Coal Severance Funds Slashed

Floyd 'in Bind,' Says Wells As Revenues Drop

County Judge-Executive Bill Wells went to Frankfort last Thursday and came away with a $76,896.40 check representing Floyd county's share of the coal severance tax funds distributed to 68 counties.

That amount was far short of the $181,432.67 received from that source last year, but Judge Wells and other judges across the state took some comfort in the fact that handling of the funds will not be left to Economic Aid Boards or otherwise controlled by the state but will be available for roads and will be the responsibility of the judges and their fiscal courts.

(Economic Aid Boards will be phased out as of July 1, and at the same time the county aid and rural secondary funds apportioned by the state will be eliminated.)

Disappointed with the sharp drop in funding — "according to my figures, we're approximately three-quarters of a million dollars short of last year's money" — Wells says he likes the governor's efforts to stay within a tight budget but fears the effect on the counties. "It's going to put Floyd county in a bind," he added. "We'll just have to do the best we can with what we get."

Last year, Floyd county received $1,212,771.64, exclusive of severance tax and revenue sharing funds, he said.

In addition to the reduced coal severance funds, the county will receive funds from the 9% gasoline tax, but this has been reduced to about $390,000, Judge Wells said. Revenue sharing is expected to be cut to around $250,000.

The $1.8 million distributed last week to Floyd and 45 other counties is from the state's energy road fund that is earmarked for coal-producing counties.

Mobile Home Fire Claims Webb Child

Faulty wiring of a type now outlawed by modern building regulations was pointed to as the probable source of a mobile home fire early Saturday morning at Town Branch, near here, which claimed the life of seven-month-old Amanda Webb and seriously burned her parents.

The infant died in a fire which originated from aluminum wiring in the bedroom floor of her parents, Hansel and Debbie Lynn Webb, spread to the child's room and eventually destroyed the trailer, according to Prestonsburg Fire Chief Tom Blackburn.

Blackburn said the wiring, which was banned some years ago as being a fire hazard, had been knotted in order to take up slack in the wire length.

Mr. and Mrs. Webb, who were said to have suffered second and third degree burns over a third of their bodies, were apparently burned before they could rescue their child from its room which was separated from theirs by a bathroom.

Blackburn said when firefighters and

INFLATION, CIRCA 1924

The record isn't at hand, but the price of gasoline must have been of some concern, back in 1924—it may have been 15 or 20 cents a gallon. Ken Peters, of Martin, has supplied us with paragraphs from newspapers of that day, 56 years ago, which indicate as much.

For example, The Marion Star wrote: "If the price of gasoline keeps going up, it may prove cheaper to buy shoes."...And the Cincinnati Enquirer, same year: "If the price of gasoline goes much higher, our silk-shirted laborers may have to go to work to support their cars."... And the Athens, Ga. Daily News: "Dollar (a gallon) gasoline would at least relieve the congestion in the emergency wards."

CHANCE OR RISK?

There was a time when I would buy a chance on anything, waste my last dime on a punchboard, trying for a prize which I never won. Now I've merely registered for a chance at a Cincinnati Reds Week-End, and, since they're so lousy they embarrass themselves as well as the rest of us, it would be my luck to win. That's a chance—or risk—I should not have taken.

That snide remark might shake those Reds out of their slump. Seems that they went on a 10-game winning streak last year after I had declared them hopeless.

THEN AND NOW

Some years ago, we struggled with linotypes, tramp printers and all the other uncertainties of the trade. Time was when the deadline shifted from week to week; it all depended on our good or bad fortune. Things at one stage got so bad that the late Ed Arnold ribbed me about "that tri-weekly of yours—try to get out one week, and get out the next."

Now, we're at the mercy of a computer. Pretty modern, we'd say. But far from perfect. In fact, an esoteric con-

Two Jailed Here In '79 Burglary

Identity of the principals in the burglary a year ago of the Frasure Ammunition and Gun Shop at Bonanza from which an estimated $12,000 worth of guns were stolen is no longer a mystery.

Deputy Sheriff Philip Neeley, who has been working quietly on the case for several months, announced last Wednesday that he had confessions from two men who were jailed here last week, that a third man is sought and that warrants for others may be asked.

Jailed were Marty Gore, 20, of Wheelwright, and Marvin Clay, 23, of Louisville, formerly of Prestonsburg.

Neeley said Clay came and surrendered. He added that the whereabouts of Randy Gentry are being sought. The gun shop was burglarized May 26, 1979 when 45 guns were taken. Only two of the weapons have been recovered.

Other persons booked at the county jail during the past week, charges against them, and arresting officers are:

Elden Hall, no child support, by Deputy Sheriff P. Neeley and State Trooper G. Dawson; Homer Hall, terroristic threatening, by State Trooper Dudleyson; Joseph D. Burke, refusal to have truck weighed, no registration receipt, Highways Enforcement Officers M. Stone and E. Mullins; Sally Williams, forgery, by Deputy Sheriff F. Hardin and G. McGarey; Della Weddington, 3rd degree assault, by State Trooper Rederick and Martin policeman H. Lester; Johnny Weddington, 1st degree wanton endangerment, by State Trooper Rederick and Martin policeman H. Lester; Johnny Stumbo, no permit to exceed truck width, Highways Enforcement Officers John A. Adkins and Joe Howard; Chester Keathley, 2nd degree wanton endangerment, by State Trooper Dudleyson; John

State To Help Martin But Asks Promise To Act

The city of Martin received both good news and a scolding from Bureau of Natural Resources Commissioner Kenneth C. Imes this week.

The good news is that money will be available from the Community Flood Damage Abatement Program to repair the city's sewer system. To get it, however, Mayor Larry B. Hall will have to give written assurances that the sewer project will not go the same way as the city's dormant stream channelization project.

Damage to the main sewer line and to several lift stations, caused by the 1977 and 1978 floods, has caused a large pond of raw sewage to accumulate in a depression parallel to Beaver Creek and upstream from Martin's water intake. "We are well aware of the environmental problem which the Martin sewer system is causing, and we are prepared to recommend this project for immediate funding," Imes wrote to Hall recently.

At the same time, Imes noted that $100,000 from the flood damage fund had been set aside in 1977 for the Beaver Creek channel project. "To date, there has been no progress on the Beaver Creek project. Further, the money appropriated for that project, by being in a special account, has drawn no interest for two and a half years," he wrote.

Teachers, Other Personnel Hired, Pay Raise OK'd

In a three-hour meeting, one of its longest, the Floyd County Board of Education last Tuesday evening decided a multiplicity of issues, including when the next school term will begin and end, who will teach, how much teachers will be paid and details of the overall school program.

(The lists of teachers for the coming year and of other personnel employed appear in separate stories, elsewhere in this edition.)

The salary schedule for teachers which was adopted at the meeting provides a $900 across-the-board pay raise. The lowest paid teacher next year will be paid $10,630; the highest, $18,505.

The school calendar adopted at the meeting provides early dates for the opening and closing of the next school term. Opening day for teachers will be August 12 and the first day of school for pupils will be August 13. The calendar envisions closing of the term on May 6, with the last day for pupils to be May 5.

The early opening, as well as other items of the calendar, was planned on the basis of experience with bad weather during the winter which has interrupted classes and caused late closing dates.

Four official holidays were marked—Labor Day on Sept. 1; Thanksgiving, Nov. 27; Election Day, Nov. 4 and New Year's Day.

Christmas is not marked as a holiday, but the period, Dec. 20 through Dec. 28, is scheduled as a vacation. Nov. 28, the day following Thanksgiving, will also be a vacation, as will be April 3, Floyd County Teachers' Association Day. Spring vacation in March is not on the new calendar but April 9-10, date of the KEA convention, will serve for the spring break. The four in-service days for teachers planned for February will be on days when road conditions forbid school bus operation.

After receiving official notice that the school system had been approved for the Gifted and Talented Program, with $18,000 made available for it the next school year, the board designated Clark and Prestonsburg schools for the first units of special instruction for gifted students. Supt. Pete Grigsby, Jr. said the

Autopsy Jury Rules Slaying 'Justifiable'

A jury empaneled for the inquest in the slaying of Chester Calhoun, Prestonsburg man, June 7 at Thealka deliberated only six minutes last Friday before deciding that the slaying was justifiable homicide and committed in self-defense.

The hearing, conducted by Johnson County Coroner Bill Phelps, elicited conflicting testimony. Trooper Nickels and Johnson Deputy Sheriff Guy Dozier, who was with Nickels when the Calhoun car was stopped, contended that Calhoun "was like a man gone berserk," fighting and threatening to kill the trooper. Mrs. Ada Calhoun, widow of the slain man, claimed her husband was dragged from his car, beaten with a blackjack and shot.

The two officers testified that they stopped the Calhoun car, which was being driven by Mrs. Calhoun, because a headlight was out. They intended they said to issue a warning, but Dozier, who went to the passenger side of the car while the trooper talked to Mrs. Calhoun, the driver, decided to place Calhoun under arrest after he became abusive.

Nickels said he then went to the passenger's side of the auto and that they pulled Calhoun from the car, whereupon Calhoun resisted their efforts to restrain him and take him to the police cruiser. "He was extremely strong. It was all we could do to get him back to the cruiser," Nickels said.

At the cruiser, he said, they got one handcuff on Calhoun who then jerked free.

Nickels said he struck at Calhoun with his flashlight but could not say if he hit him. In the ensuing struggle the trooper and Calhoun rolled over the nearby embankment, according to Nickels.

"I had hold of his ankle," the officer testified. "He kicked me. I yelled back to Guy to call for assistance. Next thing I knew, he raised up with a stick in his hand and threatened to kill me. I pulled my revolver and told him to drop the stick. He lunged at me, one hand reaching for my gun."

The officer said he had no option but to shoot.

"He was like a wild man. As soon as we pulled him from the car, he went berserk," he said. "There was no doubt in my mind he would have killed me."

Dozier's testimony corroborated that of the trooper. He said he was at the cruiser

Efforts of Some To Appraise Land Values Not Serious, Claim

Court commissioners named by Circuit Court Judge Hollie Conley to assess the value of property condemned by the state in 1978 for the construction of KY 80 in the Bull Creek area made no serious appraisal of the tracts, Prestonsburg attorney Jim Hammond charged this week.

Moreover, the opinions of distant appraisers hired by the state Department of Transportation are of little worth when compared with those of local appraisers better acquainted with land values in this area, and greatly underestimate the true value of property here, he said.

Hammond made the remarks by way of explaining the wide discrepancy among appraisals of properties figuring in recent court suits here challenging the state's assessment of their fair market value. Even the substantial increases in compensation awarded by circuit court juries in recent weeks do not reflect the condemned properties' true worth, he argued.

Hammond has represented most of the defendants involved in the suits and was himself a defendant in one case involving a three-acre tract at the junction of US 23 and KY 3 at Watergap.

Compensation for a 6.25-acre corridor taken by the state from a Bull Creek property owned by Inez Hammonds was set at $43,000 by a circuit court jury Monday. Court commissioners had originally reckoned the value of the property to be $18,610, a figure that even the state appraiser did not argue for this week.

Testifying for the Department of Transportation, Lexington appraiser Paul Houlihan argued that the value of Mrs. Hammonds' 210-acre tract prior to condemnation of the 6.25-acre corridor was $106,000 and, after condemnation, $85,500, a depreciation of some $20,500.

Testifying for the defendant, Hindman real estate broker Ivan Childers put the value of the land before condemnation at $210,000 and after at $130,000, a difference of $80,000. Pike county broker Haskell Stratton reckoned the values as $220,000 before and $130,000 after, for a difference of $90,000.

