

Madison Co. Jury Votes Not Guilty Anderson Contends Slaying of Lewis To Protect Self

Almost three years after he shot and killed Mack Lewis at Ivel, Jan. 6, 1978, Ralph Anderson, 52, was held not guilty last Wednesday by a jury of the Madison circuit court at Richmond.

It was Anderson's second trial at Richmond after the case had been transferred from this county to the Madison court. The first trial ended in a hung jury.

Testimony at both trials was much the same. Anderson admitted that he shot Lewis but claimed he did it in self-defense, thinking that Lewis had got possession of a gun which he carried at his back and that he feared for his life. This contention rose from the testimony that told of Lewis running his hand up the defendant's back and remarking that "You're yellow all the way to the top of your head."

Anderson was a nightwatchman at a coal mine which was being picketed at the time of the shooting.

The defendant was questioned about his firing five bullets into Lewis' body. He explained that after the first shot he "didn't know what happened."

Except for the testimony of John Kidd, a Commonwealth witness at the first hearing of the case who testified last week for the defense, evidence produced by witnesses for the prosecution varied little from that heard at the first trial. Each of the six witnesses said the two men were more than five feet apart when the shots were fired. It also was testified that Lewis was unarmed and that he was standing, hands at his side, when shot. Kidd, however, testified that Lewis came up from

Mine Injuries Claim Worker

Maynard Hunter, who had been unconscious since being injured in an accident at the Adkins Coal Company deep mine number 18 at Topmost October 8, died last Thursday at Good Samaritan Hospital in Lexington.

According to an official report, Hunter, 31, of Topmost, was installing roof bolts in an adjacent entry when the face of No. 3 entry was shot causing a partial cave-in of the roof being bolted. Jerry Lawson, drill helper, who was working with Hunter, called for help and he and Hunter were taken to the Hindman Clinic by other workers. Lawson was said to be only slightly injured.

A son of Clovis and Regene King Hunter, of Topmost, Hunter had worked at the mine for almost 10 years.

In addition to his parents, he is survived by his widow, Mrs. Carolyn Sue Blanton Hunter; two daughters, Melissa Ann and Sandra Kay Hunter, both at home; five brothers, Granville, Daniel, and Randall Hunter, all of Topmost; Ernie Hunter, of Wayland, and Jeffrey Hunter, of Paintsville; five sisters, Mrs. Ivadale Stanley, of Pikeville, Misses Teresa Ann, Kathy Ann, Polly, and Sharon Hunter, all of Topmost; the paternal grandfather, Emery Hunter, and the maternal grandparents, Mary and Elbert King, all of Dema.

Funeral services were conducted at 2 p.m. Monday at the Eastman Funeral Home in New London, O., where the body was taken by Hall Funeral Home. The officiating minister was the Rev. Noah Justice, and burial was made in Rochester, Ohio.

A MOCK DISASTER, held Tuesday at Finance Hollow, near Martin, tested the preparedness of several emergency and rescue groups including the Martin Fire Department, Floyd County Emergency and Rescue Squad, and P. & B. Ambulance Service as well as Our Lady of the Way Hospital at Martin which received the injured "victims" and sponsored the exercise. Response to the simulated mine disaster was termed "excellent" by a Floyd County Rescue Squad spokesman.

LAMENT

Since those halcyon days of last spring when the trees first shook themselves clear of the winter doldrums and began to dress themselves for better days ahead, I have intended to try my hand at hillclimbing again. I remember that the wind blows free along those ridges and that there's no feeling of utter peace to equal that of being alone on a hilltop where the only sound is the wind.

But I did not make it. The weather never seemed just right: too cool, one day when there was the opportunity; too hot, the next. That was last spring.

This fall, I would like to stand amidst the color that's up there, to watch the flutter of leaves into beds in the heads of little hollows, maybe even plow

State Agency Marks $504,000 For School Job

After meeting Tuesday morning with the Kentucky School Building Authority in Frankfort, Supt. of Schools Pete Grigsby, Jr. announced that the state agency has approved the expenditure of $504,000 of its funds for the replacement of three rooms of McDowell High School which were ruined by floodwaters, earlier this year.

The grant represents 90 per cent of the construction cost. The board will be required to spend approximately $50,000.

Supt. Grigsby explained that the funds earmarked for the project will not be available, however, until Gov. John Y. Brown "unfreezes" School Building Authority funds frozen earlier by executive order. That may postpone actual work until early next year, he said.

In the meantime, the school will continue classes in the school auditorium and library which were pressed into use after the three regular rooms became untenable for school purposes.

Waste System Said Two Months Away

It will be at least another two months before Floyd county's new trash collection system is operating, Bob McAninch, chairman of the county solid waste agency, said this week.

The long-awaited venture, which was supposed to be a reality by now, has become snarled in bureaucratic red tape, resulting in a hold-up of federal funds for the project, he said.

Nevertheless, preparations for the new system are continuing, funding is assured, the project is imminent, and it will redound in time to the credit of the county judge-executive and the fiscal court, McAninch insists.

In the meantime, some questions relating to Prestonsburg's involvement in the system remain unresolved, one city councilman accusing the county of "shaking the city down."

Floyd fiscal court applied last year for $495,000 in federal funds to purchase and do engineering work on a landfill site that would meet environmental regulations. A tract on Osborne Branch of Left Beaver Creek, at Garth, was subsequently bought for $312,900 and $27,000 has been spent on engineering fees. But to date no federal money has been forthcoming.

While the project has been approved for funding under the Farmers' Home Administration energy impact program, disbursement of the funds is being delayed until a number of appeals—none of them challenging this county's grant—are heard, according to McAninch.

A further $1.5 million is to be raised through a bond sale next month for purchase of equipment, including a bulldozer, an end loader and 10 trucks, it was said.

Once it is in operation, participation in the countywide garbage service will be mandatory for all property owners. Residential customers will pay $6 monthly for a weekly pickup of household trash and a monthly collection of larger items.

McAninch points out that the sanitary landfill to be operated by Floyd County Solid Waste, Inc. will not be a mere "garbage dump," but will be scientifically managed and environmentally sound. With state approval of the Osborne Branch site, the county's four existing dumps, already outlawed by environmental authorities, will be closed.

The county originally offered to dispose of Prestonsburg's solid waste for about $22,000 a year, a steep increase over the $13,800 which the city presently pays Adrian Lafferty, a private contractor franchised by the county, for the service. The city council insists, however, that its long-term contract with Lafferty is still valid.

County officials, reportedly unhappy that Lafferty is collecting the fee for garbage dumped on county-leased property and handled by county operators and equipment, are negotiating with Lafferty to buy back his franchise. They do not recognize the operator's contract with the city, however, arguing that, without access to a legal landfill, Lafferty is no longer able to meet the terms of his city contract.

The county subsequently offered the city a six-month contract for $1250 a month—$100 a month more than the city

Building Plans Are Requested Before a Vote

A decision on rezoning three tracts on Arnold Avenue from residential to commercial classification was again postponed by Prestonsburg city council Monday, drawing protests from a number of Arnold Avenue residents, who called for an immediate vote on the matter.

Arguing for the postponement, Councilman Estill Lee Carter urged that the city await architectural plans of the proposed development there before deciding the issue. At a public hearing several weeks ago, First Commonwealth Bank President Burl Wells Spurlock announced that the bank intends to erect an office building on one of the properties, presently owned by the Harlowe heirs, and that the other two tracts, owned by David Bruce Spradlin and John Allen respectively, would be used for parking and access to the bank.

Arnold Avenue resident Paul Combs protested the delay, arguing that "the architect has nothing to do with the decision" and that residents of the area "do not want to sweat it out any damn longer." He challenged the council to "go ahead and have the guts to vote" on the issue.

The council voted unanimously, in the absence of Councilman Cloyd Johnson, to table the matter, Councilman Carter assuring the meeting that he would vote on it when he is satisfied that traffic generated by the proposed

Task Force Tussles With Coal Transport

Struggling with the problem of coal transportation if the industry is to mean to Kentucky what is expected within a few years, the Governor's Task Force on Coal Transportation last Friday turned its attention at its Frankfort meeting to what is popularly known as "the Paul Patton bill."

The bill, proposed at the last session of the General Assembly, offered a solution to the problem of weight limits placed on state highways. If enacted, it would have allowed, for example, a coal operator to procure a road-usage permit, its cost based on a per-ton charge (10 cents per ton, with the state matching that per-ton fee) and the funds thus realized applied to the maintenance and repair of the road or roads over which that operator's coal was hauled.

The bill ran into trouble in the Legislature. But the Governor's Task Force will use it as a foundation on which it hopes to write legislation to be submitted next July to the Legislative Research Commission and possible introduction at the 1982 General Assembly session.

"If Kentucky wants to do something for coal," Rep. Greg Stumbo (D-Floyd) told the Task Force, "it must do something for the transportation system."

Phil Damron, of Prestonsburg, discussed the problems of independent truckers, listing existing weight limits among other problems they face.

Commenting later on the "unrealistic" weight limits imposed, Damron said, "Except for those on US 23, every coal truck on the road in this section is illegal." He pointed out that a tandem truck unloaded, weighs about 30,000 pounds. Its load adds another 25 tons. Besides that, present law permits only 20,000 pounds on the rear axle—"and," says Damron, "there's no way for the trucker to know what the weight on his rear axle really is."

Lake Drawdown Slated Nov. 10

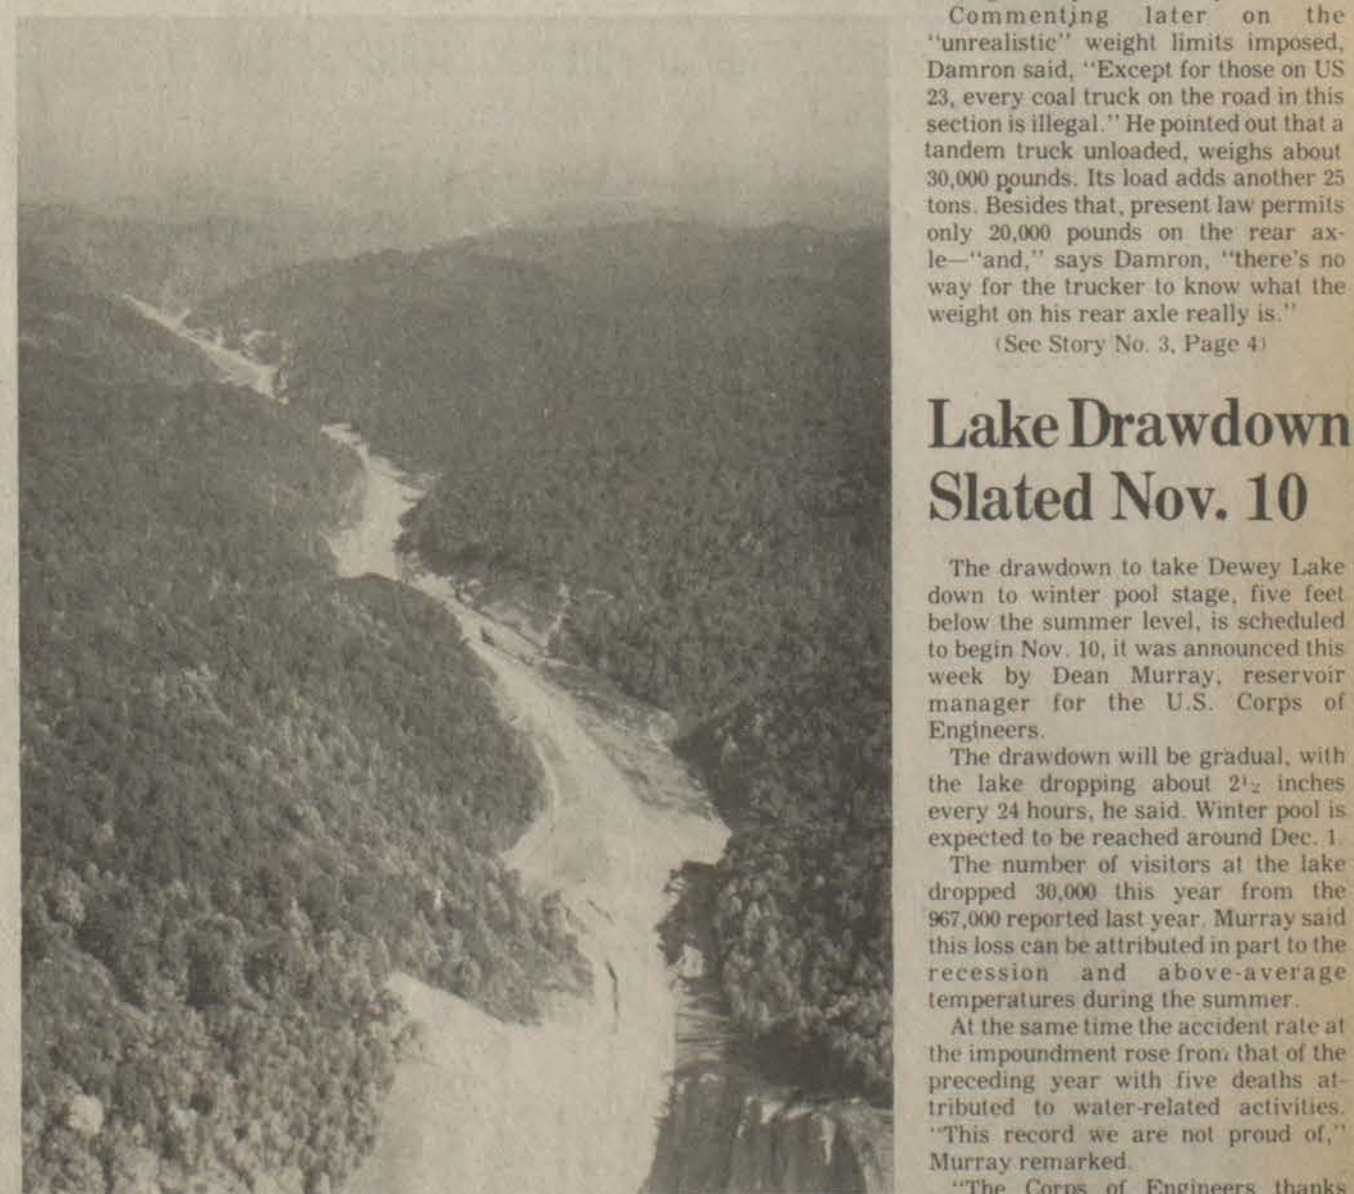

The drawdown to take Dewey Lake down to winter pool stage, five feet below the summer level, is scheduled to begin Nov. 10, it was announced this week by Dean Murray, reservoir manager for the U.S. Corps of Engineers.

The drawdown will be gradual, with the lake dropping about 2½ inches every 24 hours, he said. Winter pool is expected to be reached around Dec. 1.

The number of visitors at the lake dropped 30,000 this year from the 967,000 reported last year. Murray said this loss can be attributed in part to the recession and above-average temperatures during the summer.

At the same time the accident rate at the impoundment rose from that of the preceding year with five deaths attributed to water-related activities. "This record we are not proud of," Murray remarked.

"The Corps of Engineers thanks each person who observed safety regulations while using the lake facilities, and we ask the public to help us make next year a safe one," Murray added.

THROUGH RUGGED HILLS, the route which new KY 80 will take is plainly defined by construction in the Rock Fork section, near Garrett, and beyond toward Knott county.

Tuesdays Are Days of Decision

Tuesday is the political day of election.

Last night (Tuesday) President Carter and his Republican opponent, Ronald Reagan, engaged in a televised debate which many think may go far toward deciding the winner of a tight presidential election. Next Tuesday, the voters themselves will decide the winners in a flock of political races ranging from the presidency to school board members.

Some 25,000 persons are registered to vote in Floyd county, but fewer than half of these are expected to go to the polls.

The heaviest vote will be cast where local issues such as school board races are to be decided. Educational Division 4 in the Left Beaver Creek area of this county is a case in point. There the administration candidate, incumbent Dr. Mary Hall, is opposed in a hot campaign by Noah Carson Akers. Interest is such that the voters there will be at the polls.

The same situation exists in many other counties. Both Knott and Johnson counties have spirited school board races under way, and a heavy vote is expected in both.

In other educational divisions of this county, campaign leaders will be put to considerable effort to stir up the electorate.

In Educational Divisions 3 and 5 incumbent candidates, John M. Stumbo and James Arville Duff, are without opposition. Board members in Divisions 1 and 2 are n it up for reelection this year.

In precincts outside the three educational divisions which will elect board members, the ballot will list only candidates for federal and judicial offices.

Jimmy Carter and Walter F. Mondale, Democrats, will be opposed by Ronald Reagan and George Bush, Republicans, for president and vice-president, respectively, and by the Anderson Coalition of John B. Anderson and Patrick J. Lucy, plus figurehead candidates representing the Respect for Life, Socialist Workers, Communist, Libertarian and Citizens parties. U. S. Senator Wendell H. Ford is opposed by Mary Louise Foust, and Congressman Carl D. Perkins is unopposed.

On all ballots non-partisan candidates for Supreme Court judge are James B. Stephenson, Pikeville, and Cordell H. Martin, Hindman.

EDUCATIONAL IMPROVEMENTS IN LEFT BEAVER SCHOOLS

I ask each of you to visit the schools, look at the conditions our children must face each day and then ask yourself the question, "Why can't we do better?" My answer to that question is simple—we can and must do better! Our teachers and our school personnel are the finest to be found anywhere. They deserve our support. All concerned citizens must join with me to assure our children of equal educational opportunity. Vote for Carson Akers. It's a vote for your child's educational future.

Palmore Makes Sense to Us

Kentucky's Supreme Court Chief Justice John Palmore made some trenchant remarks at a media-law conference in Frankfort recently that, we think, deserve a permanent place in all future consideration of the public's "right to know."

The full text of Justice Palmore's remarks is not at hand, but the main points made by him draw from us a fervent "amen."

First of all, he is quoted as saying that court trials must be open to the public, or "it's not a trial." This statement echoes our contention that closed trials could be one of two things—either an inquisition in its severest terms or a whitewash.

The information at hand does not disclose Judge Palmore's position on juvenile hearings which are now closed to press and public and the sheltering of juvenile criminals from publicity. It appears to us to be an utter absurdity to make this sweeping prohibition of names in certain cases; for example, to permit a newspaper to say only that the person who shot to death another, or even several, was a juvenile without further identification.

It is true that a youngster should be given a chance. We agree that when charged with a first offense that does not involve a capital crime his or her name should not be published. But those "repeaters" who rob and steal, endanger lives and property again and again merit no such protection.

The jurist congratulated the Kentucky Supreme Court on its ruling last summer that trials must be open, "beating to the punch" the U.S. Supreme Court which made the same decision a few days later. The case at issue when this decision was made was the one in which a circuit court had ordered a closed session when boys testified about their sexual relationship with a doctor who was on trial. Palmore said the public's right to an open trial outweighed the possibility that the boys would be psychologically harmed by testifying in open court.

The chief justice also spoke for the public when he assailed legislation that is made by judicial decree, insisting that, instead, needed laws should be enacted by legislators elected by the people, not by an interpretation by a panel of judges such as the supreme courts of the state or nation.

On this point he cited the case of the New York Times vs. Sullivan which ended in a U.S. Supreme Court decision granting the press more latitude in libel cases.

That, said Palmore, "was a constitutional amendment passed without going to the people...I'd feel a whole lot better if the people who wanted these laws would enact them through their state legislatures."

All of which makes sense to us.

behind Anderson, fist drawn as if to strike him.

The defense was permitted to attack the victim's reputation and to produce testimony that he had earlier killed two persons. Two ministers, however, countered with testimony that Lewis was a good citizen and was at the time of his slaying a deacon of the Tom's Creek Free Will Baptist Church.

The Commonwealth was not permitted to introduce testimony relating to the defendant's past record.

The jury was given the case late Tuesday but its deliberations were postponed till the following morning. At one point the jury informed the trial judge that it could not agree on a verdict. Sent back to renew its efforts toward a verdict, it returned about 30 minutes later with the not-guilty decision.

through them and see if their rattle evoked any memories.

The plain fact is, the hills are steeper these days. Just like the stairs. And the urge to get with it and satisfy a fading longing has lost its urgency. Maybe next year...

Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus. Pay no mind to those doubters. They are those poor souls who have grown so old that darting up a chimney or dancing or prancing across rooftops strikes them as plumb unreal. Why, they may have decided that a hilltop where you can almost see forever is no longer a magic place.

