

Knott School Shares In Energy-Saving Test

By STEPHEN FORD
(In The Courier-Journal)

HINDMAN, Ky.—The Hindman Elementary School is among 10 in the nation and the only one in the Southeast picked to participate in a federally financed experiment to show school districts how to use less energy and save on heating and lighting costs.

The Energy Research and Development Administration (ERDA) is putting up $600,000 for the project, with between $450,000 and $500,000 of that to be spent on instruments, monitoring and analysis.

At Hindman, in the mountains of Eastern Kentucky, ERDA plans to finance about 90 percent of a $13,659 undertaking to increase the efficiency of the school's gas-fired boiler and to reduce the number of windows. The remaining money will be provided by the local school board.

The changes are expected to reduce the school's energy bills 38 per cent, and these savings should mean that the total cost of the project will be recovered in slightly more than six years, ERDA estimates.

The Hindman project is one of the more modest ones in the experiment. The most expensive will take place at an elementary school in Kennewick, Wash., which is receiving about $80,000 to re-insulate its roof, switch completely to fluorescent lighting and revamp its heating system.

But William McCann, an ERDA press officer, stressed the importance of the smaller programs such as Hindman's, because they are within the financial grasp of most school districts.

"We can show other schools steps they can take for a little money that will save them a lot of money," McCann said.

No work has been done yet at Hindman, even though school starts Aug. 8. McCann said ERDA hopes that monitoring equipment can be installed by early autumn and that the heating changes can be made by the end of the calendar year, "so we'll still be hitting the heating season."

The experiments are being administered by the American Association of School Administrators, which will hire subcontractors to make prescribed heating and lighting changes.

The boiler improvements at Hindman are to be done by cleaning and adjusting the boiler, reducing the amount of outside air in the heating system and repairing and correcting thermostats and valves.

The school's windows, which make up half the school's exterior, will be reduced 60 per cent to prevent heat losses. The eliminated windows will be covered with drywall.

Hindman Elementary School, which has about 600 students in grades one through seven, can use the help, according to Knott county school superintendent Morton Combs.

During the 1973-'74 school year, $6,451.25 was spent on gas and electricity at the elementary school, according to school-district figures. Combs estimated that the figure for the 1976-'77 year was in the range of $16,000.

That leap in energy costs is typical of schools nationally, according to ERDA, which says schools use the equivalent of 200 million barrels of oil annually.

"It's been a real burden, and every little bit (of aid) helps," Combs said in an interview.

The district has been able to pay its utility bills without raising taxes or cutting services and staff, he said. But the higher bills have forced delays in plans to remodel the Jones Fork Elementary School and to add an industrial-arts shop to Knott County Central High School, Combs added.

Mine Employee Safety Classes Termed Success

Mine safety classes for coal mine employes being conducted by the Kentucky Department of Education have proved to be very successful, according to Lynn Tackett of the education department's Bureau of Vocational Education.

"As of June 30, we had conducted approximately 47 courses in which some 864 mining industry employes had participated," said Tackett. "We will hopefully double that course figure by Sept. 30."

Tackett supervises the new unit in charge of the training and retraining of miners in Mandatory Safety Standards established by the U.S. Department of the Interior, Mining Enforcement and Safety Administration (MESA). He works in cooperation with MESA and the Department of Mines and Minerals. State and federal mine officials were prompted to set up new regulations governing mine safety training classes after last year's mine tragedies in eastern Kentucky.

By current estimations, Kentucky has 3,000 surface and underground mines, and more than 48,000 miners. Tackett explained that under a law soon to go into effect, every new miner will be required to have 48 hours of initial training and 16 hours of retraining every year afterward. Thus, the program enables coal operators to meet state and federal training requirements. "It is the mine operator's responsibility to make training available to his employes," he added.

According to Tackett, the coal producing counties are included in five vocational education regions. Three regions have full-time teacher-coordinators who are employed by the Bureau of Vocational Education to coordinate the mine safety standard training program.

Norman Goble serves as teacher coordinator in Region II, Paintsville; Raymond Cochran, Region 12, Hazard, and Burnett "Bill" Halcomb, Region 13, Harlan. Bill Hatley serves as regional director for Region 2, Madisonville, and Bill Jackson, Region 3, Owensboro, also holds that position.

"Approximately 30 part-time instructors have been certified," said Tackett, "and another 11 are awaiting approval." Instructors must be certified by MESA, the Department of Mines and Minerals and the Bureau of Vocational Education to teach mine safety classes. "This slow process has been our biggest problem," he said.

"The miners—many with several years of experience—say that this is the best program they've ever enrolled in," said Tackett. "We've gotten off to a slow start, but right now we're ready to move."

Warfare Between Stearns Guards And Mine Pickets Feared

LOUISVILLE—Law enforcement officers fear a "bloody jungle firefight" will result if armed security guards hired by Stearns Coal Co. continue to go on "patrols" near the firm's Justus mine in Southeast Kentucky. Harold Storm, an executive officer of Storm Security System, the firm that supplies guards for the strike-bound Stearns mine, confirmed that men now are being sent outside the company's fence-enclosed compound "to keep the miners from burning us up" with gunfire. McCreary County Judge Jo Perry said that "anyone caught outside that company fence will be arrested and charged." The mine property is located in the Daniel Boone National Forest, deep in the rugged Cumberland Mountains. The guards hired to protect the mine, until this week, had orders to stay within the company compound, Storm said.

Study Shows Park System Brings $35 Million to State

Kentucky gets nearly three times as much money out of its state parks system as it puts in, Gov. Julian Carroll said last week. A year-long study released by Gov. Carroll and Parks Commissioner Bruce Montgomery showed that Kentucky businesses receive approximately $35 million a year as a direct result of spending by park visitors and the parks themselves. In fiscal year 1975-'76, the amount of tax money going into the entire Parks Department was $12.8 million. "Another way of looking at this," Gov. Carroll said, "is that the many excellent services and facilities enjoyed by thousands of Kentuckians at our state parks are provided at no cost to our economy." "In addition to the direct spending by our parks and their visitors," he added, "the time and money devoted to developing and promoting our parks are major reasons why tourism this year has joined the select ranks of coal and agriculture as our third billion-dollar industry." Kentucky collected $1.8 million in taxes from the $35 million spent in conjunction with the parks, the study said. And two-thirds of that $35 million total came from outside the Commonwealth, the study showed. It put Kentucky's return on its investment in out-of-state dollars alone at as much as 25 per cent. At the request of the Appropriations and Revenue committee of the 1974 General Assembly, former Development Secretary Dee Akers initiated the study under a contract to a Wisconsin research consultant, Melville H. Cohee. Gov. Carroll also pointed out that the study showed that Kentucky's vast parks system has brought improvement to the economy of areas immediately surrounding the parks, as well as to the state's overall economy. The assessed value of property near the parks increased and the local tax base was improved, he said. On the average, he noted, there was a $1,900 increase in actual revenue of the county in which a park is situated. The massive, comprehensive study is the first such study of state parks systems in the nation, Gov. Carroll said.

Federal Mine Law Set for Discussion

In a meeting August 2 the Interim Joint Committee on Agriculture and Natural Resources will discuss the federal strip mining legislation which is pending in Congress. Robert D. Bell, secretary of the state's Department for Natural Resources and Environmental Protection, will speak to the committee about the legislation. Bell will also talk about transportation of hazardous waste material in Kentucky. The meeting will be at 10:30 a.m. in Room 327 of the State Capitol. Rep. James "Jitter" Allen, of Martin, is a member of the committee.

The New Strip-Mine Bill

The public, as well as the Congress, has found it difficult to believe those prophecies of doom ahead for the surface mining industry if the new federal strip-mine bill becomes law.

We are among the incredulous. Apparently, the Kentucky Congressional delegation was not, for its members opposed the legislation. We would, for what it is worth, join the opposition if we believed the law would be as disastrous as foretold by its opponents. For we also subscribe to the theory that coal is the fuel of the future, that it must be produced and that this area should do its share toward meeting the national need as well as sharing in the economic benefits.

But we have an idea the coal companies in areas of the country such as Eastern Kentucky will continue to mine coal and at a profit—a profit not as sensational, perhaps, as in the past, but at a profit that will still make it worthwhile for them to stay in business.

This bill, to start with, according to responsible coal men in West Virginia, demands no more by way of reclamation than what West Virginia operators already are doing under state law. West Virginia coal remains competitive.

A redeeming feature of the new bill is the provision affording small mine operators a period of grace ending in 1979 during which they are spared the most stringent and the costliest of its demands. The "small miner" deserves this consideration. If there is any one facet of the boom experienced in the coal industry in this area that we particularly like, it is the opportunity it has given ordinary citizens to get into the business and benefit from some of the profits that in more normal times have been almost exclusively the property of the larger corporations whose principal offices are far removed from Eastern Kentucky and whose leaders have little in common with the people whose hills yield all this coal.

Most pleasing to us of all the provisions of the bill is that which at last respects the rights of the owner of the surface. Their mineral rights sold for a pittance, generations ago before strip-mining was dreamed of, thousands of landowners have in recent years—thanks to the so-called Broad Form deed and Kentucky judicial opinion—been forced to submit to the despoilation of their land.

Now, says this new federal legislation, no coal is to be mined, on any land, without the consent of the surface-owner.

It should be said to the credit of many coal companies that they already are seeking the landowner's consent, willingly paying a royalty on the coal mined by way of reimbursement to the owner of the surface. But there are some who insist on their rights under the Broad Form deed, including the right to desecrate the land that is another man's proudest possession.

This section of the new law will put an end to such injustice. It isn't as good as outright annulment of the old Broad Form deed, but it will prevent the holders of these deeds from virtual annulment of human rights.

Under the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, any facility discharging wastes into waters of the United States must apply for a pollution control permit (National Pollutant Discharge Elimination System permit or NPDES). If an application is made for a permit and issuance is denied, the applicant must cease discharging wastes into U.S. waters.

county children have been accident-free. He apparently enjoyed his work. "I love children—I was kind of a caretaker along with being a driver," he reflected.

It was several years before he began his bus driving career that "Polecat" showed a fascination for flying. Sammons recalled that it was during the early 1930's when his father, who moved here with his family from Whitley county when "Polecat" was a young boy, worked as butcher at the Glogora Coal Co. that he saw an airplane fly over. "I remember I told my mother that I'd like to do that," he recalled.

Sammons never lost his yen to fly and it was in the early 40's that he finally went up with the late Charles B. Meadows who had a 65-horsepower craft in Pike county. He later earned his private license after training at the Rutledge Flying School at Ashland. Soon after earning his license, Sammons bought a half interest in a two-wing Aeronica, one of three planes he would buy into during his years as a pilot.

With his license and new Aeronica, "Polecat" became involved in the Valley Flying Service, a concern owned by Burl Spurlock, C. B. Meadows and Winston Ford, operating out of the Branham airport near here. He worked, training GI's and private students. "I've taken a many a one up for a ride in the planes," Sammons said.

Mr. Sammons said flying today is simple, compared to what it was 30 years ago. "Now all those instruments practically do it for you," he said. "We had to map it all out, allow for wind-drift and fly by degree."

A couple of times "Polecat" had some pretty close calls. "Once I got about 50 feet on the wrong end of the field and the carburetor iced up," he recalled. "I sure tore down a bunch of trees and flattened a lot of corn." Although he was unhurt, "they hauled that'n away in pieces." Sammons recounted with a smile. Another time, he and a friend were flying in the Middle Creek section and a spark plug blew out of the engine just as "Polecat" had cleared the top of a ridge. Sammons recounted: "I rolled it up on its side and looked down and saw nothing but a little crooked road and some high tension lines. We were near Crow's Nest, near where the Clark School is now, and I dived, nose first, at high speed to get under the wire and somehow pulled out without tearing the wings off." Before setting down in a bottom with no damage to the plane or its occupants, Sammons said he recalls telling his friend, "Another forced landing, and the Lord be with us!"

"Polecat" was no long-distance flyer. As he said, "Some of 'em flew coast to coast—I flew hill to hill." But he enjoyed performing a few stunts in his double-winger. With a two-wing Navy trainer which he flew for a time he said "you could really put a show on with that one . . . the slow roll, snap roll, stalls and outside spins."

Although he's given up flying and has retired from his job with the Floyd county schools, it's not likely that "Polecat" will ever be bored. As he said, "I've got so many things going right now it's hard to keep up with them."

Take his rather unorthodox method of trolling. Although he owns a nice fishing boat and motor, he prefers to drop a wash tub into the middle of a large inner tubs and straddle this makeshift vessel while paddling up and down river to check the trollines he regularly runs. Small and lean, Sammons' age poses no problem as he moves up and down river for several miles and usually late at night. "I'll float half way to East Point some nights," he said. His fishing technique is sporting, to say the least, and he especially enjoys fighting a big catfish from his inflatable craft. "When I get a big fish on it really takes me for a ride," Sammons pointed out.

It was on the river as a small boy that Sammons acquired his well-known nickname. "I was little and didn't know no better, so when somebody caught an old waterdog I pointed at it and called it a polecat. That name stuck."