Attorney Hammond said after the trial that condemnation represents only 10 percent of the costs incurred in highway construction, and that the state stands to reap huge benefits in revenues generated by the construction.

'Unwanted Animals Welcome Here'

Unwanted animals have never fared well in Floyd county. The surprise litter of puppies or kittens have all too often been "set out" along roadsides and hilltop garbage dumps or crudely anchored to stream bottoms in weighted sacks. Over the past year or so, however, area residents have slowly become aware of a long overdue alternative.

That alternative is the Floyd County Humane Society's animal shelter on the Middle Creek road, near here.

The alternative is summed up in the message on a sign which greets visitors in the facility's receiving room—"Your Unwanted Animals Are Welcome Here." At first met with skepticism and outright suspicion from many residents, the unselfish efforts of a small group of dedicated and concerned citizens to utilize the $25,000 bequest of a Middlesboro woman, Susan Hawkins Liebig, to establish such a facility here, seem to be paying off as the shelter's service to the county becomes increasingly obvious.

Now, say Keith and Millie Frysinger, the husband-wife team who manage the shelter, the public's reaction has become almost completely supportive and the major problems which they encounter stem from the great amount of use which the shelter is currently receiving.

Faced with a seemingly overwhelming task—that of helping alleviate the problem of the legions of stray animals which populate many sections of the county—the shelter, a relatively modest facility compared to those in larger towns, is doing its job effectively, and much of its current success must be attributed to the work of the Frysingers, themselves.

Having moved to this county from Ohio about a year ago, Keith gave up a well-paying truck driving job in neighboring Knott county when the animal shelter job became available in January. "We really didn't know what would be involved in the job," Mrs. Frysinger (a native of Floyd county) pointed out, "but we'd always been animal lovers, and we felt confident we could handle it."

What the Frysingers found to be involved was a daily routine of hard work and often demands from residents that were all but impossible to meet. Keith, who is also county dog warden, considers the responsibility of stray animal pickup the most frustrating part of his duties.

"Floyd county is a large area with a big stray animal problem," he said, "and with the time and facilities I have it's really hard to answer all the calls that come in." Many times, he pointed out, he

Our Fragile Earth

BY DR. JERRY HOWELL

Director of Environmental Studies
Morehead State University

The Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA), long noted for its dam building and electricity production, has changed direction as a result of steps taken by its new chairman, S. David Freeman, a former White House energy staff member and director of the Ford Foundation's Energy Policy Project. President Carter has suggested that TVA become a practical model, demonstrating solutions to problems of energy, environment and community development.

Although electricity production remains TVA's prime activity, the agency is pursuing programs in energy conservation, environmental education, and alternative energy production. They are also piloting several programs designed to improve the quality of life nationwide, according to a December, 1979 Catalyst for Environment-Energy magazine article.

Thousands of callers swamped TVA's Solar Resource Center when it announced a program to demonstrate solar water heating in a thousand Memphis homes. A test program in northern Georgia to help electric heating consumers install efficient wood heaters caused another TVA office to be flooded with inquiries. The agency gave interest-free loans to cooperating homeowners for wood heater purchases.

In other conservation programs, TVA recently performed 70,000 home energy surveys to show where energy was being wasted and how it could be saved and the agency funded, interest free, weatherization and insulation projects to correct deficiencies. They are also developing a program offering energy conservation loans to business and industry, beginning some wind power experiments in eastern Tennessee, and demonstrating the practical use of solar heating at Land Between the Lakes environmental education facilities in western Kentucky. TVA estimates a savings of billions of dollars in these projects alone.

Other demonstration projects have been started. They have developed a way to burn coal more cleanly through a sulfur-removing fluidized bed combustion power plant. Research is under way to develop a fuel cell to burn gas from coal. They now offer technical assistance for small coal operators, enabling them to comply with facets of the new federal stripmining law. The agency has designed a system for distributing the warm condenser cooling water from power plants to nearby industrial parks, at an equivalent savings of seven million barrels of oil per year. Construction of a demonstration plant for producing ammonia from coal for use in fertilizer has been completed.

In addition to conducting research programs in fish and wildlife restoration, forestry, and agriculture, the agency has development programs in health services, land use planning and flood protection. They have recently agreed to a program for cleaning the air around their coal-fired electricity generating plants. TVA is changing.

will answer a call from a distant community such as Wheelwright, for example, but by the time he arrives, the strays are gone. "We also require that the person who calls in the complaint be present when I arrive," he said, "but lots of times they can't be located either." Frysinger said he has to be selective about answering complaints, opting for those areas from which a number of different calls have been received. Bites from reluctant dogs are not uncommon either, according to Frysinger, but he doesn't consider carrying a gun, as has been suggested by several people. "I figure we're here to preserve the animals, not kill them," he said.

The Frysingers' daily routine begins at 9 a.m. with the daily cleaning of cages. "We keep it clean," Mr. Frysinger pointed out. "It's healthier for the animals, it's healthier for us." When new animals are brought to the shelter, either by residents or through Frysinger's dog collection activity, they are immediately given temporary distemper shots, are wormed, and "dipped" to kill fleas and help heal skin diseases. Information is collected from those who bring in the animals and incorporated into a file.

Animals are kept and cared for at the shelter for two months in hope that they will be adopted, and, according to the Frysingers, about a third of the animals do, indeed, find new homes. The saddest part of the job is the routine selection of the animals who are due to be "put to sleep," a task carried out by Dr. Elaine Painter, a Hindman veterinarian who kindly donates her services to the shelter once a month. "The first time we saw some animals put to sleep we just stood there and shook and sweated," said Mrs. Frysinger. It's hard to resist the temptation to form special attachments to certain animals and extend their stay at the shelter. "Like right now, there's this one white German shepherd female who's always real quiet and shy, but when I walk in her cage she just seems to come to life and starts jumping on me and licking," Keith commented. "It's really hard."

Keith and Millie own a handsome female boxer and have adopted one of the shelter's dogs, a beagle-poodle cross, and are quick to point out the fact that in many cases the most intelligent and healthy animals are the mixed breeds.

According to the Frysingers, the shelter, which has 19 bays for adult dogs, and two large bays for pups and kittens, needs more room. "The bays are designed to accommodate two dogs but sometimes we have to put as many as four or five in together," Keith pointed out. "It's not fair to the animals." Even with problems of crowding, the Frysingers would like to see more people bring unwanted animals to the shelter. "Just the other day," Mrs. Frysinger said, "Keith picked up six stray dogs on the road down from the shelter. If people would only bring their animals here instead of dropping them at dumps."

There are rewards in their work, to be sure, say the Frysingers. Often, people who have adopted animals will thank them by way of letter or contribution to the shelter, and other times they have been able to return a lost animal to a family. "When people who really care about animals and are concerned about the problem in this county let us know they appreciate the shelter and our work," Millie commented, "it makes it worth putting up with the criticism from people who really don't understand what we do here."

Keith and Millie Frysinger say they love their work. They're expecting a baby in the fall and would like to build or add on to the mobile home where they live now by the shelter. "We want to stay here as long as we can," Keith declared.

Their job is increasingly rewarding as local people come to realize the value of their work. "We still get a lot of suspicion from a lot of people," Mrs. Frysinger pointed out, "but when they come here and visit they're always reassured and always seem to really compliment the shelter."

A talk with the Frysingers and a visit to the Floyd County Humane Society's animal shelter should convince the most hard-nosed skeptic that, indeed, "Your Unwanted Animals Are Welcome Here."

A Happy Homecoming After 36 Years

Believing for many years that his mother and stepfather had died while he was serving in the Navy during World War II, Mike Kassell, of Baden, Pa., came back to Martin last week seeking information about his family.

His pilgrimage home had a happier ending than most people would dare imagine. Instead of learning the details of their deaths, he was reunited with his mother and stepfather, Goldie and Oscar Wheeler, who are alive and well and living at Langley. A member of the family said, "I thought they were going to have heart attacks when they saw each other."

It has been 36 years since Kassell left for an extended visit with his father in Pennsylvania. He joined the navy while there and it was during this time that he was told that his mother and stepfather had died.

program is assured of funding in the amount of $39,000 for the following year and that two more units will then be added to the program.

The repair of Allen Central High School, which was severely damaged earlier in the year by fire, was declared an emergency, and Tom O. McGuire, Prestonsburg contractor, was awarded the contract on the work which is scheduled to begin immediately. Cost of the repair has been estimated at $90,000 to $100,000, most of which is covered by insurance. Completion is hoped for in time for the school opening.

The board has also received State Department of Education approval of its plans for an addition to the Prestonsburg Elementary School. The board is yet to acquire property adjacent to the present school campus as a site for the proposed structure. The Betsy Layne High School project will be readvertised for bids, Supt. Grigsby said.

W. W. Burchett was employed by the board as its attorney and Assistant Supt. Ray Brackett was reappointed board treasurer. Veteran maintenance worker, Joe C. Moore, retired as maintenance supervisor, and Volney E. Allen was named his successor. Mr. Moore, who became supervisor on the retirement of George E. Allen, has been with the maintenance department more than 30 years.

The board agreed to develop a recreational program at the Auxier school, in cooperation with the fiscal court, that is similar to programs in effect at the John M. Stumbo and Spruce Pine schools. There, the board has leased to the court the playground for recreational development, to be open to public use when not employed for school activities. The Drift Day Care Center was leased again for one year.

The next board meeting scheduled for July 2, was changed to July 9.

States P.B.S. Goal

This was the statement made at the June 18, 1980 meeting of the Floyd County Board of Education:

As the new president and spokesperson for People for Better Schools, it is my hope that this next year will mean a year of challenges, growth, and co-operation for all of us.

Our goal, as P.B.S. members, has always been the betterment of facilities and educational opportunities for our children. We have a deep desire to see that the quality of education in this county matches that of the best school in the state.

I was told, during a conversation with a minister in this community, that he sees P.B.S. as an organization that is "attempting to recover the original purpose and aims of the board of education. That is, to instruct the children and maintain facilities."

"That, in the simplest of words, is what we are about. I hope and pray this year will be unprecedented in the opportunities offered to our children because we have worked together."

JOYCE EVERLY
President, P.B.S.

Appreciates Support

The Auxier Volunteer Fire Department wishes to thank the people and business concerns of Auxier and surrounding communities for their generous support in making our fund raising held Saturday, May 24, the success it was. This is what it takes as well as physical support if we expect to ever have the fire protection our community expects and deserves.

Again thanks to everyone involved.

Council Dismisses 6, Including Fire Lieut.

Prestonsburg city council Monday dismissed Lt. Bill Green from the city's fire department for failing to answer a fire call and missing five consecutive work shifts.

Green is said to have ignored a request by the Allen fire department for assistance in quelling a fire at Dwale about two weeks ago. According to reports, he was subsequently found asleep while on duty and, following an altercation with Fire Chief Tom Blackburn over the incident, did not return to work.

Sgt. Paul Burke was promoted to lieutenant, replacing Green, and Fireman Ricky Davis was promoted to sergeant.

Five police and fire dispatchers—four funded by the Big Sandy CAP agency and one employed by the city—were also dismissed by the council, meeting in executive session during its regular meeting Monday. Prestonsburg will still have 24-hour dispatching, City Administrator David Evans said this week, but the service will be handled by the fire department.

