuel and that this country cannot afford to become dependent upon other nations for its oil. His concern for the future of coal is, naturally, based on a purview of the national need, not the economic emergencies that beset specific areas.

But we fear the President is considering placing parts of the nation such as Eastern Kentucky in the role of the sacrificial lamb. The Administration bill on strip-mining, which admittedly is the easiest and most productive method of extracting coal from the earth, is weaker than the bill submitted last year. It apparently would recognize that real reclamation isn't possible and, therefore, should be required only "where practicable." It would omit performance bonds and proposes that no agency, federal or state, should have the authority to close down a mine for failure to meet reclamation requirements.

The Congress should refuse to consider this bill, which amounts only to another "scrap of paper."

This newspaper has always supported conventional coal mining. It has contended that deep-mining of coal is necessary, that this method is least harmful to land and water, and that it is the payroll maker on which coal-producing areas must depend.

So it is that we cannot see the justice in any law that would lay the land open to further destruction by surface mining, while deep-miners at the same time are beset by a whole flock of federal regulations which make the operation of small mines almost an impossibility and the operation of larger underground mines often most difficult.

If the President and Congress are willing to let the energy crisis scare them into forgetting the environment and the people who must suffer from unrestricted surface mining, it would appear that the only means of letting them personally know the full tragedy of such a situation would be to move the shovels in, behind their own homes, and then start clanking.

Leaky Gas Line Held Blast Cause

An explosion last Tuesday night in Woodland Estates, Johnson county subdivision, destroyed the home of Patricia Harrington Pelphrey and resulted in injury to a 15-year-old Paintsville youth.

James "Bingo" Burchett, who was alone in the house at the time of the explosion, was taken to St. Joseph's hospital in Lexington where he is presently listed in good condition.

Paintsville Fire Chief Lee Howard, Jr. expressed the opinion that the explosion and resulting fire had originated in a leak in a natural gas line that crossed the road near the Pelphrey home. "My feeling is that there was some loose dirt around that gas pipe that was allowing the gas to leak somewhere from a broken place in the line" he said. The gas, Howard said, had apparently seeped through a nearby sewer line ditch and had accumulated beneath the house. "I believe this was the cause of the explosion because the ditch was on fire when our truck arrived."

Because most of the structure's walls were levelled by the initial force of the blast, the blaze which followed was not as severe as it might otherwise have been, it was said.

Folk Ways, Arts To Feature Pikeville College Convocation

Folk songs, folk dancing, folk tales and demonstrations of spinning, weaving, dulcimer making, and mountain toys are all a part of a three-day convocation slated March 19-21 at Pikeville College as students study their mountain heritage.

According to Embrey Howson, coordinator of the convocation, "No one can escape his heritage; it colors every aspect of his life whether he is conscious of it or not. It represents the foundation and structure of values which undergird our existence. Nevertheless, it is far better that we accept our heritage consciously, that we view it with pride and treasure its value."

Included in the program is folklorist, Dr. Leonard Roberts, native of Floyd county and a professor at Pikeville College. Roberts received his master's degree from the University of Iowa and his doctorate from the University of Kentucky. He has published more than 150 articles and folk tales in magazines and published six books with two currently in progress.

Folksingers, Floyd and Edna Ritchie Baker will be entertaining and explaining the music of the area on Wednesday. They have been singing as a team since their marriage eight years ago. The dulcimer-playing duo have performed throughout the United States and now teach a class in dulcimer playing at the John C. Campbell Folk School in Brasstown, North Carolina. Mrs. Baker is a sister of Jean Ritchie, nationally known folk singer. She has received the Burl Ives Award and the Jesse Stuart Award.

Native Pike countian and author Lillian D. Chaffin will be reading mountain literature as a part of the program. Mrs. Chaffin is the author of several books of poetry and prose. Two of the pieces have been produced on the National Educational Television Network. She is librarian at Johns Creek Schools in Pike County.

In a special evening performance on Wednesday, the award winning Hindman Settlement School Dancers will turn the stage of the Chrisman Auditorium on campus into a Saturday night's square dance of years gone by. Led by Lionel Duff, director of the Hindman school, the 12 dancers attire themselves in authentic costumes and perform their hoedowns as a "caller" yells his chants and directs the dance.