To his CB acquaintances Sammons goes by the "handle" or call name of "Birdman." He said the handle is a holdover from his flying days when he was referred to as "Birdman." With a base station, booster, large antenna and several mobile units, he is involved with the CB scene and is a member of the Dewey Lake REACT club.

"Polecat" also likes to squirrel hunt and takes pride in making his own shotgun shells. Two guitars are always handy at his home, and he enjoys strumming and singing oldtime hymns, including one of his favorites, "The Scarlet Purple Robe."

Sammons is not one to go "out of circulation" after retirement, and as long as he's around there'll always be "young'uns to hug my neck," as he said, and scores of older residents who remember "Polecat" and his bi-plane.

BRIDGES, BELLS AND BATTERIES

NEW YORK—Door bells, flashlight batteries and the Verrazano-Narrows Bridge, the world's largest suspension bridge, all have something in common. They owe their existence to Andrew Wittman.

Wittman, a surveyor, is believed to be the first American to have made zinc metal. In 1845, he produced two ounces from ore discovered on a farm four miles south of Bethlehem, Pa. Now a mine, owned by Gulf & Western's New Jersey Zinc Company, the "farm" produces 2,000 tons of zinc ore each day.

last traffic artery in that area, passes over the tunnel, but it is not expected that the roof of the tunnel will collapse to the extent that the roadway will be affected.

Residents of Hueysville, half a mile or more away, said the heavy pall of smoke was particularly obnoxious of mornings and some claimed there was the smell of burning coal in the air.

At first, after the Prestonsburg Fire Department had failed to halt the fire inside the mountain, the rail firm made no attempt to halt the blaze. Later last week, however, Chessie employees were at the scene, apparently preparing for the repair work that is to be done later. Although an investigation is under way, it is not known if anybody knows how the fires were started. Some Hueysville residents said they heard an explosion at the tunnel. State police and railroad officials declined to speculate on the cause of either fire. A reported 9,000 union miners are on strike, but nobody would say there was a link between the strike and the vandalism. But most were agreed that the two fires were too coincidental to be accidental.

The trestle fire on Middle Creek affected coal shipments from the David vicinity where coal from that area and neighboring Magoffin county is loaded.

ALONG WITH ENTERTAINMENT, athletics has been a traditional way for minorities to work their way into the mainstream of American life. This may be one reason why blacks now dominate the sports scene, suggests the August Reader's Digest. Blacks won all the U.S. gold medals in boxing at the 1976 Montreal Olympic Games and 22 of our 31 track-and-field medals. Nearly 65 percent of National Basketball Association players are black, as are 42 percent of National Football League players.

through the crowd as a new dance step. Now the reason for all this humble confession is the following "Telesweepgram" from The Reader's Digest:

"Dear Mr. Allen: "When we asked our computer who in Prestonsburg should be among those to have an opportunity to buy the Reader's Digest album, Dance Party—the grandest collection of strictly-for-dancers-only music ever offered—the answer came back immediately: "Mr Norman Allen of P. O. Box 391, should be selected."

BUSINESS OF THE FUTURE?

Friend of mine was helping me shoot the breeze, the other day, and he remarked that this fuel crisis can be ended, period, once for all, etc., any time the powers that be want to get down to cases. Said an engine has already been developed which will run on alcohol.

That led into a discussion of the possibilities of alcohol as an inexhaustible source of fuel. Anything that will ferment—corn is preferred in some quarters, but wood, weeds, garbage, all kinds of waste, just about anything can be used to produce it.

The discussion included the killing effect the transition to alcohol would have on the nation's great industries—out would go coal, oil, gas. Billions in investments, millions of jobs down the drain.

But the job situation, we decided, would not be such a problem. The distilling business would take care of capital and employment, and those who couldn't find a job at it would be needed to hunt down and arrest all the rest of us who were making our own fuel and dodging the tax on it.

Cites State's Growth in '76

Gov. Julian Carroll credits state and local government partnership with outstanding growth in the Commonwealth in 1976. The Governor cited the achievement of a $1.41 billion tourism industry, a 19 per cent growth in construction, a 16 per cent growth in manufacturing and a 17 per cent per capita growth in agricultural income.

To increase this local-state partnership, Gov. Carroll has announced he will sign an executive order on Monday that would create an advisory committee within the Department for Local Government made up of chairmen of the 15 area development districts (ADDs). The Governor said the committee would be responsible for passing on to the Department for Local Government the problems and concerns of local officials and citizens throughout the Commonwealth.

The announcement was made as the Governor addressed the closing session of the first day of the fifth annual local issues conference being held this week at the Louisville Galt House.

Such economic growth, the Governor said, comes from initiative taken both at the state and local level. He said that he had raised Local Government to a full department in order that it might become a more visible agency to the federal government entities.

He referred to the initiative Kentucky has taken in the area of joint funding-- putting together through the area development districts' single applications for funds that encompass 20 federal agencies, ten state agencies and some 250 local cities and counties. "We used $10 million in planning money to produce more than one-half billion dollars in completed projects," he said.

Gov. Carroll said the challenge to elected public servants was increasing as dollars became tighter. "We want to employ every conceivable cooperative plan to make resources go further."

Gov. Carroll spoke of the decrease in the gross national product while at the same time more people are doing more things--"but they are not producing more." He challenged local officials to get things done as he talked of delays increasing costs. "Saving valuable time saves valuable tax dollars," he said.

"We have achieved a product of economic growth through initiatives," Gov. Carroll said as he challenged local officials to continue to take more initiative for progress in the Commonwealth.

MOUNTAIN TALE SET THURSDAY FOR ALICE LLOYD COLLEGE SHOW

Pippa Passes, Ky.--"Red Fox--Second Hangin'" the acclaimed two-hour tale recounting the life of Doc Taylor, the Red Fox, will be presented at 7:30 p.m. Thursday (Aug. 4) in Cushing Hall on the Alice Lloyd College campus.

The tale uses slides of old photographs and soundtrack film to tell the story of Doc Taylor and his times. Taylor was a man known in the second half of the 19th century in Wise county, Virginia and Letcher county, Ky., and the surrounding area.

He was a popular preacher, U.S. marshal, doctor, mystic, herb doctor and surveyor. He was hanged in 1893 for the murder of moonshiner Ira Mullins and family. His was only the second hanging in the 27-year history of Wise county--even though hangings had been popular nationally for 30 years.

"Red Fox--Second Hangin'" was developed and written by Don Baker and Dudley Cocke, who researched history books, interviewed people who had known Taylor and reviewed court records.

The play is a production of Roadside Theater, begun in 1974 by Baker and several others searching for a kind of theater which made sense in the mountains. Roadside Theater is a part of Appalshop, Inc., a non-profit media-art cooperative located in Whitesburg in Letcher County.

ARH Services, Employees Cut To Reduce Costs

Appalachian Regional Hospitals has announced it is laying off about 160 employees and curtailing service in a cost control move to reduce the non-profit health care system's expenses by more than $3 million annually.

ARH President David K. Heydinger, M.D., said the 10-hospital system "faces the greatest financial crisis in its 14-year history."

He said ARH's financial position has been very tenuous for several months because of revenue losses as a result of a combination of events beginning in January.

The recent reduction in benefits announced by the United Mine Workers' Health and Retirement Funds, when added to the other financial setbacks earlier this year, he said, triggered the cost-containment moves.

The earlier revenue losses, Dr. Heydinger said, resulted from the hospital system having served fewer patients due to the bitterly cold weather in January and February, the threatened strike in March by employee members of the United Steelworkers of America, and the early April flooding in Eastern Kentucky and West Virginia.

In a letter to the system's 3000 employees over the week-end, Dr. Heydinger said each of the problems that confronted ARH starting in January when considered alone was manageable.

"However, the recent decision by the United Mine Workers Health and Retirement Funds has been devastating," he added. "This decision will have an impact of several million dollars on our cash flow in the coming year."

The decision by the Health and Retirement Funds, the decrease in utilization the first four months of this year, when added to our continuing problem of medical indigency have put ARH in a very crucial position, he said.

Dr. Heydinger said providing care to medical indigents, patients unable to pay for services given by ARH facilities, during the past 12 months cost ARH nearly $3 million.

In addition to the personnel cutbacks, the ARH president said other cost control measures include:

—Halting elective admissions if the individual has no clear means to pay for the service.

—Freezing all capital equipment purchases.

—Reducing overtime hours worked by 50 percent.

—Implementing 7 or 7½-hour work shifts at some hospitals.

—Halting new hires except for those absolutely necessary for patient care.

—Phasing out home health services at five hospitals.

—Reducing inventories.

Mine Workers In Park Meet Air Grievances

More than half of the approximately 1,000 Floyd and Johnson county miners who comprise UMWA Local 1827 aired grievances at a meeting Tuesday afternoon and were briefed on the current status of the strike which has affected the Appalachian coal fields the past few weeks.

Members, who gathered for the meet at the northern entrance to Jenny Wiley State Park, were informed of a letter received Monday from UMWA President Arnold Miller which contained a three-point directive aimed at easing tensions which have erupted in several instances of violence in the area.

Miller's first request was that UMWA members return to work. "You are directed, if your mine is engaged in a work stoppage, to immediately call a special meeting and direct the membership to return the mines to operation," the letter stated.

Second of the points outlined was a vow to continue to negotiate the reallocation of health and retirement funds, source of most of the strikers' grievances. Finally, Miller said a top UMWA official is to request the other trustees to initiate an independent investigation of the health and retirement funds.

Ernest Day, president of Local 1827, said members wished to return to work but, in keeping with union policy, refused to cross picket lines. "Nobody's going to try to go back to work and risk getting killed, anyway," Day commented.

Day, who pointed out that District 30, which includes all of Eastern Kentucky and a section of western Virginia, was "pulled out" of the mines by roving pickets, July 12, said as far as he knew no members of Local 1827 were actively picketing.

Members of the local were particularly upset by the decision of the state public assistance office to render strikers ineligible for food stamps. "We pay taxes for the food stamps and then they turn around and won't let us have them when we need help," one member said. Members plan to picket the public assistance offices here and at Paintsville, it was said.

County Yields Rights on Road In German Area

The Floyd fiscal court adopted at its Monday meeting a resolution relinquishing its right-of-way on the Copperas Creek road, near Dewey Lake.

The court waived the county's rights in compliance with a request of the U. S. Corps of Army Engineers and after landowners served by the road agreed to the action.

The Corps of Engineers had explained in its request that it had spent approximately $100,000 on development of a camping area at German and that the county's shift of control and maintenance of the road leading from the area into Copperas Creek would discourage the undesirable element from entering the area and would help toward eliminating vandalism. The entrance, it was pointed out, would be controlled through the registration building at the camping area. Each private owner of property in the Copperas Creek area would be free to enter or leave the area at anytime.

In the original request for control of the road, made by W. Dean Murray, Dewey Reservoir manager, the Corps pointed out that it had included in its improvements at the German camping area installation of water and sewage treatment plants, wash houses and other public conveniences. It pointed out that without control of the road the federal government cannot spend money on its maintenance.

Landowners in the area who agreed to the arrangement are Bill James, Eleanor Crum, O. C. Howell and Jerry F. Howell.

The court adopted the resolution by unanimous vote and was without dissension on other items of business, which included these:

—Set a 10-ton load limit on all rural secondary roads in the town of Auxier.

—Granted Akers Cable System permission to install television line poles on county road right-of-way on the W. Flanery Branch as long as they do not interfere with road work.

—Voted to allow the magistrates a monthly expense account of $200, as has been done in the past.

—Requested the Department of Highways to blacktop the Bosco-Low Gap road and to use excess funds from the grade and drain project which was cancelled.

—Set the library, extension and health tax levies at the same rates prevailing last year.

—Authorized advertising for bids for a pickup truck and grader cab.

—Voted the purchase from the Cecil Trucking Company of $2,400 worth of gravel, delivery to be made to the state highway garage at Allen.

—Authorized County Judge Stumbo to sign a deed to Jeff Bingham for property on the Lieb Branch on the Auxier road.

State Historical Society Said Largest in Nation

"The Kentucky Historical Society is no longer a Frankfort-oriented operation, but an organization which belongs to the people," Gen. William Buster, the society's executive director, pointed out recently.

The society is conducting a statewide membership drive. "Members are our strongest asset. Through members we increase our status and our effectiveness," Buster said. "With around 9,000 members, we have the largest membership of any historical society in the nation. We need far more than that to reach and serve the people of Kentucky in the manner they deserve."

In conjunction with the Kentucky History Museum, the Kentucky Military History Museum and the Historical and Genealogical Library located in Frankfort, the society has several programs which bring the state's history to the people.

One example is the Historymobile, a 40-foot tractor-trailer which houses an exhibit depicting the first decade of settlement in Kentucky, from 1774 to 1784. The mobile museum visits parks, prisons, nursing homes, schools, libraries, county fairs and community festivals. "In September, the society will add another Historymobile which will contain an exhibit depicting how coal has affected the lives of Kentuckians," said Buster.