H.D. Fitzpatrick, Jr., president of the Bank Josephine here and a member of the Floyd County Planning Commission, urged the council to "take leadership" in updating the city's zoning ordinance and educating the public in zoning procedures. City Administrator Evans said the city recently applied for a $500,000 HUD grant to update Prestonsburg's land use plan and zoning map. Results of the application should be known by the end of July, he said.

Officials of many of these coal counties found it difficult to understand why some other counties which produce no coal share heavily in severance tax funds. The apportionments to these counties is from the coal impact fund because coal is hauled over their roads. Madison county, for example, received $37,254 from this fund — almost half the total received by Floyd.

Governor Brown's severance tax proposal, approved by the 1980 General Assembly, specified that 40 percent of the severance allocation be spent on county roads and the remaining 60 percent on the state highway system in the coal counties.

Brown said the funds are the first in his overall effort to give local officials a freer hand in managing their own affairs with revenue generated at the grass roots level.

A second phase of the program will go into effect July 1 when county road allotments to each county will increase approximately 50 percent, the governor said. Judge Wells said he had no idea what this will mean to this county.

Energy road fund allocations to other counties of this section follow:

Johnson, $35,923.20; Knott, $73,729.20; Letcher, $56,810.80; Magoffin, $28,268.80; Martin, $128,111.20; Perry, $67,651.60; Pike, $256,602; Breathitt, $80,350.80.

Bull Creek Regular Baptist Church Burns

This is all that remains of the Bull Creek Regular Baptist Church which was established in the 1800's at the DeRossett school on Bull Creek. Many remember the days when on every third Saturday and Sunday of each month meeting time was held.

A member of the church recently wrote, "A large crowd always attended, and in July was the foot washing service. That was a special occasion, and all week prior to the event there was cooking and housecleaning by the members. Some would prepare a beef, some a mutton, and some a hog, and in July all vegetables from the garden were ready. Everything imaginable to eat seemed to be there. The children of the members that lived away always came home for the big event, and friends and relatives from over the county were always at the foot washing. Many candidates for county office came to campaign with cards and fans."

In 1954, the little church was re-built at the forks of Bull Creek and had been located there for 30 years prior to last month when it was destroyed by fire. Members of the church are hoping it can be rebuilt.

Carter Cuts Food Stamp Rolls; Increases Funding

New food stamp legislation signed on May 26 by President Carter authorizes increased food stamp funding to respond to unemployment and inflation, while at the same time removing 800,000 people from the program and reducing costs by three-quarters of a billion dollars.

Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Carol Tucker Foreman said program-tightening measures approved by Congress and signed into law by the President will cause 650,000 people with incomes near the poverty line to lose their eligibility for food stamps in fiscal year 1981. Some 150,000 students also will be removed from the program.

"The law will allow USDA to make needed management improvements in this vital program," Foreman said. "It includes all of the proposals made by the President in March to help balance the federal budget. These include authorization of substantially increased appropriations over the next year to help meet needs caused by increased unemployment and inflation."

Measures that will curb potential spending for food stamps by $148 million this year and $620 million in fiscal 1981 are also included, Foreman said.

Under the new law's funding authority, Congress can legally appropriate up to $9.491 billion for 1980 and $9.739 billion for 1981, she said. Previously, the ceilings were set at $6.188 for fiscal 1980 and $6.236 for fiscal 1981. The revised authorizations and additional money provided in separate legislation came in time to prevent a threatened delay or suspension of June benefits because of insufficient funds.

"Even with the additional spending, the 21 million people who use food stamps will not receive the same level of benefits as under the previous law," Foreman said. The new law cancels the cost-of-living increases originally planned for next year. That means only one increase will be allowed in the next 16 months, and that will come in January.

The legislation also makes it harder for people to qualify to receive food stamps, she said. It requires that participants have net income below a new, lower poverty line limit, and that they have fewer resources. Effective in July, the maximum net income limit for a family of four will be set at $7,450, and it will be updated to $8,200 as had originally been scheduled.

Under the present food stamp law, most food stamp households must have assets worth less than $1,750. The new law will lower this limit to $1,500 beginning Oct. 1. Households of two or more people, in which at least one person is elderly, will not be affected by the change. The assets limit for these elderly households remains at $3,000.

Most of the 200,000 adult students (over 18 and under 60 years of age) who now receive food stamps will be ineligible as of Oct. 1. The only exceptions will be low-income students with disabilities or those who: (1) work more than 20 hours a week, (2) head households with dependents, (3) participate in a federal work-study program, or (4) are enrolled in a work incentive program under the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program.

Other major provisions of the new law aimed at tightening eligibility and management and cracking down on fraud and abuse include:

Expanded authority for states in verifying information provided by applicants about household size and other factors affecting eligibility and benefit levels;

Authorization for USDA and the states to set up, with appropriate safeguards, systems for cross-checking income information furnished by applicants;

A provision for issuance of photo-identification cards in project areas where the USDA secretary of agriculture, in consultation with the inspector general, determines they would be useful in controlling fraud and abuse;

A requirement that the income and resources of household members who are ineligible aliens be considered in determining the household's eligibility for food stamps and the level of benefits;

Increased federal payments for administrative costs for those states that substantially reduce program error rates, and reduced federal payments for those that do not; and

An optional provision that will allow states to determine eligibility and benefits for some applicants and recipients by using "retrospective accounting", a system that takes into account actual income earned in a past month rather than estimated income in the current month.

Foreman said the new law also allows for some expansion of benefits to especially needy groups. "women and children who live in shelters for battered women will now be considered eligible for food stamps," she said. "Grants provided by state and local governments to needy families to help pay heating bills will not be counted as income in figuring food stamp eligibility and benefits. And, effective in fiscal 1982, benefits will be liberalized for elderly families with high medical bills and for working food stamp families that must pay for care of dependents."

A NEW LAW creates a division of rural and municipal roads in the Bureau of Highways. It also sets a procedure for public hearings prior to local government expenditures for roads and streets. Sponsored by Rep. Ronald Cyrus (D-Greenup).

Harnessing Technology For Health Care

By Brian Perry

Like other kinds of power, technology has both a dark and a light side. In recent years, more people have taken heed of the social, spiritual, and economic ills wrought by increased reliance on machines; fewer people pay homage to the creed of salvation through technical progress, a belief that dominated the first half of this century.

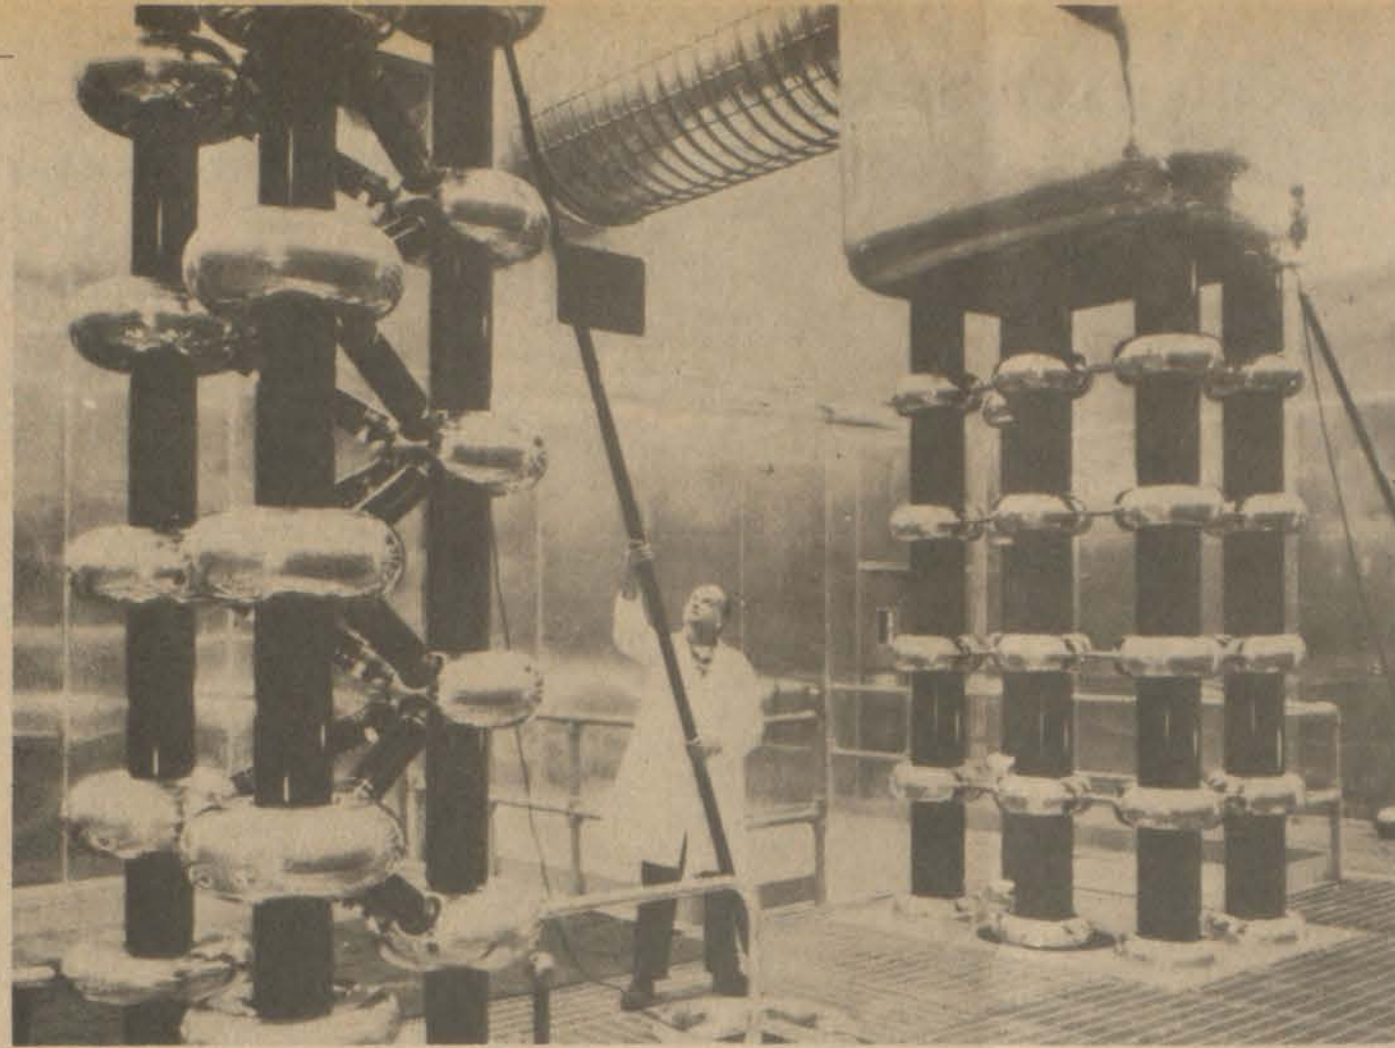

Both the prophets and the protesters of a high-tech future join in praising the contributions to human health made by medical technology. Scientists are using lasers, computers, and atomic energy to create awesome new weapons, but they are also applying those very same tools to ease suffering and save lives in ingenious ways.

Just as astronomers must sometimes calculate very fast motion in outer space, physicians often need to measure extremely slow motion within the body. A new measurement breakthrough, called laser Doppler velocimetry (LDV) works on the same principle as radar to measure speeds as slow as one seventh of an inch per hour.

Scientists bounce laser light off a moving object and observe the frequency of the reflected light. They know that the amount of frequency change, the "Doppler shift," is directly proportional to the velocity of the moving object. Astronomers use the same principle in observing the red shift in galaxies hurtling away from the Milky Way at the speed of light.