A weaver and a spinner from the Quicksand Craft Center at Vest will be displaying their wares. Mrs. Wayne Southward will give demonstrations of spinning flax and other material and using native plants to dye the thread. Mrs. Winnie Day, a weaver, will display some of her products. Mrs. Day is currently under contract to the Quicksand Center to sell her weaving nationally.

Morning convocations will be held in Faith Chapel of the Record Memorial Building at 10:50 a.m. Monday and Wednesday, March 19 and 21. A special evening performance will be held in Chrisman Auditorium of the Armington Science-Learning Center at 7:30 p.m. March 21.

Anthropology Weekend Scheduled At Natural Bridge State Park

SLADE, Ky.—"Tales That Dead Men Tell" is just one of the many topics on the program for an "Anthropology Weekend" scheduled at Natural Bridge State Resort Park, March 23 - 25.

The week-end is one of a series of field naturalist workshops to be held throughout the year, sponsored by the Kentucky Department of Parks.

"The purpose of the workshops is to provide a deeper understanding and insight into the natural history of our region," said Charles Rippey, state naturalist.

"They're recommended for teachers of all education levels, students attempting to supplement their college curriculum, professional interpretive naturalists, and individuals concerned with strengthening their background in such subjects or simply developing a new field of interest."

POSTER ART CONTEST

The Floyd county winners of the 4-H Poster Art Contest for 1972 are Janice Wohlford, Dalton Howard, Carol Combs and Nancy Northrup.

These posters will be entered in the state judging.

The annual Floyd county 4-H Club Talent Show will be held Friday night, March 23, at 7 p.m. in the Betsy Layne school auditorium.

The Anthropology Weekend will feature Dr. Lathel Duffield and Michael Collins as field leaders. Both are from the University of Kentucky and are authorities in their field.

"I think people will find it fascinating," said Dr. Duffield. "The whole week-end is designed for human interest and it should be emphasized that those with no background experience in anthropology are welcome."

Special programs include "An Overview of Kentucky Archaeology"—with an emphasis on eastern Kentucky cultures; a field trip to the Red River Gorge; a demonstration of the manufacture of stone implements; a discussion of Physical Anthropology entitled, "Tales That Dead Men Tell"; and a program devoted to prehistoric diets and the physiological effects entitled, "I can't believe I ate the whole thing."

Due to the expenses involved in presenting the programs, there will be a registration fee of $4 with a reduced fee of $2 for students. Accommodations at the park include a lodge, cottage and camping facilities. Reservations may be made by contacting Natural Bridge State Resort Park.

FLOYD WOMAN WHO 'DIED' TWICE SUCCUMBS FIVE YEARS LATER

A Floyd county woman who on two occasions was considered dead after heart attacks, but was revived to live five years longer, died Saturday at her home at Estill.

The victim, 68-year-old Ora Crace Caudill, was apparently dead, one night in 1968, when taken by Hall Brothers ambulance to the McDowell Regional Hospital. There she was revived, and Dr. Susan Brenner and a nurse rode the ambulance with her en route to the University Medical Center, Lexington. At Martin she suffered a second attack and again was considered dead. But two hours of artificial respiration and other restorative work at Our Lady of the Way Hospital there again revived Mrs. Caudill.

At the Lexington hospital a "Pacemaker" was inserted in the heart muscle and within weeks Mrs. Caudill was back at home in Estill. Her last illness was of long duration.

Health Department Announces Clinic Dates

LRC Asks Less Stringent Rules On Ambulances

Fearing that stringent regulations becoming effective at the end of this year may drive most ambulance services out of business, the Legislative Research Commission voted unanimously last week to ask the state's Health Facilities and Licensure Board to delay the effective date of the new requirements till July 1, next year.

Ambulance services in this county indicated the delay will not come too soon. Jack McCormick, of the McCormick Ambulance Service, said that his and the P & B Ambulance Service, which operate in the Prestonsburg Area, are affording the only full service of the kind in the county. Other services, he said, are providing transportation of patients to hospitals but are not using the costly equipment for full ambulance service.

And, he added, the proposed regulations proposed would make it impossible for him to operate. "The best I can figure, I would have to have 20 people on the payroll to meet these requirements."

Officials apparently have decided that any ambulance service is better than none, and that the latter will be the case in most counties unless requirements are relaxed.