QUESTION

There's not much that's new about the place, except that a groundhog has showed up after an absence of three years—if this is the same one that kept us watching then for his daily feeding period. The City of Prestonsburg was given a tract of land by the late Monte Scott Harkins. Why not make of this...wildlife preserve, with adequate food and protection afforded the squirrels and other small animals? This would involve little expense and yield a good profit to a younger generation.

ty is paying Lafferty—but city officials refused to consider the offer until the county has concluded its negotiations with Lafferty.

McAninch remained optimistic this week that the solid waste agency's differences with the city could be resolved.

"In the midst of shrinking state and federal help, this county is expanding its services," he said. Initiating a mandatory, countywide trash collection system at this time, he said, has "taken a lot of courage" on the part of Judge-Executive Bill Wells and the Floyd fiscal court.

Surpassing even road load limits is the bottleneck created by bridges, it was pointed out. Engineers of the Department of Transportation said that weight limits on roads could be raised and that the roads could still be safe for travel, though damaged. Yet the bridges on those same roads have physical limitations which cannot be ignored.

The federal government has allotted Kentucky $10 million a year for inspection, maintenance and repair of bridges. Reporting on the weight enforcement program, the statutes and penalties which apply, a State Police spokesman discussed types of restraint on U.S. highways such as US 23. The weight limit on these highways is 80,000 pounds, and this federal figure cannot be raised by state legislative action. The weight limit on bridges on U.S.-supported highways is 72,000 pounds.

Representative Stumbo and Mr. Damron are Floyd county's Task Force members. Rep. Bill Weinburg, D-Hindman, and Rep. Herbie Deskins, D-Pikeville, are among other area members.

The Task Force heard predictions, based on an international study, that the demand for coal will double by the mid-1990s and that this upward move is expected to begin within the next five years. But its Eastern Kentucky members insist that the coal business can be sensational and yet mean little or nothing to the area unless coal can be transported legally and comparatively economically from mine to tippie and preparation plant and from there on to market.

development will be adequately managed.

Several members of the audience continued to press their objections, however, some pointing out that, according to its president, the bank did not intend to commission an architect without some assurance that the zoning change would be approved, and others arguing that the feelings of affected residents were being ignored.

Had council members been interested in informing themselves, more of them might have attended the public hearing on the matter, protested Wonnell Godsey. (Mayor Harold Cooley and four of the eight-member council—Dick Clark, Carolyn Ford, Tom Rose and Bill Ray Collins—attended the October 9 hearing.) "No one is interested in our comments," she added.

A recent vote by the Floyd County Joint Planning Commission, in favor of the zoning change, was characterized by Dr. Garland Godsey as "a joke." Only one of the four voting in favor of the change even knew where the affected properties were located, he charged.

The enforcement this week of a decision taken in council some months ago—to make Third Avenue one-way between Court and Graham Streets—drew an angry response from a businessman on that street. According to the council decision, traffic on Third Avenue now flows in a southerly direction only, a change designed to relieve congestion at the post office intersection.

Pete Howard, of Ray Howard Furniture, argued that the same results could have been achieved by enforcing parking restrictions near the post office. Howard threatened to sue the city if the council decision adversely affected his business.

In response to a request by Utilities Superintendent Bill Harvey Howard, the council authorized sale of $157,000 in revenue bonds to buy the Abbott-Little Paint water district and $224,000 to buy the Bull Creek water district. The Farmers' Home Administration will buy the bonds at five percent interest, Howard said.

For its $381,000 investment, the city will be purchasing systems developed at a cost of $1.5 million, Howard said, adding that income generated by the two systems will be sufficient to retire the bonds.

Prestonsburg attorney William G. Francis told the council that a suit brought against the city several years ago by Randall Jerry Burke, then a prisoner in the county jail here, has been dismissed in U.S. district court. Burke, a deaf mute, had alleged mistreatment by jailers.

Two Turkey Creek men, Marvin Moore and Ivan Turner, who alleged some years ago that they were beaten by Prestonsburg policemen Keith Lawson and Craig Kilgore, have been ordered by U. S. District Court Judge Green Wix Unthank to show cause why that case should not be dismissed, Francis said.

Moreover, the attorney reported, a hearing has been set before Special Judge E. N. Venters in Floyd circuit court November 24 on a claim brought against the city by John Allen. Allen, who owns three gas wells in the Porter Addition, is involved in a dispute with the city over payment for gas purchases.

The council adopted a citizen-participation plan, required by federal law, in connection with its planned application for a Community Development Block Grant. The block grant, for which the application is still being prepared, is intended for renewal of the downtown area. According to federal regulations, low-income persons are to be the principal beneficiaries of the grant.

In other business, the council expressed its appreciation to the city streets department and its supervisor, Girven Waddle, for the prompt cleanup after Red, White and Blue Day, appointed Ed Minns to the Tax Equalization Board, and hired Greg Hall as a police officer.

Reading Program Purpose Told Clark Parents Group

The Clark Elementary School Title I parents' advisory council recently held its first meeting for the 1980-81 school year.

Parents were given a brief description of the Title I reading program, its purposes and function by Mrs. Delphia Hicks, a Clark reading teacher. Mrs. Deborah Hicks, reading teacher, explained the county's Title I guidelines which included the placement of students in the remedial program, class organization and diagnostic measures. Statistics compiled from a Title I parents' questionnaire were discussed by remedial reading teacher, Mrs. Nadine Hicks. The program was under the direction of Mrs. Nola Slone, a remedial reading teacher.

Attending the meeting were Eula Hurd, Edna May Slone, Kathleen and Kay Hunt, Sylvia Lantz, Rhoda Stanley, Dianne Killion, Benie Lynn Hammond, John Rosenberg, Sandra Hackworth, Crystel Cordle and Eva Whitaker. Mrs. Anna Lee Rice, Title I reading supervisor, was guest of the council.

ATTEND INSPECTION

Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Bierman attended the supreme inspection of the Order of the White Shrine of Jerusalem at the Masonic Temple, Ashland, and the banquet there last Tuesday evening.

LETTERS To the Editor

Exercise Right To Vote

With election day a few days away, it is time for all of us to take stock of our times: such as inflation, unemployment, crime in our streets, corruption in the national state and local elected officials, and decide we are going to do something about it. At the polls is the place to be heard.

People banded together to get changes, long overdue, in our schools. Other changes can be made. Weeds have not been cut in our streets and roads, ditches along the highways have not been dug out. On the Middle Creek Road, the weeds have almost covered the building where the children wait for the bus. The road has pot holes big enough to bury a dog. Someone has not done the job they were elected to do. In school more emphasis is placed on sports than on education.

Excuses are not enough. Results are due us and are expected. In our local paper when the Board of Education and County meeting are published everyone attend and voice your opinions. That will cause changes.

On election day go to the polls and vote for the ones, to the best of your ability, who will do the most good for us locally, statewide and nationally.

Never mind if someone locally is asking for your vote and they are a cousin of your grandmother's cousin. Consider if all our best interests are to be served by voting for the politician.

It is time for a change; speak up and demand that we get only the best. We will overcome.

Once a diagnosis of allergy has been made, it is essential to discover all of the substances causing the reaction. A detailed health history, a thorough study of the patient's environment and allergy testing are some of the tools used to determine the specific allergen or allergens. Testing for sensitivity by means of skin and mucous-membrane tests is effective in many instances as well. However, it may take a long time to complete the extensive number of tests that can be made. Before testing, concentrate on being aware of all foods eaten and environmental exposure factors.

East Ky. Housing Plan Gives State $2.67 Million

Kentucky has been granted $2.67 million for its Appalachian housing program during this federal fiscal year, according to Local Government Commissioner Wilburn Pratt.

Pratt said the money will finance the construction of more than 1,500 homes in Eastern Kentucky during the fiscal year, which began Oct. 1.

Kentucky's housing programs need strengthening in some areas, Pratt said. A more effective process for choosing housing projects to be financed and housing sites is needed, he added.

CANDIDATE FOR SCHOOL BOARD

DISTRICT NUMBER 4

NUMBER ONE ON THE BALLOT

I decided to become a candidate for school board for the following reasons:

- I have two children attending McDowell Grade School and will have another starting next year.
- I am a parent concerned about the quality of education that our children receive.
- Our educational facilities are not adequate for our children.
- I strongly feel that politics should not be involved in our school system.
- Our teachers could do a much better job if they were provided with more support from our school administrators.
- A closer working relationship should be established between the local PTO/PTA and the school authorities.
- Our children are our greatest asset and everything possible should be done to provide them with the best education possible.

A CHANGE IS A STEP FORWARD.

Does Complaining Get Results?

By JUNE B. CHOCHOLES
Smithsonian News Service

When a woman in a Zapotec Indian village in southern Mexico has a complaint she knows she is going to be heard. Her case involving an unfair business practice, for example, is heard by the "presidente" of the village—and her problem is usually resolved that same day.

In technologically advanced societies such as ours, however, channels available to most people raising complaints are not as simple. Consider the case of a woman in Pennsylvania who spent countless hours, not to mention energy and money, trying to convince someone that a stove she had purchased turned itself on and off unexpectedly.

Before she could convince the seller, the manufacturer or a number of federal agencies about the danger of this appliance, the stove caused a fire and her house burned down. Although she felt vindicated, what remained of her labor were the shell of a house, a three-inch-thick file of correspondence and emotional strain and frustration.

Although a dramatic case, this incident, in Dr. Laura Nader's view, is representative of the frequent failure of America's complaint mechanisms.

Dr. Nader, an anthropologist at the University of California at Berkeley, studies the evolution of law in various cultures. She is currently writing a book about Zapotec Indian law, and a new book, No Access to Law—Alternatives to the American Judicial System, will be published by Academic Press this month.

In a recent lecture sponsored by the Smithsonian Institution's Office of Symposia and Seminars, Dr. Nader spoke about her research on problem-solving mechanisms in both economically underdeveloped and technologically advanced societies.

Dr. Nader began her career by studying problem-solving among the Zapotec Indians of Mexico and the Shia Moslems of Lebanon. In such small village societies, she found, all the residents have a stake in the welfare of the community.

When someone has been wronged, the incident affects many more people than the two parties directly involved in the incident. The laws in these villages, therefore, reflect the commitment of the legal process to the welfare of the entire community. The village can more easily maintain its day-to-day operation when complaints are heard and resolved on a daily basis.

In America and other technologically advanced societies, Dr. Nader says, there is often little or no direct relationship between the person raising the complaint and the party or parties who are the targets of the complaints. More importantly, there is often an unequal balance of power in the handling of services and products—the consumer faces a giant opponent. As a result, the problem-solving route is much more complex; more often than not, the problem remains unheard and unresolved.

During the course of her research on problem-solving Dr. Nader became interested in the effects of unresolved complaints on American society and individuals. "The toll is enormous," Dr. Nader believes. "Unresolved complaints have a pernicious effect on the machinery of government, the mental health of Americans and the crime rate."

"In particular, unresolved problems concerning consumer items cost citizens disease, injuries and fatalities, as well as money that has, in effect, been stolen from them," she contends. "The psychological costs are substantial."

Dr. Nader and her Berkeley students studied problem-solving techniques in America, using data from the Center for Responsive Law in Washington, D.C., which is headed by her consumer advocate brother, Ralph Nader. According to a study done at the center, "one out of every six purchases leads to a recognized ground for complaint."

Despite this high rate of dissatisfaction among consumers, however, only a small percentage actually raises complaints. According to a 1975 survey of 2,419 households in 34 cities, more than half of the consuming public—60.3 percent—does not complain about a problem that involves more than price. The survey was carried out by Arthur Best, a lawyer with the New York Department of Consumer Affairs, and Alan R. Andreasen, a professor of Business Administration at the University of Illinois at Urbana.

And what does the not-so-very silent minority complain about? Analysis of letters sent to the Center for Responsive Law revealed that the most common subjects of complaints were the medical profession, food, cars and appliances.

When a consumer does decide to complain in the name of justice, the legal route often is time-consuming and expensive. People have the option of taking their complaints to a small claims court when a complaint involves a sum less than $500. But many people drop their charges, Dr. Nader found, if attending small claims court means giving up a day's pay. She also found that it was rarely worthwhile to go to a lawyer with a complaint unless it involved a sum greater than $5,000.

Because of the expense and bureaucratic procedures involved in initiating a complaint, Dr. Nader says, people whose complaints fall within the $500-$5,000 price range rarely resolve their problems.

Of those individuals who did complain, Dr. Nader's studies found, women write more letters than men. Urbanites and people living in rural areas write more often than people living in suburban areas on questions involving mail orders.

Dr. Nader and her researchers also studied the problem-solving techniques of various consumer-action panels and department store, congressional and federal complaint-handling systems to determine the effectiveness of these non-judicial mechanisms.

They concluded that consumer action panels established by trade associations and large corporations are not effective in handling complaints. "Self-regulation has never been successful," Dr. Nader says. The Best/Anderson study concurred, noting that "when consumers take their problems to third parties, they come away satisfied only about one-third of the time."

In contrast, Dr. Nader found that locally based politicians, neighborhood consumer-action groups and locally controlled department stores had a high rate of success because they provide people with personal opportunities to express their problems.

One of Dr. Nader's students, however, did find a complaint-handling system comparable to that of the Zapotec Indians. During his five terms in office, the late U.S. Representative William Barrett (D-Pa.) made it a daily practice to see all constituents who were having difficulties resolving specific problems. During a 90-second meeting, Barrett could usually analyze their problems and recommend solutions.

Both the Best/Anderson survey and Dr. Nader's studies pointed to the advisability of an active government role in regulating the marketplace. "The 17th-century ideology of 'caveat emptor'—let the buyer beware—is an abnormal principle when viewed in our own tradition or cross-culturally," Dr. Nader says. Despite shortcomings in the existing legal system, she believes that, if present laws were enforced to their fullest extent, there would be less reason for people to complain.

For the near future, however, Dr. Nader makes a number of recommendations for improving the complaint process in the United States. Among them is the establishment of a federal "complaint bank," where consumers' complaints would be on file for the use of people investigating various products. She is also in favor of publicizing a corporation's misconduct by requiring products or advertisements to carry notices that the manufacturer has recently violated consumer laws.

In a technologically advanced society such as ours, Dr. Nader admits, problem-solving may never be easy. However, by closing the power gap between businesses and the consumer and by increased attention to preventative law, Dr. Nader sees American complaint-handling mechanisms becoming more equitable and efficient.

AN OPEN LETTER TO ALL VOTERS OF EDUCATIONAL DISTRICT NO. 4

Since this is the last opportunity I will have to communicate with the parents, teachers, and concerned voters of Left Beaver Creek, I want to leave you with these thoughts.

I am a person of little political ambition. Being a Doctor is my life, but frankly, working with the school system has become just as important to me. I do not desire to go "higher" in politics, but only to contribute by causing changes for the better.

I have no animosity toward any individual or political group, and I am not running under the promise to fire anyone, to destroy any school official, or take from one school in my district benefits and give them to another.

I am not trying to strengthen or align school district No. 4 with any political factions for someone's future political battles. Instead of accepting open support from elected officials, I have steadfastly avoided it. No political faction, no county official, and no state official will ever find themselves in control of District No. 4, which is YOUR SCHOOL so long as I am your Board Member. For, after all, the decisions your Board Member makes must be based on one consideration alone, which is, what is in the best interest of the children? The right thing must be done irrespective of the impact it may have on some political officials' organization, ambition, or desire.

So I ask for help, not from state and county office holders, but from YOU, the people who live in District No. 4. I have tried to correct as many problems as the opportunities have allowed, but many remain, and new ones arise with each new school year. But the work must continue to move closer to what we all want, good schools and education for those we love.

So I ask for your vote, and I promise that Mary Hall's decisions will be made in the interest of the only political ally I have, the boy or girl seeking a quality education in our Floyd County Schools.

DR. MARY HALL

Project Studies Value of "Gob"

A new project at the Kentucky Department of Energy's research facility is studying the use of coal refuse as a potential energy source.

To meet federal environmental guidelines, more coal is being washed and crushed at coal preparation plants now before it is burned. The resulting waste from these plants has created so-called "gob piles" that present unsightly disposal problems.

Dr. Alan Bland, of the University of Kentucky's Institute for Mining and Minerals Research, is director of the project that involves using this plant waste as a fuel.

"We've known for some time that the mineral in these disposal dumps has an appreciable Btu, or heating, value," Bland said. "The problem has been to extract the potential energy from these high-ash and high-sulfur fuels without creating sulfur emission problems."

Bland's research will study the burning of coal preparation waste in a "fluidized bed combustor" or FBC. In this process, crushed limestone is mixed with the coal waste and "fluidized" or circulated as it is burned. In a natural chemical reaction, the limestone absorbs sulfur emitted from the burning coal.

"Not only would this eliminate gob piles and provide another much-needed fuel," according to Bland, "but the final solid waste could be used to neutralize acid spoil banks that often occur at surface mine sites."

The project at the energy research laboratory is being funded by Title II monies. The federal funding is designated for "mining and minerals resource research" and Kentucky's research facility is one of the country's major recipients of these funds.

New Lot Relieves Highlands Parking Woes

Parking problems have been relieved at Highlands Regional Medical Center with the recent completion of a new parking area which provides 109 additional spaces for employee and visitor parking. Russell Dean, HRMC assistant administrator, said parking rules will be enforced now that adequate parking is available. "We appreciate everyone's consideration during our overcrowding and know they will cooperate with the rules now that the problem has been eliminated," Dean commented.

Government Lampooned On TV, Election Eye

The lighter side of elections and the federal government are the themes of two election-eye comedy specials, Monday, November 3 on KET. In two back-to-back specials, jesters Mark Russell and Stan Freberg satirize American institutions through comedy and music.

Leading off the merriment at 10:00 p.m. is the "Mark Russell Comedy Special." The half-hour program marks the beginning of Russell's sixth season of stand-up songs and bipartisan zingers in this live telecast from the Katherine Cornell Theatre of the State University at Buffalo, N.Y.

Armed with piano and a broad political savvy, Russell entertains his audience with a humorous look at the news and events of the day. Immediately following the "Mark Russell Comedy Special" is "The Stan Freberg Federal Budget Revue" at 10:30 p.m. Alternately titled "The Six Hundred Billion Dollar Misunderstanding," the 30-minute Freberg special aims a musical broadside at Washington and the federal bureaucracy.

Enlisted in this comic mission are Broadway star Millicent Martin, actors Naomi Lewis and Sterling Holloway, MASH's David Ogden Stiers, science fiction writer Ray Bradbury, the Billy May Orchestra and Freberg himself.

However, the real centers of attraction are the subjects Freberg lampoons—bureaucracy, inefficiency and waste.

T/SGT. GARDNER COMPLETES AT ACADEMY TRAINING

Technical Sergeant Earl G. Gardner, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest J. Gardner, of Bevinsville, has graduated from the U.S. Air Forces in Europe noncommissioned officer academy at Kapaun Air Station, West Germany.

The sergeant received advanced military leadership and management training and is assigned at RAF Welford, England.

Heat-Sufferers To Share Fund

Gov. John Y. Brown, Jr. has authorized distribution of $800,000 in federal funds received for the benefit of Kentuckians who suffered because of the heat wave during July and August.

An executive order was necessary before the funds could be released by the Department for Human Resources. Normally, approval to distribute funds must come from the legislature following a sometimes lengthy review process.

Human Resources' officials said the money will be turned over to the Community Action Agencies in line with federal regulations. Community Action and the local agencies will take applications for the money, they said.

To be eligible for the benefits a household must contain a person 60 years of age or older whose health is endangered by the heat and whose income is at or below 125 percent of the poverty level. The maximum payment each household can receive is $200. Allowable income under those guidelines is $9,313 for a non-farm family of four and $7,925 for a farm family.

Residential facilities at which the majority of residents meet the criteria are also eligible for assistance.

As a result of the delay in receiving federal funds, several community action agencies used their own funds to provide relief to people during the heat crisis. They may be reimbursed for those expenditures providing they can document that the benefits and beneficiaries met the criteria of the program, said Human Resources' officials.

U.S. 23 Is Kentucky's Major Coal Route

U.S. 23 through Pike, Floyd, Johnson, Lawrence and Boyd counties continues to be Kentucky's major coal haul route, according to a report recently issued by the Kentucky Department of Transportation.