Doctors are already using LDV to spot male infertility problems. By telling physicians how many sperm are present and how fast they move, LDV can help determine the best treatment for achieving pregnancy. LDV helps lab technicians perform important cancer tests in mere seconds, rather than hours. It also enables scientists for the first time to measure accurately the rate of blood flow through the eye by shining safe laser light into the retina.

Computers have played a significant role in new medical technology, and recent developments in microcomputers have made possible extremely helpful on-the-spot monitoring devices. The Doernbecher Children's hospital in Portland, Oregon is developing a bedside minicomputer system to monitor respiration and to control oxygen levels in the blood of premature infants. Excess oxygen can cause eye damage; insufficient oxygen can adversely affect the lungs, heart, and central nervous system. The system may eventually correct oxygen problems during birth, and thereby reduce the incidence of cerebral palsy.

In general, computers of all kinds are becoming indispensable to advanced medicine. Without them, no one doctor could effectively tap the vast new stores of information; indeed, he could not even compile the mass of data his electronic detectors supply, never mind analyze it.

The Face of the Future

The peace-time atom is getting yet another chance to redeem itself. The immense Cockcroft-Walton generator fires protons down a half-mile long tunnel at 740 miles per second, then focuses the resultant pions into a pinpoint ray. The pions explode individual atoms within tumor cells without harming healthy tissue.

Other science fictions-turned-fact include space suits and three-dimensional stereo cameras originally designed for the astronauts, and now used for the earth-bound and bed-ridden. Stereo "bodygrams" and heat maps of a patient's body find hard-to-discover bone deformities and detect early stages of breast cancer.

A particularly interesting new device allows a person suffering intolerable pain to stimulate his own brain electronically to produce a relieving, morphine-like substance. As with all man-made miracles, there are problems with the new technology. Practitioners argue over when and how to use new machines, and regulation is slow or nonexistent. Even the best machine, moreover, is worse than useless if defective, especially if little attention is paid to its proper maintenance.

There is no doubt, however, that technical advances in the health field are relieving a wide range of medical ills.

★ Kentucky Afield ★

BY JOHN WILSON

If you catch a bass that puts up one heck of a fight for its size, chances are you've just boated a smallmouth. Most experienced anglers agree that the smallmouth bass is one of our sportiest freshwater fish and provides much more excitement on the end of a line than either of our other two black basses, the largemouth and the Kentucky bass.

The easiest way to tell a smallmouth from a largemouth bass is, obviously enough, to look at its mouth. If the mouth, when closed, extends directly beneath the eye, the fish is a smallmouth. If the mouth extends past the eye, you're holding a large-mouth. (The Kentucky bass has a mouth similar to the smallmouth's but lacks the brownish back and vertical stripes on its side that mark the smallmouth. Kentucky bass also have a small rough patch of "teeth" on the tongue, a characteristic which both the largemouth and the smallmouth lack.)

Smallmouths don't grow as big as largemouth bass, but they can still grow to lunker proportions. The world's record, taken from the Kentucky portion of Dale Hollow Lake in 1955, weighed 11 pounds, 15 ounces.

Smallmouth are well distributed throughout most of Kentucky. The fish is rare only in the western portions of the state (west of the Dawson Springs-Hopkinsville area), according to Pete Pfeiffer, assistant director of the Fish and Wildlife Department's fisheries division.

In many streams in Kentucky, the smallmouth is the predominate sport fish. In a biological survey of the Kentucky River drainage, for example, the smallmouth was encountered at more sampling stations and in greater numbers than any other game fish.

In our lakes, Dale Hollow has a good smallmouth population, Pfeiffer says. These fish exist in fair numbers at Lake Cumberland and Carr Fork Lake and are caught infrequently at other impoundments around the state.

Herrington Lake in Central Kentucky supported a self-sustaining smallmouth population for around 30 years, but these fish disappeared from the lake in the 1950s. Beginning in 1978, the Division of Fisheries began a five-year project to re-establish smallmouth in the lake and so far survival and growth rates look promising.

Grayson lake in Eastern Kentucky is scheduled for an initial stocking of smallmouth this year, and several other possible stocking programs are in the planning stages. Biologists are examining the possibility of establishing the smallmouth as the primary sport fish in Taylorsville Lake when this impoundment in Spencer County is completed.

Also under investigation, according to Pfeiffer, is the possibility of stocking smallmouth bass in the tailwaters below some of the large dams in the state. Pfeiffer stresses that these plans are tentative at present and details have yet to be worked out.

To supply future stocking needs, 70 smallmouth were captured from Dale Hollow and taken to the Clark Hatchery near Morehead this spring. These fish spawned and their 18,000 offspring now being raised at the hatchery will provide the nucleus for future hatchery production.

But for the present, the best smallmouth fishing is to be found in streams and rivers in the eastern, central and west-central parts of the state. The most likely places to locate smallmouth, Pfeiffer says, are around submerged boulders or in the eddy areas below riffles and small waterfalls.

Favorite smallmouth lures are small jigs, spinners or crank baits, but natural baits such as minnows or hellgramites are perhaps the most effective, especially when fished on light tackle with a delicate touch.

Remember that there is a 12-inch minimum size limit on all black basses, including smallmouth. The daily limit is 10 and the possession limit, 20.

If there's a clear, swiftly flowing creek in your neighborhood, it could well pay you to do some investigatory fishing - you might discover you have an almost untapped smallmouth stream practically in your back yard.

Outdoor Sports Suit Slone to a "T"

By Kenny Rice

He leaned over the coffee table that was covered with scrapbooks containing hundreds of pictures, awards and other memorabilia from almost 40 years of participating in outdoor sports. A few feet away from the coffee table is a three-tiered book case overflowing with archery trophies.

"I don't claim to be an authority," he smiled as he thumbed through one of the scrapbooks. "I just enjoy doing certain things, and I try to do them the best I can."

That might sound like a modest explanation for his success in outdoor sports but for this man, Glen Slone, of Maytown, it is a big understatement. When it comes to hunting, fishing training dogs for hunting, archery or picking a banjo, it is hard to find anyone any better than this man known as "T Model," to sportsmen statewide. Outdoor sports suit Slone to a "T."

Slone was introduced to fishing and hunting as a boy in the early 1940's and he put in a lot of time on lakes and creeks and roaming hills with outdoorsmen Roger Stewart, Dr. J.H. Allen. Slone refers to the trio as "being the real experts, they were true sportsmen."

Since May 4, 1943 when Slone "fished all day on Norris Lake and maybe saw only one other boat," he has been hooked on fishing. His fishing expeditions have ranged from a day at Dewey Lake to a week at Lake Guerro in Victoria, Mexico. You name it and "T Model" has fished for it. His catches include a 42-inch, 23-pound muskie at Cave Run in 1978, which is the largest he's caught so far. There have been so many fish caught over the years that it is hard for Slone to remember the sizes and places where the fish were caught. The two muskies and one black bass come to mind because he has certificates on them as being among the largest caught in their respective lakes.

"Fishing doesn't pay me anything but I really enjoy it. I can go fishing and if they aren't biting I'll keep right on fishing. If they are biting and then quit, it doesn't bother me. A lot of close friends won't fish with me," he laughed as he pushed aside some more certificates for big catches. "They know I'll stay and stay. I've taken a sleeping bag with me many times and I'd drop anchor, sleep a few hours and get right back up and fish some more."

His Mexico trip was a fisherman's dream. Slone describes the experience as "fabulous." "We didn't catch too many big ones but there were plenty of fish. We would catch one with every cast."

One of his most vivid fishing memories is about a fish he didn't want to keep, but the fish wanted to stay.

"I read about a similar happening in one of Bill Dance's fishing books," he explained. "Dance had caught a fish, unhooked it and as he was throwing the fish back in the water, the fish jumped the bait again. I wondered about that until the same thing happened to me. It was a day when I'd throw the bait in and there would be 20 that went for it. I caught this one fish that was hardly big enough to keep and when I threw it back in the water it jumped my hook again. I've never seen anything like it."

Slone says concentration is the key to being a good fisherman. "When you throw the bait in and reel it in slow the next time and vice versa. You have to remember what you did the last time. Some people fish and look up in the woods for hunting locations at the same time."

Most of the hunting Slone does now is with a bow. In January, 1979 he received the American Bow Hunters Association Expert-Master Small Game Award for having killed squirrels, rabbits, chuck, carp, bullfrogs and turtles with a bow. The ABHA allows the bow hunter four years to achieve this feat. Slone impressively did it in one year. What is even more amazing is that "T Model" has been involved in archery for less than four years.

"I started shooting with a bow and arrow in October, 1976. I thought it would be fairly easy but soon found out how wrong I was. When I first went deer hunting with a bow, deer ran past me and I couldn't hit one," he smiled. "I started practicing hard after that."

He killed a spike buck while bow hunting at Jenny Wiley last year. The buck outweighed all others at Jenny Wiley that were killed in 1979. He has won more than 50 trophies in archery tournaments. Three times he has scored a "Robin Hood," which is shooting an arrow into the bullseye and then hitting the bullseye again by splitting the arrow already there.

He started training dogs for hunting a few years back and now several area hunters bring their dogs for him to prepare to hunt.

As he said earlier, he doesn't claim to be an authority only a participant. Everyone who has ever fished, hunted or drawn a bow would love to be as good as Glen "T Model" Slone.

Pharmacy Footnotes

by HAROLD COOLEY

Drugs and medication should be handled with care. Take only those drugs and medications prescribed or recommended by your doctor. Do not decide, without consultation, to substitute a generic equivalent for a trade-name drug. That is a decision that should be made by a physician, although you certainly can ask him to prescribe generically whenever possible. Do not purchase non-prescription drugs in larger quantities unless really needed. Smaller sizes often turn out to be more economical because many medications deteriorate with time. The exception would be a chronic illness that requires use over a long period.

We at COOLEY PHARMACY know that your pharmacist is your physician's consultant. We are a great source of information about the newest drugs and products available. If you are taking more than one type of medication, we will make sure that each type of medicine is compatible with the other. There is always a registered pharmacist on duty to serve you, and we're always glad to answer questions. See us at No. 2 Town Center Bldg., 886-8106. Mon.-Fri. 9-5:30; Sat. 9-5.

Ky. Surface Mining Hearing Set July 23

A public hearing will be held at Hazard July 23 on the adequacy of Kentucky's proposal for enforcing the Federal Surface Mining Act.

David C. Short, Region II director of the Interior Department's Office of Surface Mining, said the hearing will begin at 7:30 p.m. at the Hazard Community College auditorium. Short said written comments or other information may be sent to his Knoxville office, at 530 Gay Street, Knoxville, Tennessee 37902, to supplement or in lieu of oral testimony at the hearings. Such written comments must be received on or before July 23 to be considered, he said.

"We now are at a crucial stage in the process of determining whether the proposal submitted by Kentucky is adequate to assure enforcement of the provisions of the Federal Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act," Short said. "This hearing and comment period will be the last opportunities for the public to make its views on Kentucky's proposed program known to OSM."

Secretary of the Interior Cecil D. Andrus will decide by September 3, whether Kentucky's proposal, as modified by revised material submitted on June 12 is adequate for it to be given primacy in enforcing the federal act.

Hearing Here Today On Elderly Services

The first of four public hearings on services provided to Kentucky's elderly population will be held today (Wednesday) at the Archer Park Senior Citizens Center, at 1 p.m. The hearings will be conducted by the Department for Human Resources.