In addition to helping form local historical societies, the organization sponsors the Kentucky Junior Historical Society. Its 5,000 member-students participate in projects to increase their knowledge of Kentucky history. "A planned expansion program will include college level students," Buster noted.

Another service provided by the society is the Historical Highway Markers Program which has erected over 1,300 plaques throughout the state. Each year the society erects about 40 plaques which contain a capsule history of a significant site. "Kentuckians can purchase a guide and supplement which contain an index and description of these markers," said Buster.

Along with these services, the society is conducting a cemetery records survey which will be completed next year. After the names, dates and other genealogical information found in the cemeteries is compiled, it will be edited and published. "The records will be placed in the genealogical library and will be made available to anyone who needs them, at or near cost," Buster said.

Another significant service is provided by the Kentucky Historical Society's Micrographics Department. Since it was established in 1961, the department has served persons throughout the United States, as well as in other countries. Almost 100 documents are laminated daily. Documents include county records, tax lists, newspapers, genealogical material, vital statistics and military records.

"Kentuckians who join the society can take great pride in belonging to an organization which is doing important work," said Buster. "Members receive many benefits, including quarterly publications which are helpful in adding to their knowledge of Kentucky history and in conducting genealogical research."

The quarterly publications include The Register, a historical digest; Kentucky Ancestors, a genealogical publication, and Kentucky Heritage, the junior historians' magazine. The Bulletin is a bi-monthly newsletter.

Several special projects and publications are offered to members at a discount.

Soon the society will offer a full-scale history of the state from 1870-1900, and several other works of historical significance. "These new publications, as the previous ones, will be available to members at a considerable reduction," noted Buster.

Membership in the society costs $10 per year. Application blanks for membership can be obtained by writing to the Kentucky Historical Society, Box H, Frankfort, Ky. 40601.

East Kentucky Grand Juries To Probe Expense Accounts

The head of the Kentucky Registry of Election Finance says he has been subpoenaed to present evidence to five eastern Kentucky grand juries in connection with the alleged failure of local candidates to submit required finance reports.

John W. Craig, executive director, said he has been asked to present evidence concerning 11 candidates in Greenup, Harlan, Johnson, Lawrence and Martin counties.

Craig said the grand jury investigations were spurred by the registry in an effort to crack down on candidates who are late in filing their campaign spending reports.

Last month, the registry's board decided to initiate legal action to remove from the November ballot the names of candidates who have not filed pre-election reports.

Craig said the candidates involved in the grand jury inquiries and the offices they sought are:

—Greenup county, John R. Jenkins, jailer.

—Harlan county, Allen L. Brock, sheriff.

Delinquent candidates found guilty of willful violation of campaign finance reporting laws face penalties of one year in prison, a $1,000 fine, or both.

Craig said Carter in Martin county filed his required report late, although the case could still be prosecuted.

In Greenup county, Craig said, Jenkins may not have been required to file because of a question about his effort to withdraw from the campaign before the election. Craig said he has been tentatively scheduled to testify in the case pending a decision by the commonwealth's attorney to prosecute.

The candidates are among 576 who had not filed post-election reports that were due June 28, 35 days after the May 24 primary. Only a few reports have been filed since the Registry made its list of delinquent candidates available earlier this week, Craig said.

He said the Registry is now in the process of referring the remaining 500-plus names to commonwealth's attorneys for possible prosecution.

Craig applauded commonwealth attorneys in the five counties for moving quickly. The candidates involved—who had not filed reports for the first two reporting periods—were among several previously referred to 56 local prosecutors for possible action.

Craig said his office has received letters from some commonwealth's attorneys saying they have found no grounds for prosecution. Generally speaking, he said, most prosecutors have been slow to respond.

As a first priority, Craig said, the agency referred the names of candidates who won their primary races for prosecution.

The law requires each candidate to file three detailed reports of campaign spending and expenses. The first is due 32 days before the primary; the second, 12 days before the primary; and the third, a final post-election report, is due 35 days after the primary.

All candidates, winners and losers, are required to file the reports unless they were unopposed and spent no money in their campaigns. The law provides for the nullification of elections where the candidate is delinquent in filing the required reports.

In his view, Craig said, failure to report in all three of the required periods should be evidence of willful neglect of the laws

He said all candidates, including those for local offices, receive from his office full information about the reports, filing dates and how to file. Each candidate also is reminded of the reporting period by letter before his case is forwarded for possible prosecution.

In Lawrence county, an Aug. 12 hearing is also scheduled in circuit court to decide the question of J. J. (Jack) Jordan's eligibility on the November ballot for county judge executive.

The Kentucky Registry of Election Finance had ruled that Jordan's name be stricken from the ballot for Jordan's failure to timely file a 12-day campaign finance report. But Circuit Judge W. B. Hazelrigg issued a restraining order commanding the county board of elections to issue Jordan a certificate of election after Jordan filed suit against the Registry, the board of elections, and County Court Clerk Gallie Isaac.

In its counterclaim to Jordan's suit, however, the Registry replied that the restraining order issued by Hazelrigg is not proper and not in compliance with Kentucky Rules of Civil Procedure.

The Registry claims the restraining order requires the doing of an act by one of the defendants—the Lawrence County Board of Elections—and that such an action is contrary to Kentucky Revised Statutes 118.425 and 118.345.

Gov. Julian Carroll received a $367,000 federal grant today to start implementing Kentucky's Energy Conservation Plan.

Don Allen, regional administrator of the Atlanta office of the Federal Energy Administration, presented the money to Gov. Carroll. It covers the period from July 1 through Dec. 31, 1977, and will go with $250,000 in state money.

The plan, to be implemented over a three-year period, seeks to achieve an energy saving of 6.2 to 6.8 per cent by 1980. The state Department of Energy, which prepared the state plan in conjunction with other state agencies, envisages federal funding of approximately $1 million for each of the next three calendar years to continue to implement it.

Kentucky's plan includes setting lighting and thermostat efficiency standards for public buildings, encouraging car pools, conducting energy audits, establishing an educational curriculum for schools and agricultural and residential programs.

Part of the Kentucky plan also includes consideration of legislation to provide state tax incentives to conserve scarce energy resources.

Review of Vietnam Era Discharges Being Made

The Department of Defense through the Discharge Review Boards of the military services is conducting a review of discharges received during the Vietnam era, August 4, 1964 through March 28, 1973. Individuals discharged between these dates can receive a review of their discharge if it was under other than honorable conditions (formerly known as "undesirable discharge") or a general under-honorable conditions discharge by calling the toll free number, 1-800-325-4040. Applications must be accepted by October 4 in order to be eligible.

Further information about the conference may be obtained by contacting John Loyd, Director, Professional Personnel Development Unit, Bureau of Vocational Education, 2034 Capital Plaza Tower, Frankfort, Ky. 40601.

Other speakers for the conference include Bill Howard, assistant superintendent for vocational education, and Don Stephens, executive director of the Governor's Task Force on Education.

So far 500 teachers and administrators have participated in the project, Loyd said. The exchanges have been from one to four weeks and have involved businesses and industries in ten surrounding states.

The staff exchange project began three years ago. Loyd said the project allows vocational teachers and administrators to exchange work stations with skilled technicians and supervisors in business and industry where vocational students are being employed.

Loyd explained that through these experiences in business and industry, the teachers develop new skills, techniques, and gain a better understanding of the socio-economic aspects of a given job. They also may gain insight that will result in the revision of their curricula and a more relevant instructional program.

Lower SBA Rate Followed Struggle, Rep. Perkins Says

Success of the move to lower the disaster interest rate for victims of the April 4-5 floods in Eastern Kentucky followed a "tough struggle," Rep. Carl D. Perkins says.

The interest rate had been set at 6% percent, but it was lowered by agreement of members of the House and Senate Small Business Committee, after Congressman Perkins and other Congressmen introduced legislation and made the fight for the lower interest rate.

Congressman Perkins said the new home loan rate will be:

One percent on the first $10,000; 3 percent from $10,000 to $40,000, and 6% percent on the amount of the loan in excess of $40,000.

"I would estimate that most of the loans would be well below $40,000," Perkins said, "so this means that most flood victims will get an opportunity to rebuild."

He said the business interest rate would be 3 percent on loans up to $250,000, which will cover most of the business loans. The portion over $250,000 will be at 6%.

Voc. Ed-Industry Meet In Lexington, Aug. 4-5

Gov. Julian Carroll is scheduled to give the keynote address at the Kentucky Vocational Education Staff-Industry Exchange Program Conference planned for Aug. 4-5 at the Hilton Inn in Lexington.

The conference is designed to provide an opportunity for business and industrial leaders and vocational educators to enhance business and industrial training in Kentucky, according to John Loyd, director of the staff-industry exchange program of the state vocational education department.

The staff exchange project began three years ago. Loyd said the project allows vocational teachers and administrators to exchange work stations with skilled technicians and supervisors in business and industry where vocational students are being employed.

Loyd explained that through these experiences in business and industry, the teachers develop new skills, techniques, and gain a better understanding of the socio-economic aspects of a given job. Home Canning of fruits & vegetables

PART III CANNING FRUITS, TOMATOES, PICKLED BEETS

Now that we have gone over the boiling-water-bath canning method in detail, we are ready to proceed with step-by-step instructions for each fruit, as well as for tomatoes and pickled beets.

Next week we will tackle the steam-pressure canning method recommended for all low-acid vegetables, meat, fish and poultry. Do NOT try to process these in your boiling-water-bath canner. The boiling water never gets above 212°F, and that means you cannot be sure of a safe end product, free from the danger of Botulism poisoning. It takes a steam-pressure temperature of 240°F and the correct processing time to get the job done.

You can, however, safely process pickled vegetables in a boiling-water-bath canner. This is because the amount of vinegar used in a standard pickling recipe raises the acidity of the vegetable to a safe level.

'Camelot' To Close Season

The Jenny Wiley Summer Music Theatre is bringing a successful season to a close with a three-week run of the Lerner and Loewe hit, "Camelot," a Broadway musical based on the legend of King Arthur and his knights of the Round Table.

"Camelot" descended upon Broadway in December, 1960, and won distinction for both its beauty and its lavishness.

"Camelot" will be presented nightly Wednesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays through August 21. On Friday nights, the theatre presents "Godspell," a musical adaptation of the Gospel According to St. Matthew.

Tickets for both productions may be obtained by calling the theatre at (606) 886-9274 or by writing the theatre at P. O. Box 22, Dept. B, Prestonsburg, Kentucky 41653. The box office is open daily.

Curtain for all performances is 8:30 nightly.

Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe collaborated on "Camelot" after proving their theatrical worth by writing "My Fair Lady" and "Brigadoon," both of which achieved phenomenal success on Broadway. The inspiration for "Camelot" came from the T. H. White novel "The Once and Future King."

"Camelot" deals with the traditional characters associated with the legend of King Arthur and his knights of the Round Table. The characters, however, are not portrayed quite like the monarch and his followers who appear in White's novel.

Instead, King Arthur is a rather unworldly fellow, slow but likable, who accidentally found kingship when he pulled a sword from a stone because it was the only sword available when he needed one. Guenevere, his bride, is young and girlish but at the same time regal and cool. The wily wizard Merlin lives in a backyard world in which he gets younger, rather than older, by the minute.

The music from "Camelot," while not containing anything as enduring as Loewe's earlier "I Could Have Danced All Night," has been called by one critic "his (Loewe's) best work, being rich musically and delightfully varied." The score includes the ballad "If Ever I Would Leave You" and the sprightly tune "What Do Simple Folk Do?" as well as the well-known title song.

Ed Newman Smith, general manager of the Jenny Wiley Summer Music Theatre, said the production of "Camelot" will uphold the theatre's standards of excellence established by this summer's two other Jenny Wiley productions, "Godspell" and "Oliver!" Both received excellent reviews and have played to packed houses.

Jerry Hammons, director-choreographer, Robert Cooper, technical director, Becky Crook and Susie Brown, costume designers and Robert Newbert, musical director, have combined their talents to deal with a challenging show, which includes 17 musical numbers, a ballet and 20 scenes worth of extravagant costuming and special technical effects.

State Jobless Rises in June

Although more Kentuckians are working than ever before, the state's unemployment rate rose one per cent during June to 4.7 per cent, according to figures released by the Department for Human Resources.

Robert MacDonald, chief labor analyst for the state, attributed the increase in unemployed to the large number of persons entering the labor force during the month. "Women and in-school youth make up a large portion of the group, many of whom were unable to find jobs," MacDonald said.

According to the analyst, the number of wage and salary workers in Kentucky hit an all-time high in June, reaching a level of 1,150,300, thus reflecting a strong economic picture.

MacDonald said the 3.6 per cent figure released for May had been revised upward to 3.7.

Most of the employment gains were in agriculture (+ 8,400) construction, (+2,400) government, (+2,300) and manufacturing, (+1,600).

The national rate of unemployment was 7.5 per cent last month. Nationally, teenagers, ages 16-19 had the highest unemployment rate at 21.5 per cent with men, 20 years old and older the lowest at 4.9 per cent.