Funeral homes of this county discontinued such service, about two years ago. One private ambulance firm here quit business, some months ago. In Martin county recently the Richmond-Callahan Funeral Home announced it was suspending service. In the Kentucky River section ambulances operated by means of a federal grant have exhausted their funds and have, or soon will, quit, it was reported.

Robert Gibson, program director of the Bluegrass Emergency Medical Services Program, estimated recently that under the new regulations "a minimum of $65,000-$75,000 a year" would be needed for an ambulance service to operate in a county of 10,000 population. (On that basis, at least $200,000 would be required for a county such as Floyd.)

Kentucky's ambulance regulations, it was said here, are among the "roughest" in the nation, it was said here last week. Kentucky places ambulances under a state health board; in other states, operation is under control of transportation departments.

The regulation, among other things, calls for 24-hour service by all companies providing ambulances, two persons (a driver and attendant) available for each run, and equipping of ambulances with medical and communications equipment, including a two-way radio.

Lieutenant Governor Carroll and other LRC members said the regulation requires so much that many funeral homes in rural counties can't afford the cost. Some have said they plan to drop the ambulance service, the LRC members said.

Carroll said he proposed delaying the regulation six months to let the 1974 legislature review the ambulance situation after it convenes next January.

Carroll said he believes the health agency wrote the regulation to meet federal requirements "but there is a serious question about whether this regulation has restrictions that aren't necessary under federal standards."

Environmentally Speaking

THOMAS O. HARRIS
COMMISSIONER
Kentucky Department for Natural Resources and Environmental Protection

For the past three or four generations, government officials, private industry, and interested public citizens have asked themselves the meaning of this thing called "planning."

Perhaps the simplest way to describe planning is by using Webster's meaning: "A method devised for making or doing something or achieving an end." However, I would like to carry this a little further and spell out my personal definition of planning; that is, the organization of thoughts, ideas, and programs, in an orderly fashion, to achieve a desired goal or objective.

I personally feel that the usefulness and necessity of planning is unquestionable. It is essential if we in Kentucky are to continue to grow and progress. Just stop and consider our own individual life style. Whether we realize it or not, in most instances our everyday life or routine is based on some type of planning. Maybe the real question we should concern ourselves with is not whether planning is useful or necessary, but whether the planning itself is good or bad. It could be that whenever something is not as successful as originally anticipated, it is not because planning is useless, but because the planning is done poorly.

We must start to plan for the protection, conservation, restoration, and wise use of our natural resources if growth in Kentucky is to continue, and yet afford the individual the opportunity to enjoy open spaces, clean air, and clean water.

With Governor Ford's creation of the new Department for Natural Resources and Environmental Protection, the mechanisms for accomplishing these desires have been brought together in the form of seven major divisions and an Office of Planning and Research.

The Office of Planning and Research is attached to the Commissioner's Office and reports directly to the Chief Deputy Commissioner. This allows the Commissioner firsthand information on the progress of all planning and research activities. Planning and Research is staffed with professional planners, researchers, and environmental specialists in order to accomplish the job at hand. After all, planning is not limited to the professional planner alone, it requires the interrelationship of many disciplines and the interest and concern of everyone.

The Office of Planning and Research will have the primary responsibility for coordinating among all major divisions within the new department. It will possess much of the talent necessary to accomplish its own in-house studies, research, and planning efforts. Hopefully, such an office will eliminate a majority of the duplication of effort which could have been expected to occur not only within the new department, but with other state agencies as well. Continuous communication, cooperation, and coordination with appropriate federal agencies will derive maximum benefits from environmental programs at both governmental levels.

The list of programs, potentials and uses goes on and on, but perhaps the most important realization is that planning—professional, careful, and serious minded planning—for both the present and future, will be used as a major tool in assuring the protection and wise utilization of Kentucky's natural environment.

To Honor Golden Wedding Couple

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Ben S. Westfall, of Allen, will honor their parents with a reception, Saturday March 17, at May Lodge, from 2 to 5 p.m. to celebrate Mr. and Mrs. Westfall's Golden Wedding anniversary.

Mr. Westfall was born March 16, 1900, at Higby, W. Va., son of the late Henderson Westfall and Charity E. Raines Westfall. Mrs. Westfall, the former Goldia Caudill, was born August 6, 1901 at Topmost, the daughter of the late Manuel Caudill and Mary Alice Cook Caudill. Mr. and Mrs. Westfall were married March 16, 1923 at Huntington, W. Va. by the Rev. L. E. Leslie, Methodist minister. Their attendants were Pearl V. Bias and Zetta Wine of Huntington, W. Va.