According to the department's aging services director, Fannie B. Dorsey, the hearings will focus on the proposed state plan on aging. The plan addresses social and nutritional services for Kentuckians 60 years and older administered through the amended federal Older Americans Act.

Dorsey said the hearings are open to persons interested in the services and programs for older Kentuckians.

Copies of the draft plan or summaries may be obtained by contacting the Department for Human Resources, Division for Aging Services, 275 E. Main Street, 6th floor west, Frankfort, Ky. 40621. One copy per person or group is available free of charge.

The placid Indian squaw of Old West myth in fact had plenty to say about everything. The July Reader's Digest notes that in some tribes she could end her marriage—if her husband displeased her—simply by chucking his belongings outside the lodge.

A new technical buzzword is AI, for artificial intelligence. The July Reader's Digest describes AI as the science of making machines do things that would require intelligence if done by men. One of AI's more spectacular developments is a machine that can scan a page, recognize letters, words and phrases, apply the correct phonetic rules and read the text aloud—a godsend for the blind.

What's An Osteopath?

By Georgette Wagner

A short, rather heavy-set woman with light, curly hair entered the doctor's office, complaining of an earache.

The doctor teased her about living it up too much, hoping to distract her from the pain while he carefully examined her throat and ear.

"You have some blockage in your eustachian tube," he told her. He prescribed some medicine for her to take when she returned home. Then, for the next few minutes, he manipulated and massaged her neck and head.

He touched the underside of her neck, seeking vertebrae in the spine that might be out of alignment. His fingers sensed a knotty feeling along one vertebrae. Without removing his fingertips from that area, he adled the woman's head, extended her neck slightly, slowly rotated her head back and forth to relax the muscles, and then quickly turned her head to one side. The vertebrae slipped back into place almost painlessly.

According to the doctor, the misplaced vertebrae had irritated the surrounding tissue. Realigned, more blood was now able to reach the ear area. This, in turn, would reduce the swelling and help drain the excess fluid that blocked the eustachian tube.

The doctor is not an M.D. He is a D.O.—a Doctor of Osteopathy—one of the over 15,000 osteopaths treating more than 20 million Americans annually.

D.O.s are not chiropractors. Nor are they bone specialists or physical therapists. Like an M.D., they are fully trained and licensed physicians who can prevent, diagnose, and treat illness, disease, and injury. Like M.D.s, D.O.s prescribe drugs, perform surgery, and use X-rays.

Unlike M.D.s, osteopathic doctors do not attend medical school. Instead, they go to one of the osteopathic schools licensed by the American Osteopathic Association. Rather than receive an M.D., they are awarded a D.O.

A D.O. takes the same courses and receives the same training as an M.D. He is required to complete four years of college, four years of osteopathic school, and a one-year rotating internship.

Manipulative Therapy

In addition to the education that an M.D. receives, the D.O. must also take 500 credit hours of what the profession terms manipulative therapy. This is a technique in which the physician uses his hand to correct, tone, or develop the musculoskeletal system. Some medical schools, such as Harvard, offer similar instruction, although the name is different and the course is optional. (The term Harvard uses is bio-mechanics.)

Manipulative therapy lies at the heart of the difference between D.O.s and M.D.s. D.O.s place a much greater emphasis on the role

SIGNS STRIPMINE REGS.

Gov. John Y. Brown has signed Kentucky's new strip-mine regulations, and the package will be resubmitted to the federal Office of Surface Mining this week.

The new regulations have been designed to allow Kentucky regulatory powers over mining operations within the state.

Secretary Jackie Swigart of the state Department for Natural Resources and Environmental Protection told coal industry representatives this week she hopes to hear from OSM on the Sept. deadline, but she said operators should "not panic because we still have time to change" the regulations if the federal agency is dissatisfied at that point.

that the muscles and bones play in disease. They argue that since the musculoskeletal system makes up more than 60% of the body, disturbances of that system can and do affect other organs and bodily functions.

There is some research to support their theory. Dr. Irvin M. Korr, a researcher at the osteopathic school at Michigan State, found that when spinal vertebrae are out of alignment, the number of nerve impulse firings increase in the affected area. Over a long period of time, this can cause the tissue to degenerate or break down. However, Korr found that manipulative therapy can reduce the nerve impulse firings and return the tissue to its normal state.

Nonetheless, the question is far from resolved. Some hospitals refuse osteopathic physicians the right to use their facilities. But, as one D.O. said in the January, 1975, Virginia Medical Monthly, "No physician in good conscience can ignore accepted and successful methods of treatment for the sake of philosophy or medical school politics."

That is the point that D.O.'s like to emphasize. They claim that their specialized techniques do not replace, but augment more traditional medical methods.

The American Medical Association apparently agrees. Since 1967, it has campaigned to persuade the osteopathic schools and the D.O.s themselves to join AMA's ranks. However, osteopathic doctors have largely been unresponsive to this request, fearing their smaller numbers will be swallowed up by the group of M.D.s.

But while acceptance has been slow, osteopathy appears to be entering a renaissance. Michigan State, North Texas State, and Ohio University recently opened schools of osteopathy while the Oklahoma and West Virginia legislatures voted to support non-university affiliated schools. In New York and New Jersey, two schools have been granted pre-accreditation status.

Most hospitals permit D.O.s to use their facilities. In addition, there are more than 200 osteopathic hospitals in 31 states with 25,000 beds.

All 50 states grant osteopathic doctors licenses to practice medicine and surgery, and the full rights awarded to physicians. In 27 states and the District of Columbia, physicians are granted licenses by boards comprised of M.D.s and D.O.s. In eight states, the boards are made up solely of M.D.s and in 15 states, only D.O.s.

Accredited osteopathic hospitals also participate in the federal Medicare and Medicaid programs.

Nor are osteopathic colleges significantly easier to enter than medical schools. Ohio University turned away 92% of a pool of highly qualified candidates for its freshman class. One third of those accepted had advanced degrees and the grade point average of the entire class was 3.3.

Community Impact

Like the AMA, the American Osteopathic Association is a powerful and politically astute organization. It is largely responsible for the surge of interest in D.O.s. Shrewdly, the AOA has stressed that osteopathic doctors emphasize general practice rather than specialization. This is an attractive feature during a period of physician shortage.

Over 75% of the D.O.s are in general practice, many of them serving in rural communities that would otherwise be without a physician. In comparison, about 75% of the M.D.s specialize.

The impact can be enormous. In Michigan, which has the largest number of osteopathic physicians, D.O.s represent 25% of the state's doctors, but they account for 40% of the state's general practitioners.

However, D.O.s can and do specialize in areas ranging from gynecology to psychiatry. To become specialists, D.O.s must serve an additional two to four years of residency or fellowship training in an approved hospital.

In addition, the AOA also likes to stress that all osteopathic doctors are required to complete at least 150 credit hours of continuing education every three years.

Osteopathy began during the Civil War when Army doctor Andrew Taylor Still became dissatisfied with the primitive surgical and drug techniques practiced on wounded soldiers. He preferred to view all body systems as parts of a whole and treated his patients accordingly.

There were three types of physicians practicing at that time—allopaths, homeopaths, and eclectics. Allopaths (precursor to the modern M.D.) advocated massive doses of drugs that were supposed to produce effects opposite of disease. Homeopaths used smaller amounts of drugs to immunize the patient. The eclectic used both methods, but tended to prefer drugs made from vegetable matter.

Educational Quality

All three groups quickly condemned Still's philosophy. Their criticism increasingly focussed on the poor quality of education that osteopaths received, a criticism shared by some D.O.s.

Dr. C.M.T. Hulett, the osteopath who founded the A.T. Still Research Institute, said that the American Association for the Advancement of Osteopathy (forerunner of AOA) lacked the authority to maintain national educational standards at osteopathic schools. Partly from his action and partly for economic reasons, the number of osteopathic schools dropped from 26 to eight at the turn of the century.

The question of education for all doctors came under close scrutiny in 1910 when Abraham Flexner issued his famous report claiming that the education at most of the nation's 155 medical schools was inadequate. He recommended that only 31 institutions be allowed to continue operations.

Licensing

Congress first recognized D.O.s as equivalent to M.D.s in 1929, but it was not until the 1960's that D.O.s were given equal national recognition from the federal government. And while Vermont first licensed a D.O. in 1896, it was not until 1973 that the last of the 50 states, Mississippi, granted D.O.s full practice rights.

The battles between M.D.s and D.O.s were particularly intense in California. In the 1950's, the state medical association, wishing to enlarge its AMA state delegation, enticed a large number of osteopathic physicians to join. A bill eventually prohibited D.O.s from receiving licenses in California. The impact was devastating. Eighty-five percent of the D.O.s in California became M.D.s.

But in 1974, the California Supreme Court struck down the legislation, ruling that an osteopathic doctor's training permitted him to perform the "full range of activities commonly thought of as constituting medical science," and that an osteopathic examining board could insure that unqualified physicians were not "loosed upon the public."

The ruling eventually led to a 1975 California statute that makes it a misdemeanor for any hospital to refuse an osteopath a staff position.

The growing interest and recognition of D.O.s has been partly upheld by studies into their qualifications. A Journal of the American Medical Association report said that the percentage of M.D. graduates who failed state licensing exams was two times that of D.O. graduates.

As the number of osteopathic physicians increases in the country, more and more consumers will have the choice between an M.D. or a D.O. As one D.O. said, "Perhaps someday medical schools will begin awarding a common degree, like 'Doctor of Health,' instead of 'M.D.' and 'D.O.' and every doctor will have the choice of chemotherapy, surgery, medication, or physical manipulation."

The Department for Human Resources advises that early summer is a good time to apply for copies of birth certificates needed to enroll children in school this fall. The Department processed 210,000 requests for birth certificates this year. Send requests for applications to the department's Office of Vital Statistics, 275 E. Main, Frankfort, Ky. 40621.

In the two years since the Kentucky Department for Human Resources received its first grant from the federal Department of Energy to weatherize homes occupied by economically disadvantaged Kentuckians, 11,548 homes have been weatherized with window repairs, weather stripping, storm windows and attic insulation.

QUESTION:

"I've tried hard to conserve natural gas. But is it helping?"

ANSWER:

"Yes! Usage is down 15%, a savings that helps all of us now ... and for the future."

Thanks to your conservation efforts, natural gas usage by residential customers has actually decreased—down approximately 15% since 1972. That's progress.

This doesn't mean, however, that the need for conservation is any less pressing. It is important that we continue to find ways to use energy more efficiently.

And while you continue to conserve at home and at work, Columbia is continuing and expanding efforts to add to our natural gas supply capabilities. We've stepped up our drilling programs. New pipelines are planned. Vastly expanded storage facilities are under construction. And new gas-producing technologies are being researched and developed—with synthetic gas already a factor in our supply picture.

All of the effort—yours and ours—has been worth it. Conservation is helping to keep natural gas the best buy for your energy dollar. Continued conservation will help keep it a value ... and available. For ideas on ways to save energy, ask for our free booklet, "The Everyday Energy Saver's Guide."

COLUMBIA GAS
Still your best energy value.
And we want to keep it that way.

You Can't Call It Home

These two residents of the Floyd County Humane Society Animal Shelter on the Middle Creek Road seem to be saying, "We're looking for a good home. How about it? This place isn't bad to visit, but you can't call it home." At left is Old Yeller, a light yellow female who has a good disposition. Bobo, at right, is a "good old dog", and either would make a fine companion or reliable watch dog. They can be adopted at the Animal shelter on the old Middle Creek Road. For more information, call 886-1042.