Miscellany

By WILMA Y

All who read "Born Again" by Chuck Colson will rejoice, for it contains numerous needed lessons. Top aide to President Nixon, Colson was "the Hatched Man," so in love with preeminence and so filled with pride he admits having done almost anything to please the administration. Ignoring ethics and regulations, he publicized lies about "enemies," did the mean work for others and self until Watergate brought him face to face with prison. Readers first pity, then admire him after his change of heart. The godly reactions of one-time alcoholic and former Senator Harold Hughes and of Arthur Burns are beautiful to read about, since Colson—prior to his conversion-despised and wronged them. These men forgave him, provided needed encouragement, prayers and companionship, bearing his burdens as Christians are admonished to do for all "brothers." Colson is now devoting his life to winning prisoners and others to Jesus. Hughes, who voluntarily retired from politics, is likewise crusading for the Master.

Anybody can be a spokesman for persons in control, bosses, dictators, etc., but it takes big men to love, forgive and return good for evil, as Hughes and Burns did. It is not only right to do so but it is wise, because few treasures surpass a clear conscience and restful sleep without medication. Everyone experiences troubles and illnesses. All must die, but it behooves each of us to make sure the our own problems and disabilities are not due to wrongs and disobedience to God as were Colson's. Scripture points out that some are, while others are not.

The saddest part of Colson's story is that small duplications of it occur in all walks of life. A limited percentage of people in every occupation and profession will stab their best friend to gain influence or higher pay. A "stooge" for anybody is a Hatched Man if he does dirty work, breaks rules and Christian principles, helps to harm others. Today, lust for power is second only to love of the dollars as a motive for wrongdoing. It can destroy any person, group, organization, business, or country. It is not confined to politics, but abounds in social, academic, civic circles and organizations—even in countless churches—for problems arise wherever human beings exist. Ofttimes, persons in need of status, prestige, or recognition willingly become mouthpieces for others, who may or may not reward them. Some upright, well-meaning individuals outside this category are blindly led into such traps occasionally, only to find that all who dig pits for others, like Colson did, sooner or later fall in themselves. While one may openly confess and ask forgiveness, as Colson did, and in some instances make restitution for all or part of his wrongdoing, he can never restore the reputations he has tarnished, or undo the injuries he inflicted upon others in his ambitious grasp for limelight and power, to which Colson often refers. Such sins, crimes, or misdeeds frequently compel sufferers who have a guilty complex to seek relief with tranquilizers, sleeping pills, or sometimes with hard drugs, in futile attempts to silence their conscience. Millions of sleeping pills are consumed in this land nightly.

Totally different is Bridge Builder, R. K. Johnson's biography of the renowned Methodist educator-evangelist, the late Dr. Bob Jones Sr., whose messages won thousands to Christ, and who founded the unique, world-famous university in South Carolina that bears his name, because its board would approve no other. Dr. Bob's strength of character showed early in life. He never played two sides of anything, readily taking open stands on any controversial issue. He could say, "No, count me out when it comes to wrongdoing or injustice of any kind," when tempted. As a boy and man he would never have served as spokesman for any mortal who wanted him to do something underhanded against others. He was persecuted for righteousness sake, but God blessed and cared for him wondrously throughout a long, healthy, happy, and fruitful life.

It was good to note that the Florida Citrus Commission has retained Anita Bryant, which shows what Christians can do when they cooperate and make themselves heard. When enough stand up to be counted the tide of evil enveloping our land will be altered, if we have not already reached the point of no return as some spiritual leaders fear.

Patsy Teenagers Plan Group Reunion

Former members of The Patsy Teenagers are planning a reunion, August 13 at May Lodge, Jenny Wiley State Park, it was announced this week. The reunion of the "Teenagers," a choral group made up of high school age youth from the David area who entertained over a wide area during the 1940's, 50's and early 60's, will honor Harry Fiedler and Mrs. Katherine Frazier, leaders of the group. A spokesman for the reunion committee stressed that all former Patsy Teenagers should respond to invitations by August 1 in order to allow the lodge to make adequate preparations. Anyone interested in attending the reunion should contact Shirlee Branham, 886-2938.

THE COOK ISLANDS were governed as a dependency by New Zealand until 1965, when they were granted independence.

BLUEGRASS MUSIC FANS enjoying a performance by Larry Sparks and the Lonesome Ramblers, one of many professional groups featured during the Goins Brothers Floyd County Bluegrass Festival, held at Archer Park, July 22, 23 and 24. This year's festival attracted thousands of fans from several different states as well as the local area.

Belding Gets Grant For Peruvian Study

A Fulbright-Hays grant has been awarded Richard N. Belding for a year's anthropological research project in the Andean highlands of southern Peru. Fulbright grantees are selected by the Presidential-appointed Board of Foreign Scholarships and must be approved by the country in which they will study. The program is administered by the Department of State.

Belding's project involves the determination of human ecology and land use in pre-Hispanic southern Peru. The research will require both field work and the examination of original documentary sources dating from the Spanish Conquest of Peru. In addition to its historical value, the results of the study will have practical application in improving present-day land use in the area.

Two other grants have been awarded to support Mr. Belding's study. They are from the Institute of Latin American Studies and the Latin American Archaeological Research Program of the University of Texas.

Belding and his wife, Sharon, are visiting here with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Allen. They will be in Peru during the academic year and will be affiliated with the University of Peru in Lima.

Flash Flood Hits Feds Creek Area

The Floyd County Emergency and Rescue Squad joined other squads and state troopers in rescue work last Thursday night at Feds Creek, Pike county, after the narrow valley was hit by a flash flood.

Approximately 150 homes along the narrow, four-mile valley barely escaped flooding.

There were no injuries but people were left stranded in cars as rains pushed the creek out of its banks tearing out bridges, moving five homes from their foundations and stranding 150 families on the upper reaches of the creek.

The rainstorm centered over the Feds Creek area for six hours.

Above Feds Creek Elementary School, raging water boiling with boulders and sand ate into the road by the creek and broke off chunks of asphalt pavement. In some areas, barely enough space was left on the road for two cars to pass.

It was said that residents of approximately 150 homes were unable to drive out of the two hollows that make up the creek headwaters.

State highway crews arrived on the creek at 6 a.m. Friday to begin filling back the washed out creek banks so the road can be replaced.

The magistrate representing the Feds Creek area took the county's new front end loader and, with creek waters swirling around the machine's wheels, forked out trees and brush caught behind the bridge abutment.

Fire Dept. Members Attend Special Meet

Five members of the Prestonsburg Fire Department attended a special training session in vehicle rescue held at Paintsville Monday evening. They are Paul Chaffins, Kenny Crisp, Bill Baldrige, Walter Roth, and Gary Dotson.

The session was hosted by the Paintsville Fire Department and the Kentucky Fire Services Training Association with offices at Mayo Vocational School, and each firemen attending will receive credit by the state.

Attending from other fire departments were 18 members of the Paintsville Fire Department, one from West Van Lear, four from Oil Springs, 10 from Thelma, two from the Magoffin Rescue Squad, and two from the Division of Disaster and Emergency Services.

Paintsville Fire Chief Bob Dixon said response to the special session was most gratifying.

Pork Barrel Water Projects Hit by Wildlife Federation

The National Wildlife Federation has urged President Carter to veto any Public Works Appropriations bill containing money for any of the "pork barrel" water projects on Carter's original "hit list."

Thomas L. Kimball, executive vice president of NWF, the nation's largest conservation organization, urged the President to "stand firm against these wasteful and environmentally unsound boondoggles" four days after the Senate passed and sent to a conference committee a "compromise" $10.3 billion bill that would fund nine of the 18 dam-building projects opposed by Carter.

"From the votes in both the House and the Senate," Kimball said, "it is clear that there are not enough votes in either house to override a Presidential veto. We think this is a great opportunity for the President to put an end to the practice of building dams that nobody needs."

Kimball said that not one of the 17 water projects contained in the House bill, passed earlier, or the nine projects in the Senate bill, "would produce enough power or any other benefits to offset the damage it would inflict on people, wildlife, and the ecology of the areas involved."

"In every case," Kimball added, "the sponsors have overstated the benefits and understated the environmental costs."

Kimball said the NWF will continue its legal battles against four of the water projects on Carter's original "hit list" regardless of Congressional or Presidential action. The four projects that the NWF is fighting in federal courts are:

The $10.1 million Lower Atchafalaya River project in coastal Louisiana. The NWF said the project would cut through 60 miles of Louisiana's most productive coastal ecosystem, cover 100,000 acres of its wetlands with spoil, degrade the water quality of one of America's most important shrimp and shellfisheries, increase local flooding, and bring industrial and commercial development into one of the most flood hazardous areas in the United States.

The $88.5 million Cache River project in Arkansas. The NWF said 232 miles of river and streams would be channelized, the most important wintering ground for mallards in North America would be destroyed, downstream areas including farms, designated wilderness areas, and

To Release Brown Trout In Nat'l Forest Streams

An attempt will be made to introduce brown trout into the streams of the Daniel Boone National Forest this month when approximately 6,000 two to three-inch, subadult fish will be released in selected streams in Clay and Powell counties.

Although several thousand rainbow trout are released each year in the forest's streams and lakes, this will be the first attempt to introduce young brown trout into waters of the forest. A number of these trout were stocked in McCreary county several years ago without success.

All to be released this month were raised in a hatchery but they are considered to be wild trout because their parents were caught in the wilds of California. This close biological time link is expected to give them a better chance to survive than those whose parents and grandparents were raised in a hatchery where they tend to lose some of the characteristics needed to deal with nature.

The habitat requirements of the brown trout are similar to those of rainbow trout but brown trout run larger and are far more difficult to catch, offering the sportsman a genuine challenge.

EQC Sets Chief Jobs

Environmental Quality Commission (EQC) members today heard an update on water quality standards from Commissioner John A. Roth, Department of Natural Resources and Environmental Protection.

Roth said he believes the water quality technical steering committee "has made considerable progress" since its appointment on May 18 by Secretary Robert Bell.

For example, Roth said, the committee has made decisions on how to draft the water regulations, had identified major issues and has determined to treat only surface water now, dealing with underground water later. He said he believes regulations can be written which will be acceptable from both a legal and technical stand-point.

The committee expects to have a draft of the regulations by October, he said.

The steering committee is one of the departments' efforts to bring a creative new approach to the problem of water quality standards. The department has been working toward a satisfactory set of regulations for some time.

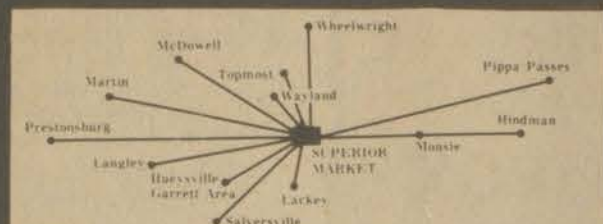

Roth also discussed the changes in the Division of Hazardous Materials and Waste Management, which was created from the old divisions of solid waste and special programs.

Roth said the division had determined its immediate tasks to be the following: enacting hazardous materials legislation and regulations; revising waste management legislation and regulations; improving technical capabilities of the division staff; broadening the beautification and junk car program; inventorying sludges and ash, and initiating an open dump inventory.

STATE PARKS, THEIR VISITORS SPEND $35 MILLION A YEAR

Frankfort, Ky.—A study released Wednesday shows that Kentucky businesses receive about $35 million a year from spending by park visitors and the parks themselves, according to Parks Commissioner Bruce Montgomery.

He said this is triple the amount of tax money that goes into his agency.

The study indicated two-thirds of the $35 million comes from outside the state.

The 1974 legislature, through a committee, started the study under a contract to a Wisconsin research consultant, Melville Cohee.

Vote-Selling in Appalachia

By GEORGE L. MOORE

Last year I was visited by a young man from Morehead State University for an interview on vote-selling in Appalachia. I told him that vote-selling had never been a problem in the rural counties of this region but in the large industrial counties the practice had been widespread for many years.

In the old days, when almost anyone could vote, especially in the county elections, the outcome often depended on the amount of money that was spent by the candidate. It wasn't unusual for a candidate for a major county office to spend as much as $10,000 in the primary and even a larger amount in the general election.

I believe it was in the 1940's that the General Assembly of Kentucky passed a statewide registration law. This did not stop vote-selling entirely but it sounded the death knell for wholesale vote-selling as it had been carried on in the past. Prior to the passage of the registration law, it was possible for the same person to vote several times. I can recall in one larger coal camp where the size of the vote would invariably be larger than the population of the entire town. There was always a house near the voting place in which a large number of hats, caps, coats, and other wearing apparel were stored. After the voter had cast his vote, he would retire to the dressing house, secure different wearing apparel, and return to the polling place. He would then vote under another name. On the first appearance he might be a Brown and on the second trip he would become a Stegall or whatever. This process would be repeated as much as a dozen times.

The young man interrupted me to say, "I am more interested in the mechanics of how the votes were bought."