Mr. and Mrs. Westfall have resided at Allen for the past 40 years and are the parents of four children, M. H. Westfall, Detroit, Mich., Forst Westfall, So. Lebanon, Ohio, Mrs. Bill Taylor, Chicago, Ill., and Thomas L. Westfall, Ivel, Ky. They have nine grandchildren and one great-granddaughter.

A cordial invitation is extended to their friends to attend the celebration.

Medicare "Deductible" To Raise

Medicare patients going to the hospital after 1972 will have to pay more before Medicare begins to cover the bill. The "deductible" rises from the present $68 to $72 a Medicare patient must pay for a hospital stay, according to Ashland Social Security District Manager Thomas B. Thompson. "The doctor bill part has a premium of $5.80 monthly," Thompson says. In July the premium will be $6.30. The patient will bear the first $60 of total doctor bills each year before Medicare begins to apply.

Perhaps the most dramatic change in the Medicare provisions, according to the Ashland Manager, is the extension of Medicare protection to those who by next July have been drawing disability benefits for as much as 24 months. Beginning on that date, as soon as a disabled claimant has been on the benefit rolls as much as 24 full months, he or she will be qualified for both parts of Medicare, regardless of age. Until then only those 65 and over may qualify.

The hospital coverage under Medicare—unlike the doctor bill part—has required a certain number of Social Security credits. "Either the applicant must have had these credits, or have been the spouse or dependent parent of someone who did," Thompson explained. Beginning this year even those with no work credits may qualify under this new law.

Under this provision, anyone at age 65 without work credits, and not the spouse or dependent parent of someone who does have such credits, may enroll for the hospital, paying a premium of $33 a month. Such enrollee will also be required to enroll for the doctor bill part which carries a premium of $5.80 a month. "Both of these premiums undoubtedly will rise over the future as medical costs rise," Thompson pointed out.

I APPROVE

Said President Nixon recently in one of his State of the Union messages:

"I do not mean to be soft on crime; I mean exactly the opposite."

Now that statement may not be in a class with such perorations as "Give me liberty or give me death," but I contend it belongs up there along with the best. May it stand, enforced and unchanged.

I'm sure Mr. Nixon will be glad I approve.

There are also provisions creating the Kentucky Occupational Safety and Health Standards Board and the Kentucky Occupational Safety and Health Review Commission.

The Law has a further provision that the Department of Labor will enter into an agreement with the Public Service Commission which shall serve as the Stat agency in the administration of all matters relating to occupational safety and health with respect to employees of public utilities; a copy of the agreement included in the Plan.

The Law is accompanied by an opinion from the Attorney General that the Law will meet the requirements of the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 and is consistent with the constitution and other laws of the State.

The Law sets forth the general authority and scope for implementing the Kentucky Plan, but at the same time, the Plan is developmental within 29 CFR Part 1902.2 (b) in that specific rules and regulations must be adopted to carry out the Plan and to make it fully operative. There is set forth in the Plan a Time Schedule for the Development of a Public Employee Program. The Plan also contains a comprehensive description of personnel to be employed under the State's merit system as well as its proposed budget and resources.

Fire Season On, Three Arrested

Alleged violators of various state fire and burning laws in this county have met with arrests, fines and citations recently as Kentucky Division of Forestry officers have "cracked down" in an effort to protect area woodlands and property.

Arrests made in the county include these: Burlin Jay Bradford, Blue River, charged with letting fire escape, arrested by Douglas Robinson and Wess Campbell; Ricky Whitaker, Bonanza, interfering with a law officer, by officers Robinson and Campbell, and Walter Meadows, of Blue River, for setting backfire, by officers Robinson and Jack Sowards.

Offenders given citations are: Graham Burchett and John Maynard, burning before 4:30 p.m., and Ronnie Nelson, acts creating a fire hazard.

Suppression costs were collected from the following for letting fire escape: Phyllis Hackworth, Open Fork, and the Island Creek Coal Company, Price.

Although the incidence of forest fires in Floyd county has been drastically reduced in the past few seasons, forestry officials are making an early and determined effort to keep loss of forest acreage at a minimum.

Of the damage total, $375,000 is asked for loss of wages, $200,000 for loss of consortium or companionship and $3,500 for funeral expenses.