New "Jenny Wiley" At Summer Theatre

When audiences come to the Jenny Wiley Summer Music Theater at Prestonsburg's Jenny Wiley State Park to see the theatre's production of JENNY WILEY! they can expect to be pleasantly surprised.

The JENNY WILEY! of today is not the same show it was when it was first produced in 1971 and 1972.

First of all, according to General Manager Jack Wicker, the script and lyrics have been substantially rewritten. "The story is, of course, the same," he said. "The changes are not that drastic. They just help to tighten up the show a little bit."

The tale of the brave pioneer woman who made a dramatic escape from her Indian captors across the hills of Eastern Kentucky was first put to the stage at Jenny Wiley State Park in 1967. That version, a non-musical written by a former director at the theatre, did not last beyond that summer. When Mitch Douglas became the theatre's General Manager in 1969, he felt that theatre should have a musical version of the story, in keeping with the tradition of musical theatre presented at the park.

By 1971, Douglas had collaborated with songwriter Ben Keaton to produce the current version of JENNY WILEY! The production of the 1971 and 1972 seasons was staged on a massive set with ramps running up into the hills surrounding the theatre. The set for the Wiley cabin was equipped with gas jets to provide real flames while it was being destroyed by the Indians. The show also featured 14 songs and a lengthy second act ballet.

Even though the show has been dormant for the past eight years, Douglas (who is now a literary agent for such notables as Tennessee Williams and Shelly Winters) has continued to improve the script. Today's version of the show runs a bit more smoothly, according to Wicker. The script has been revised, a song or two cut, and other songs written to replace them.

This season's production also has a new look. Because the show will be presented every Friday night (between the theatre's other productions of HELLO, DOLLY, LI' ABNER, and FIDDLER ON THE ROOF) the set had to be made a bit less unwieldy. Therefore, the huge ramps are gone. Replacing them is a set that is more functional and that uses the natural slope of the hillside instead of the ramps.

Although efforts were made to keep the choreography and staging in the 1971 and 1972 productions the same, Matt Orme, the show's director, and Locky Lambert, the choreographer have devised new staging and dance numbers for the current production.

The cast's unfamiliarity with the show is an advantage, according to Wicker. Because none of the present cast have ever seen the show, they arrived with no preconceived notions about how things should look or sound. That, Wicker says, gives the show a "freshness" that is not often found in other stock productions.

JENNY WILEY! will be presented Wednesday through Saturday, June 25 through June 29, and Friday evenings through August 15. HELLO, DOLLY, will be presented on Wednesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays from July 2 through July 13. Curtain is at 8:30 each evening.

Ticket information may be obtained by writing the theatre at Box 22 Prestonsburg, Ky., 41653, or by calling (606) 886-9274.

Mrs. White Is Named Business School Dean

Leonard W. Philpot, Director of Junior College of Business in Pikeville, has announced the recent promotion of Mrs. Billie Joyce White to academic dean.

Mrs. White is a graduate of Betsy Layne High School, and received her bachelor of science degree from Morehead State University. Before coming to Kentucky Junior College of Business in January, 1976, she was employed for one year as commerce teacher at Belfry High School. While employed at Kentucky Junior College of Business, Mrs. White has been a full time instructor, secretary, and certifying official for the Veterans Administration. Miss White is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George E. Clark, of Harold. She has a six-year-old son, Brian, and they reside at Harold.

One of the busiest and strategically most important places in the world is the 30-mile wide Strait of Hormuz, at the entrance to the Persian Gulf. The July Reader's Digest reports that 31 percent of America's imported oil, 63 percent of Western Europe's and 73 percent of Japan's pass through it. While the inbound and outbound channels are each only two miles wide, a tanker goes through every 16 minutes on average.

Convention time is coming up! From the July Reader's Digest comes an interesting series of "firsts." The first credential fight occurred in 1835. In 1904, the first Presidential primary was held—in Florida. In 1804 the Democrats adopted the first party platform. The longest convention was held in 1924 for 17 hot and steamy days. Alfred E. Smith finally emerged as the Democratic candidate, but he lost to Calvin Coolidge.

E. P. Grigsby Senior Citizen News

The E. P. Grigsby Senior Citizens entertained the Dick Johnson Senior Citizens from Pike county Wednesday, June 18, with a birthday celebration honoring Mrs. Dee Burchett, director of the senior citizens' center at Martin, and a patio theatre program held on the terrace of the Town Plaza housing project.

Myrtle Skeens, Ecie Nunemaker and Minnie Gayheart presented a skit, and poems were read by Lydia Hall, Cecil Ratliff and Stella Justice. Mrs. Goldia Vance presented several piano selections, and Ecie Nunemaker played for group singing.

Senior citizens and the staff of the E. P. Grigsby Center presented Mrs. Burchett with a birthday cake and gifts.

Woman's Club Installs Officers at Wayland

The annual installation of officers of the Lackey-Garrett-Wayland Woman's Club was held at Wayland at the home of Mrs. Otto Martin, the following officers were installed by the newly elected seventh district governor, Miss Ruby Akers, of Drift; President, Mrs. S.M. Martin; first vice president, Mrs. Hansel Bradley (standing in for Mrs. Ronnie Patton, absent); recording secretary, Mrs. Don Hughes; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Otto Martin; treasurer, Mrs. James E. Martin

Miss Akers then gave a full report of the recent KFWC convention held in Louisville. She gave suggestions for club projects from a list of what some of the other clubs are doing, and made a list of suggestions from the Lackey-Garrett-Wayland club members as to what is needed not only at the local and district levels but also on the state level to make the federation a more effective instrument for civic improvement.

Those attending the installation breakfast were Mrs. Lula Coburn, Mrs. Marcella Bradley, Mrs. Pauline Martin, Mrs. Maxine Martin, Mrs. LaFaye Hughes, Mrs. Marcellous Dunfee, Mrs. Avanel Wells, Mrs. Otto Martin, and a guest, Mrs. Mary W. Martin.

The Lackey-Garrett-Wayland Woman's Club recently held a business meeting at the home of Mrs. Joyce Stephens, Garrett.

Following the Pledge to the Flag and devotions by Mrs. Marcella Bradley, the club president, Mrs. Maxine Martin, conducted the business session.

Sewing kits and telephone note pads were distributed for sale by members.

Those present at the business meeting were: Mrs. James E. Martin, Mrs. S.M. Martin, Mrs. Don Hughes, Mrs. Marie Coburn, Mrs. Hansel Bradley, Mrs. Otto Martin, and the hostess, Mrs. Joyce Stephens, who served refreshments at the close of the meeting.

One of the most widely read authors in history, the July Reader's Digest calculates, is Louis L'Amour. His 77 novels have sold more than 100 million copies in 19 languages.

Catlettsburg Fuel Plant Starts Initial Testing

The largest experimental synthetic fuel plant in the United States has begun producing its first liquid product from coal. Major start-up testing began this morning at the Department of Energy's H-Coal pilot plant near Catlettsburg.

The initial run, expected to be the first in a series of progressively longer-duration runs to check out the plant's complex liquefaction system, comes after engineers had first fed coal into the plant on May 29 for short-term equipment tests. The start-up tests are expected to culminate in the fall when the plant will be deemed ready for at least two years of full testing.

Deputy Energy Secretary John C. Sawhill called the initial start-up of the H-Coal plant an important milestone in the development of improved coal-to-liquid technologies that will form the basis of advanced commercial synthetic fuel plants in the 1990s.

When the H-Coal plant operates at full capacity, it will process up to 600 tons of coal per day, subjecting it to temperatures of 850 degrees F and pressure approaching 3,000 pounds per square inch. After several hours in the liquefaction system, the coal emerges as synthetic oil.

Previously, the largest coal-to-liquid plant in the U.S. was the Solvent-Refined-Coal pilot plant at Ft. Lewis, Washington. It has a maximum capacity of 50 tons of coal per day. The Exxon Donor Solvent pilot facility at Baytown, Texas is also about ready to begin operating this month with a capacity of 250 tons of coal per day.

Future full-size commercial synthetic fuel plants based on these processes would be made up of individual modules linked together to process from 15,000 to 30,000 tons of coal per day.

Since the H-Coal pilot plant was completed earlier this year after more than three years of construction, engineers working for Ashland Synthetic Fuels Inc., a subsidiary of Ashland Oil, have been processing oil through the complex array of tanks, vessels, and piping to test the system and prepare for the first coal. Satisfied that the plant was in working order, engineers last week began mixing coal with the fuel oil flowing into the liquefaction system.

After 18 hours of operation, during which key plant systems were evaluated, engineers shut down the coal feed to modify critical valves to withstand the erosion of long-term test runs with coal. Once modifications were completed on June 5, the plant was started up again and is currently operating.

Oil to be produced initially by the facility will be a high-quality synthetic crude oil which can be refined into gasoline or furnace oil, as well as used for other petroleum-based products. While manufacturing this type of synthetic liquid, the H-Coal plant will operate at a capacity of 200 tons of coal per day, producing about three barrels of oil per ton.

Next year, engineers plan to boost the rate of coal fed through the plant to 600 tons per day. The product will then be closer to a No. 6 boiler fuel, again with a yield of three barrels per ton of coal.

The H-Coal process is an outgrowth of a technique developed for the refining industry in the 1960s by Hydrocarbon Research Inc. (HRI), a subsidiary of the Dynallectron Corporation based in McLean, Virginia.

Fifteen years ago in the early stages of development, HRI's small test unit at Trenton, N.J., was processing 25 pounds of coal per day as engineers attempted to understand better the mechanisms by which coal is transformed into liquids. Later, a three-ton per day development unit was operated and in 1973, a contract was awarded to begin designing the Catlettsburg pilot plant.

"We are delighted to begin seeing the results of a development effort begun many years ago," said George Fumich, Jr., currently DOE's Assistant Secretary for Fossil Energy and formerly H-Coal program in the mid-1960s.

"Production of synthetic oil from this facility and others to follow will herald the beginning of a time when this nation can begin replacing foreign crude oil with substitutes made from our own abundant coal supplies," Fumich said.

These plants will lay the "technical foundation for a national synthetic fuels industry that will be the most efficient in the world," he said.

The H-Coal pilot plant is part of a $300 million development program, 87 percent of which is funded by DOE. Industrial partners providing the remainder of the funding are Ashland Synthetic Fuels, Inc., the Electric Power Research Institute, Mobil Oil Corporation, Standard Oil of Indiana, Conoco Coal Development Co., and the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

New Law Gives Cities Home Rule

Things are looking up for Kentucky's 430 cities thanks to a major overhaul of municipal law by the 1980 General Assembly.

Legislation passed by the past session will have a significant effect on every city in the state. Cities will have new responsibilities and a greater capacity to govern themselves.

Much of the reform of municipal law is the result of more than six years of cooperation between local officials, legislators and citizens, whose efforts led to the submission of an 11-bill "package" prepared by the local Government Statute Revision Commission.

When enacted into law in July, the seven measures of the legislative package which passed the General Assembly will make most statutes uniform for second-through sixth-class cities and repeal more than half the 2,200 sections of cumbersome municipal law which have proliferated in the statute books because of the Dillon Rule.

"The Dillon Rule is the basic legal philosophy that local governments possess only those authorities granted to them by the legislature or the state," explained Allan Spader, executive director of the local Government Statute Revision Commission.

JUSTICE SECRETARY TAKES OFFICE

Former assistant director of the FBI, Neil J. Welch, has assumed his duties as Kentucky's Secretary of Justice and special assistant to Gov. John Y. Brown Jr.