Much of the coal produced in those eastern Kentucky counties is hauled to several barge-loading facilities near Ashland.

The report distinguishes between long coal haul routes and short routes. Truckers traveling the long routes may cross one or more counties on their way to either barge facilities, located in such places as Ashland in Boyd County or Owensboro in Daviess County, or tipples at one of the major rail-loading centers, such as Manchester in Clay County or Jackson in Breathitt County. A tippie is an apparatus for emptying coal into rail cars.

The shorter routes serve truckers who are hauling coal to one of the many tipples which serve mines in the large coal-producing counties, such as Pike, Letcher and Harlan counties. Many of the short routes follow private haul roads from mine to tippie.

The report, "Kentucky's Official Coal Haul Highway System 1980," is prepared annually as required by Kentucky's local government economic assistance act. It is one factor considered when economic assistance funds are returned to Kentucky's coal-producing and coal-impact counties.

Coal-producing counties are those in which coal is mined and severance taxes on that coal are paid. Counties which had no active mines during the reporting period of April 1, 1979, through March 31, 1980, but through which coal was transported on public highways and reported to the Transportation Department, are designated coal-impact counties.

Coal haul traffic on the longer routes is concentrated heavily along a few interstates and parkways in Kentucky, generally traveling through the coal-impact counties.

The most important of the longer coal haul routes originate in Eastern Kentucky and follow either I-75 or the Mountain Parkway and I-64 to Lexington and then continues via I-75 northward to Cincinnati. Two other reported routes, U.S. 68 and KY 11, are used to transport Eastern Kentucky coal north to Maysville.

Other coal shipments are reported regularly on I-64 to consumers in Frankfort in Franklin County, Shelbyville in Shelby county and Louisville. Some coal crosses the Ohio River into Indiana.

Major western Kentucky coal-producing counties are reported as providing coal via Elizabethtown in Hardin County to a large chemical plant in Meade County. Coal is also being shipped from the western Kentucky coal fields into Tennessee through Warren and Simpson counties.

During the past year a new coal haul route developed through Lyon County has been used to carry coal to a new barge terminal on Lake Barkley near Eddyville.

Tennis, Everyone, At Pinehurst

By Lynn Varacalli

Many of you have, no doubt, taken a tennis lesson or two at your local club, but any of you should save your money instead and spend it on a weekend of instruction at Pinehurst. Somehow, tennis taught amongst fragrant pine trees, rolling sandhills and healthy Carolina air is tennis well learned.

Yes, I came home from Pinehurst Hotel and Country Club in North Carolina feeling that I could not only beat any local hot shot at his game, but that Tracy, Chris—or for that matter, Vitas—wouldn't find me such a boring opponent.

First of all, Pinehurst is, in a word, paradise. Engulfed in the resort's 10,000 acres are six golf courses, 24 tennis courts, swimming pools, a swimming and sailing lake, a health club, horseback riding facilities, shooting (Annie Oakley once taught there) and archery ranges, not to mention the grand Pinehurst Hotel, the treehouses and the condominiums for divine comfort.

Ms. Varacalli is a member of the U.S. Tennis Association and has played in USTA tournaments.

I am not that familiar with Southern hospitality, but I feel that I must have had a "down home" touch of it at Pinehurst. I was treated royally as a guest but at the same time, I felt so at home. One guest told me that he prepared his son for Pinehurst by telling him he was going to have to smile a good deal. The son easily obliged.

And I was just as obliging myself, wallowing in the sweet smiles, the friendly "how ya all doin's" and the gracious manners of all the employees.

Although tennis programs at Pinehurst have been overshadowed by the major golf tournaments held each year (attracting the likes of Jack Nicklaus, Arnold Palmer and Tom Watson), tennis preceded golf to the resort. Tennis was given a large boost, however, when World Championship Tennis star Terry Addison founded the Australian Tennis Institute (ATI) in 1973.

Sound Instruction/Small Groups

The ATI offers a wide array of instructional programs for everyone—the beginner, the experienced, the individual, the family. Aside from the many hours of clinic instruction, students have unlimited court time. Four of the clay and Laykold courts are lighted for night play.

Terry feels that the ATI programs he has instituted are more beneficial to the player than programs at other tennis camps. He explains, "The ATI programs are unique in that we provide sound instruction to small groups. Our programs deal in tennis fundamentals, but at the same time they are flexible to group and individual needs. The ATI affords a refreshing change to the mass group concept of teaching and learning tennis."

And, I might add, Terry and the other skilled pros made learning a lot of fun.

"Sound instruction to small groups" is basically the ATI anthem. With a pro to student ratio of 1:3 or 1:4 (for our small group of eight, the ratio was 1:2), each student receives a good deal of personal attention and does not have much "standing around waiting for your turn" time.

Along with the small group idea is the ATI philosophy that teaching can be untechnical and still be sound. I found this to be true. With instruction I have had in the past, the forehand, for instance, would be broken down into so many miniscule movements that to piece them all together into a semblance of a shot seemed an overdone effort.

In the ATI, the forehand would be demonstrated showing the correct grip and the correct body movement. Then we would spend maybe half a day executing the shot—the whole shot. The constant repetition of the shot with the pros pointing out errors whenever we so erred was beneficial in getting a grip on the shot (no pun intended).

TV Shows the Quirks

Another plus was the rotation of the five professionals during the course of the clinic. Each pro could open your eyes to a different aspect of your game, be it good or bad. And no ideal clinic would be complete without the court-side quencher—Gatorade. Other court-side comforts were ice water, towels and tape (for blisters).

The videotaping of all the basic strokes was most helpful because I had a set image in my head of how I look when I hit each shot, but the videotape gave me a sometimes unpleasant, always helpful image. We did have some laughs over those videotapes, because everybody has their own little quirk or two when hitting a tennis ball.

All quirks aside, though, my game has a lot more say-so now than it did pre-Pinehurst. What I learned in the ATI is slowly taking effect in my game and is certainly not forgotten.

As I was boarding the plane at Raleigh-Durham Airport (approximately, 1 1/2 hours from the resort) with my fruit basket, racquet cover, T-shirt (all compliments of the clinic) plus my graduation certificate and ATI's personal analysis of my game, I felt pretty good about my tennis game, myself and Pinehurst.

For information on the ATI programs available, contact Terry Addison at the Pinehurst Tennis Club, P.O. Box 4000, Pinehurst, North Carolina 28374 or call (919) 295-5740. For reservations at the resort, call toll free, from outside North Carolina, at (800) 334-9560 or call collect, if you live within the state, at (919) 295-3131. The tennis club is open daily, year round.

“WHAT A WAY TO DIE”

These Movies Are Definitely Not For The Kiddies!

Most Dangerous Health Hazard

Acute chest pains, certain respiratory conditions and short-term memory loss—symptoms normally associated with middle and old age—are being reported by youngsters smoking marijuana.

Dr. Ingrid Lantner, a pediatrician in Cleveland, Ohio, is one of the specialists quoted in a marijuana alert published in the November Reader's Digest: "Many pediatricians, and I am one of them, are convinced marijuana is the single most dangerous health hazard facing American youth today."

And American youth is heavily involved with pot. Peggy Mann, author of the Digest article, writes: "The latest (1979) National High School Senior Survey shows that not only does one out of ten 12th-graders smoke pot daily, but these daily users now average 3 1/2 joints a day, and 13 percent of them smoke more than seven joints daily. Of the 51 percent who smoked pot at all during their senior year, 43 percent said they usually stay high three to six hours or more."

One problem is the complexity of the chemical structure of pot. Most drugs of abuse—LSD, cocaine, alcohol, etc.—are single chemicals. Mann reports that there are 61 cannabinoids in pot that have been identified so far; of these, only a handful have been studied. "Recent research documents that marijuana smoking is harmful to the entire pulmonary tree, ranging from the sinus cavities to the deepest recess of the lungs," she writes. "(It) may be even more injurious to lungs than tobacco smoke and its symptoms may strike faster."

Can pot cause lung cancer? A 1971-74 study compared an unfiltered cigarette with a marijuana joint. (At the time, the potency of street pot was much lower than it is today.) In many respects the contents were similar, but some carcinogens were present in marijuana smoke in amounts of 50 to 70 percent greater than in the tobacco counterpart.

In addition to affecting the pulmonary apparatus, marijuana overstimulates the heart, increases blood pressure and weakens the heart muscle's pumping action. Chief of cardiovascular research at the University of California at Irvine, Dr. Wilbert S. Aronow, has been studying the effect of pot on heart patients. "Not only could marijuana precipitate a heart attack or cause sudden death in patients with known coronary disease," he concludes, "but people who might have subclinical heart disease—without symptoms—could also be taking a risk."

Marijuana also weakens the body's defense system. A study conducted at Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons tested pot smokers against two groups with known depressed immune systems: kidney transplant patients, who receive medication to suppress the immune system, and cancer patients. While the kidney-transplant patients showed the highest impairment of body defense response, pot smokers ran neck and neck with the cancer patients in terms of their inability to resist disease.

"Chest pain, emphysema, chronic bronchitis—these are conditions not normally seen in young people. Yet, at a time when four million of them...are pot users, research and clinical evidence strongly suggest marijuana as a cause of these and other early symptoms and diseases of middle and old age," the article concludes.

May, Other Artists At Greenbo Lake

Four noted Kentucky artists were at Greenbo Lake State Resort Park last Friday and Saturday to participate in an arts and crafts weekend.

Russell May, of Prestonsburg, held a session on oils and landscapes Saturday afternoon. He is known as one of the country's outstanding mountain-landscaping artists and is also a Kentucky Heritage Artist.

Doug Adams, a well-known watercolorist, conducted a session on painting with water colors Friday evening. Adams is recognized as a Kentucky Heritage Artist and is currently teaching at Morehead State University.

Saturday morning and afternoon were devoted to displays by the artists and craftsmen. Russell Cartee, one of the group, is best known for his whittling, wood carving and furniture carved from tree limbs and bark.

Donna Crigler displayed her works Saturday morning and afternoon. She owns a pottery shop in Greenup, and gave a demonstration on the art of hand rolling.

Participants' paintings were critiqued at a social with the artists Saturday evening at 8.

While the average hourly earnings have risen 6.9 percent from May 1979 to May 1980, the average weekly earning only increased 3.4 percent for Kentucky manufacturing workers, according to Department for Human Resources statistics. Robert MacDonald, the department's chief labor market analyst explained that even though hourly wages are up in the state, the workers' time on the job is reduced, thus causing the weekly earnings to be down.

Workplace Health Hazards Are Focus of KET Special

"Song Of The Canary," a 60-minute documentary focusing on deadly health hazards in the American workplace, airs on KET, Wednesday, November 5 at 10:00 p.m.

"Song Of The Canary" takes its name from the song birds that coal miners used to carry into the shafts to warn them of deadly methane gas.

The U.S. Government estimates that 100,000 American workers fall victim to occupational diseases each year. "Song Of The Canary" closely examines two clear cases of disease—pesticide workers sterilized from exposure to DBCP (dibromochloropropane) in California, and retired millworkers suffering from brown-lung (byssinosis), a debilitating deterioration of the lungs caused by exposure to cotton dust.

While making the film producers Dave Davis and Josh Hanig helped uncover a serious case of work-related sterilization in the chemical industry. The filmmakers identified DBCP as the chemical agent which sterilized workers at the Oxycem plant in Lathrop, Calif. In the wake of the discovery, the U.S. Government banned DBCP use.

The film also includes footage of actual working conditions, and interviews with workers, their families, union officials, government agents and industry executives.

"Song Of The Canary" has won numerous documentary film awards, including first place in the Chicago International Film Festival (1979), and grand prize in the Mannheim International Film Festival (1979).

"Song Of The Canary" is a co-production of WHA/TV in Madison, Wis., and Global Village, New York, N.Y.

Contractors researching the Kentucky Wild Rivers Management Plan discovered that canoe sales, which grew from 15 to 25 percent annually from 1972 until 1976, substantially leveled off in 1977.

KIWANIANNES MEET

The Prestonsburg Kiwanians held their regular monthly luncheon-meeting at May Lodge last Thursday noon, with the president, Mrs. Carolyn Ford, presiding. Members of the Beautification committee, composed of Mrs. Thelma Wallen, Mrs. Myrtle Davis and Mrs. Thelma Music, discussed the progress which has been made in regard to the possibility of procuring a rustic wood sign, to be placed near the bridge entering Prestonsburg, and reviewed other improvements that should be made under the leadership of the club. Mrs. Carolyn Ford, chairman of the RIF (Reading is Fun) program at the Prestonsburg Elementary School, gave a report on this project. She announced that a free book had been given to each of the pupils through the sixth grade there, and that these children were being aided in the reading program by members of the school's seventh and eighth grades. The Heart Clinic, to be held at the Floyd County Health Department here, November 11-12, also was discussed. It was decided for the club to ask the women of the following churches to furnish food for persons attending the clinic: Community United Methodist, First Church of God, Irene Cole Memorial Baptist and First Presbyterian. The Kiwanians are to furnish the milk, and paper cups, plates and napkins are to be furnished by local stores. Volunteering to serve on the Heart committee were Mrs. Thelma Music, Mrs. Lucy Regan, Mrs. Thelma Wallen and Mrs. Vera Ford.

Since the November and December regular meeting dates are near the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays, it was agreed that the next luncheon-meeting would be held on Thursday, November 20, and the regular meeting would be held Thursday, November 11, each at 12:30 p.m. Members who volunteered to serve on the Telephone committee were Mrs. Sarah Goble, Mrs. Vera Ford and Mrs. Ortha Meece. The installation of officers for the club year, scheduled for this meeting, was cancelled, because the officers for the past year were invited to serve again during the coming year, and their installation had previously been held. Attending the luncheon and the meeting were guests, Mrs. Sue Herron, of Pikeville, and Mrs. Mildred Fairchild and Miss Laura Fairchild, of Rockville, Md., and members, Mesdames Carolyn Ford, Thelma Wallen, Vera Ford, Docia Woods, Myrtle Davis, Lillian Rimmer, Sarah Goble, Ortha Meece, Margaret Alley, Lucy Regan and Thelma Music.

Beautification Work At Allen Central High

With the leadership of Lowell Martin and the other teachers at Allen Central, the beautification program is really beginning to move along.

Saturday, October 4, Mr. Martin, Marvin Collins, and Millard and Cecil Blanton put a sign on top of the gym declaring it as the "Home of the Rebs".

The majorettes have painted the posts around the driveway in Rebel blue and put A.C.H.S. and R.E.B.S. on them and have also painted the garbage cans and the fire hydrant located in front of the school.

Mrs. O'Quinn and her helpers, Randy Bentley, Robert Jones, Tom Caudill, and Jeff Owens, painted a Rebel man with a Rebel flag on the wall of the gymnasium and declared it "Rebel Country."

The money for the work has been collected in home rooms, and Thursday, October 16, has been designated as Tree Planting Day. Pink dogwoods will be planted that afternoon and a yellow ribbon will be tied around them in remembrance of the 49 Americans being held hostage in Iran.

A Bureau of Labor was established in the Department of Interior in 1884; it later became independent as a Department of Labor without Cabinet rank. This was absorbed into a new Department of Commerce and Labor, which was created in 1903; the present Cabinet-level Department of Labor was established in 1913, according to a U.S. Labor Department publication.

Employment Rises Slightly in Sept.

Employment rose slightly in September, and unemployment edged down, the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the U.S. Department of Labor reported. The unemployment rate was 7.5 percent in September, compared with 7.6 percent in August and 7.8 percent in July.

Total employment—as measured by the monthly survey of households—was up by 200,000 to 97.2 million. Nonfarm payroll employment—as measured by the monthly survey of establishments—also rose by about 200,000 in September. The factory workweek increased for the second straight month.

The Nation's unemployment rate was 7.5 percent in September, down from the rates that prevailed over the May-July period. From August to September, unemployment declined among adult women, whose rate dropped 0.4 percentage point to 6.1 percent, and teenagers, whose rate was down from 19.1 to 17.5 percent. The unemployment rate for adult men, in contrast, was about unchanged at 6.7 percent. The jobless rate for white workers was down over the month to 6.5 percent, while the rate for black and other workers, at 14.2 percent, has fluctuated around 14 percent since May. The unemployment rate for Hispanics continued to edge up, reaching 11.3 percent.

The rate for white-collar workers was unchanged over the month, while there were improvements among blue-collar, service, and farm workers. Among the major industry divisions, unemployment rates for workers in construction (16.5 percent) and agriculture (10.9 percent) fell substantially following large increases in the previous month.

The number of persons unemployed declined by nearly 200,000 in September to 7.8 million. The number of layoffs increased but was still low level registered in the May-July period. The median duration of joblessness, at 8.2 weeks, increased for the fourth month in a row; there was a decrease in the number of persons unemployed less than 5 weeks and an increase in the other duration categories.

A STATEMENT TO ALL U.M.W.A. MEMBERS OF EDUCATIONAL DISTRICT 4

We, the undersigned, are active or retired members of the United Miner Workers of America and were greatly distressed by last week's Floyd County Times, whereby Carson Akers, a candidate for Floyd County School Board, published a list of names of U.M.W.A. employees supporting his candidacy.

His representation that he is a friend to the U.M.W.A. cannot go unanswered. The truth is Carson Akers is and has been a non-union coal mine operator by being a part owner and operator of R.D. & K. Coal Company, a large non-union coal company operated at various sites throughout Floyd County., They have mined coal for Triple Elkhorn and Zapata Fuels, which are the largest non-union operations ever to exist and flourish in Floyd County.

Now, this non-union operator is telling us what he wishes to do for the children. If he wanted to help children, why didn't he open the doors of R.D. & K. and its connected companies to the U.M.W.A. and give the children of his laborers the benefits they would have received for medicine as well as support when their fathers became disabled or retired while in the employee of R.D. & K. and Carson Akers? We can only assume this wasn't done because such benefits for these working men and their children may have taken an extra dollar from this non-union operators' profits. Even stronger, why is it that this non-union operator, who did not feel U.M.W.A. men were good enough for labor for R.D. & K. Coal Company, now feels these same men are quite good enough for his political supporters?

Some people say the U.M.W.A. is fading, that our strength is gone, and that the non-union operators will prevail over the United Mine Workers of America. Whether this is true or not, we don't know, but when members of the U.M.W.A., as well as our so-called friends, openly endorse, support, and work for a non-union operator and seek to have him elected to a public office, surely our last days are rapidly approaching!

So, we desperately plead for all union members, as well as our true friends who believe in the U.M.W.A.'s value to the working man, please stand up, speak out, and oppose this non-union mine operator who has opposed us. Let us not lend support or a single vote to a man who has fought and denied our union!!

WE URGE YOU TO SUPPORT AND VOTE FOR DR. MARY HALL, WHOSE ROOTS AND FAMILY ARE WITH OUR UNION, AND WHOSE WORKING LIFE HAS BEEN TO SUPPORT AND ASSIST THE WORKING MAN.

Police Officers Taught How To Stay Alive

Prestonsburg police officers and sheriff's deputies went back to school last week. In a mobile classroom parked by the municipal building here, an instructor from the state Justice Department's training bureau lectured the police in "officer survival," described by the instructor as a course "to teach police officers how to stay alive."

Appalachian Housing Funds Granted State

Kentucky has been granted $2.67 million for its Appalachian Housing Program for the current federal fiscal year. Wilburn Pratt, commissioner of the state Department for Local Government, said the money will finance construction of more than 1,500 Eastern Kentucky houses in the fiscal year that started Oct. 1. The Appalachian Regional Commission announced approval of the state's application for funds Thursday, Pratt said in a speech before the Kentucky Rural Housing Advisory Coalition. Pratt said that while the 1,500 figure appears ambitious, providing decent housing is a major goal of Gov. John Y. Brown, Jr.'s administration. In the past two months, he pointed out, the Department for Local Government has approved grants to build or renovate 795 homes in the Eastern Kentucky counties. State housing programs need to be strengthened in some ways, Pratt said. A more effective process is needed for selecting housing projects to be funded and for picking housing sites, he said. Pratt also called for better coordination between state and federal housing agencies, an increase in the Kentucky Housing Corp.'s mortgage financing capacity and more support for local housing efforts.

According to a U.S. Department of Labor publication, the first written contract between coal miners and operators was signed on July 29, 1870. It provided for a sliding scale of pay, based on the price of coal.