A total of $40,000 damages was asked Monday by Rose Lee and Norma Johnson in their suit against Clarence Johnson, driver, and Gardner Johnson, owner, of the auto in which as passengers they were injured. They allege reckless and negligent operation of the car resulted in its running into a cliff. Rose Lee Johnson asks $25,000 damages for facial lacerations, disfigurement and partial loss of earning power. Nora Johnson seeks to recover $15,000 for a knee injury and other hurts and partial disability.

Cook Urges More Coal Desulfurization Study

(From Coal News)

Sen. Marlow W. Cook (R-Ky.) told the Senate last week that more research on coal desulfurization systems is needed to meet the nation's energy needs compatibly with federal clean air standards. Methods of converting coal to clean fluid fuels are promising but "six or seven years away," he said. "We just cannot afford to wait this long."

In passing the Clean Air Act, Congress foresaw "at least part of the impact" on the coal industry and the nation and tried to moderate it by providing for research and development of technology for clean coal use, Sen. Cook said. However, he added, "regulation has today far outrun research," and "we must reverse this trend by increasing our research effort."

One of coal's key contributions to national energy supply is in providing fuel for the generation of electric power, he said. "The full potential of this coal is not being realized and there is a danger that coal's limited contribution may no longer be possible," he said.

The main problem facing the coal producer and the utilities is that "to my knowledge there is no effective commercially tested desulfurization system available for installation" to allow consumers to burn high-sulfur coal and meet the standards of the Environmental Protection Agency for air quality control by the 1975 deadline, Sen. Cook said. Even EPA, he added, has indicated that complete implementation of state air control plans may not be attainable in the time prescribed.

If it is true that all aspects of state implementation plans cannot be achieved by 1975, despite the best efforts of government and industry, this "best effort" must be increased, Sen. Cook said. "Aren't we being just a little bit arbitrary in demanding maximum output from our electrical power producers without a maximum effort to solve the problem which denies this same producer the use of his most available and domestic source of fuel? I think we are," he said.

"I submit that without the benefit of a desulfurization system, we automatically force our utilities to turn to imported oil for fuel, compounding our oil shortage," he said. "The resulting dollar drain could literally cripple our economy." In addition, he said, the power to shut off a vital part of U. S. energy supply is "simply too potent a weapon" to place in the hands of Middle East oil exporting countries.

Former Editor Revives History

By HELEN PRICE STACY

"Everyone needs his memories; they keep the wolf of insignificance from the door."

Albert K. Moore, former editor of the Salyersville Independent, frequently used this quote to head his column, "I Remember When."

Moore's column comes from more than 70 years in the Magoffin county community.

"I remember when the courthouse was a 'Tudor Castle building,' Moore once wrote. 'With its imposing towers made from homemade brick which had been burned late in the 19th century on a site now known as the Hager property on West Maple Street.'"

According to Moore, old Salyersville was a town with falsefront stores, each with a covered porch. The porches extended over wooden sidewalks.

The former editor recalled that most of the stores used natural gas for both heating and lighting.

In one column he described his first experience with the energy source that later became important to the economy of the area. Moore had accompanied his father on a short business trip to a community called "The Cole Nation," located on Middle Creek. While his father took care of business, young Moore wandered to the back yard where it seemed the yard was burning.

"I was curious to know what they were using for fuel," Moore wrote. Hanging on long poles over the flames in the yard were cut pumpkin rings. "One of the boys of the family told me they did not know what it was—they just found out one day that it would burn in certain places in the back yard. They were utilizing the heat to dry various kinds of fruit and vegetables."

Moore also wrote of a grist mill that once stood near the site of the present Holbrook building in Salyersville. The first miller was "Uncle Doss Willis who was succeeded by his son-in-law Uncle John Crace."

His use of the word "Uncle" often is one of mountain respect and endearment rather than relationship. His description of Uncle Doss explained how the miller took his "toll" (one gallon of grain) from every "turn" of grain brought to the mill.

"I have been told that near the close of the 19th century a good quality of flour had been manufactured here and that wheat was brought from many of the surrounding counties," Moore recalls.

Moore tells of an unusual boat that was built by two Salyersville businessmen, Nelson and Boone Howard. Its purpose was to haul supplies from the railroad to Royalton to their general store in Salyersville.