Well, there wasn't a set pattern. In the strictly rural county, the few votes that were sold were paid for in cash before the vote was cast. In the larger, more populated counties the voter didn't receive the money until he voted. Usually each voter was given a slip of paper with names on it. If he voted on the table for all the names on the list, he would then go outside to the "striker", who paid him the amount agreed upon.

Some candidates developed their own methods of paying the voters. I once knew a politician who would station himself just outside the door of the election house. He had a "spotter" with him who kept him informed of those who sold their votes and those who did not. He would say, "Why, Aunt Mollie, I'm so glad to see you". As he released the grip on her hand, he would shuck off a new $5 bill in her palm. He would treat Uncle Lum in a like manner.

Another method was to hire someone with a large family and numerous relatives to use his car to haul voters to the polls on election day. The hauler handled no money but offered transportation only to the voters favorable to his or her candidate. A similar practice was to pay a whole family or clan a lump sum. When a family of this type hung around the election grounds for an hour or so without voting, every politician knew what they were waiting for. A group of this kind usually sold to the highest bidder.

Another method was for the candidate to purchase large quantities of gingerbread from the ladies and treat everyone that would consume it. The only person influenced by this kind of transaction was the one who sold the gingerbread.

Many years ago I observed a candidate who came into a country store. He introduced himself and said that he was a candidate for representative. He said, "I'm in a hurry but I would like to buy each of you ladies a good clay pipe." The pipes were ten cents each. Most of the women accepted his offer. Before he stopped talking with them, he had purchased a considerable yardage of calico to make into new dresses to wear to the election. No one in the group would think of such a thing as selling their votes.

It is interesting to note the attitude that different people had toward vote-selling. One old gentleman, who was supposed to be deeply religious, said, "A vote-seller is the lowest type of human being that ever walked the earth". He added, "Of course, if a candidate wants to pay me for my day's work for going to vote I see nothing wrong with that."

One candidate for squire summed it up in this manner: "Everybody sells their vote. It may be for the promise of a job, a guarantee that a road will be built by his hours or a solemn promise that the voter and perhaps all his kin will get on welfare".

State Is Losing Extension Agents

Washington—The Senate has approved an amendment by Senator Walter (Dee) Huddleston which he says will help Kentucky and other states prevent the loss of agriculture extension agents.

The Huddleston amendment provided an additional $4 million in an agriculture appropriations bill for extension agent salaries.

"Dr. Charles Barnhart, dean of the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture, has told me that he is losing two extension agents a month," Huddleston said. "And last week four agents left the University of Kentucky because of low pay."

The Kentucky senator said the funds provided by his amendment can be used for salary adjustments and to restaff positions in state extension services which are vacant because of money shortages.

"Without question, the accomplishments of the extension service are impressive and many," he added. "But in recent years the appropriation support for extension programs has deteriorated."

"For the past few years Congress has not been appropriating sufficient monies to sustain a minimum program level. The state extension services have begun to feel the pinch. Agent salaries have not nearly kept pace with what persons with equivalent educations are being paid by the private sector or by agencies of government."

Serious Crime Rate Increases; Morgan County Rise, Sharpest

The serious crime rate in Kentucky increased last year by 2.1 per cent over 1975 with 65 of the 120 counties reporting increases in their major crime rates, according to the 1976 Kentucky State Police Uniform Crime Report released this week.

Of the 117,075 reported serious offenses in Kentucky last year, there were 362 murders, 176 manslaughters, 608 forcible rapes, 3,375 robberies, 8,859 assaults, 31,770 cases of breaking and entering, 63,471 larceny-theft cases and 8,454 auto thefts, according to the report.

Forcible rape showed a 16 per cent increase over 1975; larceny-theft, a 5.9 per cent increase; murder, a 3.1 per cent increase; and aggravated assault a 3 per cent increase. Reported auto thefts decreased last year by 5.5 per cent over the previous year; robbery decreased 3.5 per cent, and breaking and entering decreased 2.7 per cent.

Twenty-one per cent of all reported offenses in Kentucky last year were cleared by arrest. Alcohol-related arrests made up 55.3 per cent of the total number of arrests, the report shows.

In the violent crime category, 85.6 per cent of the reported murders in Kentucky were cleared by arrest last year. Sixty-three per cent of the reported rapes were cleared by arrest; 34.4 per cent of the robberies, and 75 per cent of the aggravated assaults.

In the property crime category, 20 per cent of the reported breaking and entering cases were cleared by arrest; 16.7 per cent of the larceny-theft cases, and 16 per cent of the auto thefts.

"Several reasons may be advanced to explain why the clearance rate is much greater for violent crimes than it is for property crimes," the report says.

"The sheer volume of property crimes is much greater than that of violent crimes; but the police usually investigate violent crimes more intensely."

Another factor the Uniform Crime Report listed as to why more violent crimes are cleared by arrest is the greater likelihood of witness identification.

Of the total arrests in 1976, 28.4 per cent were juveniles. This is up from 27.5 per cent in 1975.

There were 10,013 arrests for violations of the narcotic drug laws, which is an increase of 15.8 per cent over 1975 and a dramatic increase of 787.6 per cent over 1970. Over three-fourths of last year's narcotic drug law arrests were marijuana related.

Of those arrested for narcotic drug law violations last year, 5,221 or 52 per cent, were under age of 21. Over nine per cent of the drug arrests were persons 16 years of age and younger.

Firearms were used in 78.4 per cent of the 362 murders reported in 1976, which is up from 77.5 per cent in 1975.

Of those arrested in Kentucky last year and held for prosecution, the crime report shows that 46 per cent were found guilty of the offense with which they were charged. Nine per cent were found guilty of a lesser charge; 10 per cent were acquitted or had their cases dismissed; seven per cent were referred to juvenile court, and 28 per cent of the cases are still pending.

Again last year, as was the case in 1975, tiny Robertson county reported the fewest serious crimes—14—and Kentucky's most highly populated county, Jefferson, reported the most—42,701.

Morgan county reported the largest increase in serious crime last year with a 97.5 per cent increase over the previous year. Other large increases were reported in Elliott county, 89 per cent; Meade county, 73.6 per cent; Bracken county, 69 per cent; Ohio county, 65 per cent; Knox county, 64.6 per cent; Owen county, 61.4 per cent; Edmonson county, 58.6 per cent; Graves county, 57.5 per cent; Trimble county, 57 per cent; Adair county, 53.4 per cent; Livingston county, 53 per cent and Rowan county, 52.5 per cent.

The largest reported decrease in serious crime in 1976 came in Harrison county with a 50.3 per cent decrease over 1975. Other counties reporting large decreases were Allen county, 46.5 per cent; Martin county, 46.2 per cent; Menifee county, 43.5 per cent; Casey county, 43 per cent, and Carlisle county, 42.6 per cent.

According to the report, there was one police officer killed in the line of duty last year, with 404 reported assaults on police officers.

When Summer Begins Fadeout

By NEVYLE SHACKELFORD
 August is the heyday month of ripening fruit—a time of maturity for water-melons, summer squash, stick beans and roasting ears. It is a month of plenty and payoff time in the garden—the month in which late winter planning and spring and early summer labors reach full fruition.

Although usually sultry and oftentimes dusty, August is still a good month in which to get things done—important things like attending county fairs, visiting kinfolks and making aboreal surveys by laying on one's back in a hammock under the maples and studying the underside of the leaves.

Coming as it does between that frantic period of sowing and hoeing and the equal urgency of the harvest, August offers a brief moment for relaxation and a time to indulge in the restful therapy of angling for bluegills in a local pond.

In August, it matters little whether or not any fish are caught. The real reason for going fishing during this month is to get away, to listen to the sounds of the day, to watch the play of wind on water, to revel in a solitude broken only by the sounds of nature and to reflect and remember. To be reasonably happy and content, a person—city dweller or farmer—must have some solitude and time to reflect and recall. There is no month like August in which to indulge these mental luxuries.

August is also a fine month for late afternoon back porch sitting. Because the sun is gradually retreating, the evenings are mostly cool and, in the coolness, comes a vast tuning up of that insect orchestra which is a musical prelude to autumn.

By August, most of the songbirds have stopped singing and many have already departed on the long journey to their winter homes in the South. Where they left off, the insects—mole crickets, katydids and a thousand others—take over.

Porch sitting in an August twilight can be a thrilling experience. As the darkness settles down over the landscape, there is first a rasp here and a creak there as katydids start waxing their bows. Then there may be the chirp of a field cricket, the weird tremolo of a screech owl, and the ghostly call of a gray fox articulating his lonesomeness from some rocky point deep in the darkening woods. Moments later, all these sounds blend into one universal score, a sort of a threnody and a dirge, for in August summer slowly begins to die.

There are, of course, many other things that can be done in August. It is the month in which to dry beans, make pickles, sow radishes, lettuce, kale and turnips for fall table delicacies, fix the fence, work on the compost heap and collect flowers to dry for fall arrangements. But since you have worked hard all spring and summer, take some time off to rest and enjoy the fruits of your labors. You deserve it and, in fact, are commanded to do so for, as it is written, "You shall eat and be full and you shall bless your God for the good land he has given you."

Indian Prime Minister Says No Nuclear Tests Planned

NEW DELHI—Indian Prime Minister Morarji Desai said Wednesday that his government had no plans to conduct further nuclear tests, but he refused to say this indicates a permanent policy. Speaking in Parliament, he said he saw no need for additional tests. India first tested an atomic device in May 1974.

Cockfighting Illegal But Still Thriving

By SCOTT PAYTON
(In The Lexington Herald)

The scene: A moonless Friday night in a remote corner of Eastern Kentucky. At the dead-end of a rutted dirt road a barn suddenly looms up, a surprisingly modern metal structure.

Near the entrance, in a sea of mud, several dozen cars and pickup trucks are parked in random confusion.

There are no guards or lookouts, and that's something of a surprise. Because inside, the boys have gathered for one of Eastern Kentucky's favorite illegal diversions—a cockfight.

There's no trick to getting in, but, since cockfighters are a fairly closeknit fraternity, it helps if you go with a "regular." And a veiled warning has been issued that writers are not exactly welcome:

"A few years ago there was an article in Sports Illustrated about chicken fighting," one handler had said earlier. "It brought the law down on fights all over the country. Most of the guys wouldn't be too happy to find a reporter here."

The warning is noted and the notebook pocketed.

Cockfighting (or "chicken fighting"—the terms are interchangeable among aficionados) is probably as old as civilization itself. Julius Caesar is said to have enjoyed it. So did George Washington and Abraham Lincoln. But in recent years, under pressure from Humane Societies and others concerned about cruelty to animals, the sport has been pretty much outlawed—banned in almost every state, Kentucky included.

However, cockfighting, like bootlegging, is a fact of life in Eastern Kentucky, as it is throughout the Sunbelt states. Handlers say law enforcement officials are inclined to look the other way unless the activity becomes too blatant.

In fact, the crowd tonight includes several well-known and well-respected members of the Eastern Kentucky business community.

Before the fights, the patrons wander around the cavernous barn, taking swigs from half-pint bottles of bourbon, and maybe setting up some bets for the first fight. Gambling is one of the principal attractions of cockfights, and the wagers may run from $5 to several hundred.

Meanwhile, the handlers are busy applying gaffs—razor-sharp steel shanks—to the feet of their chickens. The gaffs are deadly weapons, and handlers devote a lot of time and care to their proper attachment. When the preparations are complete, the fight is ready to start.

The first two chickens a "Red and a Gray," in the terminology of the sport, are brought to the makeshift pit (unlike more organized cockfights, this one is fought on the barn floor with no barriers erected to form an actual "pit"). The handlers bring the chickens close to each other, sticking them in each other's face, getting them worked up into the murderous frenzy that is the culmination of countless generations of breeding and training.

The handlers then withdraw, still holding their chickens, and face each other across a line scraped in the dust. The referee gives a signal, and the men release their birds.

They immediately charge each other and leap into contact. Their feet held high, their neck feathers puffed wildly out, the chickens engage in maybe 30 seconds of furious kicking and pecking. A steel gaff sinks deep into the neck of the Gray.

"He's dead," one of the spectators says, and there's a general muttering of agreement around the pit. He isn't dead yet, but he isn't moving very much. The Red is on top of him, still pecking.

"Handle!" the referee shouts, and the handlers move in to disengage the chickens.

Moments later they are released again and the fight continues. A gaff lands in the wing of the Red. To an unknowledgeable spectator it looks like a telling blow, but it is harmless and raises no comment from the aficionados. The pace of the fight is winding down. The chickens clinch again, breathing heavily.

"Handle!"

This goes on for about five minutes. The chickens are separated, released again for a brief flurry of activity, and separated again. They move slowly, like marathon dancers in the 20th hour. Blood is showing on the Gray. His feathers glisten like oil on water.

"He's dead for sure now," an onlooker says.

"I got $50 says he's not," shouts another across the pit.

The wager is agreed to. Moments later the Gray is dead for sure. A gaff has sunk into his chest. The fight ends abruptly.

The spectators exchange money and wander off to drink more whiskey and socialize a bit. Preparations begin for the next fight.