Blood Station Here Has a Record Week

The week of October 8 was a record week for the Prestonsburg Station of the Central Kentucky Blood Center. A total of 34 pints was collected from voluntary donors. The Center should collect an average of 30 pints each week in order to have enough blood available for Floyd County patients who may need it, a Center representative said. This means that between 30 and 40 donors must present themselves each week to give.

To help generate more donors, the Prestonsburg Fire Department is giving away free passes to the Haunted House to anyone who comes in to donate at the station through October 30. The passes may be picked up at the donor station.

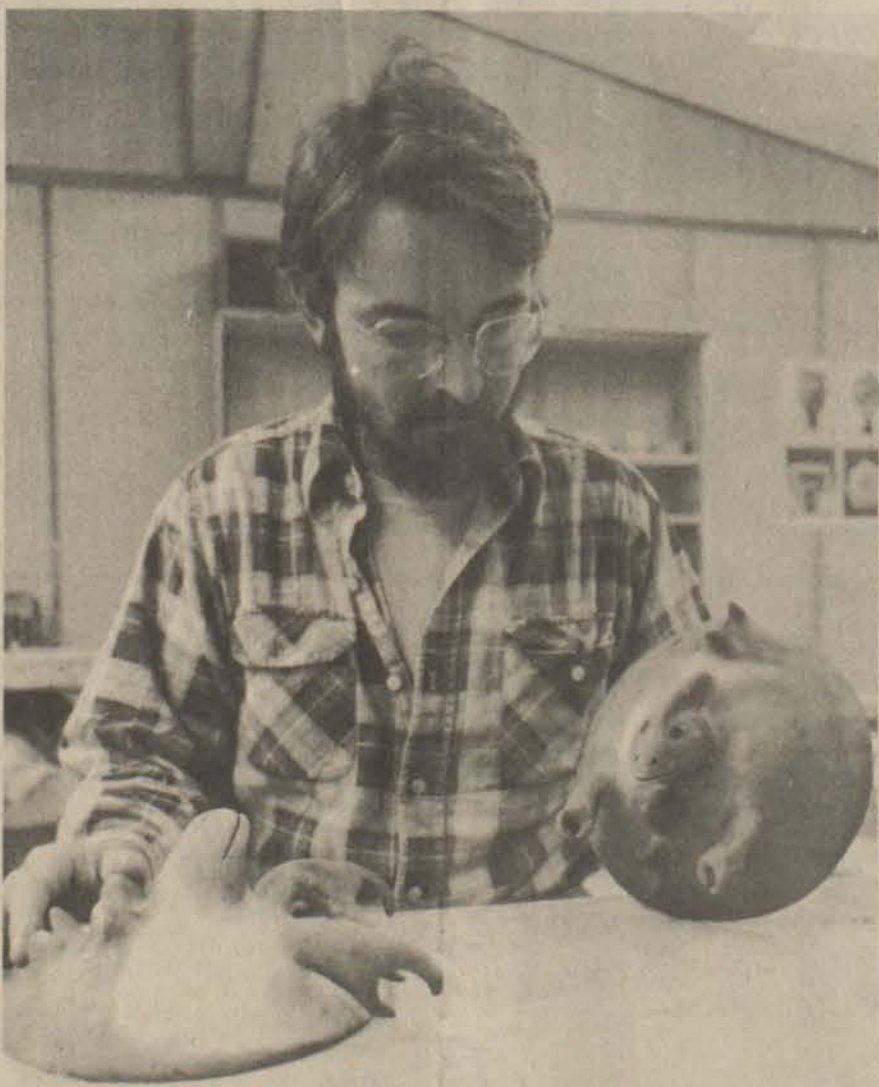

The Blood Center welcomed three Floyd county businesses as new members of its group blood donor plan. Brown's Produce, Pic Pac, and Elliott Construction Company all had donors at the station last week. Any business interested in starting a group donor plan for its employees should call the station at 886-1557.

The Prestonsburg Station is open Tuesdays, 10-6; Thursdays, 12-8; Saturdays, 9-5. It is located on the second floor of the Municipal Building.

Railroad Adm. Testing Tracks

From Paducah to Hazard, from Covington to Corbin the sleek silver rail cars of the Federal Railroad Administration are going about their way testing the miles of track in Kentucky. Appearing for a command performance at the request of Gov. John Y. Brown, Jr.—after the derailment of a chemical-laden train near Muldraugh last July—the railroad administration last week began monitoring selected sections of track with a sophisticated vehicle known as the Track Geometry Survey Vehicle. Housed within a converted rail coach are advanced electronic sensing and data processing equipment. The cars can collect track data while traveling at speeds up to 120 miles per hour, according to federal officials. John M. Sullivan, federal railroad administrator, said the specially equipped cars are in addition to regularly scheduled inspections by both federal and state personnel. So far this year about 2,500 miles, or 60 percent of the tracks in Kentucky, have been inspected. During the first nine months of this year, the track survey vehicle inspected 365 miles of track belonging to four railway systems: Clinchfield, 91 miles; Chesapeake and Ohio, 147 miles; Illinois Central Gulf, 125 miles; and the Louisville and Nashville, two miles. Beginning Oct. 23 the inspection team plans to cover 1,727 track miles including the Louisville and Nashville for 1,120 miles, the Southern, 307 miles; and the C. & O., 300 miles. Sullivan said the railroad administration has been "stern and strict" (in the inspection of rail lines) in an effort to cut down on the number of accidents. He reported that about 140 miles of Illinois Central Gulf line in Kentucky had been closed this year. Sullivan said he has seen a steady decline in accidents in the last three years and feels this is the result of revised safety standards that can easily be interpreted by rail officials and higher fines imposed for those not complying with the regulations. He said he would like to see an accident-free system and will start "leaning on the railroad system" to get "a healthy, energy efficient system that produces the goods." Sullivan said the federal agency has a scale by which it measures the safety of a section of track. Irregularities in the track do not always mean it will be closed or the system fined, he added.

Exhibit Features Swain's Work

"Gargoyles," an exhibit of pottery and clay sculpture by artist Adrian Swain, will begin at the Prestonsburg Community College library this evening (Wednesday) with a reception from 6 till 8. The ceramic vessels and sculptures displayed often incorporate fantastic, anthropomorphic designs although the artist feels that while the pieces are different, "they are not too far out for most everyone to enjoy." Swain, a native of England, who has studied and resided in Kentucky since 1971, has worked for the past year in Floyd county schools with the Artists in the Schools program after serving in the same program with the Rowan county schools for more than two years. Swain is currently the only artist working in Floyd schools as part of the program which is administered by the Kentucky Arts Commission and sponsored in part by the National Endowment for the Arts, Floyd county schools and P.C.C. Working with 7th and 8th graders primarily in a number of county grade schools and with high school students at McDowell, Swain calls his duties, "one of the most rewarding kinds of work situations I can imagine." At a time when art has been all but cancelled from school curriculums through cuts in state funding, Swain says the Artists in the Schools project serves to provide students at least some exposure to the arts. "I can at least convey my enthusiasm," he pointed out, "and the kids really are receptive." The artist, a member of the Kentucky Guild of Artists and Craftsmen, has displayed his work at a number of shows and exhibits in eight states and the current exhibit at the college library will run through Nov. 4. Hours are: Mon.-Thurs., 8 a.m.-8:30 p.m., and Friday, 8 a.m. till 4:30 p.m.

ALPHA (Action League for Physically Handicapped Adults) is not required by the Kentucky Open Records Law to make its membership list, including home addresses of members, available to the public or another organization, according to an opinion written by Assistant Attorney General Carl Miller. REDUCE CLEANING OF LEATHER WITH PROPER CARE

If you're planning to buy a leather garment for yourself or as a gift, keep in mind that special upkeep is required to keep it looking its best.

Leather is not generally an all-weather, all-occasion material unless it has been specially treated. Because of the special richness of its texture most leather garments require professional cleaning by a firm that specializes in leather goods.

While cleaning at home rarely produces satisfactory results, care when wearing and storing is recommended to prolong a leather garment's good looks and lessen the need for cleaning. These leather care measures are suggested:

Women may wear a scarf at the neck to help prevent skin oils and make-up from soiling the collar. Men may choose a turtle-neck or shirt with a collar to protect a leather jacket.

If suede or smooth leather garments get wet in a drizzle or downpour, dry naturally at room temperature. Artificial heat will dry out the leather's natural oils and make the leather stiff. Before putting the garment away, make certain it is completely dry to prevent mildew. Avoid soaking the area. Rinse with wiping with a clean, damp cloth, then blot dry with a soft, dry cloth.

Suede garments need frequent brushing. Use a dry bristle brush or a rubber sponge to keep dirt from settling into the nap. Give special attention to the neckline and cuffs.

For lightly soiled areas on suede, try using an art gum eraser or emery board to remove spots and restore nap. Food and ink stains are difficult to remove and generally require professional care.

Hang a leather garment on padded hangers to keep shoulders in shape and prevent marks a wire hanger might cause.

To get rid of wrinkles, hang leather garments in a damp place, such as a steamy bathroom. If wrinkles remain, press with a dry iron. Set the iron on the rayon setting and use heavy wrapping paper as a press cloth to protect the leather. Press with quick light strokes. At the end of the season, have the leather garment cleaned and store in a cool, dry place.

WINTERIZING SPRAYERS SAVES TIME NEXT SPRING

Farmers can save time and effort next spring by cleaning and repairing pesticide spray equipment before winter, according to John Sparks, Floyd county extension agent for agriculture. Winterizing consists of cleaning sprayers to flush pesticide residues that could harm crops next year, and repairing or replacing broken parts.

"Most people put the equipment away and forget about it until they need it next year," Sparks said, "but taking care of equipment now will save time next spring when farmers are in a bind."

Farmers can clean a sprayer by running a tank of water through it, but sprayers used with herbicides that could cause carry-over problems should be cleaned with a water and ammonia mix. He recommends one pint ammonia to 25 gallons of water.

Farmers should circulate the mixture through the sprayer for about five minutes, and run a small amount through the nozzle. The remaining mixture should be left in the tank overnight, then discharged the next day and the sprayer flushed with a tankful of water.

Pesticide equipment should also be checked to make sure it will be in working order next spring. Any bent or broken parts should be repaired or replaced. Cracked or broken hoses should be replaced or tagged for replacement next spring.

Farmers should remove the nozzle and inline strainers to see that they are clean and open, and do not show excessive wear. The nozzle should allow the proper flow of pesticide. Damaged or worn nozzles or screens should be replaced.

Farmers should dismantle the sprayer pump to check the condition of the rollers and other moving parts. If rollers in centrifugal pumps are worn, they should be replaced.

If farmers cannot flush all the water out of the pump after cleaning it, they should run antifreeze through so it will not freeze and break in the winter.

STEVE WRIGHT, No. 19, catches one of the two passes which he ran for Prestonsburg touchdowns in the first quarter of the Blackcats' contest with the Pikeville Panthers, Friday night, here. PHS lost the game, 18-14.

Prestonsburg's Black Cats didn't win the game but in defeat it was one of their finest hours.

They lost to the odds-on favorites, the powerful Pikeville High School Panthers, here last Friday night, 18 to 14, but only in the last few minutes of play.

Meanwhile at Louisa, the Betsy Layne Bobcats were dropping a thriller to Lawrence County, 32 to 26, and Wheelwright's Trojans were losing another cliffhanger at home to the Jenkins Cavaliers, 30 to 28.

The Black Cats' first touchdown came in the first quarter on a 25-yard pass play from Randy Tinscher, halfback, to Steve Wright, with B. J. Sturgill kicking the extra point. The Cats came back in the same opening quarter with another marker on a 40-yard pass play from Quarterback Jack Wells to Steve Wright. Sturgill again added the extra point.

Pikeville's only score in the opening quarter was on a field goal by freshman Richards, then added eight more points on a touchdown and pass for two extra points, going to the dressing rooms behind, 14 to 11.

The Panthers took the lead with little more than seven minutes left in the game when Quarterback Roger Caudill scored a touchdown and soccer-style-kicker Randy Richard added the extra point.

Prestonsburg had two more chances at making a comeback. They had a first and 10 on Pikeville's 47 but an interception ended that threat. Again, with 47 seconds left, they took the ball on their own 20 and on the passing of Wells drove to the Pikeville 33 when time ran out.

Wells completed 11 of 17 aeriels for 164 yards, with one interception. His Pikeville counterpart, senior Roger Caudill, passed for one touchdown and ran for another.

At Louisa the Betsy Layne Bobcats were down, 20 to 6, at halftime but roared back in the third quarter on two touchdown passes from Quarterback Lykins to Newsome of 22 and 40 yards. Senior tailback Wayne Morris ran for 163 yards and two touchdowns during his three quarters of play. Morris now has a rushing total for the season of 1435 yards and 13 touchdowns. Lawrence County's winning score came with only 13 seconds left in the game.

W.H.S. Football Alive and Well

By KENNY RICE

Wilbur "Shorty" Jamerson experienced something in July that he was not accustomed to. He was not enjoying his job as coach of Wheelwright's football team. He was discouraged by the small turnout, only 16, at the once-powerful Class A school.

When Jamerson came to Wheelwright in 1956, the school had discontinued the sport. The former Kentucky grid star revived the sport with a four-game schedule that year. Twenty-four years later, the Trojans have never missed fielding a grid unit with Jamerson either being head coach or assistant coach.

Wheelwright's 22-man team—they added six just before the season-opener—will host the top-ranked team in Class A, Paintsville, this Friday night. Paintsville enters the game a decided favorite. That does not discourage Wheelwright, they are used to overcoming odds. They welcome the chance of playing the state's best Class A club. They've already held their own against Cumberland, then the fourth-ranked team in Class A.

The Trojans have a tradition. Wheelwright is respected everywhere in Class A circles as a team that will play anybody, anywhere. Their schedule over the past three seasons has included games with the best 3-A school in Tennessee, one of the best 3-A schools in Ohio and Greenup County when the latter was the defending state 4-A champ. They lost those games but they came close. Over the years, the wins have outnumbered the losses considerably, but winning has never been stressed above all else.

"When it ceases to be fun for the kids, then we'll quit," says Jamerson. "If we win, that's great, we love to win, but we play to have fun. I have never felt any pressure to win. My job is not on the line, I think, based on the wins and losses."

It is this refreshing approach that Jamerson and Don Daniels have instilled in teams since 1956. Wheelwright plays hard, they play to win, but they also are a close team that likes to play football. Wheelwright football squads are sort of one big happy family.

With 296 students in the school, and about half of the total males, the Trojans have a small enrollment even by Class A standards. With small eighth grade classes at Osborne and Melvin, it appears the enrollment will remain below 300 next year. Jamerson is not worried. He knows there is enough interest in football in the community.

"There has always been a following for our team over the years. The fans of Wheelwright have been loyal, they have supported our program."

W'wright Downs Mullins, 34-16

By Kim Davis, Karen McKinney, Anna Thornsberry, W.H.S. Journalism.

The Wheelwright Trojans traveled to Mullins Thursday, October 16, to take on the Mullins Tigers with a 34-16 victory. Both teams made good yardage with Trojans rushing 376 yards and passing 64 yards for a total of 440 yards.

The Trojans were led in scoring by Eddie Little, who ran 134 yards for 20 points. Quarterback Eddie Johnson ran 43 yards for 12 points and Tim Cole scored two points. Other runners for the Trojans were Gerald Osborne who ran the ball 105 yards and Alan Tackett ran 75 yards.

The Tigers' Bill Thacker ran for 87 yards and scored 12 points; Willy Lee scored five points with one a 23 yard field goal and Kevin Harris ran a total of 50 yards.

Wheelwright kicked and Mullins received the ball. The Tigers were the first to score by bringing the ball down the field to set up a field goal which was good. Wheelwright took possession of the ball but was unable to score, so they punted to the Tigers. The Tigers drove the ball down field with 5:58 left in the first quarter, and Bill Thacker scored the first touchdown with Willy Lee picking up the extra points. Wheelwright received and carried the ball next with Eddie Little finding an opening in the defensive and went through for a 24-yard touchdown. The extra points attempt failed. Failing a first down, the Tigers punted to the Trojans. Wheelwright received the ball and brought it down the field where Eddie Little ran 43 yards for a touchdown and extra points were scored by Tim Cole.

In the second quarter, quarterback Eddie Johnson ran for a 14-yard touchdown and Eddie Little scored the extra points.

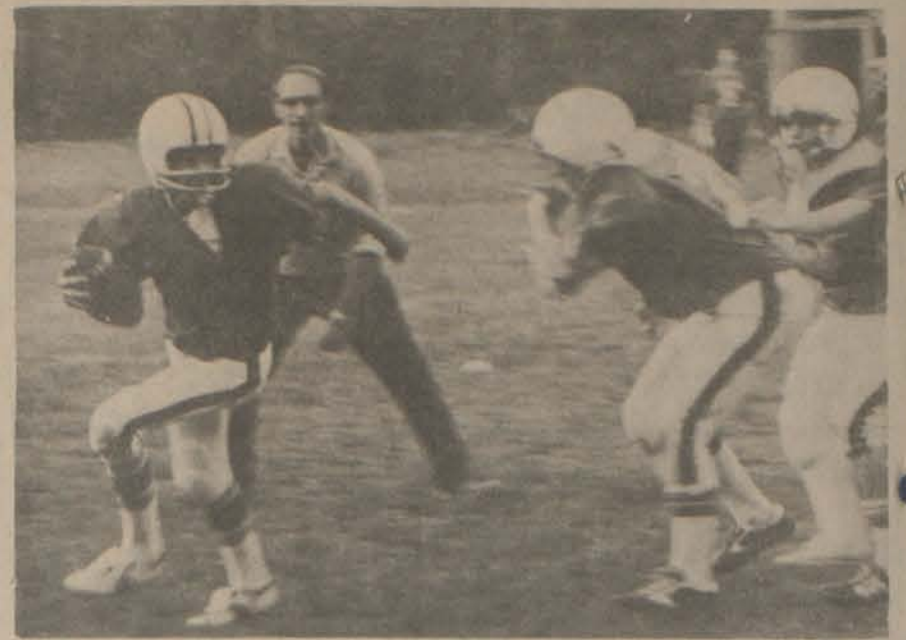

The second half was slow paced with the Trojans scoring twice and the Tigers once. The Tigers Bill Thacker scored their last touchdown with 9:54 left in the game and the final touchdown for the Trojans came when Eddie Little rushed 52 yards for a touchdown.

The Trojans record is now 4-3.

Hallowe'en Carnival Slated Here Saturday

Osborne Wins Class B

Jackie Hall, of Osborne Elementary, runs the ball for the Eagles against the Allen grade school Eagles. Hall scored six points in the game and Osborne clinched the Class B championship.

ALL-STAR CHANGES

The Floyd county grade school all star football game is meant to be a good thing. All the participants get a trophy and they are recognized as being "All Stars."

After the recent lopsided win by the Class A over the Class B stars, perhaps it is time to re-evaluate the game. It had to be disheartening for the Class B boys during the romp. Even being an "All Star" has a price.

The Class A schools have proved once again that they are bigger and, collectively, better. To make the game more interesting, more enjoyable for all concerned, it is worth considering these changes.

Take the first and third place Class A team and the second and fourth place Class B teams for one all star unit and reverse the formula to get the other team. This may not be the total answer, but it might prevent another mismatch.

UP IN THE AIR

Phillip Haywood has opened up the aerial attack of the Prestonsburg Blackcats because of the development of quarterback Jack Wells in the off season. Wells has been averaging 20 passes a game over the last five contests. He has thrown for an average of two touchdowns in the last five games.

Wells completed three touchdown passes against Morgan County, all of them happening on fourth down situations.

"We have confidence in our passer and receivers," Haywood said, "We'll pass on any down this season."

TACKLE

Prestonsburg's fine defensive tackle, John Burchett (6 ft., 220-lb jr.) is building All State credentials for next season. Last year he was voted the Cat's top lineman. This season he leads the linemen in tackles, including a game high 18 versus Lawrence County. Burchett is one of the region's top tackles this season and will probably be one of the state's best next season.

Lady Trojans Coach Eyes Coming Season

COACH BOBBY JONES

By Raymond Burke, Rodney Hall, Teddy Spears, W.H.S. Journalism.

Bobby Jones is at the helm of the Lady Trojans basketball team this year and the Wheelwright girls will be opening their schedule with two tournament plays, the Betsy Layne Inv. and the Pre-Season.