"They built a flatboat about ten feet wide and 20 feet long and mounted a Model T Ford on its stern for power. The rear car wheels were replaced by paddlewheels and the Model T propelled the boat at a pretty fast clip through the swollen winter waters of Licking River."

Two men operated the boat—one to steer and one to keep the motor running. "Dud Howington was steersman and when they would near Salyersville, Dud would let out

Problems of the Family Farm

By DAVID KENAMER

The small family farm, long the backbone of Kentucky agriculture, is in trouble. According to the 1969 Census of Agriculture published by the U. S. Department of Commerce, the number of farms with less than 500 acres decreased by over 8,000 while the number of farms with 500 and more acres increased by 444 between 1964 and 1969.

The value of agricultural products sold is an even better indicator of the trends in Kentucky agriculture. The number of farms selling less than $2,500 worth of products per year decreased by nearly 10,000 between 1964 and 1969. During the same period the number of farms with sales of more than $40,000 increased from 1,007 to 2,252.

It is becoming more and more difficult for a man with a small farm to earn a decent living. While farming on a small scale has never been very profitable, it represents a way of life that is becoming more and more rare in modern America.

Dr. Milton Shuffett, professor of agricultural economists at the University of Kentucky, blames the small farmer's economic situation on the commercialization of agriculture.

"Farming has become market oriented instead of family oriented," he says. Shuffett indicates that this trend was caused by a number of factors.

"The big change came right after World War II. This was the time when all the production technology came in. Farming could be profitable, but to make any money a farm had to be big."

The possibility for investment in agriculture and increases in production made it possible for farmers to over-produce the market and thus send prices down.

The small farmer was caught in the middle. He could not afford to invest in farm machinery needed to compete with larger farms and the prices he got for the little he did produce were low. Shuffett says, "The person who can't increase his output is going to be squeezed pretty badly."

Today prices are higher, but as Shuffett says, "Prices don't make much difference to the man who only has 50 acres."

Another major problem, in some areas, is the Kentucky landscape itself. The rugged terrain reduces the usefulness of machinery, which operates best on flat land.

After World War II, wages and salaries in nonfarm activities began to rise rapidly. More and more opportunities off the farm became available to the sons and daughters of farmers. As Shuffett says, "People aren't satisfied being poor farmers anymore."

With large acreages, large capital investments, and large amounts of labor needed for successful farming, it seems that the small family farm is no longer economically feasible. "These people don't have the resources necessary. Even if they do a good job of farming there is no way of generating enough income."

Shuffett says that there are three alternatives open to the owners of small farms.

Farmers can try to do a better job with the resources they have by using better agricultural methods.

Many can get jobs in factories and farm part-time.

If neither of these solutions is available to the farmer, he may have to leave the farm, as many have done in recent years.

The course the owner of a small farm should follow depends on his situation.

Wilmer Browning, extension specialist in Production Economics for the University of Kentucky Cooperative Extension Service, spends much of his time advising farmers on ways of increasing their income. He says, "The enterprise on the farm depends on the off-farm opportunities."

If there is a town nearby with employment opportunities, Browning often advises the farmer and his family to take advantage of part-time jobs.

If there are no off-farm job opportunities nearby, the farmer might benefit by specializing. He could grow vegetables or go into dairying.

The problem, according to Browning, is to make efficient use of the labor available on the farm. Some farms are so small that the volume of business is not sufficiently large to keep people productively employed.

Browning and the Extension Service run farm management schools to help farmers plan their activities around their resources.

According to a State Commerce Department publication, a long range goal of the Commerce Department is "to put a plant within commuting distance of all Kentuckians."

'Foxfire' Editor Stresses Need To Keep What We Have

Pippa Passes, Ky.—Appalachian people have got to be helped to keep the best of what they've got.

In two days of conversation with students at Alice Lloyd College this week, Elliott Wigginton, editor of the nationally acclaimed "Foxfire" book and magazine, stressed this theme over and over again. Traveling from Rabun Gap, Georgia, near Old Screamer Mountain where author-editor Lillian Smith was active a generation ago, Wigginton suggested that it would be better to leave Appalachian people alone than to do what's being done to them.