"A lot of people think chicken fighting is terrible," says one breeder and handler, who will fight later tonight. "They hear the word 'cockfight' and they get all worked up. They think it's all just blood and killing and cruelty to the chickens."

"Well, that's not true. There's a lot more to it than that. Chicken fighting is a sport, and it gets pretty complicated. You have to know about breeding and training and strategy."

"And as for cruelty, well, fighting is what a gamecock is bred to do. What else is he gonna do but fight? Just like a horse that's bred to run will run. He loves it."

He raises a dozen or so chickens on the hillside behind his home, chained to individual metal posts with oil drums nearby as shelter from the weather. He says he has fought all over Eastern Kentucky and out of state.

"I love chicken fighting," he says. "I'm a student of it. It's almost an art."

Meanwhile, another fight has started up in the pit. A big Red was killed by a mysterious blow no one saw. A quizzical murmur goes up from the crowd.

"I'm gonna do an autopsy on him," his handler says, pulling out a knife. He cuts the chicken open in the vicinity of a small wound, hoping to determine what vital organ was punctured. He finds nothing.

"Don't know what killed him," he says, tossing the sliced-up carcass into a corner of the barn. "He was a good chicken, too."

Later, as another fight begins, several small puppies are eating the remains of the dead chicken. No one notices. There's heavy action in the pit:

"Handle!"

THE MOSQUITO proved no friend to France when that country was trying to secure its control of the Mississippi Valley in the early 1800s. Mosquito-borne yellow fever devastated French troops and, according to the August Reader's Digest, led directly to the Louisiana Purchase—when the U.S. bought from France the entire territory from the Mississippi to the Rocky Mountains.

Funds for WIC Aids Children

The U.S. Agriculture Department has reallocated $595,700 to the Kentucky Department of Human Resources to be used for the Women, Infants and Children (WIC) food program.

The goal of reallocation is to encourage Kentucky to expand its WIC caseloads gradually by spending more of the money that the Agriculture Department makes available.

Under the Agriculture Department's reallocation formula, each state has an assigned monthly expenditure level. Unspent funds are recovered and redistributed to states reaching high expenditure levels. States sharing in the third allocation, like Kentucky, spent at least 75 percent of the WIC money available to them.

The WIC program, run by local health or welfare agencies, provides special foods to pregnant and nursing women, to infants and to children up to five years old. To be eligible, participants must be examined by a physician, nurse, nutritionist, or other health or nutrition professional, and found to be "a nutritional risk" because of poor diet and low income.

"MOST-LIKELY-TO-LIE"

BELLINGHAM, Wash.—A recent "most-likely-to-lie" survey puts politicians at the top of the heap, just ahead of children under 6.

Dr. B. L. Kintz, of Western Washington State College, surveyed 60 students to get at the truth about lying.

After politicians and little kids, the undergrads voted the most likely liars to be people aged 40 to 60, psychologists, high school teachers and medical doctors.

The most honest types, according to the survey, were college teachers, people over 70, scientists, elementary school teachers and, finally, clergymen.

Rent Control Said Fatal Cure

Washington, D. C.—"The sad truth is that rent controls—enacted for the best of motives to protect middle- and low-income tenants—actually work against the very people they were designed to aid," writes Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton (D-Missouri) in an exclusive by-lined article in the August Reader's Digest.

Acknowledging that rent control is a politically popular step for local governments—one taken by Washington, D.C., in August 1974—he notes: "Had I been serving on a city council, I, too, could well have voted to impose controls."

But hearings that Eagleton conducted on rent control as chairman of the Senate District of Columbia Committee changed his mind. He concludes: "It is a cure worse than the disease."

"Studies estimate that Washington will need more than 1200 new rental units each year to keep up with demand," he writes. "Since the implementation of rent controls, however, the city has experienced a net loss in available units. Worse still, the construction of private apartments has virtually ceased."

Moreover, maintenance on existing buildings deteriorates because repairs cannot be financed without rental increases. "Unfortunately, it is the poor and lower-income residents of apartment buildings—the very people rent controls are supposed to help most—who are the primary victims of a system which provides an incentive for decay," Eagleton observes.

New York City is a prime example of where rent control can ultimately lead. Thirty years of controls have devastated the private-apartment sector—entire neighborhoods have been abandoned by landlords as unprofitable; fire and vandalism have completed what neglect began.

Eagleton points out that he has always worked to promote decent housing for poor and elderly Americans and feels his opposition to rent controls is consistent with his record. But, as the Washington Star has noted editorially, rent controls are very much like hard drugs: "Starting is euphoric. Trying to stop is painful. Continuing is disaster."

Federal Task Force Tours Mining Areas

Maintaining that coal is the answer to the nation's energy problems, U.S. Transportation Secretary Brock Adams led members of a federal coal transportation task force on a tour of Eastern Kentucky's coal mining areas last week.

"The president has faced up to the fact that, all of a sudden, the days of free and cheap energy are over," Adams said. "Our task now is to make the shift from oil-produced energy to coal-produced energy and to ensure that the nation has sufficient coal transportation capacity to meet new energy needs."

"Coal is an old friend—a proven energy source. Our country cut its industrial teeth on the energy coal supplied. Its renewed use, however, poses many challenges, such as bulk movement, lessening environmental hazards and ample production. These are serious but not insurmountable," he continued.

Adams said the Carter administration will propose an additional four-cents-per-gallon gasoline tax that will largely be used to finance coal transportation and mass transit programs.

The federal official pointed out that transportation problems vary in the different states. "Some states want money for mass transit, some for bridges and some for coal haul roads," he said.

According to Adams, the administration plan would return some $1 billion of the funds generated from the gasoline tax increase to the states for transportation improvement programs.

The plan is designed to provide flexibility to the states in dealing with their particular problems.

"We're not looking to send federal people out to supervise or administer the programs financed with the money. Any restrictions or enforcement to protect the programs from abuse will be left up to state officials," he said.

"We're not going to tell you how to solve your problems. We'll provide the money and you tell us how you will use it," Adams added.

He predicted the proposed plan might fare better than previous gasoline tax-related proposals since the tax is directly related to benefits for the states.

"If you're going to tax the motorist at the pump, you will never pass that unless they know they're going to get direct benefits," Adams said.

According to Adams, the potential revenue from the proposed tax would break down as $1.5 billion for mass transit, $1.5 billion to the U.S. general highway fund, and $1 billion to the states.

Kentucky native William Cox, of Madisonville, recently appointed Federal Highway Administrator, said most coal haul roads in Kentucky are "grossly inadequate."

He indicated the administration would address the problem by advocating the upgrade of major arterial routes, rather than more trucks with lighter loads.

Cox said most coal haul roads, subsidized by federal tax dollars, could be short in length since long-distance transportation by truck is often uneconomical.

"The basic role of the truck is to get it (coal) from the mouth of the mine to the long distance transporter," he pointed out.

Cox is one of the task force members who joined Adams in his tour of the mining operations and transportation facilities in Eastern Kentucky.

Other members of the task force were Chairman Chester Davenport, assistant secretary for Policy, Plans and International Affairs; Terrence L. Bracy, assistant secretary for Congressional and Intergovernmental Affairs; Martin Convisser, acting assistant secretary for Environment, Safety and Consumer Affairs; Admiral Owen Siler, commandant of the U.S. Coast Guard; John Sullivan, federal railroad administrator and Woodruff Price, special assistant to Secretary Adams.

Senate Blasts Hopes for Dam

House and Senate conferees on a public works appropriations bill last week did away with the partially-completed Yatesville Dam.

Yatesville was among 18 federal water projects in various stages of development that President Jimmy Carter wanted cut from the budget for Fiscal Year 1978, which starts in October.

The House, refusing to go along with Carter, funded all 18 projects. But the Senate met the President halfway, axing nine of the 18. Yatesville Dam was one of the nine cut by the Senate, despite the presence of Sen. Walter (Dee) Huddleston, D-Ky., on the appropriations subcommittee that made the cuts. House and Senate conferees were working out the differences between the new bills.

Yatesville Dam is a rockfill dam on Blaine Creek, four miles from Yatesville. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers project was expected to cost $63.6 million to complete.

Critics of the dam said it would flood 6,000 acres, dislodge local residents, and provide few economic or recreational benefits.

Nobody put up much fight during the conference after House conference chairman Tom Bevill, D-Ala., and Senate chairman John Stennis, D-Miss., told the conferees that the President had told them directly that he would accept only the Senate version of the water project funding.

The President also asked the chairmen to delete funding for the Clinch River breeder reactor in Tennessee. Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., called Frank Moore, the President's congressional liaison, during the conference to affirm the President's wishes on the breeder reactor.

Huddleston then took the phone and asked Moore to confirm Carter's objections to Yatesville, which Moore did.

Huddleston aide Ed Graves said the Kentucky senator would have insisted on funding for Yatesville if any of the eight other axed projects had been put back in the budget. Huddleston said he had a similar understanding with Stennis when the bill was considered on the Senate floor.

Huddleston did, however, speak out for the dam when Stennis suggested senators be allowed to comment on the dams after word came that the President would insist on the cuts.

Would Completed Cut-Through Kept Pikeville Free of Flood

(Excerpted from "Appalachia," journal of the Appalachian Regional Commission)

One of the most dramatic community development projects in the United States is the Pikeville, Kentucky, open-cut project.

This is a multiagency project involving the relocation of the main line of C & O Railway, U.S. Route 23 and the Levisa Fork of the Big Sandy River, which now loop around the city to the east, by cutting a passage for them through Peach Orchard Mountain to the west.

The project will use the tons of material removed from the cut to fill portions of the existing river channel and other designated areas and will eventually give the city more than 150 acres of badly needed developable land.

This spectacular project, for which the Appalachian Regional Commission has been the coordinating agency, has involved the Department of Housing and Urban Development, the U.S. Corps of Engineers, the Kentucky Department of Transportation, the C & O Railway and the Pikeville Urban Renewal and Community Development Agency.

Phase I, the excavation of material, began on November 26, 1973, and is now in the final stages. More than 13 million yards of material have been excavated and placed in the two major fill areas, Poor Farm Hollow and Cedar Creek.

The value of one of the many potential benefits from this project was brought vividly home to the city in early April, when severe flooding occurred in a number of Appalachian communities in Kentucky, Virginia and West Virginia.

One national television network reported that 15 feet of floodwater swept through the city and left in its wake an inch of mud for every foot of water.

City manager Max Bowen describes what happened to Pikeville and how fortunate the city might have been if the flood had occurred some 12-15 months later, when the river is expected to be diverted to the cut:

"The loss was tremendous. Every store in our downtown area was nearly wiped out. There was about $100 million dollars' worth of damage to area schools alone, including the new high school on the banks of the Big Sandy that was opened last Labor Day.

"The flooding didn't seriously hurt the cut operation. One thing is certain, however: If the cut had been completed, Pikeville wouldn't have been flooded. Those 1-15 inches of rain that fell in West Virginia and Virginia and then came pouring down the Big Sandy into Pikeville could have been diverted past the city and through the cut."

The U.S. Corps of Engineers agrees that if the cut had been completed according to the original plan, Pikeville would not have been flooded. However, a revision of the original specifications now calls for openings in the highway fill to allow the passage of U.S. 23, and at flood times water could pour through these openings and inundate the city.

The city is attempting to get approval of plans to put floodgates on these projected openings to take care of this problem.

Kentucky Afield

By HOPE CARLETON

Even though many fishermen have put up their fishing tackle during these hot summer months, there are others who continue to play their skills in angling.

One such group of fishermen includes those who are on family vacations and for whom fishing is just one of the many pastimes of the trip. However, they do want to have some action and a good fish to go after is the bluegill. They fight well and are a treat on the table.

In many of Kentucky's major lakes bluegill may be found during the heat of the day along the deeper banks, especially those that have ledges at varied depths. Bluegill seem to school up along these steep walls that have, in effect, a stair-step effect of ledges.

One easy way to harvest fine pan fish is to drift along the walls with a baited hook just off the bottom of the ledge. In many cases the depth may vary from 10 to 20 feet. One bait that is an excellent choice and easy to come by is live crickets. They are available from many of the boat docks and sporting goods close to the lake areas.

Many times in the drifting technique a full live basket or ice cooler of bluegill may be harvested and, as an added treat, at times some fine catfish will also take the cricket offering.

During the summer there are those who still choose to fish for black bass, but most of these individuals are very much aware of techniques that can and do produce nice summer catches of bass.

The majority of bass anglers during this time will fish either in early mornings and late evenings, casting shorelines or following the bass in the jumps.

But there are some who seek out the bass during the night. During the day these fishermen will "hold up" in a nice air-conditioned room and leave the waters to those who wish to water ski or boat.

Then in late evening, the night bass casters head to the waters as they begin to quiet down from the day's boating activities.

Some night casters choose dark color, noisy surface lures. But there are those who use artificial nightcrawlers or spinner baits and work the points, dropoffs and the deeper shoreline banks with outstanding results.

