

VIEW FROM MOUTH of RFH Coal Company's No. 1 mine near Craynor shows jumbled wreckage of the mine's coal conveyor belt, an indication of the force of the blast which claimed the lives, last Wednesday, of seven Floyd county miners.

"Families . . . Neighbors Drew Together" . . .

How Stricken Community, Others Reacted to Tragedy

Dense smoke still billowed from the three openings to the RFH mine and the first rescue workers on the scene were yet planning their strategy when Bert and Molly Hall, an elderly couple who live nearby, toiled up the sodden road that leads to the mine.

They brought coffee and sandwiches. It was a gesture typical of this mining community's instinctive reaction to the tragedy, a scene that would be replayed countless times during the 16 hours it would take to recover the bodies of the men trapped underground and in the days of mourning to follow.

Until the final, grim tally was announced early Thursday morning, many would cling to fragile threads of hope that some, even one, of the trapped men would be found alive, even though it was clear from the outset they should also prepare for the worst.

There could be no mistaking the somber evidence at the site—the three blackened portals, a conveyor belt twisted and flung aside, the tops sheared off saplings, debris hurled hundreds of feet, scraps of it hanging in the trees, the surrounding hillsides shrouded in a mantle of ash—it had been an explosion of awesome force and only by a miracle could anyone inside have survived it.

Purvis Hamilton, who was working by the conveyor belt outside when the blast erupted some 1800 feet within the hillside, did survive, numbed and cruelly burdened by the tragedy. Families, friends and neighbors drew together, some near the mine, others in their homes in the hollow below, hoping, praying and offering one another what comfort they could.

But there was work already at hand and, whether by training, instinct or experience, people responded in an operation that one veteran rescue worker later described as the smoothest he had ever seen.

Brothers Glenn and John Frazier and Bluford Smith, members of the Left Beaver Rescue Squad, had two ambulances on the scene some 30 minutes after the fatal blast. The vehicles would afford a place to rest an exhausted worker, shelter from the cold and rain and, in the end, transport for the bodies of the victims.

At first word of the explosion, Mike Sheets, nurse-practitioner at the nearby Mud Creek Clinic, packed an emergency kit and rode to the scene with the patient he had been treating. Other clinic workers—Juanita Compton, Helen Tackett and Eula Hall—soon joined him, setting up a makeshift aid post under what remained of the iron shelter at the mine entrance. They, too, would be there until the late night hours.

A rescue crew arrived from Martin, studied maps of the mine, tested its gases, donned respirators and—with a lifeline and headset still linking them to the workers outside—began a methodical search within. Four other crews would soon join them.

Operators came from nearby mines with pieces of equipment that might aid the rescue effort. A phone, blown away by the force of the blast, was quickly reconnected. Allard "Buster" Newsome brought up a dozer to scrape away the deep mud that impeded movement to and about the mine. Someone built a fire in an old iron stove to ward off the gnawing chill.

State, federal and union mine inspectors converged on the scene, until their familiar four-wheel-drive vehicles littered the landscape. State police assumed control of the growing crowd.

Council, Citizens Join Redistricting Protest

The city council joined a rising chorus of opposition to a state senate redistricting bill—already passed in that chamber and now up for consideration in the House of Representatives—that would lop most of Prestonsburg from the senatorial district it now shares with the rest of Floyd county and graft it into another district.

Two petitions protesting the partition of the city and calling on state Rep. Greg Stumbo to "take immediate action" to amend the bill in the House were being circulated here this week.

The petitioners say the redistricting bill, designed to reflect population shifts revealed by the 1980 census, "dismembers Floyd county by placing its head in the 25th senatorial district and its heart and body in the 29th."

In a spirited appeal to the city council Monday night, Prestonsburg dentist Herbert G. Salisbury, III, charged that the bill would "disrupt the city's whole political base in this county" and seriously reduce whatever influence the city has enjoyed in the state legislature.

Under the bill, the new boundary between the 29th district, represented by Sen. Benny Ray Bailey, D-Hindman, and the 25th district, represented by Sen. Lowell D. Hughes, D-Ashland, sunders the Courthouse, Trimble Branch and Cliff precincts, and part of the Richmond precinct, from the 29th district, incorporating them in the 25th. Auxier and Abbott Creek precincts, already part of the 25th, would be unaltered. Of the city precincts, only Porter and part of Richmond would remain in the 29th.

Salisbury implied that Sen. Bailey had a hand in the bill, voting against it—a day after the official senate vote—only under pressure from its opponents here. Bailey stands to gain from the new boundary, Salisbury charged, since it costs him only those Prestonsburg precincts in which he is politically weak and subjects the rest of Floyd county to Knott, the senator's home county.

Bailey responded Tuesday that Salisbury's charge was without foundation. His opposition to any redistricting bill

Generators were set up to furnish light for the long night ahead.

In the late afternoon a county grader scraped surface mud off the Mink Branch road and, shortly after, a convoy of trucks hauled gravel in—some 600 tons of it, according to District 4 Magistrate Lowell Samons.

County Judge-Executive Jerry Laferty, Sheriff Henry C. Hale, and Coroner Roger Nelson joined the rescue operation.

Youth, Victim in Trailer Fire

A 19-year-old youth was burned to death Monday morning in a fire which destroyed the trailer-home of his parents near the top of the mountain between Buck's Branch and the Spurlock Fork of Middle Creek, near Martin.