The Foxfire editor told Alice Lloyd students that his now-famous project started as an attempt to make the rules of English interesting to his high school students. He thought that punctuation, phrasing and other grammar could be learned better if students were using them to do something that mattered to them. Because the school could not help financially, the Georgia teacher had to undertake a project that would be self-supporting. As his students interviewed people around their area, Wigginton began publishing their reports in what has become the very financially successful Foxfire book and magazine. Wigginton chided his Kentucky audience for not taking better advantage of the opportunities here for preserving and cultivating their heritage. He urged students in Alice Lloyd's Oral History Project to keep up their good work but to do more in-depth and follow-up studies. Even though people are not living the way they used to, he said, it's still important to know the heritage and values that have distinguished Appalachian people here.

Discussing the new Appalachian Heritage Magazine now being published at Alice Lloyd College, the Foxfire editor said that it wouldn't be competition for his own publication. "It's a different kind of a book," he said, suggesting that the Kentucky magazine enlarge the number of character portraits it does. He said that people like to read about people, and that bringing out the individualism and values of particular persons would interest readers. Discussing the ways Appalachians view the relationships of man and his world, he said that people here have had a degree of fatalism common to all people who live close to their land and the weather. But he said that sometimes Appalachians can be very critical of themselves.

Lackey Opposes Changes Suggested For Ky. Community College System

Strong disagreement with a report made by Booz, Allen & Hamilton, Chicago firm, suggesting that the Kentucky Community College System be removed from the jurisdiction of the University of Kentucky and transferred to that of the State Department of Education, was voiced recently by Hecht S. Lackey, of Henderson, Ky., president of the Kentucky Association of Community College Advisory Boards.

The Chicago firm was employed to make a study of the Community College System and to report its findings. Mr. Lackey cites inaccuracies in the report and apparently is doubtful of the source of information on which the report was based. "We do not know of anyone connected with the Community College System who was contacted for first-hand information about the System," he wrote Booz, Allen & Hamilton.

Mr. Lackey's letter to the Chicago firm follows:

"I have read with interest and concern in the Louisville Courier-Journal bearing date of January 10, 1973 a story relating to a study prepared by your firm at the behest of the Kentucky Board of Education and presented to that Board on the same date.

"I have been identified with the Kentucky Community College System since its inception, serving as a member and Chairman of the Henderson Community College Advisory Board since 1962 and as Chairman of the Kentucky Association of Community College Advisory Boards since its formation in 1967. I have also served as a member of the State Board of Education from 1963-1970 and as Chairman of that body for the last two years of my service.

"By reason of this close association with the Community College System and the Kentucky Vocational Education Department of the State Department of Education, I think I have had the opportunity to follow the programs, the policies, the purposes and the performance of each of these educational opportunities. I believe my official connection with the State Board of Education and the Community College System uniquely qualifies me to express an opinion on the advantages of administration of the Community Colleges by the University of Kentucky.

"I am not entirely familiar with the reason for the study made by your consultant firm, but, have concluded from the newspaper account that the original intent was to weigh the question of whether the state should continue to operate area vocational schools, or, turn them over to local school districts. If this be true, then, it is difficult to see and understand the reason for incorporating any opinion about jurisdiction of the Community Colleges.

"I have read three other reports prepared by consultants of varying qualifications. Each of these reports made recommendations offering suggestions for several ways and means of operating the Community Colleges.

"The members of the Kentucky Association of Community College Advisory Boards have considered each of these reports as they have been issued and each time they have officially recorded their conviction that the aims and purposes of the Comprehensive Community College could both be implemented by a close affiliation with and under the administrative control of the University of Kentucky. This expression is the result of close personal knowledge of the operation of the Community Colleges and not a casual conclusion.

"Our association feels that the Community Colleges as originally and presently conceived and administered are institutions offering higher education and not just extensions of high schools. The fact that each college is accredited by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools as a community college is proof of this.

"Surely your study revealed that Kentucky Community Colleges offer the first two years of a program leading to a baccalaureate degree, and, that full credits for work completed in these two year programs may be transferred to four year colleges and universities.

"I think you might also have discovered that students completing two years of study at the Community Colleges and entering four year institutions for a baccalaureate degree compare favorably with the academic progress of students who have entered the four year colleges as freshmen, and, in many cases, Community College graduates outperform them.

"It is certainly inaccurate, from our viewpoint, to say Community Colleges are not preparatory institutions for higher education.

"The philosophy of the University of Kentucky Community College System considers each Community College as both an institution to prepare students for higher education and useful semi-professional, technical, career-oriented programs and immediate employment. In addition to this phase of activity, Kentucky Community Colleges expand into a wide variety of adult and continuing education programs involving thousands of adults from our state.