This schedule will prove to be a real test for the team as so many of the Lady Trojans are injured that it is difficult for the team to really work on their playing patterns. Out of 13 players seven are injured including Janet Little, Sr., Anna Thornsberry, Sr., Pabby Holbrook, Jr., Kami Ferrari, Jr., Mia Jones, Fr., Evelyn Boyd, Fr., and Marylyn Harris, Fr.

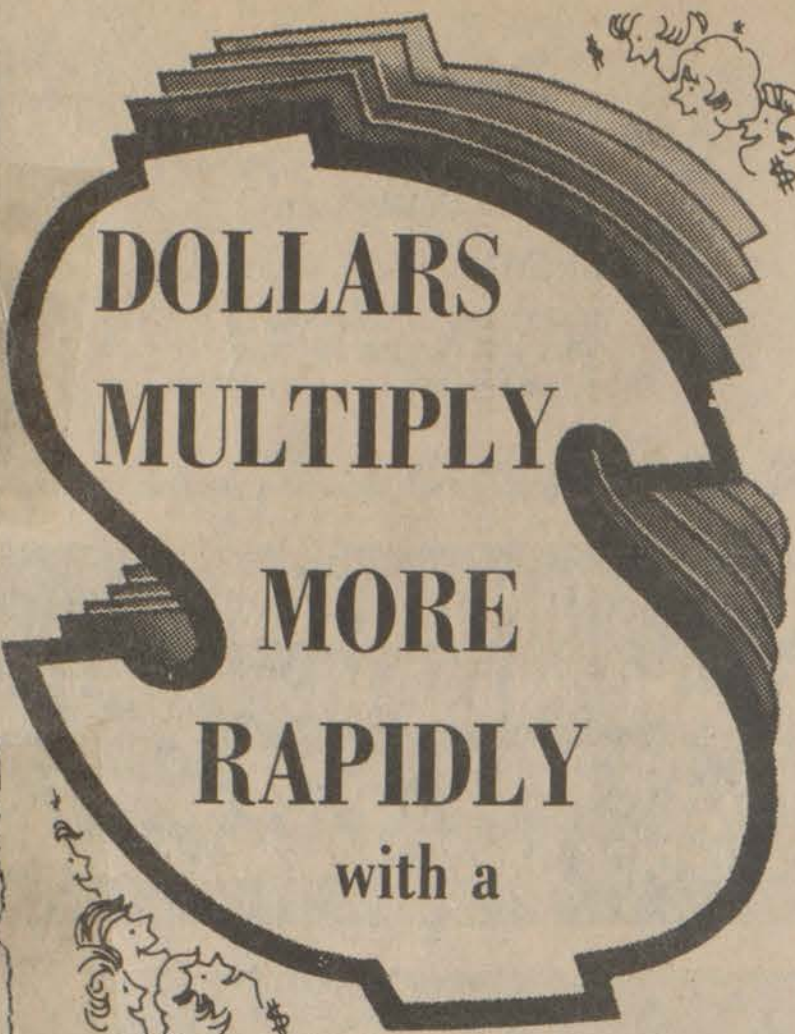

Coach Jones is hoping to better the win-loss record of the Lady Trojans last season and the early tournaments will show Coach Jones what problems his team will have to overcome. The returning players should be able to help the other to adjust to the play and the style of the Lady Trojans. Coach Jones hopes that by the beginning of the season his players will be ready, but until then he says that the team might have a little trouble getting into shape and learning the patterns.

The Lady Trojans will get enough exercise when they play the past stars of the Lady Trojans team and Coach Jones feels that the scrimmaging could prove which players are willing to play and give players a real test.

Senior veterans Janet Little and Anna Thornsberry feel that, despite, injuries and inexperience, this may yet be the year for the Lady Trojans.

Animals Learn Survival Early

Only a few human babies walk before they are a year old. While still in the crawling stage, they have parents to protect them.

With wildlife, it's different. Many four-footed creatures can—and must—run almost from the moment of birth. Because most wild animals are less protective of their offspring than humans, nature endows their newborn with a variety of defenses against predators—including the ability to run and jump when barely out of the womb.

This is one of many wonders of the animal kingdom examined in Living Wild, a new book on animal behavior published by the National Wildlife Federation in time for the Christmas tabletop book trade.

But Living Wild, with its 268 color photographs of animals in the wild, is more than a tabletop adornment. In its 208 pages David Robinson, a Great Falls, Va., naturalist and author, explores the dark burrows, the gurgling sea caves, and the windswept aeries of the planet to report on how animals actually live and why they behave as they do.

He reports, for instance, that although the calves of the wildebeest and the giraffe are almost born running, a newborn deer, lacking the speed to outrun its predators, must rely on two other remarkably effective defense mechanisms: a camouflage coloring that makes it almost impossible to see and a lack of odor that makes it impossible to scent.

"A keen-nosed predator may stalk past the motionless little fur ball only a few feet away and never catch a whiff," says Robinson. But—just as remarkable—as quickly as the fawn's running skills develop, so does a body odor.

Apart from mammals, most animals are born without a protective mother watching over them, and never know either of their parents. Parents who love and care for their children, in fact, are in a very small minority. It's much easier simply to abandon newly-laid eggs, and this is the most common practice in the animal kingdom. "It's also the most wasteful," Living World points out, "since without a guardian parent, many eggs must be laid so that a few may survive. One female codfish lays so many that the entire Atlantic Ocean would be packed solid with codfish in only a few years if all the eggs hatched and the young survived to adulthood."

The odds for survival improve dramatically when parents look after the egg-filled nest. A bird nestling on its eggs can be a fierce defender against all comers—even its own mate. To avoid squabbles, many shore birds perform elaborate rituals as they relinquish nest-guarding duties to one another. As Living Wild explains, "when a male grey heron returns to the nest, his mate stretches her neck upwards and then stands, engaging him in a noisy ceremony. Boobies swap clumps of seaweed; gannets and penguins bow in solemn formality. A male turnstone offers a pebble; the female picks it up, drops it in the nest, and turns the incubation over to her mate."

Mammal youngsters, especially carnivores, the meal-eating hunters, have more to learn about living wild than other animals. Naturally, it is these babies who have the most protective, attentive parents, and a fairly large proportion of the youngsters' lives are spent in juvenile dependency. The most important factor in this learning process is the strong bond between mother and young. The mother serves as a "walking textbook," says the NWF publication, "a living audiovisual aid in the instruction of the juveniles."

One mammal baby, however, doesn't seem to have much to learn from its parents. Manatees, or sea cows, are vegetarians, so no hunting lessons are necessary. And since they have no enemies, there's nothing to learn about fending off predators. Nonetheless, the manatee calf is probably the most pampered of all animals. Born in the shallow waters off Florida, the calf weighs in at 60 pounds. But it seems light and buoyant when its father—a seven-foot submarine of some 400 pounds—cradles it in his flippers or passes it to the female for nursing.

"The calf nurses while the father leaves to feed on the lush vegetation nearby," says Living Wild. "Then he returns and cradles the young sea cow while its mother forages." Between the efforts of the male and female manatee, the calf is cradled almost constantly. And it nurses for nearly two years.

Ambulance Aid Shy of Needs, Operators Told

"Just enough to make sure everyone is disappointed" is how a state Department for Human Resources (DHR) official described the funds available this year to assist local ambulance services.

Chris Smith, administrative assistant to Human Resources Secretary Grady Stumbo, told health planners and ambulance operators here last week that $1.3 million has been authorized by the state legislature to assist ambulance services statewide—$1 million to hire personnel and $350,000 toward the purchase of ambulances and equipment.

However, the personnel monies are designed to match funds budgeted for ambulance services by local government—of which there are none in this county—and the equipment monies amount to a maximum of $12,500 per county.

"The money is woefully inadequate," Smith conceded, explaining that DHR received for ambulance support only $2.7 million of the $8 million it had sought from the legislature for the current biennium. Smith estimated that more than $20 million would be needed to bring the state's ambulance services up to a minimally acceptable standard.

Secretary Stumbo said here recently he would seek a new tax, possibly on liquor sales, to fund ambulance operations in the future.

Linc Lemaster, Big Sandy ADD health planner, characterized the present state program as "trying to sweeten 50 gallons of water with a pinch of sugar." Competition for the scarce monies could undermine recent efforts to get the ADD district's independent ambulance operators to work together, he said, suggesting that the money might have been better placed in escrow until "a good prioritization system" had been developed.

For their part, the ambulance operators seemed mostly concerned about the rate of their reimbursement for transporting patients on Medicaid or Medicare. "I lose money on every Medicaid patient," said R. W. Hewson, operator of Pike County Ambulance Service, "and Medicare, which is supposed to help old people, makes it as hard as possible for them to get a dollar."

Lawrence Stephens, operator of the Magoffin County Ambulance Service, said the state reimbursement of $60 for transporting a patient from Highlands Regional Medical Center to the UK Medical Center in Lexington is not enough to cover his costs for the trip.

The operators acknowledged that, while their licenses require that they transport patients regardless of ability to pay, many operators will not make a trip unless it is paid for in advance.

Hewson said that, although his company never refuses to transport a patient, the $284 he charges for a trip from Pikeville Methodist Hospital to Lexington represents a subsidy for the "many who can't pay" for the service.

Hewson also alleged that some nurses at the Pikeville hospital are charging exorbitant fees to accompany ambulance patients. Some insist on fees ranging from $150 to $300 for the six-hour Lexington trip, he charged.

PRESIDENT JIMMY CARTER stopped at Tri-State Airport, Huntington, W. Va., Monday for a bit of stumping in the coalfields and Allen Bolling, of Prestonsburg was there with camera in hand. Seated, beside the president is Kentucky Governor John Y. Brown, Jr. W. Va. Congressman Nick Joe Rahall is also pictured.

BETSY LAYNE COMMUNITY NEWS

The best of news has been with the late revival at the Freewill Baptist Church, where many were converted and were baptized. The revival was a great spiritual awakening, adding to that received formerly in revivals and in weekly church services.

Mr. and Mrs. Marion Hale were able to attend church services at the Betsy Layne Free Will Church, Sunday.

Among the recently hospitalized who have been released and are recuperating at home or are able to resume their duties are Langley Hall, Mrs. Marion Hale, Clarence Hays, Mayne Goble Stanfield.

Mrs. Minnie Boyd has returned home from the Reginal Hospital, where she has been very ill.

Mrs. Billie Osborne and Mrs. Cheryl B. Meade flew to Disneyland, Fla., October 14 to see Woody and Mike Blackburn play in a golf tournament. They returned home Oct. 19. Mrs. Flora Osborne, of Harold, took care of "Aunt" Eliza Blackburn in their absence.

Wesley Dean Robinson returned from the University of Kentucky and attended services at the United Methodist Church, Sunday, where his father, Rev. Kaminski is pastor.

Among those attending the homemakers district meeting at Prestonsburg last Friday was Mrs. Maudie Hill, who is a member of the Harold club.

Those from Betsy Layne who attended the district mission rally Monday at the Vogel-Day Methodist Church Oct. 20 were the president of the United Methodist Women of Betsy Layne, Mrs. Kelsa Elliott, missionary leader, and Mrs. Elizabeth Spears, of the Vogel-Day United Methodist Women.

Mildred Davis is recuperating from injuries suffered in a fall down the basement steps of the Methodist Church, two weeks ago. She is grateful for those who helped her.

Alice Stratton reports that she and her son, Smith Kelley, of Louisville, are both in ill health and request prayers of area citizens.

Misses Mary Lou Rhodes, for several years a missionary in Monrovia, Liberia and Africa, and Eleanor Acker, home missionary in this section for 34 years, visited last Tuesday with Mr. and Mrs. James George and Mrs. Della Wise. Miss Rhodes has been recalled from Liberia, and assigned to work in Washington, D.C.

The road and part of the Loar cemetery at Betsy Layne have been recently worked on and cleared by Mr. and Mrs. James George, who also hired a man to help. Then they joined with the Rev. Cohen Campbell in burning the debris, supervised by James George, deputy fire chief. Much shrubbery, vines, etc. remain to be removed by relatives of loved ones buried there. Myrtle Howse has been hiring help to move the grass for the last three years and also helped clear the roadway. There are a few groves that need filling, also to be marked. We hope some of the relatives will help in their own way to restore the cemetery so the younger children and grandchildren, will take over some of the responsibility which is our heritage.

To this date the Betsy Layne Church of Christ has contributed $100 for the Ten Commandments framed plaques, to be placed in area schools. Emma Grace Hartley is the leading solicitor. Orders will be sent to the Heritage Foundation, Louisville, and returned quickly to your school.

Citizens of Betsy Layne extend sympathy to the family of Maynard Hunter, who was killed in a mining accident last week, also to the family of Mary Conn Hunter Akers, who passed away Oct. 9.

Nora Stone took her father, Eligah Collins to the home of her sister, Vesta Layne, of Ashland, to spend a few weeks. She spent the night with her sister and family.

Danny Collins celebrated his 29th birthday, October 25. Kenny Ray Lynch had his 30th birthday, Oct. 26.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Layne, of Romulus, Mich., formerly of this area, were visiting friends and relatives here last week. Mr. Layne is reported to be feeling some better after a recent illness.

Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Lynch and Earra Stone have been ill at their home this week.

CARD OF THANKS

The family of Roy Osborne wish to express our deep appreciation and sincere thanks to all those who were so kind and thoughtful at the death of our beloved husband and father. We wish to extend a special thanks for the beautiful flowers, gifts and food from all our neighbors and friends; also the Regular Baptist ministers for their consoling words. We truly thank the Merion Funeral Home staff for the extra help they gave us. All the things that anyone did for us will long be remembered.

LEE ESTER OSBORNE

During its first year of operation, five vanpool vans carrying state employees to and from Frankfort logged more than 100,000 accident-free miles and saved an estimated 40,000 gallons of gas.

Jason Douglas Hall, son of Rhonda and Terry Hall, celebrated his second birthday Oct. 19 with a party given in his honor. He received many gifts from friends and relatives. He is the grandson of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Hall and Betty Hurd. His great-grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Ballard Lewis.

Mr. and Mrs. Dave Von Lynch, of Wyandotte, Mich., has been visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Lynch and others here.

Kathy Hurd Williams was baptized Sunday into the First Baptist Church of Pikeville. She is the daughter of Betty Hurd, of Betsy Layne.

Citizens of Betsy Layne remember in prayer the sick and needy of our community. Stanfield, Charles Goble, Mildred Brooks, Aileen Wallen, Myrtle Howard, E. W. Hurley, Fannie Steele, Myra Amburgey, "Aunt" Eliza Blackburn, Hattie Hall, Rubin Hall, Maude Colegrove, Basiel Hamilton, Margrett Boyd, Bill McCoy, Sr.

Mary Gibson, of Lexington, and Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Burton, of Monticello, Ky., were visiting their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Millard Gibson over the week-end. Mr. and Mrs. Burton attended Sunday services at the Betsy Layne United Methodist Church.

Pen Escapee Scott Sought As 4 Abducted

State and federal officers joined last week in a search for Richard Scott, Pike county man who escaped from the Frankfort Correctional Institute Oct. 2 while serving a 21-year term for the robbery of the Alpike Motel, near Allen.

State Police Detective Bob Forsythe said Scott also is being sought by the FBI on kidnapping charges.

The kidnappings in which Scott is suspect were those of a Proctorville, O., couple Oct. 15 in Huntington, W. Va., and later of Dennis Slone, 20, and Andrea Tackett, 15, both of Fishtrap.

The Ohioans, Kenneth Diamond, 23, and his wife, Angela, 17, were abducted at knifepoint on Tenth street, Huntington, as they left their car to attend a rock concert. They were released the following day in the Kimper, Pike county, vicinity. Investigators said the couple was bound with ropes while held overnight in the Kimper vicinity.

Next day, the Fishtrap residents were abducted. They were released, unharmed, Sunday at Hickory, North Carolina.

A truck and several firearms were stolen from the premises of Harold Robinson in the Fishtrap area, and Scott is wanted as a suspect in that offense, also.

15 Grants Made To Aid Small Mines

Fifteen grants totaling $360,619.22 were awarded during September by the state from a federally funded program to help small coal operators gather environmental data, Jackie Swigart, secretary of the Department for Natural Resources and Environmental Protection, announced today.

"The information gathered with these grants will become a part of the department's data bank and will benefit the state's entire coal industry," Swigart said.

The Small Operators Assistance Program, which awarded the 15 grants, provides funds to assist coal operators who mine 100,000 tons or less of coal a year in obtaining hydrologic, geologic and laboratory data required under present federal regulations and the state's permanent program for surface coal mining.

Program manager Bob Trimble said the grants awarded to operators range from $19,514 to $29,818. The gathering of such environmental data on ground and surface waters, stream life and geological strata represents the most expensive part of a coal operator's permit application, he noted.

The program, known as "SOAP," was established last October by the federal Office of Surface Mining, which provided $8.1 million to the Natural Resources Department for grants during the first year of operations. The limit for grant eligibility was set by the federal mining office.

Grants totaling $1.4 million have been made this year, Trimble said.

After a coal operator is deemed eligible for the program and it is determined that the data sought is not otherwise available, SOAP staff members work with the operator to select a consultant for the data-gathering, Trimble explained. Grant payments are made directly to the consultant firms, he said.

VISITS SISTERS

Mrs. Sue Herron, of Pikeville, spent a part of last week visiting her sisters, Mrs. Margaret P. Alley, here, and Mrs. Henry Curtis and Mr. Curtis, of the Middle Creek road. On Thursday she was the guest of Mrs. Alley at the Kiwanianes' luncheon at May Lodge, and Mrs. Alley later accompanied her home.

Our present-day system of recording time has been borrowed from many cultures, the November Reader's Digest observes. The 60-minute hour comes from the Babylonians, the 24-hour day from the Egyptians and the seven-day week from the Hebrews.

Prussic Acid Poison Increased By Frost

Early frosts in Kentucky have warned cattlemen of the dangers of prussic acid poisoning, which has killed some animals in the last two weeks. But cattlemen can reduce the risk of potentially dangerous forages with good grazing practices, said Garry Lacefield, Extension forages specialist in the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture.

Plants of the sorghum variety, including sorghum hybrids, can produce toxic levels of prussic acid, depending on the weather and plant height, Lacefield said. Pearl millet is apparently free of prussic acid in toxic amounts, he said.

Several weeds, including johnsongrass, and leaves of wild cherry trees can also produce dangerous amounts of prussic acid, one of the most potent toxins in nature, said Lacefield.

"An animal that consumes a lethal dose will die in a few hours," he said. "Often, a dead animal the morning after a frost is the first warning of prussic acid poisoning."

Animals consuming lesser amounts will have labored breathing and irregular pulse, and will froth at the mouth and stagger, he said.

Lacefield recommends several steps to minimize the danger of prussic acid poisoning:

Do not graze sorghum plants for two weeks after a non-killing frost.

After a killing frost, do not graze until plant material is dry, usually in 48 hours. Check each field to make sure it was completely frozen.

Do not graze at night when frost is likely.

Graze sorghum plants only when they are at least 15 inches tall. Do not graze wilted plants or plants with tillers. Young tillers contain higher levels of prussic acid, which is diluted as the plant matures.

Delay grazing fields of crop-residues infested with johnsongrass and other weeds until the fields have been completely frozen and the weeds are dried.

Do not allow access to wild cherry leaves whether they are wilted or not. After storms, check pastures for fallen limbs.

Lacefield said farmers usually do not have prussic acid feeding problems from silage or field cured hay.

Fall Arts-Crafts Show Nov. 1-2 at Natural Bridge

The countryside should be awash with color Nov. 1 and 2 when the annual Autumn Arts and Crafts Show and Sale gets under way at Natural Bridge State Resort Park—the gateway between the hills and the bluegrass.

"Our autumn show and sale is one of the most popular," explains Carole Bush, "because most people want to enjoy the scenery as well as have an outing before cold weather."

The scenery surrounding Hemlock Lodge and the nearby multi-purpose building where the show will be located is magnificent. From balconies of the lodge and the show building, visitors look out to far vistas of forests, and mountains of solid rock, craggy, varicolored and seemingly holding the sky in place.

Below is a lake reflecting autumn foliage; foot trails and horse trails campgrounds and picnic places. Looking up, visitors see the gigantic rock bridge that spans the sky—an outstanding sight in any season, but in autumn a link to some of the commonwealth's most spectacular sights.