Before his retirement from the FBI, Welch was chief of New York field office, the bureau's largest. He gained widespread public recognition for his work with the recent Abscam case in which a number of public officials, including members of Congress, allegedly received money from FBI agents.

A native of Omaha, Neb., Welch joined the FBI in 1951 as a special agent in Omaha. He served posts in Washington; Florida; Buffalo, N.Y.; Michigan and Pennsylvania.

The Kentucky Department of Justice, which Welch will head, includes the Kentucky State Police, the Kentucky Department of Corrections, the Office for Public Advocacy and the Kentucky Crime Commission.

The centerpiece of the revision commission's package, Senate Bill (SB) 41, not only repeals hundreds of the municipal statutes which have accumulated because of the Dillon Rule concept, but, most importantly, gives cities home rule authority. Home rule, which is not a new concept in Kentucky, was granted to Louisville in 1972, to Lexington's urban-county government in 1974 and to counties in 1978.

Under the home rule principle, cities may exercise any power not prohibited by law or the state constitution. SB 41 "turns the equation around," said Spader. Home rule, he said, "allows the legislature to hold the reins and say "no" instead of doling out powers to cities a little bit at a time."

The greater flexibility cities are provided under SB 41 is not absolute, Spader added. Municipalities must still adhere to statutes covering planning, zoning, taxation and where "due process is involved," he added.

"Also, there's a whole body of law requiring accountability for the use of public funds," he said. In these areas and others specified by law "the state maintains an overriding interest."

This overriding interest is apparent in the other bills passed from the revision commission's package. SB 18, for instance, requires all cities to prepare an actual budget and to conduct a yearly audit of funds. The bill also requires cities to use "generally accepted principles of accounting and auditing." Some classes of cities have never prepared a budget or conducted an audit.

Stanley Stratford, legal counsel for the state Department for Local Government, said SB 18 will have the greatest impact of any measure from the legislative package because it provides all cities "a uniform procedure of keeping records of their finances." The measure, he said, takes the best financial practices and establishes a "financial framework for all cities to function on their own."

Another measure from the revision commission's package, SB 26, standardizes the functions of three types of optional city governments--mayor-council, commission and city manager.

The bill also requires all classes or cities to follow a set procedure for writing, adopting and compiling ordinances. The measure, said Stratford, sets certain standards for preparing ordinances which have "never really been spelled out before."

The measure repeals nine chapters of statutes now on the books and establishes a uniform code for all classes of cities.

Other bills in the package establish uniform standards and procedures for the dedication and closing of municipal public ways and prescribe the methods of financing public improvements by special assessments.

For the first time, newly-incorporated cities will be assigned to the appropriate class according to population. In the past, such cities had to begin in the sixth-class, regardless of population.

Four In County On EKU Dean's List

Four students from this county have been named to the Dean's List at Eastern Kentucky University at Richmond. They are Gail B. Daugherty and Larry D. Daugherty, both of Grethel, Rondal E. Goble, of Prestonsburg, and Paula H. Roahrig, of Allen.

To be named to the Dean's List, a student must maintain a 3.5 or better scholastic average for 14 or more credit hours in a semester.

Stumbo Says Health Agencies Outdated and Need Changes

Human Resources Secretary Grady Stumbo said last Thursday that Kentucky's local health departments are outdated and need to change.

"They were founded at a time when the biggest cause of death and disease of the citizens of your counties was infectious disease," Stumbo told the summer meeting in Frankfort of the Kentucky County Judge-Executives Association.

"I am here to tell you today that is not your problem," Stumbo said in an address in the House chamber at the Capital in Frankfort. "Your problem today is aging population, chronic disease, disability."

"Yet we are running health departments based on an outmoded, outdated model not suited for today's problems," he said.

"I do not have in my mind what the new role should be, but there needs to be a shift to a new model to allow more in-home services," Stumbo said. "We need to move out of the era of the infectious-disease model."

"We need a new direction, and we need your help," he told the county judge-executives. "If you work with us, you are going to find the health department will give you more for less dollars."

"I am very supportive of what they have done," Stumbo said. "I am simply saying it is time for a change."

However, Stumbo said, before there can be a change on the local level, there must be a change in the state Bureau of Health Services.

Stumbo said the removal in the mid-1970s of the requirement that the commissioner of the Bureau of Health Services be a physician has resulted in a loss of professionalism in the bureau.

He said that Gov. John Y. Brown, Jr. will announce shortly the appointment of a physician to head health services and that two other physicians will be placed in top management positions.

"You will see vigorous management that will directly affect your county and how you operate," Stumbo said. "If you will give us a chance, I think you will like what you see."

Stumbo also said that next week he will announce the first full-time ombudsman to deal with questions on aging and the first full-time lawyer to work on the problems of nursing homes, including the difficulty with state enforcement of regulations.

He said that by the end of the summer he will have the first draft of a statewide directory of nursing homes ready.

"We have never had that before," Stumbo said. "You are about to get it."

Stumbo said he will also appoint citizen's advisory groups for each nursing home in the state and told the county judge-executives that he wants their assistance in forming the groups.

Hereford, New Member Of Friends of KET Board

Thomas Hereford, III, of Prestonsburg, is a newly elected Friends of KET board member for the Pikeville region.

Hereford is one of 30 representatives from KET's 15 transmitter regions who provide statewide leadership for the Friends of KET. Along with Jewell Cline, of Pikeville, he represents Floyd, Johnson, Martin and Pike counties.

The friends Board members act as liaisons between KET and their region. The major concerns of the Friends of KET are to promote and stimulate public interests in KET, serve as a source of information about public television in Kentucky, help utilize the services of volunteers and obtain funds for KET.

Hereford, an Employment Service supervisor, is enthusiastic about his new position and is eager to establish a strong Friends of KET Regional in the region. He requests that anyone who would like to volunteer or receive more information about the Pikeville Regional Council or KET contact him at Route 5, Box 56, Prestonsburg, Ky. 41653.

Survivor Should Apply Promptly For Social Security, Kelly Says

Surviving dependents of a deceased worker should apply for social security benefits as soon as possible following the worker's death, Jim Kelly, Social Security Director for the Big Sandy area, said recently.

Applying promptly will allow benefits to start in the shortest possible time. In addition, Kelly said, some benefits cannot be paid for months before the month the application is filed.

Social security benefits can be paid to these survivors: — unmarried children 18, or 18-22 if full-time students; — unmarried children over 18 who were disabled before 22 and remain disabled; — a surviving widow or widower of any age caring for a child under 18 or disabled who gets benefits; — widow, widower, 60 or over; — disabled widows or widowers 50-60; — dependent parents 62 or over.

Benefits can also be paid to a surviving divorced wife if she was married to the deceased worker 10 years or more.

Before any benefits can be paid, the worker must have had credit for a certain amount of work covered by social security. "The claims can be processed much faster if certified copies of birth, marriage and divorce records are submitted at the time the claim is filed," Kelly said. "We encourage people to file these claims by telephone," Kelly said.

A leaflet, "Social security survivors benefits," is available at the Prestonsburg social security office. The people there will be glad to answer any questions about social security benefits. The office is located between Prestonsburg and Paintsville on U. S. 23. The toll free telephone number is listed in your local directory.

THE PROTECTION and Advocacy Division of the state Office for Public Advocacy represented 509 developmentally disabled Kentuckians last year. The division's staff helped school-age children get into educational programs, represented adults in job discrimination cases and assisted others in claims for financial assistance.

June—Year of the Altar

By Neveyle Shackelford

The late naturalist, Hal Borland, once described the month of June as the year at the altar, a bride with a bouquet of roses, gowned with sunrise, veiled with morning mist, jeweled with dew, and romantic as a full moon.

This is a most apt description. This wonderful month does, indeed, have all the rare beauty of a young bride with all her lovely accessories and adornments. And even more, as James Russell Lowell wrote, "Then, if ever, come perfect days." It is forsooth, a month of leaves and roses, "when pleasant sights salute the eyes and pleasant scents the noses."

Summer comes officially in June and it is a busy month in the garden. Horticulturists and garden specialists with the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture say one of the most important things to do among the growing vegetables is cultivate. It is often better than watering. It is also a god preventive of insect troubles, helps control weeds and contributes to the fertility.

More and more we hear of the progress of preventive medicine. This is also applicable to the garden. Don't wait until disease has struck your tomato, bean, or cucumber patch before attempting a cure. Take precautions against blights and wilts by reading up on what to do and then do it. June is generally the month in which many plant diseases and injuries garden insects start making their first appearance.

During June plant succession crops of sweet corn and beans for an extended harvest period. Place organic mulch around vegetable plants. Begin staking and training tomato plants. Continue spraying fruit trees at appropriate times. (If a spraying schedule is needed contact your County Extension Agent).

Some other June jobs recommended by UK Horticulturists include pruning raspberry bushes, flowering trees and shrubs immediately after flowering, removing bagworms from ornamentals, and snipping off seen pods from azaleas, lilacs, and rhododendron.

If June is a busy month in the garden, it is likewise a busy month in nature. The blossoms of the orchard trees have had their day, and the tiny green fruit of the apple, peach, and pear is beginning to swell under the touch of the long hours of benign sunlight.

The bees are busy too. They are carrying home nectar and materially assisting the gardener by helping pollinate his beans, cucumbers, sweet corn, and other vegetables — an assist that lends credence to the old saying: "A swarm of bees in June is worth a silver spoon." Butterflies hover gaily over garden blooms and roadside flowers, and mother birds brood over their eggs while their mates sing in the trees and bring them food.

June is not so much a month of transition as is May, but as anyone can observe, it is a month of undiminished activity. Without the chill of spring and sultry heat of summer, it is the best month of the two seasons. No month has more to interest the naturalist and nature lover.

As can be seen from the above quotations, June has long been praised by the poets, and it is everywhere known as the month of roses, brides, and graduations. Its special gem is the pearl and its flower is the fragrant honeysuckle. It is a wonderful month. "And every time a June dies, we sigh, comes ever such a day again."

Consumer Alert

"How to Paint Parking Lot Stripes for a Good Profit" describes only one of the many money-making ideas provided consumers through the American Association of Home Income Programs (AAHIP) Membership Procedure Kit. The booklet contained in this kit includes many other dubious money-making ideas.

Before you run out and buy one of these kits for $15, review some of this information:

AAHIP is a Texas-based business advertising in several newspapers in Kentucky. The San Antonio firm places ads either through the company or local residents acting as AAHIP agents.

Each ad contains an address, usually a post office box, to which the consumer can write for the free brochure. When he receives the brochure, he sees it is from the American Association of Home Income Programs and is marked "Special Bulletin". The brochure encourages the consumer to buy the membership kit for $15. The brochure states the company will "pay you $41 per 100 envelopes."

If the consumer orders the membership package for $15, he receives another "Special Bulletin" from San Antonio, other written materials such as "AAHIP Envelope Purchase Vouchers" and a booklet entitled, "American Association of Home Income Programs—Membership Procedure Kit."

The booklet also gives instructions on "How To Blueprint Your Success" and, more importantly, "How To be Successful." The booklet asks members of the AAHIP to assist the home office in locating people desiring to make extra money.

AAHIP instructs its members to place ads in their local newspapers, and for each response the member receives and forwards unopened to AAHIP, he is to receive 51 cents. Once a person answers the ad, the cycle is on its way to starting over. If the second person joins the association, he is taking the first step in perpetuating the cycle.

The Division of Consumer Protection has found that several of these two types of ads have appeared in Kentucky newspapers. Letters notifying the placers of the ads that they should contact the Kentucky Department of Banking and Securities for information regarding the registration of business opportunities were sent by the Attorney General's Division of Consumer Protection.