"I believe it is inaccurate for your report to indicate that most students in Community Colleges are interested in terminal and vocational programs, and, not in programs leading to a four year institution. The records in Kentucky do not support such a statement.

"I have only briefly sketched some of the points with which our association disagrees.

"We do not know the source of the information upon which your report is based. We do not know of anyone connected with the Community College System who was contacted for first-hand information about the System.

"My purpose in writing this letter is to acquaint you with the fact that those of us directly and intimately associated with the Kentucky Community College System are firmly convinced that the quality of education offered at the colleges is of the highest; the record of academic standing of students as good as can be found anywhere; and that the best guarantee we have that the future value and growth of the Community Colleges in Kentucky lies in the continuation of this relationship with the University.

Mission 5000 Seeks Open Dump Closure

Open dumps are getting closed. But not fast enough.

In 1970, 11.2 million tons of pollutants were spewed into the air by burning solid waste. Much of the burning took place in open dumps. The dumps not only defile the air and blight the landscape but also create breeding grounds for rats and disease.

Our society has developed the most sophisticated technology in history to produce a cornucopia spilling over with consumer goodies. But it has in no way coped with the problem of disposing of these goods. In thousands of American communities, the most primitive and unsanitary means of disposal—the open dump—is still burning away.

We are a nation of throwaways. Into the gargantuan trash heap every year go 71 billion cans, 7 million TV sets, 7 million cars and trucks, and 35 million tons of paper. Many throwaways defile destruction by natural processes. Waste is overwhelming us.

Mission 5000 sounds like another James Bond extravaganza. Actually, it is a nationwide citizen project to close up 5000 open dumps. Launched in 1970, it represents a combined attack on environmental pollution by local, state, and federal government agencies with scores of civic and conservation groups—including the National Tuberculosis and Respiratory Disease Association. Within the first two years the citizen groups have rubbed out 1600 dumps. Hundreds more are scheduled for early replacement.

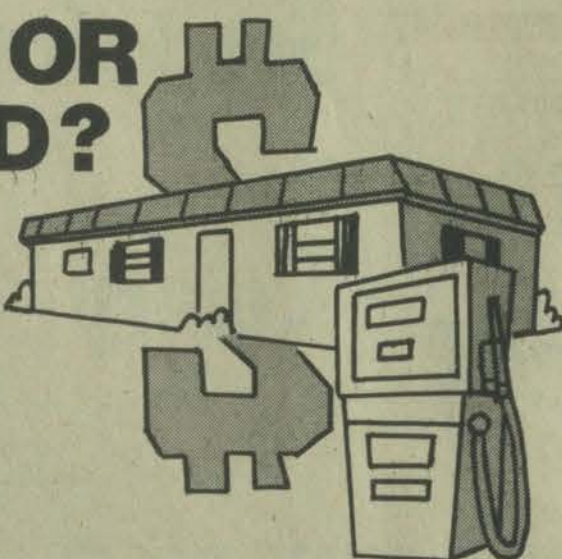

How do you replace an open dump? With sanitary landfills. By recycling and reusing second-hand materials. By energy recovery—burning solid wastes to produce heat or power. Finding alternatives to open dumping means work. Find out what you can do. Contact your Kentucky TB & RD Association, P. O. Box 8405, Louisville, Kentucky 40208. It's a matter of life and breath.

Committee members present at the meeting were Mrs. C. R. Rice, president; Mrs. James R. Allen, first vice-president; Mrs. Kenneth Brown, Mrs. David P. Allen, NARC chairman. Other committee members are Mrs. Gordon Johnson, Mrs. Ronald Johnson, Mrs. Paul Castle, Mrs. Harold Cooley, Mrs. Roger Jurich, Mrs. Jerry Leslie, Mrs. Eddie Radjunas and Mrs. Paul Thompson.

John Meyer didn't invent the blazer or pant. He just makes them look dashing. Together and separately.

Like this marvelously shaped blazer with elegantly bold lapels and notched collar. In a picket-nub of soft polyester and silk.

And the go-with cuffed trousers in the same fabric.

And the picket nylon button-front shirt.

This lovely trio in colors that match or complement.

JOHN MEYER
We didn't invent good taste. We just never forgot it.