Now that hot weather is here, this period will afford some fine fishing for the vacationing family groups as well as the die-in-the-wool bass fishermen. If you haven't tried it you may be missing some exciting fishing adventures.

Associational W.M.U. Meets at Maytown

The Woman's Missionary Union of the Enterprise Association of Kentucky Baptists held its quarterly meeting July 19 in the Maytown Church. Mrs. James Grayson, of Inez, president, welcomed the visitors, and Mrs. Walter Frasure, of Allen, director of the Associational W.M.U., presided. Main speaker was Mrs. Eric Herrin, Irene Cole Memorial Church, Prestonsburg, who gave a detailed report of the trip made recently by 27 from that church, who spent two weeks on an Indian reservation in New Mexico, living in the church building of the mission there, ministering in several ways to the Navajo Indians as a part of the Bold Thrust movement Southern Baptists have adopted to help evangelize the world. A paper on the "Dangers of Marijuana," written by Miss Lara Hopkins, of the hostess church and Morehead University, was distributed. Miss Hopkins is one of the most dedicated young leaders in Maytown. The group voted unanimously to favor Anita Bryant's position in regard to homosexuality and to oppose legalization of marijuana and other drugs. Mrs. Russell Lavens, of Allen, secretary of the organization, was requested to notify the President, the Governor, both U.S. Senators, and Congressmen of the stand taken.

Irene Cole Memorial Church will be hostess to the next meeting, October 18.

Life's Best Years . . .

WHEN ARE THE BEST years of your life? You're most creative in your thirties, says the August Reader's Digest. You're likely to be healthiest between 15 and 25 if you're a man; between 15 and 30 if you're a woman. But the answer that tops them all comes from Dr. Albert Ellis of New York's Institute for Rational Living: "The best years of your life are the ones in which you decide your problems are your own. You don't blame them on your mother, your environment, the ecology or the President. You realize that you control your own destiny."

Lt. Gov. Announces Task Force Meeting Here Next Tuesday

A public conference on education for exceptional children will be held Tuesday, August 2, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Prestonsburg Community College auditorium.

The conference will be conducted by Lt. Gov. Thelma Stovall and her subcommittee of the Governor's Task Force on Education. All parents, teachers, and organization leaders for exceptional children in any category are urged to attend.

Areas to be covered include gifted, visually impaired, hearing impaired, mentally handicapped, emotionally disturbed, learning disabled, crippled and other health impaired, communication disorders, and multiple handicapped. The basic purpose of the conference, according to Lt. Governor Stovall, is to receive input from parents, teachers and organization heads who have interests in children of these categories, and determine the needs and opportunities in their sections of the state.

"It is hoped," said Lt. Governor Stovall, "that through these meetings we can get an overall feeling for the needs of all parts of Kentucky in serving these children; a more total picture of what is actually being done by both private and public organizations; that this committee can then make realistic recommendations to the Governor's Task Force on Education; and . . . can, through its research, provide the citizens of Kentucky with a more accurate list of available services for children in exceptional categories."

Serving on Lt. Gov. Stovall's subcommittee is Floyd county native Clayton M. Johnson. Johnson, a son of Mrs. Myra Johnson, of Jack's Creek is a resident of Madison county and is employed as special education teacher for the Estill county board of education. He is married to the former Patricia Little, of Melvin.

Buck's Branch Gas Wins Rate Increase But Loses on Refund

The Kentucky Public Service Commission (PSC) has granted the Bucks Branch Gas Co., Prestonsburg, a $25,530 rate increase.

The effect of that decision will be lessened somewhat as the commission has also ordered Bucks Branch to refund rates collected in excess of that amount since Dec. 3, 1976, when the utility was granted a $64,500 emergency rate increase. Minimum monthly bills will not be $5.

The same PSC decision also granted Bucks Branch a certificate of convenience and necessity for construction designed to upgrade its Martin distribution system. The Martin Gas Co. merged with Bucks Branch last December.

A public hearing was held on the matter in the commission's Frankfort office last Nov. 11. The city of Martin and the consumer protection division of the attorney general's office intervened.

Deny State Funds For Most Abortions

The interim joint committee on Judiciary-Statutes today passed a resolution asking that state Medicaid funds not be used for nontherapeutic abortions, except in cases of incest, rape or when the mother's life is endangered.

The resolution, sponsored by Sen. Mike Moloney (D-Lexington), was approved after the committee discussed a recent U.S. Supreme Court decision, which allows states to determine whether medical aid funds to poor people can be used for nontherapeutic abortions, or abortions not medically required.

Rep. Louis DeFalaise (R-Ft. Mitchell) cast the sole dissenting vote on the resolution, after arguing that the resolution does not go far enough in cutting state funds for abortion. He said he preferred to allow abortions only when the mother's life is endangered.

Rep. Ray Overstreet (R-Liberty) said that DeFalaise and the committee were avoiding the "real issue"—how the poor can pay for abortions caused by rape and incest.

The resolution is to be forwarded to Department for Human Resources Secretary Peter Conn. That department administers the funds which pay for abortions for poor families.

Rep. Buddy Adams (D-Bowling Green) asked to have DHR statistics on state-financed abortions available at the committee's next meeting. Adams requested that the information included the number of abortions, total number of funds spent and a breakdown of the categories—therapeutic and non-therapeutic—which have been performed since 1974.

By LARRY BURKE.

There was once a young man who worked as an apprentice under a famous stained glass artist.

The famous artist designed and made the most beautiful windows in the country.

The young apprentice gathered up and saved every tiny piece of glass the artist let fall on the floor. Then one day the young man took the tiny bits and pieces he had saved and began making a window of his own creation. After months of labor—his window was completed.

To make a long story short—the window made from bits and pieces was acclaimed as the most beautiful ever made. The young man became famous in his own right as a great artist.</

Five of the 80 teachers and school administrators attending workshops at Murray State University dealing with the teaching of gifted and talented children take time during a break to check some points made with two of the workshop instructors, Joe Clark, left, coordinator of gifted and talented instruction with the Kentucky Department of Education, and Dr. Bill Price, a member of the College of Human Development and Learning faculty, second from the left. The participants shown are, from the left: Steve Schenck, Franklin County High School, Frankfort; Kay Peebles, Murray Middle School; Ruth Ann Henson, Clinton Central; John Pitts, principal of Clark Elementary School, Floyd county; and Arthur Marx, Thurston School, Daviess county.

Prepare To Teach the Gifted

Pauline Hicks, John K. Pitts and Bertha Ratliff, of the Floyd county school system, attended the first week of a training institute dealing with gifted and talented students sponsored by the Kentucky Department of Education at Murray State University. Floyd county was one of 12 school districts which expressed an interest in gifted and talented programming and received an introduction during the workshop.

Twenty-two other school districts were earlier selected to participate in the Kentucky Program for Gifted-Talented Education and will attend the entire two-week institute. They are committed to implementing a program for gifted children in their district during the school year 1977-78.

Gifted and talented children are those children who by virtue of their outstanding abilities are capable of high performance and have been identified by professionally qualified persons. They may be identified by their creativity, leadership or psychomotor skills as well as by their general intellectual activity or success in a specific academic area.

During the first week of the workshop, the district representatives worked with university personnel and practicing teachers to learn how to identify gifted children and methods of teaching them.

Practicing teachers from the gifted program in Daviess county, Kentucky and Project CLUE, a gifted program in Memphis, Tennessee, conducted sessions on teaching strategies and how to meet the needs of the district.

Other sessions on using the newspaper in the classroom, generating creative writing and using the outdoors as a classroom were also offered.

Hubert Humphrey Tells How He Has Coped with Cancer

In a remarkably candid article nine months after undergoing major cancer surgery, Sen. Hubert Humphrey has declared: "I'm not changing my life because I have had cancer. I expect to be around for quite a while."

Writing exclusively in the August issue of Reader's Digest, Sen. Humphrey acknowledges that the discovery that he had cancer was "the worst moment in my life." But, he says, he has learned to cope with the disease because "I enjoy living. I have a great inquisitiveness about the future."

In his Digest article, the Senator discloses many of the details of his emotions since the operation that he underwent last October 7. "There are days when I get discouraged," he concedes. "I look at myself in the mirror and say, 'Humphrey, you look like a sad sack.' Because of the chemotherapy, I've lost a lot of hair, and got much thinner. My trousers don't fit; my shirt collar is the wrong size."

But, he says, the doctors told him to expect these changes. "You can't do anything about it, so get on with living," he tells himself. "Then I go and have my clothes altered."

Among his major sources of strength, Humphrey says, have been his family, the telegrams, cards and letters he's received from all over the world and "the help of the good Lord."

Humphrey disclosed that his most discouraging period came during his course of X-ray treatments following the operation. "I used to get up in the middle of the night with bladder spasms," he says. "One time I was in such agony that I honestly wanted to give it all up. But even in the deepest despair you have to look up. I know that a positive outlook can influence your physical well-being, that it can help you fight something like cancer."

His sense of humor has helped, too. The Senator notes that when he was in the Virgin Islands for a rest following the surgery, he enjoyed telling his friends: "What a wonderful place this is! They've got Greta Garbo down here who doesn't talk to anybody and Hubert Humphrey who'll talk to everybody."

"I'm sure many people think my odds against cancer are not very good," he says candidly. "But it's a race I'm in, and I can't get off the pony. I hope I can demonstrate for others that you don't have to throw in the towel when you have something like cancer. Be grateful for every day of life. Be buoyant with it and do the best you can with what you have."

Leaf Miners Chewing Locust Trees in State

If you've been concerned because a number of trees in your area have been turning brown and seem to be dying, you can relax.

State forestry officials say that the damage being done to black locust trees by an insect known as the locust leaf miner is mostly aesthetic and happens almost every summer in Kentucky, as well as in most eastern states.

"Since attacks by the locust leaf miner seldom cause tree mortality, no controls are undertaken in forest conditions," said Elmore Grim, forestry director in the Department for Natural Resources and Environmental Protection. He added, however, that homeowners might want to control the insects on shade or ornamental trees.

The scientific name of the insect which makes the black locust trees turn brown and defoliate is Xenochalepus dorsalis. The adult, an orange and black beetle about one-fourth inch in length, spends the winter in bark crevices or under debris on the ground. It emerges in the spring to feed on the new leaves.

The feeding damage is negligible, but the adults also deposit eggs on the lower surfaces of the black locust leaves. When the larvae hatch from the eggs, the tiny grubs bore into the leaf and feed between the upper and lower leaf surfaces. In this way, they actually create a mine, from which they get their name.

Grim said that anyone wishing more information on controlling the insect should write to the Division of Forestry, Department for Natural Resources and Environmental Protection, Teton Trail, Frankfort, Ky. 40601.

Coal Firms Pay Fines of $38,000 For Pollution

More than $38,000 in civil penalties has been paid by three coal companies to the state Department for Natural Resources and Environmental Protection as a result of complaints filed by the department and other action charging the three companies with polluting streams in Eastern Kentucky.

New Era Coal Resources of Pike county paid the largest penalty, $23,800, for 13 discharges of black water, coal solids or coal fines into Little Robinson Creek in Pike county. The company also agreed to implement an eight-point water pollution abatement plan developed by the department's Division of Water Quality and the company to prevent further discharges.

Sovereign Coal Corp. of Phelps, paid a civil penalty of $8,000 and Crescent Coal Co. of Millers Creek, paid $7,000 as part settlement with the department.

A department attorney said the department is currently negotiating settlements with six other coal companies who have had complaints filed against them for water pollution violations and that mostly technical details need to be worked out to complete the agreements. If negotiations break down the attorney said the department would proceed with administrative hearings.

Kentucky law calls for civil penalties of up to $5,000 for each violation of water pollution statutes and an additional civil penalty of $5,000 for each day that the violation occurs.

Natural Bridge Art Show Set

When Dena and Deana get together along with the Kentucky Department of Parks, the twelfth annual Mountain Parkway Art Exhibit at Natural Bridge State Resort Park will take its place among the best of art shows and sales. Dena is Dena Shepherd, president of the Powell County Art Club this year, and Deana is Deana Blanton, club secretary. Both live in Stanton, a community that is an important part of the park-Red River gorge area.

The great outdoor art exhibit will take place Sunday, Aug. 14 on the park's Hoedown Island, with the show to open at 9 a.m. and continue throughout the day. Sponsored by the Powell County Art Club, the Hoedown Island event attracts artists from throughout Kentucky and adjoining states and in past shows has seen from 500 to almost 1,000 original paintings displayed.

"The show is open to all artists, sculptors and photographers," explained the president. "We do not allow crafts at this show, but there will be a crafts show here in October."

Artists park vehicles in the large parking area near the lake after they have unloaded their works nearer the island. The main display section is the large concrete patio (Richard Jett directs square dancing here on Friday and Saturday nights), but if the patio becomes crowded, artists set up easels and racks along the grassy sides of the approach path near the park souvenir shop.

"All works must be properly framed or matted," said Mrs. Shepherd, "with artists responsible for their works and displays. We are asking an entry fee of $2.00 per person. Artists do not have to reserve ahead, but just arrive early and have their displays ready for viewing by nine o'clock. We are asking that exhibits remain until 5 p.m."