Bush, manager of the park gift shop and coordinator of the arts and crafts event, said several new craftspeople will exhibit and demonstrate. "We found Treva Peyton and her quilts at the Morgan County Sorghum Festival," she said, "and she will bring dozens of her prettiest quilts. She has made quilts using patterns traditional in Kentucky and has them reasonably priced."

Bush said an important part of Peyton's display will be her stuffed toys. "As you know, many people come to our autumn show to Christmas shop."

Don Hammond will cane chairs during the show and also demonstrate how to cane stools. Mrs. Ernest Benjamin will display dozens of pieces of intricate and beautiful crochet, and Ann Tyree will have thread art and other work.

David Monhollon will do wood carving, and Red River Crafts will emphasize corn shuck art, showing how to make dolls, wall plaques and other decorative ware for the home and for gifts.

Lowery's will show and sell their popular cardinal dishes and jewelry; Fort Boonesborough representatives will display various arts and crafts, and Triangle Crafts will have novelties and gift items.

"Hazel Green Academy again will be making pottery and also have tables loaded with artistic pots, vases and original pottery already fired and ready to use."

A permanent part of the autumn event is the appearance of Kentucky Heritage Artists, a prestigious group of Kentuckians who have exhibited in Kentucky as well as many other states since 1972. Those from the group who will have their work at the Natural Bridge show are Don Ensor, Al Cornett, Russell May, Brett Johnson, Nellie Meadows and Helen Price Stacy. Well-known artists Howard Fain and Iva Daniels also participate in the autumn show.

Saturday hours for the show are from 1 p.m. to 7 p.m. Sunday hours are from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Natural Bridge Resort Park is located off the Mountain Parkway. The dining room in Hemlock Lodge will be open and various outdoor recreation is available including hiking, camping, canoeing, horse riding and picnicking. For further information contact the park or Carole and Scotty Bush, phone (606) 663-2214.

Fewer Young Offenders Jailed

Five years ago, a 16-year-old runaway ended up in jail. Today the same youth might be placed in a foster home or group home.

The change is due to Kentucky's participation in the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act passed by Congress in 1974. The act requires that juvenile offenders, such as truants, runaways and incorrigibles, and neglected or abused juveniles, be removed from jails and detention centers.

The act also stipulates that juvenile public offenders, those who commit more serious crimes, be kept separate from adult offenders in jails or detention facilities.

Since 1976 when Kentucky began participating in the act, nearly 79 percent of the juveniles who committed minor offenses or were neglected have been removed from jails or detention centers and placed in other programs.

Many of these programs were funded by federal grants awarded through the Kentucky Crime Commission. Between 1977 and 1980, 99 programs were awarded $3,935,000 to remove juveniles from jails.

Kentucky will receive more than $1.18 million in federal grant money to continue existing juvenile justice programs and initiate new programs next year. The money will be awarded by the crime commission to help communities remove all neglected juveniles and juvenile minor offenders from jails and detention centers by Dec. 1, 1981.

Terry Andrews, a juvenile justice planner for the state Department of Justice, said Kentucky has made tremendous progress in "deinstitutionalizing" juvenile offenders.

KENTUCKY AFIELD

By JOHN WILSON

The first step in getting your name on one of Kentucky's trophy deer lists is, of course, to take a trophy-sized deer.

Any buck with an antler measuring over 24 inches in length could qualify, as could a buck weighing over 200 pounds or a doe of 115 pounds or more, field dressed weights.

If you take a deer that meets these minimum qualifications, get in touch with a fish and wildlife conservation officer, who will score the antlers or verify the weight of the deer.

The Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources began keeping trophy deer lists two seasons ago primarily as a service to hunters who wanted to know how their big deer stacked up against others taken in the state.

John Phillips, the biologist in charge of the wildlife division's deer management program, says the trophy lists also provide researchers with valuable information about the distribution of good deer habitat in Kentucky, since good habitat produces big deer.

The wildlife division is maintaining several lists, both annual and comprehensive, based on antler score and weight. The top 20 deer in each category make the lists. The scoring system used to measure antlers is a modification of the North American Big Game Awards Program (formerly Boone and Crockett) method.

The current leader in the antler category is Tom Ernst, Erlanger, who took a buck scoring 118-5/8 in Gallatin County during the 1978 season. The big buck by weight is a 260-pounder taken by Rowan Yocum, LaGrange, in Oldham County last year.

Apparently there's not much relationship between weight and antler size, since few names show up on both lists. Ernst's deer weighed less than 200 pounds for example, and Yocum's buck did not have antlers large enough to make the top 20 in that category.

Two lists are yet to be filled—only five bucks with trophy antlers have been taken by bow and arrow and only nine does have met the minimum weight requirements. But Phillips expects these lists to fill quickly as the program becomes better known among the state's deer hunters.

Kentucky currently has nine deer on the national North American Big Game Awards Program list, and three of these deer taken last year. Phillips says that many areas of Kentucky have the right combination of ingredients to produce big deer and that he expects the number of trophies on the national list to grow after each season.

So along with your deer permit, hunting knife and extra ammunition, include a tape measure in your outfit this year, just in case. In addition to measuring antlers, you can use a tape to get an indication of your deer's weight: if the animal measures 44 inches in girth (just behind the front legs), its field dressed weight is close to 200 pounds and it is a potential trophy.

How Strange Strange Can Get

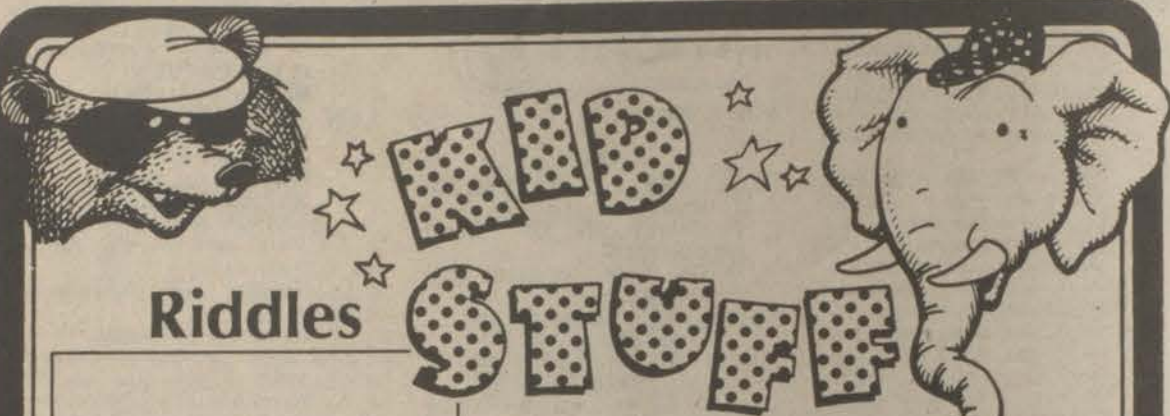

John Byner (right) pokes fun at 'Fantasy Island' on his new half-hour Pay-TV comedy series, 'Bizarre,' where Fred Silverman's fantasy is to have a successful TV program.

sion first anymore, and here we are! We stretch reality, sometimes beyond the breaking point... and then some. We take routine experiences, things that all of us can relate to, and try to evoke laughter. 'Bizarre' is our perception of the world."

John Byner displays an inventive comic talent as he slips in and out of a host of ever-changing characters within a single program. "I enjoy being involved with variety... it's really good energy. When I do a character I stay close to myself and try to create an honest depiction in a situation that is funny." The comedian further explained, "I'm happy about 'Bizarre' because it shows me doing things that people haven't seen before. I want to get rid of the image of being an impressionist; I want to phase it out because people think that's all I can do."

Until recently, Byner spent his time making frequent guest appearances in Las Vegas, but he emphasized, "I'm branching away from that. No more stand up for me." Instead, he has formed his own production company to make TV movies, feature films, and cable movies. John comments, "I hope we're in on the ground floor. Our idea for cable movies opens up a whole new market. It's hard to say where cable is going, but it's here and it can't be ignored."

Fad Diets May Hurt Not Help Dieters

As books, magazine articles and advertisements constantly announce easy new ways to lose weight, diet plans seem as abundant as overweight Americans. But the new diets do little to help people lose weight permanently and may harm the dieter's health, according to Darlene Forester, Extension food and nutrition specialist in the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture.

Fad diets are cashing in on the feverish desire in this country to lose weight. Thirty percent or more of the American adult population is obese, said Forester, who is a registered dietitian with a doctoral degree in nutrition.

But the would-be skinnies want to reduce quickly and easily, and so fall prey to the lure of fad diets, which promise immediate payoffs with little effort. The currently popular Scarsdale diet, for example, promotes a way to "lose 20 pounds in 10 to 14 days."

Dramatic weight loss is possible through fad diets, Forester said, but it is usually not permanent. Several pounds dropped in a short time—more than one to three pounds a week—is a result of water loss and will be regained quickly when the dieter resumes normal eating habits, she said.

"People read diet book claims and think they only have to diet for a week or two and then they can go back to eating candy bars and potato chips," Forester said. "So, they follow the diet and lose weight—over and over again. They get into the yo-yo syndrome of losing and gaining."

To avoid the yo-yo syndrome, dieters must face reality. As people grow older and their metabolism slows down, eating habits must change, Forester said. "Adults can't eat the way they used to when they were 20 without gaining weight," she said. And there lies the main problem with crash diets: they do not prepare people for a lifetime of good eating habits.

Fad diets ignore the basic principles of nutrition—a wide variety of foods in sufficient quantities, Forester said. Instead, they recommend a daily calorie intake too low and a menu too limited to satisfy a person's hunger and nutritional needs. "How long can you eat just grapefruit, or cottage cheese, or any one food, even if you like it?" she said.

She cited the Scarsdale diet as an example of one recommending too little food—a mere 1,000 calories a day. "That's just too low," she said. "The minimum for women should be 1,200 calories a day, more for men."

Diets suggesting too few calories from only a few foods are nutritionally unsound and may be harmful, Forester said. "Most fad diets fall into the skip-a-nutrient category," she said, "since they drastically reduce or totally eliminate one of the essential food nutrients."

The ketogenic diets popular now, such as the Scarsdale Diet, the Mayo Clinic Diet, Dr. Atkin's Diet Revolution and Dr. Stillman's Quick Weight Loss Diet, are examples of potentially harmful diet plans, said Forester. They recommend high amounts of protein and fat, and little or no carbohydrates.

The diets are called ketogenic because they produce ketosis, a metabolic state similar to that experienced by diabetics, Forester said. "High fat produces ketone bodies in the blood, which may suppress appetite," she said. "But ketosis is an abnormal metabolic state."

The concentration of fat the diets suggest is questionable also because many foods high in fat are also high in cholesterol. Because the controversy about cholesterol is still unsettled, Forester recommends moderate intakes of fat and cholesterol.

Some of the ketogenic diets are deficient in essential nutrients, such as calcium, iron and B vitamins, said Forester. "First they have you omit certain types of food altogether, then they have you take megavitamins to make up for the missing nutrients," but huge doses of megavitamins may not be good, she said. For instance, large amounts of vitamins A and D may be toxic.

Another popular diet, the Pritikin program, recommends quite the opposite of the ketogenic diets. The Pritikin diet consists of 75 percent of daily calories from complex carbohydrates, such as breads, cereals, fruits and vegetables, 15 percent from proteins, and only 10 percent from fat.

The Pritikin plan is better than the ketogenic diets, said Forester, but it still is not perfect. "It's good in that it reduces fat intake and raises carbohydrate intake," she said. But it could lead to problems because phytic acid, present in many foods containing complex carbohydrates, binds certain minerals, such as iron and calcium, and prevents the body from using them.

The fad diets are usually not dangerous for healthy adults if followed for a week or two, but long-term use could be harmful, Forester said. She does not recommend any diet that eliminates one of the basic nutrients, such as carbohydrates or fat.

Instead, she recommends nutritionally balanced diets that help people lose weight slowly and permanently through behavior modification, such as the one suggested by Jordan, Levitz and Kimbrell in "Eating is Okay." "People must learn how food affects their life, and how to change habits for their entire lifetime," she said.

An Artist Who Is 'People'

Whitaker at work.

By JUDITH CARR
Somewhere I read of a book, entitled, "Children Are People, Too". Artists are people, too, came to my mind while listening to and watching Tom Whitaker and his fellow Art Guilders at Prestonsburg Community College.

Certainly, Tom seemed to want to impress us with that idea. I asked him if he had been drawing all his life, as so many artists attest. Technically, he has not, according to his answer, but indirectly he has been involved with art all his life. He aptly expressed his theory that with art, as with music, a person spends his or her whole life observing or listening, regardless of when they actually begin producing the finished product others can enjoy. When they take up the instrument or brush and have success it is not because of a great talent, but because of what they have learned all through their lives of observing.

Majoring in art at Morehead State University and Eastern State University, Tom took the post of art instructor at Prestonsburg Community College several years ago. Fresh from college with his head filled with unique artistic ideas, he expressed them in abstract fantasies that require thoughtful contemplation. Unfortunately, they did not sell so well and Tom discovered that an artist has to eat, too. He began producing more conventional art that does not require more than a glance for recognition. The public liked that better.

I watched Tom begin a water color painting. In my ignorance I discounted it as a mess—washes of purplish looking paint across the paper. But Tom had only begun. As the evening progressed, he daubed a little here, studied it awhile, daubed a little there, studied some more; up on the table, down on the floor; shaking water from his brush on the floor; up and down, here a little, there a little. His painting required a lot of vigorous energy and motion. While he made a work of art out of what I thought was a mess, I talked to the other Guild members who were working, too, and asked a lot of questions. I could feel irritation radiating from Tom because my questions were disturbing his concentration. Presently he looked up and said, "Now, let me ask one question. Where do you get all your questions from?" Artists are temperamental people, too!

Tom is interested in photography. He uses his camera to record paintings for the future, particularly for those snowed-in days in the winter. Apparently, he always manages to overcome the snow and get to location to paint, because he never has painted from any of his beautiful slides.

Tom is teaching again this year at Prestonsburg Community College. Beginning in October, he is tutoring a water color class. His students claim he is a good teacher. His philosophies are quite profound, sometimes, but quite earthy, too, at times. "I think," he said in answer to my question about trying every new medium, "we are in an age where everyone is looking for something new. If somebody starts painting with peanut butter then everybody takes it up and that's the thing for a while. I think you should stick with what you can do well and not fret about trying everything new that comes along."

A member of the Kentucky Art League, Tom helped organize the Artists Guild and the Appalachian Guild of Artists and Craftsmen at Prestonsburg Community College. He involves himself in promoting eastern Kentucky's fine arts, by organizing art shows and attending shows organized by others during the summer months. He also helps and encourages fledgling artists.

So long as we have Tom Whitakers around, fine art in eastern Kentucky will not die.

SPECIAL OFFICE GUEST—Gov. John Y. Brown Jr. doubled as babysitter for his 4-month-old son, Lincoln Tyler-George Brown, during a briefing on the Executive Management Commission study released recently. Joining in the briefing were state Personnel Commissioner Dick Robinson, left, chairman of the Governor's Executive Management Commission, and David Bland, right, executive director of the commission.

KET Election Coverage Set

Election night, November 4, will be a time of suspense and surprises, and KET will be part of the excitement that evening beginning at 7:30 p.m. when The Kentucky Network presents live "Election '80" coverage.

According to Donna Moore, producer of "Election '80," the evening offers reports and in-depth analyses of the presidential, U.S. congressional and key Kentucky judicial races. "We'll also cover significant local elections as they occur around the state," adds Moore.

Louisville attorney John McGarvey, who anchored primary election night coverage in May, hosts "Election '80." Co-hosting the program are Stephen B. Catron, Greg Goatley and Jim Brown, who provide updates from each of Kentucky's seven congressional districts as the night progresses.

Rounding out the night's commentary are in-depth analysis segments on state and national races. The commentary is provided by Dr. Malcolm Jewell of the University of Kentucky political science department, John Ed Pearce, columnist for The Courier-Journal, and other political observers.

KET also plans to interview candidates and commentators by telephone as they become available that evening.

"Since we have the ability to reach all parts of the state, we feel we can offer a real public service by broadcasting live returns," says Moore. "Many Kentucky counties have no other means of receiving immediate results from their areas, and from viewer response to our last two election night programs we know people do want to hear how their county and district voted."

"The county clerks in each of the counties have been a tremendous help to us. Because they call in their results as soon as they are tabulated, we can provide county and area results very quickly," she adds.

Except for "The MacNeil/Lehrer Report" at 7 p.m. the KET special public affairs program pre-empts all regular scheduled programs on Tuesday, November 4. The "Election '80" coverage may be extended beyond its scheduled 11:30 p.m. sign-off if returns on major races are inconclusive at that time.

The November Reader's Digest offers a reason why geese mate for life. When the migrating birds return to their breeding grounds above the Arctic Circle there is barely time to lay the eggs, hatch them and teach the young to fly before the flock goes south for the winter. If geese sought new mates each year, they'd never keep on schedule.

Scholarship Program Seeks Top Students

The University of Kentucky will award to high school seniors who enter UK next year scholarships worth a maximum of $4,000 over four years.

"Our Commonwealth Scholarship program is the most prestigious merit-based scholarship in the state," said Dr. Charles H. Rowell, acting dean of UK undergraduate studies. "These scholarships are awarded without regard to financial need," he said.

Besides the $4,000 grants, one-year awards for $1,000 and $500 are also given.

To be eligible for the Commonwealth Scholarships, high school seniors must be Kentucky residents and have a composite score of 27 or above on the American College Test (ACT) or have been designated National Merit semifinalists.

Entry into competition for the scholarships is extended to those who meet the criteria, Rowell said. But any student who has not been contacted by late November is encouraged to request an application packet by contacting Dean Rowell, Room 321, Patterson Office Tower, University of Kentucky, Lexington 40506.

Completed applications must be received by the office of the dean of undergraduate studies no later than Jan. 15, 1981.

In 1933 the Wagner-Peyser Act created the United States Employment Service in the Department of Labor, according to "Important Events in American Labor History," a publication of the Labor Department.

When Is It Too Late To Raise a Family?

By David Williamson

"I think most of the things you read in the newspaper and popular medical books about having babies in your late 30's or early 40's are a lot scarier than they need to be," says Dr. Emily Reisner.

"A lot of women think they have to have their children by age 30 or it's too late. That just isn't true."

Dr. Reisner, 37, is an immunologist at Duke University Medical Center who directs the hospital blood bank's tissue typing laboratory. As the mother of a six-month-old son, she is also one of a growing number of women who, for one reason or another, are starting their families beyond the traditional child-bearing years.

"My mother married late and had her first child, which was me, when she was 42 years old," she says. "My sister was born two years later. As a result, I've never been in a big hurry to have children, and there were other things my husband and I wanted to do first."

Dr. Carlyle Crenshaw, a Duke physician who specializes in problem pregnancies, says he sees many older women who are either overly concerned that their infants will have birth defects or who are blissfully unaware of the potential problems.

In an interview, Crenshaw said the fear of birth defects—called teratophobia in extreme cases—"should be of relatively little concern to the healthy mother at least until the late thirties."

And although he says he prefers that women not get pregnant after the age of 40, the physician doesn't discourage it strongly until age 45.

"Down's syndrome or mongolism is the birth defect that most people have heard of and worry about," says Crenshaw, co-director of Duke's Division of Perinatal Medicine and head of its high risk obstetrics clinic.

Birth Defects

With women of 45, there is a one in 32 chance of having a mongoloid child.

"Until a woman is about age 37, however, the chance of having a baby with Down's syndrome is only about one in 200. Before that age, there is a greater risk of producing an abortion with diagnostic amniocentesis than having a mongol child."

Amniocentesis, which is considered a very safe procedure, involves using a needle to withdraw through the abdomen some of the fluid which surrounds the developing embryo. By studying contents of the fluid, physicians can diagnose Down's syndrome with 90 to 95 percent accuracy.

"When we perform amniocentesis, we also check for two other birth defects—anecephaly and meningomyelocele," he says.

In the former condition, which is invariably fatal for the infant, the brain may be small and abnormally developed. In the latter, which usually produces at least partial paralysis and often means many hours of corrective surgery, the spinal cord protrudes through an opening in the backbone.