In summary, the operations of AAHIP member. This ex-member discovered that "upon receiving further directives, I realized it was not a 'mailing stuffing service.' I sent off an ad which they (American Association of Home Income Programs) supply to the newspapers which asks for more workers like myself." So, in effect, you are working in a big circle.

The Attorney General's office recommends that persons who choose to answer these ads be very careful and heed any warning they may have read concerning a particular work-at-home program.

Coal Liquefaction Plant Start-Up Begins, June 5th

The initial coal processing phase of the nation's largest experimental coal-to-liquids plant has begun, according to Charles D. Hoertz, president of Ashland Synthetic Fuels, Inc., an Ashland Oil, Inc. unit which is operator for the government and industry project. The plant, which is based on the H-Coal process, is located at Catlettsburg, adjacent and partially integrated with

Ashland Oil's largest refinery. H-Coal is the patented process of Hydrocarbon Research, Inc., a subsidiary of Dynalco Corporation. The major start-up activity began last Thursday although coal had been fed into the system May 29 for short-term equipment tests. The formal experimental program will begin later in the year with operating tests continuing through 1981 on various types of coal and in operating modes which will enable the plant to produce different qualities of synthetic products. When the plant is operating at its peak capacity, it will process up to 600 tons of coal a day and deliver three barrels (42 gallons a barrel) of synthetic product for each ton of coal. Participants in the $300 million pilot plant operation at Catlettsburg, which is 87 percent funded by the federal Department of Energy, include Ashland, the Electric Power Research Institute, Mobil Oil Corporation, Standard Oil of Indiana, Conoco Development Co. and the Commonwealth of Kentucky. Ashland Oil has indicated that it hopes to build a commercial-size coal liquefaction plant in Breckinridge county.

Now Comes Midsummer's Eve

By Neyle Shackelford
 UK College of Agriculture

Many curious superstitions have developed down on the farm and none are more odd and unusual than those connected with Midsummer's Eve which comes during the month of June.

These superstitions, of course, are not the product of modern times but were developed over centuries past while in the meantime, they became diluted by, and in some cases, fused with Christianity. These strange beliefs began when people first began noting that at a certain time of the year (around June 21) the sun started moving away and each succeeding day became progressively shorter until winter came with all its snow and cold.

Hoping to encourage the sun to remain just a little longer and prolong its annual battle against the darkness of autumn, these early farm people built bonfires on hilltops and at crossroads on Midsummer's Eve. As added symbols of support, they fashioned small wooden wheels, set them on fire, and hurled them arching across the sky in fiery imitation of the sun.

Midsummer bonfires have long been known as St. John's Fires, but their magic qualities stemmed from previous centuries when the flames saluted pagan gods. Early farmers believed the fires warded off witches supposed to be particularly active on Midsummer's Eve, and guaranteed that milk would be pure and butter sweet throughout the year. (In more modern times a meal sifter hung on the doorknob was deemed sufficient for keeping witches out of the churn).

Another old delusion was that anyone who failed to come to the summer solstice bonfire would find weeds in his oatfield and thistles in his wheat, or worse.

Research into Midsummer's Eve lore reveals that from Russia to North Africa and South America less than 200 years ago, farm people could be found jumping over the bonfires to achieve one benefit or another. Some of the jumpers were convinced that their crops would grow as high as they could jump over the flames and that the jumping would prevent sore backs at harvest time.

Charred sticks from the fires were thrown into wells to purify the water, and carried home as protection against thunder and lightning.

Hearthfires were rekindled with brands from these Midsummer bonfires in the belief that good luck for the coming year would ensue as a result, and livestock were led through the ashes of these fires to keep them healthy. The ashes were considered to be exceedingly potent and some drank these ashes mixed with water as a cure for tuberculosis. Sheep were daubed with a paste made from the ashes to keep wolves and other predators away and horses had their foreheads sprinkled with the ashes to make them surefooted. And for good measure, some men rubbed these ashes on their heads to prevent, or cure baldness.

Modern scientists have discovered that midsummer fires, unfortunately, do not measure up to what was once thought of them. They will not hold back the sun, ward off witches, stop falling hair, or cause other good things to happen.

But of one thing farm folk can now be thankful. While debunking and proving false all those old beliefs, delusions, and superstitions, agricultural scientists and technicians have discovered other and better means for making crops grow tall, for keeping weeds out of the wheat and oats, for making livestock healthy, preventing sore backs, and protecting homes against thunder and lightning. They have discovered ways of growing crops in the winter-time and who knows but that sometime they may find out how to scare off witches and stop falling hair.

Instead of lighting a bonfire this month, visit your county Extension agent's office to discover the wealth of useful information he has available for the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture.

'With this Ring I Thee Wed...'

"With this ring I thee wed..."
Crocks of milk lined the cellar floor or filled the spring house. Pails of it may have been suspended in the cool depths of the yard well.
The day before the wedding, the milk was churned many times to get enough butter to make two "butter trees," each more than a foot high to decorate either end of the dinner table.
This wedding custom was brought from Old Virginia where families along the James, New or Greenbrier rivers still retained some opulence from the Old Country.
Now settled in Kentucky, no one appreciated a marriage more than early settlers. "Now, you all come to the weddin' in June" was an oral invitation that meant hard-working pioneering families could lay aside the mallet and push the spinning wheel against the wall in anticipation of a celebration. The festivities would last for hours and include everything from tears by the parents to "deviltry" by young people.
In Morgan county the old-time custom of a charivari (pronounced shiva-ree) was revived recently for three couples. As practiced in Kentucky hills and elsewhere in the commonwealth, a charivari is far more pleasant for the crowd of well-wishers than for the bride and groom.

"The neighborhood would turn out for the wedding but would spill over for the charivari," a woman from the Southern mountains said describing the occasion. They carried pans, pots and cans to beat on to make noise. The menfolk would capture the goom, put him on a wood rail, carry him to the nearest hole of water and toss him in--winter or summer.
The neighbor women didn't forget the bride. She would be placed in a tub of water or forced to submit to another type "prank." Eventually, the bride's family treated everyone with candy, the crowd left and the newlyweds finally were left to themselves.

CARD OF THANKS
Mr. and Mrs. Fred Williams and family would like to thank all their relatives and friends for the thoughtfulness and helpfulness shown them prior to and during the funeral of their son, Billy Allen Bassett. They are grateful for the food and flowers, and for the persons who visited with them during their time of sorrow. They appreciate the consoling words of the Revs. Dean Pack and James Andrews and are grateful to the Floyd Funeral Home for the helpfulness and consideration shown them. They would ask that God bless and keep all those who helped in any way.

Often in earlier days in the commonwealth, a wedding turned out to be a frolic or "play-party." Following an old Virginia custom, most weddings took place at the bride's home just before the noon meal. Any finery left from more opulent living in Virginia would be worn. Some had saved lace, linen and silk for the special occasion, but usually it was buckskin for the men and linsey and new calico for the women.
After the wedding and dinner, the best fiddler in the neighborhood started tuning up for the couples to promenade. Everyone danced and had a good time till about 10 p.m.
A hundred years ago, some families, members of the wedding party and friends made the "grand march." After the ceremony, everyone got on a horse and rode two-by-two from the bride's house to the home of the groom for the infare. The newlyweds rode in front and often carried the American flag. The infare could also take place at the bride's home.
While everyone celebrated, laughed, joked and danced, it was a "housewarming" for the bride and goom. "Some called it a pounding," explained a woman from the Purchase area. "Folks'd bring gifts and food for the newlyweds to get them started in housekeeping."
Many early-day honeymoons began in a one-room cabin with a loft. A routine of farm work, housework, visits with family and neighbors and trips to church were soon established.
If there were disagreements along the way, the couple usually toughed it out.

One Eastern Kentucky woman recalled an Indian grandmother who got 'peevied about something soon after the weddin' and she went off to the woods and stayed by herself two weeks before she came back to try again. They raised a big family."
Ministers from olden times have had their own special versions of a marriage ceremony and most couples abided by them. Today, prospective brides and grooms have their own say about the words in the ceremony, where the vows will be exchanged and the type clothing to be worn.
If simplicity was wanted in a ceremony, some Indian tribes had the answer. When William Patrick Vaughan rode into a Cherokee village in North Carolina 240 years ago to trade trinkets and cloth, he and Fair-a-Bee Lunah (fair as the moon), daughter of a sub-chief, fell in love and in a few days were married. The ceremony was simply a matter of wrapping a blanket around the couple.
A Virginia minister who traveled to Kentucky decided to make it easy for everyone at weddings. The Rev. I. Conder, 96, used his favorite ceremony when he could get away with it. His version:
"Under the window in stormy weather We join these two old sticks together, May the Lord who makes it thunder Never put these two old sticks asunder."

Idle Rate Dropped in April

While the federal government reports continued increases in unemployment across the nation, most counties in Kentucky reported less unemployment during April.

According to Department for Human Resources statistics released today, only 21 Kentucky counties experienced increases in joblessness. Those increases were due almost entirely to layoffs by major employers, said Robert McDonald, the department's chief labor market analyst.

"Major employer layoffs were not concentrated in any one area of the state," he said. "All major areas experienced layoffs."

According to McDonald, 94 counties reported lower unemployment rates in April, five counties reported no change in rates and 79 counties experienced unemployment rates of 6.0 percent or higher.

McDonald said the industries affected most severely by the economic slowdown are the manufacturing, trade, transportation and home building industries. Persons being laid off are primarily blue-collar, male workers, he said.

Despite the layoffs, Kentucky's unemployment rate shows a decrease partly because a number of discouraged job-seekers left the labor force, McDonald said. "During April an additional 2,500 workers abandoned their search for work, bringing the total to an estimated 10,000 discouraged workers," he said. "Technically, those people are no longer included in the total labor force statistics. That's part of the reason our unemployment rate is down."

Most of the discouraged job-seekers are youth who had dropped out of school, he said.

During April, about 2,700 seasonal jobs became available, primarily in service industries, quick food establishments and construction industries. The increase in construction jobs occurred in all areas but home building, department statistics indicate.

The Lexington metropolitan area continues to record low levels of unemployment with an April rate of 3.5 percent, said McDonald. The Louisville area's rate for the month was 6.2 percent. The state's unemployment rate for April was 6.2 percent.

The federal unemployment rate for April was 6.6 percent.

Eastern Kentucky continued to have the state's highest levels of unemployment during April, 8.1 percent.

There were 12 counties in the eastern Kentucky area with unemployment rates higher than 10.0 percent during April.

Menifee county had the area's highest April rate, 19.3 percent, and Martin county had the lowest, 3.5 percent.

With a labor force of 13,931 Floyd county had 12,827 unemployed for an April unemployment rate of 7.9 per cent.

Rates for other counties of the area follow:

Bath 14.8 per cent, Bell 8.5, Boyd 7.5, Breathitt 9.7, Carter 11.6, Clay 8.6, Elliott 8.2, Greenup 5.1, Harlan 7.5, Jackson 11.8, Johnson 7.4, Knott 10.2, Knox 6.9, Laurel 6.2, Lawrence 1.2, Lee 12.9, Leslie 8.2, Letcher 12.1, McCreary 12.1, Magoffin 12.2, Montgomery 11, Morgan 8.4, Owsley 10.2, Perry 7.9, Pike 5.5, Pulaski 8.5, Rockcastle 8.5, Rowan 6.5, Wayne 9.4, Whitley 8, Wolfe 9.6.