Artists or viewers traveling from Lexington, Louisville, Northern Kentucky and the Cincinnati area will exit at the second toll plaza on the parkway. The exhibit site is about a five minute drive. A number of artists "paint along" during the show to give hints as to technique and style. The show is informal, with artists and families enjoying picnics or taking time out to eat in beautiful Hemlock Lodge.

The park offers swimming, boating, hiking, horseback riding, games and other recreation for viewers and artists' families who want to explore the park. There is a skylift for those who want to see the countryside from atop Natural Bridge, and there are trails for those who want to hike to the bridge and back.

There is a camping area, a lake for fishing and another lake—the one surrounding the patio—for paddle boating.

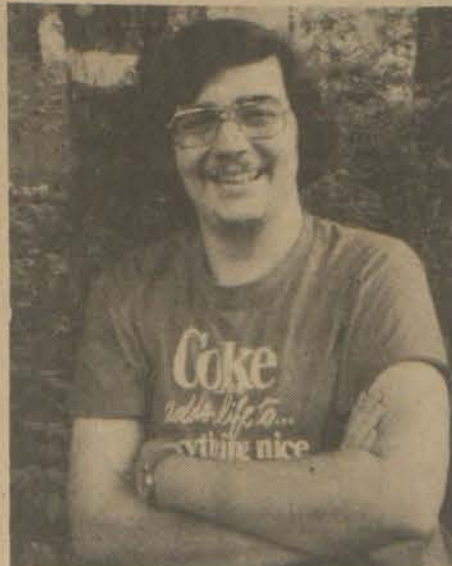

"We always have some artists from Western Kentucky and if they examine their maps closely they might find they can travel the parkway and get to Natural Bridge as conveniently as those who attend from the Eastern part of the state," Mrs. Shepherd said. "We are looking for our best show."

For more information contact Mrs. Shepherd at Rt. 1, Stanton, Ky. 40380, 606-663-4708, or the secretary, Deana Blanton, P. O. Box 206, Stanton, phone 606-663-5290.

Low-Income Families May Get Utility Grants

Low income families may qualify for up to $250 in payments for fuel and utility bills incurred during the past winter.

The Kentucky Department for Human Resources was allotted $4.6 million dollars for distribution among low income people burdened by high energy costs.

In most instances, Human Resources will forward payments for eligible families directly to the utility company or fuel suppliers. The application period began July 18 and will end August 31.

The money for payment of utility bills will be available on a first-come, first-served basis, until the funds are exhausted. The payments will be made for households with incomes no more than 25 per cent above the national poverty index.

The program will concentrate on two classifications of persons, especially the elderly and other persons on living or fixed income.

Commissioner Gail S. Huecker of the Department's Bureau for Social Insurance said those persons whose utilities have been shut off or are faced with a threat of discontinuance or are concurrently unable to obtain service, may be eligible for payments of up to $250.

The regular meeting of the Right Beaver C. B. Club was held July 17 at the Wayland Elementary School building. Discussed at the meeting were plans for a picnic at Jenny Wiley State Park Saturday, August 6, beginning at 4 p.m. at the Spillway.

An executive board meeting was called by "Country Squire," president of the club. Members of the executive board are: "Country Squire" (Ray Crawford) president; "Heavyweight" (Stanley Collins), vice-president; "Raggedy Ann" (Maxine Crawford), secretary; "Dumissner" (Carolyn Williams), treasurer; "Runabout" (Shirley Collins), recreation director; "Ky. Varmint" (Clero Williams), community affairs director; "Rawhide" (Glenn Alexander), communications director, and "The Smoke Blower" (Homer Dobson), publicity director.

"Speed-Buggy" became a member of the club. There is always a good laugh at our meetings. This time we attribute it to "Country Squire." Speaking about the picnic he said 4 o'clock would be the best time for the weather was too hot for an "affair" earlier in the afternoon.

He retracted his statement, rephrasing it and calling it an "outing."

After the meeting we had our usual coffee break.

Consumer Comments

By ROBERT F. STEPHENS
Attorney General

Have you ever had a legal problem and needed to talk to an attorney but did not know who to contact, or if you could afford the service? The Consumer Protection Division of the Attorney General's Office receives many calls a day from consumers with legal problems requesting personal legal assistance.

However, the Kentucky Attorney General's office has no authority to act as a private attorney for individuals with personal legal problems. But there are two organizations in Kentucky that you can turn to for assistance.

The Kentucky Bar Association is sponsoring a new Lawyer Referral Service that will assist you in locating an attorney to handle your particular problem. This is not free legal aid. The service is for persons who are capable of paying a reasonable fee for a lawyer, but do not know who to contact in their town. The request for an attorney's name from the service is at no cost to the client. The initial one-half hour appointment with the attorney whose name was given to you by the service is $10. This appointment will enable the attorney to tell you if you have legal grounds for your problem.

The Kentucky Referral Service has a

To Prevent Drownings

1. The earth's surface is roughly 75 percent water and 25 percent land. In order to survive, we must be familiar with the hazards presented by each. This is the time of year when the attractions to the recreational benefits of water are greatest. Water presents an environment that is alien to submerged humans and every year it claims the lives of approximately 7,000 people.

2. The only sure way to prevent drowning is to stay out of the water. However, since most people enjoy swimming and other water-related sports, this is not practical. We must rely on other measures to reduce the potential of drowning.

3. Several thousand swimmers drown each year. If swimmers would be guided by the following safety tips, they would greatly reduce their potential for being a drowning victim.

a. Never swim alone. Use the buddy system and keep a close watch on your buddy.

b. Avoid swimming in water colder than 68 degrees F. The warmer the water the less the chances of being victimized by hypothermia.

c. Do not drink and swim. (Alcoholic beverages, that is).

d. Swim only in authorized areas and preferably where a lifeguard is on duty.

e. Do not go swimming immediately after a meal.

f. Know the limit of your endurance and try never to exceed it.

g. Never dive in unknown waters; check for hidden hazards.

4. Boating accidents also account for many deaths each year. Boating deaths involve fire and falls as well as drowning; but, the majority are due to drowning. These drownings could be drastically reduced if boaters would adhere to the following tips:

a. Have a personal flotation device on board for each passenger—preferably ON each passenger. These devices must be Coast Guard approved for their specific use.

b. Know and obey state and federal boating laws and regulations.

c. Never overload your boat—weight, booze or power.

d. Have all the required equipment, such as fire extinguishers, lights, oars, horn, bailer, etc., aboard your vessel.

e. If in unfamiliar waters, proceed with caution.

f. Learn how to swim!

5. Summer water sports are enjoyable and certainly refreshing as long as they don't end in tragedy. You can help prevent tragedy by putting to use the above common sense safety tips.

toll free number—1-800-372-2999, which will be answered by the Frankfort office staff from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday. Any Kentucky resident can call this number and receive the name of a local attorney that will handle his/her particular legal problem.

Another legal assistance organization is Kentucky Legal Services. These organizations are private, non-profit corporations established to "provide equal access to the system of justice" for poor people that otherwise would not be able to afford an attorney. Five of these organizations are currently in operation in Central, Northern and Eastern Kentucky.

The Legal Services Corporation provides free legal counsel in civil cases to eligible Kentuckians that meet specific guidelines based on income, family size, and locality. The maximum income allowed for these free services varies according to each person's circumstances. To find out if your area is covered by one of these programs, or if you are eligible for legal assistance, contact the Office of Kentucky Legal Services, 800 Lexington Building, 201 West Short Street, Lexington, Kentucky, 1-606-233-4556.

If you need legal services, and don't know which attorney to turn to, contact the Lawyer Referral Service on their toll free number, or the Kentucky Legal Services office in your area.

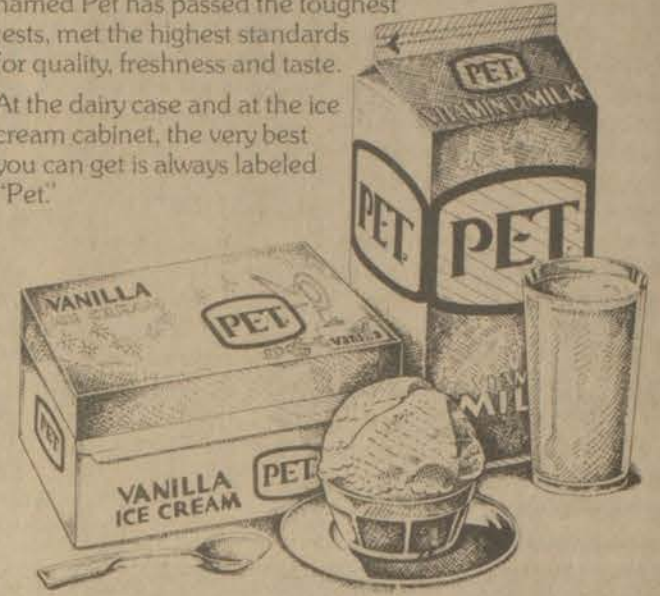

For further information on legal services in Kentucky, or if you have a consumer complaint, write: Office of the Attorney General, Consumer Protection Division, Frankfort, Kentucky 40601. The office has found that it can most effectively deal with written complaints and encourages you to write if you have a consumer complaint. However, if you have an emergency situation, call the toll free Consumer Hotline at 1-800-372-2960.

OUTDOOR LORE

UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY • COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE

Remember the big old black "wash kettle" that once reposed in sooty splendor in the backyard? If not, this means you are a member of a much younger generation. Time was when this old utensil was one of the most valued pieces of equipment around the homestead.

This old pot was used for many purposes such as heating water for washing clothes, scalding hogs at butchering time, rendering lard, making lye soap, canning beans and preserving hams. It was also a strained into lard cans for winter use and the cracklings packed in jars for future baking into that wonderful backwoods delicacy known as "cracklin bread."

Homemade soap was another product of the wash kettle. Wood ashes saved from winter fires were dumped into an ash hopper and doused with water. In filtering through the ashes, the water leached out the lye in the ashes. This lye was caught in a container at the bottom of the hopper and along with a batch of meat scraps and rancid grease, dumped into the kettle. The mixture was boiled until it thickened into a strong, pungent, dirt-fighting soap. That was in a time before women ever heard of "dishpan hands" and automatic washing machines.

Washing machines, water heaters, detergents and store-bought lard and bacon, spelled doom for the old wash kettle as a major farm utensil. Today it has taken on new value as a prized antique and collector's item.

Antique dealers say many of these big old black kettles found in the midwest and other sections of the country west of the Appalachians were carried in on wagons and sometimes on the backs of early settlers from Virginia and North Carolina. At that time they were considered so valuable they were listed in estate settlements and mentioned in wills made by householders.

These old utensils now command a price more than 10 times the original cost.

useful adjunct to the manufacture of apple butter and the boiling down of white oak bark ooze as a spring tonic for ailing poultry.

The huge old pot may have had other uses and probably did, but we remember it best as being used for washing clothes and rendering lard. In the first job it was our delegated duty to build and maintain a fire under the kettle and keep it filled with water. In the second, we kept the fire going and presided over it with a wooden paddle, continually stirring the boiling, melting fat trimmed from freshly slaughtered porkers. This usually took the better part of a day and ended only when the liquid was clear and the cracklings done enough to eat. Then the hot grease was

Honors Martin County Firms

Three operations of the Martin County Coal Corporation were recently honored by the National Safety Council for their outstanding safety performance in 1976. Honored were Lee Construction Company, South Side Mining & Construction Company and the Martin County Coal Corporation's preparation plant.

Vincent Tofany, president of the National Safety Council, presented Certificates of Commendation to each operation. In making the presentation Tofany said, "This honor has been well-earned, but the greater reward lies in the knowledge that your achievement in accident prevention has prevented many injuries. Please accept my warm personal congratulations, and please, also, extend to your management staff, supervisors and employees my commendation for their share in this achievement."

The awards were based on evaluations of injury rates ending Dec. 31, 1976.

Lee Construction Company, a surface mine, operated from Oct. 18, 1975 through Dec. 31, 1976 without a lost-time injury in a period representing 108,473 total man hours. This operation was also honored in 1974 by the U.S. Department of the Interior and the Holmes Safety Association for amassing 84,683 man hours without a lost-time injury. The "Sentinels of Safety" award was presented as part of a program by the Mining Enforcement and Safety Administration to give recognition to coal mining companies with outstanding safety and accident prevention records.

South Side Mining & Construction Company, also a surface mine, has never had a lost-time accident since beginning operations early in 1975. This represents 122,235 man hours for the period ending Dec. 31, 1976.

The Martin County Coal Corporation preparation plant had worked since April 30, 1975 and amassed 100,661 man hours without a lost-time injury.

Accepting the awards for Martin County Coal Corporation were Raymond A. Bradbury, president and general manager; Ed Chafin, director of training; Lee VanDine, manager of surface mining, and Charles Cox, preparation plant superintendent.

5-Co. Heart Clinic
Slated at Pikeville