Ultrasound examination is another relatively new diagnostic procedure that has found widespread use in recent years. High frequency but very weak sound waves sent through the mother's abdomen create echoes that vary with the type and shape of the tissue.

The result is an image of the fetus that can safely show its development, its movement, its position in the uterus and a variety of other things, including heartbeat. Ultrasound can sometimes even show an older baby sucking its thumb.

Although birth defects are the uncommon exception rather than the rule, even among middle aged women, Crenshaw said there are a variety of other obstetrical problems that can occur on the far side of 40. Two of the most serious are diabetes and hypertension.

"The patient may never have had any problem with either until she becomes pregnant, and then they can appear for the first time," he explains. "Both can be quite severe and increase the incidence of maternal and fetal death."

Oldest and Youngest

The specialist says that to the best of his recollection, the oldest woman to have a healthy baby at Duke was 52, and the youngest was age 10, although motherhood has been reported both earlier and later in medical journals. The safest child-bearing years are between 18 and 30.

Crenshaw says one of the major advantages in having a baby early is that if complications do arise, the younger woman generally regains her health faster. An advantage of postponing birth is that the older mother is generally much more stable and has her career well in hand.

If a woman plans to have more than one child, he says it's better for her to have the first one when she is relatively young because in most cases, the complication rate is lower with subsequent births.

"There are few hard and fast rules in childbirth that apply equally to all women because each case is different," he says. "Good obstetrical care is very important, however, especially at the younger and older ages."

The physician says that one question he has been asked increasingly is the effect of strenuous exercise on the pregnant woman.

"The physiological studies of pregnant women who exercise are still in their infancy, partially because it's difficult to conduct them and partially because there wasn't much demand," he says. "So all the answers aren't in yet."

Crenshaw recommends that a woman not try to increase her exercising after she becomes pregnant because her uterus requires an increasing amount of the heart's output as the baby grows. If the baby seems small for its age or if the mother has hypertension or has had previous problems, bed rest without exercise may be required.

If the woman is generally healthy, however, moderate exercise is a good idea, and she shouldn't worry about hurting the baby.

"All women need to recognize that with advancing pregnancy, they become less agile, their center of gravity and pelvic structure changes, they are more prone to faint and they can't do everything as well as they could before," Crenshaw says.

"Still, it's amazing how protective the uterus can be."

Crenshaw, who is E.C. Hamblen Professor of Reproductive Biology, says that with a variety of newly developed diagnostic and treatment procedures at the obstetrician's disposal, childbirth is far safer than ever before.

What You Can Learn From Older Parents

With more women joining the work force and marrying late in life, children of older parents will probably be the wave of the future, says the September issue of Seventeen Magazine.

Though some children say a forty-plus age difference creates a generation gap of Grand Canyon proportions, others speak happily of mothers and fathers ripe with wisdom and experience. The added years, they say, make parents better advisors because they are more certain of their own identity.

Since older parents usually have fewer financial pressures, their children are likely to grow up with a greater sense of security. According to recent research carried out at the University of Texas, children of older parents tend to adopt a relaxed attitude about work, while those with younger parents tend to become more motivated toward achievement, placing greater value on competition and success.

A more relaxed attitude can extend into many other areas of life. If a crisis comes up, older parents may have the feeling that they have covered this ground before. They have lived through it once, they can live through it again.

On the other side of the coin, some parents become rigid and unacceptable of new ideas as they grow older. If older parents seem less sensitive to the needs of their children, it's often because time has served to erase the realities of their own youth. The earlier era that they long for—"when kids weren't so wild"—was probably not nearly as perfect as they remember. Psychologists assert that the older people get, the more they repress experiences that were pleasant, forgetting anxieties, hurts and disappointments that are part of growing up.

When problems between older parents and teens seem severe, family therapists report that they often find tired mothers and fathers who feel they've been over-worked for too long and whose lives and aspirations no longer seem as exciting as they once did. At an age where their friends are enjoying the luxury of a relaxed retirement, the older parents may still be running to PTA meetings, fixing lunches, and chauffeuring their kids to school.

Dr. Stephen V. Cohen, author of The Other Generation Gap, feels that in the instances where there are problems between older parents and their children, neither side should be too quick to blame the age gap alone. He suggests that if the parents don't spend enough time with their kids or if there's constant tension at home or a breakdown in communication, the troubles in the relationship probably go beyond the age gap.

TO THE VOTERS AND PARENTS OF EDUCATIONAL DISTRICT NO. 4

The faculty and staff of Melvin Elementary feel that Mr. Carson Akers was grossly negligent in his accusations about the conditions at our school. The staff, at our school, can't remember Mr. Akers ever visiting our school. His information concerning the Melvin and Weeksbury schools have no grounds other than radical gossip and unsubstantiated information.

Mr. Akers claims:

1. "Trailers to alleviate over-crowdedness."
TRUTH: The trailers at our school were purchased to provide special units for our school, three special reading units, one Headstart unit, one L.D. unit, and a Kindergarten class.
2. "Unsafe floor conditions with warning signs."
TRUTH: This condition was not a hazard to any child, and was repaired one year ago, upon request, with several more repairs to this unit including new roof, a complete new floor including new tile.
3. "Children sent home at lunch due to inadequate water and sewage."
TRUTH: The faculty and staff at Melvin are very proud of our attendance record. Only once (one time) in the past six years have our children been sent home before or after lunch due to a physical plant breakdown.
4. "Restrooms with no provisions for privacy."
TRUTH: The children and staff of Melvin think this a very trivial jest and wish to inform Mr. Akers that all restrooms in our school do have privacy provisions.
5. "Lack of buses and bus stop shelters to service our school."
TRUTH: The bus schedule for our children's transportation is more than adequate and our spot survey finds over 98% of our children are satisfied with this arrangement.
6. "Weeksbury children cannot attend kindergarten because they live out of the district."
TRUTH: This claim by Mr. Akers is completely untrue. Weeksbury children are in our district and any child of legal kindergarten age may attend our kindergarten class.

We, the teachers and staff of Melvin Elementary, would like to invite Mr. Akers to visit our school and get his information firsthand before he decides to give us this free publicity.

Jayceettes Sponsor Ribbon Project

Martin ministers hang the first Freedom Bows in ceremony, Oct. 11 sponsored by the Martin Jayceettes.

Among the red, white and blue of the annual celebration held here Saturday, Oct. 18, there were splashes of yellow to be seen along the parade route and elsewhere. The yellow was in the form of ribbons provided by the Martin Jayceettes to honor the Americans held hostage in Iran.

The project, most recent of several undertaken by the active Martin Jayceettes, began on the Saturday preceding Red, White and Blue Day with a special prayer service conducted by Martin clergymen including Rev. and Mrs. Elswick of the Methodist Church, Gus Andrews, Church of Christ, Father Wm. Poole, Jr. St., Juliana Church, Lori Vanucci, First Assembly of God, Deacon James Meade, Free Will Baptist, and Rev. Bob Martin, of the Faith Bible Church.

Following the service, the ministers and members of the Jayceettes began hanging the first of some 500 yellow bows and ribbons in the Martin Town Plaza. First of the bows was hung on a tree there called The Freedom Tree. The bows and ribbons were then distributed and hung along Main St., on churches, residences and lawns of Martin citizens.

The hanging of the Freedom Bows was concluded on Red, White and Blue Day when an eight-foot bow was hung on the courthouse here with U.S. Senator Wendell Ford and State Senator Benny Ray Bailey as special guests. The club also provided yellow bows for use during the day's activities.

The Jayceettes also provided bows and helped in the dedication of 22 "Freedom Trees" at Allen Central High School which were bought with funds raised by ACHS students on Thursday preceding the Red, White and Blue celebration.

More School Fire Inspections Follow Kenton Co. Accident

Kentucky schools are receiving more than the usual annual fire inspection after the explosion of a Kenton County high school earlier this month.

Nick Castanis, assistant state fire marshal, said school inspections began Oct. 1, however, more than 75 percent of the schools must still be inspected. Inspectors have been asked to look into areas normally not included in the annual inspection, he added.

High on the list are gas appliances such as the furnace and boiler. Even though equipment has an inspection certificate on it, Castanis has asked inspectors to look at it again with emphasis on the outside connections, he said.

The explosion and fire earlier this month at Simon Kenton High School in Independence resulted in one death and injuries to 37 others. It has been determined the explosion was caused by a leaking natural gas line.

A second explosion, which injured police, firemen and utility workers might have been avoided, if a cut-off valve located in the street had not been paved over keeping officials from turning off the gas, Castanis said. Castanis said state inspectors would bring these types of violations to the attention of school and local officials.

To speed up the inspections, the fire marshal's office has formed a task force to "sweep" an entire county school system at one time. Usually one inspector is in charge of several counties and a large number of individual schools. The task force will have four or five inspectors checking the system simultaneously.

By using the task force, the state hopes to cover more schools in less time, be more effective by having different people inspect each school and save money by having all inspectors travel in one vehicle. Castanis said he expects to "clear up a lot of things (in schools this year) that we demanded last year."

School administrators and school boards are becoming much more receptive to the office's demands, he added.

CONSUMER ALERT

Attorney General Steven L. Beshear has received inquiries regarding circulars being sent through the mail advertising "body stimulants."

The circular is generally a letter from a pharmaceutical distributor selling a wide range of these drugs. Pictures of the drugs usually accompany the letter. The drugs are advertised as "believe (d) to be the strongest most effective available."

The division of consumer protection has investigated the claims and representations of these companies and advises consumers to beware. The tablets and capsules are not the amphetamines they are represented to be.

The capsules and tablets usually contain any one or a combination of three drugs—ephedrine sulfate, phenylpropanolamine and caffeine. Although caffeine is familiar to more people, few know that ephedrine sulfate and phenylpropanolamine are common ingredients in many over-the-counter cold remedies and weight reducing formulas.

These drugs are manufactured by several companies and are packaged in a variety of capsules and tablets which are designed to look like prescription weight-reducing capsules and tablets, commonly known as "black beauties" and bearing the letters "RUS." Other capsules have the letters "DEX" printed on them or numbers such as "127, 355 or RJ8." These combinations of letters and numbers are printed on the capsule to mislead purchasers into believing the capsules are prescription amphetamines, which they are not. They are merely over-the-counter drugs that do not require prescription.

These letters and circulars have been sent to many young people in an attempt to mislead them into thinking they are purchasing high-quality prescription amphetamines. Consumers should be aware these drugs are commonly used and can be purchased from a pharmacist who is familiar with the potency and quality of the products he sells and who should be consulted before purchasing such products.

For more information on this subject, contact Marc Craft, Division of Consumer Protection, 209 St. Clair Frankfort, Ky. 40601 (502) 564-2200.

P.T.A. ORGANIZATIONS IN THE LEFT BEAVER AREA LIST MAJOR ACCOMPLISHMENTS SINCE DR. MARY HALL HAS BEEN THEIR SCHOOL BOARD MEMBER

DEAR DR. HALL:

At our last P.T.A. meeting on September 18, 1980, the enclosed "Summary of School Improvements" was presented to our group. We were very proud of this list of accomplishments over the past six years. We wish to share this list with you and extend our deepest appreciation to you, for your help, in making many of the accomplishments become realities. Many of the accomplishments were the result of the action of the Floyd County Board of Education. Many were the result of the effort and determination of our P.T.A. group. We know that responsible progress for our school can only be achieved by all of us working together.

On the last page of this summary, you will find a list of school needs. We are sure we can count on you to continue to help us make this list of needs also become reality.

Ground Broken For Martin Co. Project

Ask a Martin County resident to list the county's most critical needs, and housing is likely to head the list.

That may explain why 125 area residents showed up on a workday—Monday—for groundbreaking on an apartment complex that will provide 160 new housing units for low- and moderate-income families. The $7.6 million project is expected to be completed by about January 1982.

The Dempsey project, named for the land's former owner, is part of the Appalachian Housing Program, a joint federal-state effort to provide more housing for the region. The state Department for Local Government administers the program in Kentucky.

Funds to build the townhouse complex were provided by the Appalachian Regional Commission, and the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development will subsidize the rents of eligible, low-income families. It is the largest project in Kentucky built under HUD's Section 8 subsidy program.

The complex will be located on a 27-acre site along the Tug fork on the Kentucky-West Virginia border. The land is about one mile east of Warfield.

The Dempsey project could not have come at a better time, local officials say.

In the mid-1960s, only a handful of area residents mined coal in Martin county, said Larry Smith, county planner. Now 6,500 people mine coal in the county, which has a population of about 13,000. Many miners live in surrounding counties because they cannot find adequate housing in Martin County, he said.

Smith said the county is projected to have substantial growth in the next 10 years. "We have to gear up now for the increase in growth," he said. Smith said two more housing projects are in the works.

Appearing at the groundbreaking were U.S. Rep. Carl Perkins, Ralph Coldiron of the Department for Local Government and other representatives of federal, state and local governments.

Lovins Construction Co. of Somerset will build the apartments, which will range in size from one to four bedrooms. The firm is expected to employ about 100 people during construction.

Suppliers of Materials For Roadbeds Escape Mineral Severance Tax

Companies supplying stone, sand, gravel and other roadbed materials to the state Highway Department will not have to absorb a severance tax on mineral contracts awarded prior to the enactment of the tax legislation, according to an emergency law recently signed by Gov. John Y. Brown Jr.

The law, which was enacted by the 1980 General Assembly and became effective June 1, calls for a 4.5 percent severance tax on minerals. The law, however, failed to spell out whether transportation contracts for roadbed and shoulder minerals signed before the bill's enactment would also be taxed.

The emergency law signed by the governor calls for tax revenues collected by the Transportation Department be turned over to the Department of Revenue. It allows mineral producers supplying the materials to file a tax credit if they held contracts with the Transportation Department prior to April 1 for minerals to be delivered on or after June 1.

In 1972, WENDELL FORD, AS GOVERNOR, BEGAN A LONELY QUEST FOR KENTUCKIANS AND OUR NATION. HIS MISSION: TO CONVINCE WASHINGTON TO HAVE A SOUND ENERGY PROGRAM SO AMERICA COULD ESCAPE FROM THE POTENTIAL BLACKMAIL OF FOREIGN OIL. HE UNDERSTOOD THAT:

1. Inflation is traced directly to the price of foreign crude.
2. Without energy independence, America's foreign influence is weakened.
3. An energy solution can be found in Kentucky.

As Governor, Ford established the first major energy research and development program for any state, to make oil and gas—clean synthetic fuels—from Kentucky coal. But Washington responded slowly.

Elected to the U. S. Senate in 1974, He continued his quest. Others began listening, and responding to his wisdom. Today, Senator Ford is an energy leader...Chairman of the Senate Coal Caucus and a ranking member of the Senate Energy Committee.

He generated billions of dollars for long overdue energy research and development. Nine environmentally safe synthetic fuel plants are on the drawing boards, all for Kentucky. More jobs, a stronger economy, an improved coal future and less dependence on OPEC!

Senator Ford knows that getting to the heart of inflation, unemployment and foreign affairs first means having a solid energy program. He saw this more than eight years ago when others didn't. And he hasn't stopped fighting for us, our children and our children's children during that time!

ON NOVEMBER 4 LET'S GIVE

Food For Physical Fitness

If you've recently joined the other eight million American joggers, you've probably begun to wonder about other aspects of your personal health. Take your diet: does it support your physical activity, or does it work against it?

Because "health" as a concept lies shrouded in science and myth, too many of us labor with misguided notions about our bodies. Let's put a few to rest!

You don't need extra protein to build muscles.

Forty minutes of jogging or running may burn calories, but it will not increase your appetite.

A little extra salt at meals easily compensates for perspiration; you do not require salt tablets.

Vitamin and mineral supplements cannot replace a balanced diet for good nutrition.

As with non-athletic people, the key to a fitness diet remains a balanced intake of vitamins and minerals, proteins, carbohydrates, fats, and water. We need all of these—but none to excess. It does seem as if complex carbohydrates constitute the best source of energy for sustained effort: they yield the greater amounts of oxygen needed by muscles and tissues. The body also demands more water when perspiration depletes the supply.

With proteins, carbohydrates, and fats, however, too much of each can sometimes mean too much of all. Proteins from meat bring an unwanted excess of fat as well. Most fat comes hidden in foods, and therefore deserves forbearance in its obvious forms: in cooking, salad dressing, and in baking.

Polyunsaturated forms like corn oil reduce the problem. On the other hand, carbohydrates help with the utilization of fats and proteins, and should not suffer neglect. They can also deliver minerals, vitamins, and needed fiber.

Foods high in protein content include meat, poultry, fish, and dairy products. Two or more servings a day drawn from beef, chicken, dry beans, eggs, fish, lamb, peanut butter, pork, turkey, variety meats, milk, cheese, ice cream, and yogurt, will satisfy nutritional needs.

Fruits and vegetables, including at least one source of vitamin C—such as citrus fruits, berries, tomatoes, and potatoes—and one source of vitamin A—like dark green or deep yellow vegetables—should amount to four servings daily. The same goes for cereals, breads, and baked goods; but remember, that biscuits, pancakes, waffles, coffee cakes, doughnuts, and sweet rolls come higher in fat, sugar, or both.

The fats you use as such differ markedly in composition. Polyunsaturated fats include corn oil, corn oil margarine, and mayonnaise. Saturated fats come in the form of butter and other animal fats.

Meals composed of these ingredients in their recommended servings can supply the nutrients the body requires and do so within fewer than fifteen hundred calories a day. Combined with a jogger's regimen—or any other form of physical exertion—a good diet can help lift the shrouds from "health," and return that concept to its meaningful place in your life.

Summer Food Prices And Bargains

America usually produces an abundant supply of foods in the summer, but in recent years the fuel crisis and inflation have made price predictions chancy. Add the questions of crop yield and recession, to make a more complicated picture: the worldwide grain situation has endured a chaotic year. But usually these factors bear upon just a few products at a time, with resulting shortages and over-supplies which last only temporarily.

Processed foods often sport special summer prices, as their producers make ready for new items by clearing their stocks. In particular, look for bargains on canned and frozen vegetables, fruits, fish, and some dairy products: soft cheeses, ice cream, and yogurt. Fresh local fish in its small and bony varieties generally sell cheaper per pound than other types in this, their peak season.

Since prospects for produce depend on the weather, they remain somewhat unpredictable. Still, fruit and juice sales were high last year, despite higher prices.

Cues To A Better Barbecue

Aglow with summer expectations, many of us will turn once again to our coals and grills to barbecue meals. But steeped in tradition as we are, how many of us know some of the more exotic meals we can cook on the charcoal grill?

For starters, a variety of cooking techniques exist beyond the familiar "broil" or "grill." Know anything about "ember cooking?" You can place foods—like vegetables and fruits—right on hot coals. If you've got food with tough skins, you need only to oil them lightly to make a natural wrapping. Anything softer simply requires a foil wrapping.

And speaking of foil, it can serve just as well for foods grilled on top. Imagine the possibilities open to concoctions with cheese, or tomato sauce—or poached fish in wine or juice, seasoned with herbs.

Grill-top cookery proceeds in other directions, too; you can cook, or simply warm foods in skillets, pots, casserole dishes, and fondue pots placed on the grill. Here you would probably want to keep foods covered while they cook.

Skewering adds further flexibility to the operations you can perform on a grill. Smoking, with either dry heat in a covered cooker, or steam heat from a water smoker, contributes a special flavor to food. Why not experiment with stir-frying food in a wok or a skillet over a hot fire?

The advantages of new techniques, of course, lie in the greater variety of foods you can cook with your barbecue grill. Ever tried to barbecue fruit? How about foil-grilled apples, or grilled grapefruit halves, for starters? Grilled peach halves and strawberry or banana kebobs will surely follow. Embered bananas, or grilled spiced orange halves extend this category.

Embered zucchini and grilled tomatoes make fresh summer vegetable treats; so do broccoli spears and peppers added to chicken shish kebob. Try lawn-grilled honey carrots, or embered cauliflower, if you like working in this vein.

Returning to charcoal broiling, remember that pizza, tacos, and tortillas can easily replace cooking meats, poultry, and fish, if you're after variety. If not, and meat remains your dish, remember that the barbecue's popularity tends to drive some meat prices summer-skyward. Substitute larger and more economical cuts to avoid higher costs. These you can divide and tenderize to gain the greatest advantage.

Beef chuck blade roast, for example, often passed over as less tender, will divide into several steaks with meat left over for kebobs. Freeze the bones and they'll make tasty soup later on. Moisten the steaks, add an even coating of meat tenderizer, and you're in business.

Inflation may mean higher prices, but why not make it mean adventure as well? A few steps off the beaten path, different kinds of barbecues beckon the bold and the venturesome.

Equal Measures

Did you ever go crazy trying to estimate equivalent amounts of ingredients for cooking—like how many cups in a pound of flour? The following list can help.

A pound of all-purpose flour, for example, gives about three and a half cups. An eight ounce package of bread crumbs turns into two and a quarter cups. A pound of butter or margarine gives two cups.

It only takes a quarter of a pound of Cheddar, Swiss, or American cheese to produce one cup shredded, and half a pound of cottage cheese for one cup; three ounces of cream cheese equals six tablespoons. A cup of heavy cream becomes two cups whipped; eight ounces of sour cream make one cup. To build a cup of egg whites requires eight or ten eggs; a cup of yolks means twelve to fourteen. A medium onion chopped will fill one cup. A cup of white rice is three cooked. A pound of granulated sugar is two and a quarter cups—the same for brown sugar.

Col. Sanders Honored

Gov. John Y. Brown, last week announced that he has commissioned a white marble bust of Col. Harland Sanders to be displayed permanently in the state capitol.

Brown also awarded Col. Sanders the governor's Distinguished Service Medallion in a ceremony honoring the Colonel last week at the Louisville headquarters of Kentucky Fried Chicken, Inc., which the Colonel founded and represents around the world.

"I know of no man I can think of that is more the legendary figure than Col. Harland Sanders," Brown said.

"The courage he had to walk out on the streets that first time in his white suit, and his Kentucky Colonel bow tie and his white whiskers to sell what he wanted to sell, that is the southern flavor of a special product that today is sold in all 50 states and some 54 foreign countries.

"I don't know of any product or of any concept or of any person that has spread the word Kentucky and the image of Kentucky like Col. Harland Sanders."

In presenting the state's highest award, the Governor's Distinguished Service Medallion, Brown cited the Colonel's "outstanding contributions and recognition, warmth and love he has brought to our great state." Col. Sanders, in failing health and seated at Brown's side in a motorized scooter-type wheelchair, praised Gov. Brown's efforts to save the Kentucky Governor's Mansion and commented on their long business association at Kentucky Fried Chicken.

"I've had a lot of associations with the Governor in business and it's just been wonderful to know him. I highly appreciate this medal, being that so few have had it."

The award has been given to 39 distinguished Kentuckians since it was created in 1957.

Brown gave the 39th to former Governor and U. S. Senator Earle C. Clements at a ceremony in Western Kentucky in which the name of the Breckinridge Job Corps Center was changed to the Earle C. Clements Job Corps Center.

Brown said that he had commissioned Louisville sculptor Barney Bright to sculpt the bust and said he will begin work immediately. He said the work

State Baptist Rally Scheduled Nov. 11-13

The 13,000-seat Diddle Arena at Western Kentucky University, Bowling Green, will be the site of a massive Bold Mission Thrust rally November 12 at 6:40 p.m. during the annual meeting of the Kentucky Baptist Convention.

Principal speaker on the two-hour program will be R. Keith Parks, president of the Southern Baptist Convention's Foreign Mission board. He will be supported by a variety of program elements including a 1,000-voice choir conducted by Eugene Sutherland, Minister of Music at Walnut Street Baptist Church, Louisville.

The three-day convention, hosted by Warren Baptist Association churches will begin Tuesday morning, November 11, at 10:40 a.m. at Bowling Green's First Baptist Church. All sessions except the one at Diddle Arena will be held at the church.

will be displayed in the outer foyer of the capitol rather than in the Rotunda.

Brown said that Bright hopes to finish the bust of Col. Sanders for presentation on his 91st birthday next September 9.

Referring to Col. Sanders' acute leukemia, which now is in remission, Brown said, "The Colonel has surprised us all before with his courage and his commitment for living."

Brown said that Sanders' success has been an inspiration to young and old alike who have grown to know and love him around the world.

NOTICE

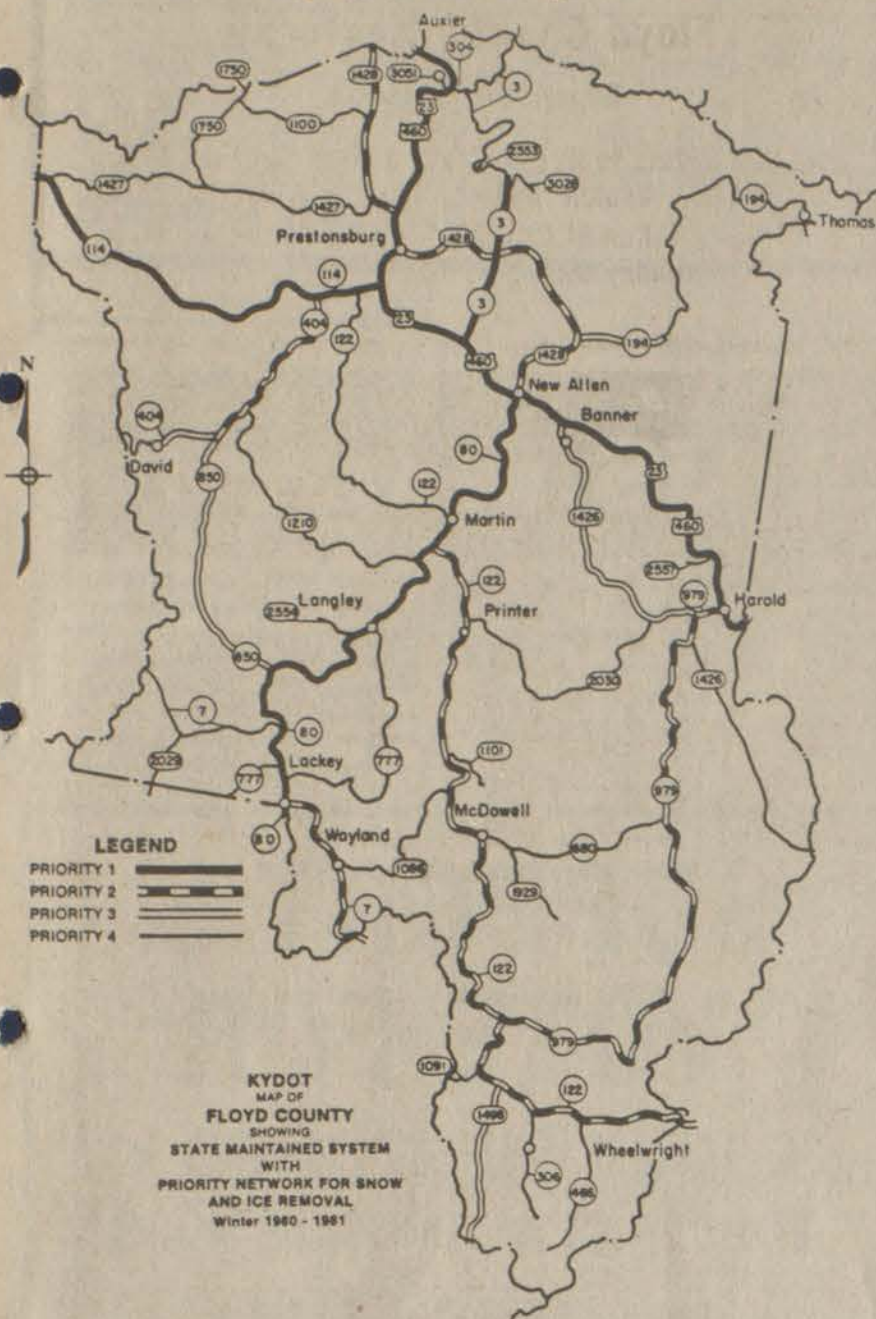

An advertisement in the Floyd County Times last week reflected that Local Union 8100, UMWA, had endorsed Carson Akers for School Board Member of District No. 4.

As president of this local union, I want to advise the readers that this matter was never brought before our members for approval. Also, only five (5) of the sixteen (16) names listed reside in the voting area for the candidate.

We feel this action was wrong and we certainly don't approve of such an error.

Snow, Ice Removal Priorities Set for Floyd County Roads

Snow and ice removal priorities for state roads have been determined for the coming winter season, according to State Transportation Secretary Frank Metts.

The accompanying map shows the priority system of each individual road. According to A. R. Romine, assistant state highway engineer, the priority system is necessary to coordinate the activities of the various crews so that continuing routes will be treated at nearly the same time. Since the Department of Transportation cannot do all roads at the same time, it is desirable the early efforts provide a meaningful network to facilitate long trips.

The priority guidelines follow:
 Priority One: Interstate highways, parkways (toll roads), urban expressways, and any other state maintained road of exceptional traffic volume.

Priority Two: State primary roads (such as U.S. 60, U.S. 127), expressways, by-passes and other roads with slightly lesser traffic volume.

Priority Three: Some state secondary roads such as KY 52, some rural secondary roads, and other roads with moderate traffic.

Priority Four: All remaining state-maintained roads not included in one of the first three categories.

Work crews will essentially complete efforts on Priority One roads before proceeding to Priority Two and then Priority Three. Priorities One, Two and Three are to be maintained by plowing, salting and spreading of abrasives often enough to keep them safe for travel. Priority Four roads will then be cleared.

Say State And Federal Safety Offices Confused

A recent news story concerning citation of a Lexington airport for unsafe emergency equipment contained a common error—confusion of the state Occupational Safety and Health Program with federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

We are not OSHA, declare officials with the state program.

The state has had primacy (prime enforcement authority) over matters concerning occupation safety and health standards for more than seven years. Federal OSHA now exists in Kentucky only to monitor the state program, a function which has long outlived its usefulness, said Michael Ragland, director of the Kentucky program.

But despite extensive coverage by the press, confusion about the state and federal agencies continues, said Ragland.

State officials are naturally concerned since negative opinions directed toward the federal program have been unfairly transferred to the state Occupational Safety and Health Program. The state program has gained wide support from labor and industry because of its commonsense approach to regulation of the workplace, he said.

However, officials are even more concerned that confusion of the state program with federal OSHA will reduce service to the public since complaints may erroneously be channeled through the federal agency.

For that reason it is vitally important that the public and press realize, "We're not OSHA. We are a state agency separate from the federal entity," Ragland concluded.

The Kentucky Occupational Safety and Health Program is contained in the state Department of Labor. The department is part of the Cabinet for Public Protection and Regulation.

Students Plant 'Freedom Trees'

Students of Allen Central High School planted 22 trees bearing yellow ribbons last Thursday at noon. The "Freedom Trees" are in support of the U.S. hostages held in Iran. All ribbons will remain on the trees until they are free. The students, under the guidance of their homeroom teachers, raised all funds needed to purchase the trees. The first homeroom to raise $25 won the right to choose where its tree would be planted. That honor went to Bill May and his students.

By JOHN WILSON

That visit to an official check station, required of all successful deer hunters in Kentucky, represents an important part of the state's efforts to manage its deer herd effectively, says Wildlife Division Director Joe Bruna of the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources.

"One of the keys to proper management of a game species is knowing the annual hunter harvest," Bruna says, "and the check station system is the fastest and most effective method we've been able to come up with to get this information about deer."

The system is basically simple. Gun, bow or crossbow hunters who harvest deer in Kentucky are required by law to take the deer to the nearest open check station (or to the nearest available fish and wildlife conservation officer). The station operator or the officer collects a portion of the deer permit and stamps (or signs) another portion and the hunter is free to head home to show off his trophy around the neighborhood.

At the end of the season, these check station stubs are collected and analyzed, giving biologists an accurate indication of the number of deer taken in each county and the ratio of bucks to does. (Although only antlered deer may be taken over much of the state during gun seasons, bow hunters and gun hunters in some areas may take either sex deer.)

Ideally, these returns should represent the total number of deer taken. However, there are always a few forgetful or otherwise uncooperative individuals in any group, so biologists have established a mathematical "fudge factor" to account for the deer that somehow do not get checked.

What emerges, Bruna says, is a highly accurate picture of the total deer harvest in Kentucky. Last year, by the way, that figure was 13,712 deer, with bow hunters accounting for 1,266 of this total harvest.

This harvest information, when combined with the results of other surveys conducted during the year, gives biologists the data they need to set future seasons and limits.

And since the information gathered on a county-by-county basis, biologists are better able to "fine tune" regulations to suit local conditions—allowing either sex hunting in areas with high deer numbers, for example, or shortening the season in regions where the herd needs to increase.

The only hunters not covered by the check station requirement are those who do not need to buy hunting licenses or deer permits—landowners hunting on their own property, for example, or residents 65 years old or older. These hunters do need to obtain a free permit from a conservation officer before they deer hunt. This permit both serves as a deer tag and also allows biologists to sample these hunters to get an idea of how many deer they have taken.

Each county open to deer hunting has several check stations—usually at country stores or crossroad gas stations in popular deer hunting areas. A list of these check stations (along with a summary of deer regulations) is attached to each "first deer" permit.

But if you want to hunt in Lewis, Livingston, Logan, Lyon, McCracken, McCreary or McLean counties, you'll find the check station list somewhat uninformative—these counties were inadvertently left off the list.

Check with the conservation officers in these counties for the location of check stations there, or call the division of Wildlife at (502) 564-4406.

Safety Tips for Trick-or-Treaters

Halloween is just around the corner, and a few safety precautions can assure the only scares children get are the fun kind.

Edsel Moore, manager of consumer product safety for the Department for Human Resources, recommended these tips for trick-or-treaters:

—Masks should be tight-fitting with eye holes large enough for good vision.

—All materials used in costumes should be flame retardant. Don't let costumes come into contact with any ignition source, like jack-o-lanterns.

—Costumes should be marked with strips of reflector tape.

—Shoes should be marked with strips of reflector tape.

—Shoes should be comfortable and suitable for walking; avoid high heels.

—Costumes should not be long enough to trip over.

—Children should carry a flashlight and go only into neighborhoods they know well. High traffic areas and intersections should be avoided.

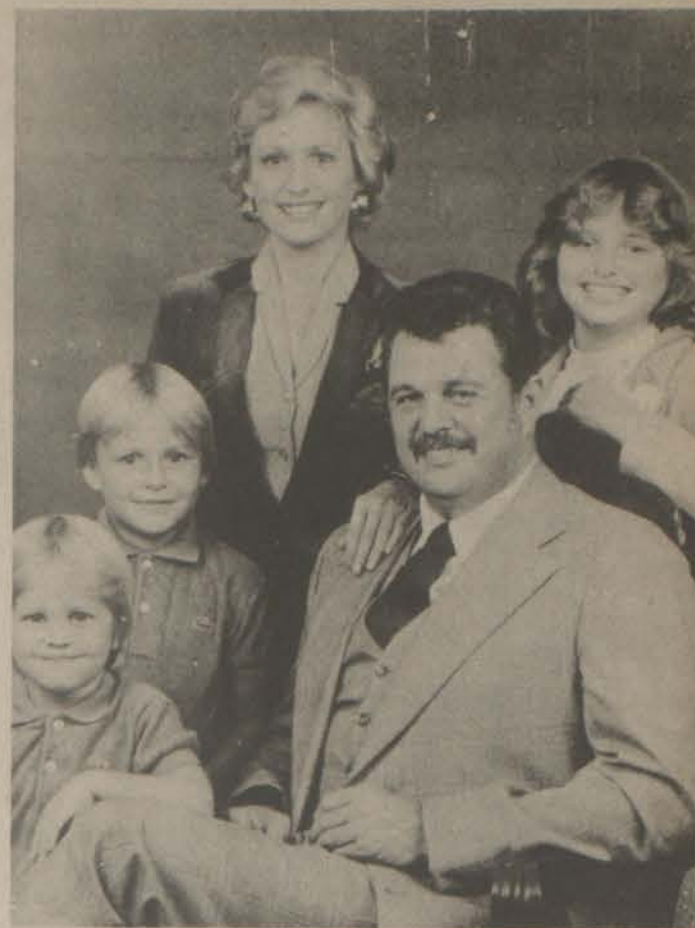

—Trick-or-treaters should go only to houses that are lighted. A dark house probably means no one is home or children aren't welcome.

—Parents should check everything in the child's bag and allow children to eat only factory-wrapped pieces of candy. Because of the dangers of hidden safety pins and razor blades, discard fruit.

The best advice, Moore said, is for parents to take children on their rounds rather than send them.

One barrel of oil contains heat energy equivalent to the energy of a man at hard labor for two years.

WHO CARES ?

- Do you feel you are adequately represented by your present board member?
- Are you aware of the amount of money this school system receives and where it is spent?

After reading the above, have you decided that it is time to GET INVOLVED and look for some of the answers? I HAVE!

ELECT

CORDELL H. MARTIN

HINDMAN, KY., FOR

JUSTICE, SUPREME COURT

7th DISTRICT

TUESDAY, NOV. 4, 1980

NO. 2 ON THE NON-PARTISAN JUDICIAL BALLOT

TO THE VOTERS OF THE 7TH DISTRICT:

Cordell H. Martin, Hindman, candidate for Justice of the Supreme Court from the 7th District on the non-partisan, judicial ballot stated recently, "I want to thank everyone who voted for me in the run-off primary. I hope and pray that others will join in making it possible for me to serve the 20 counties in our 7th District as Supreme Court Justice. In my 33 years of general law practice, I believe that I have had cases in every one of the 20 counties which make up the 7th District."

Added to his long, widely-known service in the legal profession, his judicial experience has been strengthened by his service as a county attorney and as a Kentucky State Representative. Attorney Martin is a member of the American Bar Association, the Kentucky Bar Association, and the Phi Delta Phi legal fraternity.

His parents, Robert and Mary Hall Martin, were living at the head of Beaver Creek near Kite in Knott County when he was born. A "true Son-of-the-Mountains," Martin stated, "I started school in a one-room school house at Bill D. Branch, attended Caney Creek Community Center, Knott County High School at Pippa Passes and Caney Junior College (now Alice Lloyd College). My college work was completed at Morehead State Teachers College, and I got my legal training at the University of Kentucky."

A veteran of World War II, he served over three years as a member of General Hap Arnold's Washington, D.C., headquarters staff in the Army Air Force.

Cordell Martin taught rural schools at the head of Jack's Creek in Floyd County, and Bill D. Branch at the head of Beaver Creek in Knott County. Prior to teaching at Hindman High (now a part of Knott County Central High School) he served as principal and coach of a high school in Georgia.

Cordell Martin, son of Bob Martin and Mary Hall Martin, and grandson of Alamander Squint Martin and Evelyn Hall Martin, and grandson of Billy R. Hall and Ritter Bolen Hall, married Mattie E. Moore, present court reporter, daughter of Marson Moore and Minnie Jones Moore, and granddaughter of William Henderson Moore and Suzanne Mosley Moore, and granddaughter of John A. Jones and Sarah Craft Jones, and great-granddaughter of Nelson Craft, which the extent of the relationship is well-known by their descendants.

Attorney Martin's wife, Mattie, a sister of Knott Circuit Judge, Honorable John Chris Cornett, has had extensive experience as a court reporter. Cordell Martin is privileged to be first cousin to other distinguished men: Floyd Circuit Judge, Honorable Hollie Conley, Floyd District Judge, Honorable Harold Stumbo, and Knott District Judge, Honorable John Robert Morgan.

The Cordell H. Martin family has become a family of lawyers in the 7th District. His daughter, Kay Martin Doyle, has an office in Salyersville, and her husband, Sam, has his office in Prestonsburg. Son, Graham, is a partner with his father in the Hindman firm of Martin & Martin. The youngest son, Del Kerwyn, is a senior at the University of Louisville Law School. Daughter, Gwen Martin Taylor, and her husband, Calvin, with their four children, continue as missionaries in Brazil, near the Bolivian border. They have served in that country for a decade, under the New Tribes Mission Board.

Cordell H. Martin's Christian leadership is shown as a member of the Gideon Society, a charter member of Open Door Children's Home, Cornettsville, and by continuing as chairman of the Calvary College board, Letcher. He is also president of Cumberland Mountain Missions. Martin observed, "I feel that the Lord has given me all this experience in so many different areas, plus 33 years of practice in our 7th District, so that I can be a true representative of all the people who want fair and impartial treatment from the Kentucky Supreme Court!"