The victim, Charles (Chuckie) Edward Justice, II, was found in the ruins of the trailer, two feet from its rear door. His 15-year-old sister, Tracy Leigh, escaped the blaze and ran to a neighbor's home to spread the alarm. She was later treated for minor burns and released from Our Lady of the Way Hospital. The brother and sister were alone at the trailer while their parents,

Job Corps Here To Mark First Anniversary

Residents of area communities served by the Prestonsburg Job Corps Center are being invited to a buffet luncheon Saturday, Feb. 6 to help celebrate the Center's first anniversary.

The Center, which spent more than $1,555,000 in the area in the first 15 months of operation, will conduct an open house to allow visitors to inspect its facilities and operations. Center Director Tom Hummer said the program will be flexible, with the buffet beginning at 11:45 a.m.

A head table will be occupied by dignitaries on the national, state and local scene, both from government and the Singer Company, of Rochester, New York, which operates the Center for the Job Corps.

Mr. Hummer said the Center also hopes to have a number of its first graduates meet and talk with visitors. The Center is located in the former U.S. Shoe Building in Prestonsburg. The building was given extensive renovation prior to accepting its first students on February 4, 1981. Since then, 93 young men have received their G.E.D.'s, completed vocational skills in masonry, carpentry, electricity, and plumbing, or entered the military or college or have been placed in a job.

During the first 15 months, the

Gov. Brown Names Floyd Men To Deep Mine Safety Panel

Almost as a direct consequence of recent mine disasters, including last week's explosion in a Floyd mine in which seven men died, Gov. John Y. Brown, Jr. has appointed a 15-member Governor's Review Commission on Deep Mine Safety.

Three of the 15 members are Floyd countians. Tracy Farmer, secretary of the state Public Protection and Regulation Cabinet, said the panel was formed by himself, the governor and Willard Stanley, commissioner of the Department of Mines and Minerals.

Commission members include Frank M. Heinze, of Prestonsburg, president of the Turner Elkhorn Coal Co., Drift; State Senator Benny Ray Bailey, of Hindman and McDowell, and Orville Page, Wayland miner and certified underground shotfirer for the Atkins Coal Co., whose mine at Topmost was the scene of an explosion in which eight men were killed early last month.

Other members are State Rep. Herbie Deskins, Pikeville; Joseph Lamonica, administrator of the U.S. Mine Safety Administration; Benny Adams, of Letcher county, a coal shuttle-car operator and president of the Scotia Employees' Association; Everett Brown, Pikeville, executive secretary of Coal Operators and Associates; Harry LaViers, Jr., president of Southeast Coal Co., Irvine; Lewis Sandlin, certified shotfirer for the Mallett Coal Co., Pinetop; Clyde Goins, president of the Bow Valley Coal Resources, Inc.; Carl Moore, Lexington, Island Creek Coal Co. safety director, and Noah Bentley,

Probe Seeks Cause of New Mine Disaster

To people already stunned by a series of mine disasters in this area, including one that claimed eight lives at Topmost in December, tragedy came home with a vengeance last week when an explosion ripped through a family-owned mine on Mink Branch of Mud Creek, killing seven men.

Within two days, another two miners would be dead, victims of a rockfall in a Jamboree, Pike county, mine. That brought to 22 the number of miners killed in the state in the past seven weeks.

This week, investigators were combing the scene of last week's explosion at the RFH Coal Company's No. 1 mine on the left fork of Mink Branch, near Craynor, trying to determine the cause of the blast. They had waited until Tuesday—time for the bereaved families to bury their dead—to begin their task.

Killed in the blast that rocked the mine from a point deep inside, at about 9:30 a.m. last Wednesday, were: Jack Hamilton, 36, Burnis Hamilton, 31, and Wade Hamilton, 23—all crushed by the impact of the explosion—and Donald Ray Hamilton, 39, Palmer McKinney, 26, Thurman Reynolds, 25, and Ronnie Hall, 25—who are thought to have died from carbon monoxide poisoning.

Jack, Burnis, and Donald Hamilton were brothers. They had operated the mine since November, 1980, with another brother, Purvis Hamilton, 47, who was outside the mine at the time of the blast and escaped injury. Wade Hamilton was Purvis Hamilton's son.

Rescue crews from Martin, Pikeville, Hazard, and the National Mines Corp. quickly gathered at the scene, the first crew entering the mine around 12:40 p.m. Members of the Left Beaver Rescue Squad, based at Price, HELP!

A question we've heard on more than one occasion recently asks—no, not about the state of the nation, the economy, not even taxes or the weather, but the name of that dog which appeared on the TV show, "Pet-ticoat Junction." Why they've waited so long, we do not know, but in the last week we've had inquiries about the mutt's name, and although most of what we know concerns trivia, we can't give an answer. Like a half-remembered song or hangnail, the question has begun nagging us. If you know the dog's name, tell us, so that we can tell them.

Water Problem Sets Town, Firm at Odds

David residents were calling it an outrage. The coal company claims it isn't true. And a water district official says he simply doesn't know.

At the center of the dispute, which began during a disruption of water service to a large section of the southern end of the county last week, is a charge made by townspeople that the Middle States Coal Company exhausted David's water reserves, even though company officials had been told the supply was limited.

Water service—lost to Beaver Creek communities as well as David after a water main burst in Martin and a styrofoam float became lodged in a line serving Right Beaver Creek last Monday—was not restored until Saturday. Near the outset of the emergency, David water district commissioners asked their 100 customers—including Middle States, their largest consumer—to conserve the town's water supply.

According to a petition circulating in the town this week, the coal company ignored the request, using the 32,000 gallons in the town reservoir to wash coal. Ashland "Hawk" Howard, chairman of the David water commission, said Middle States owner Dick Johnson was told of the water shortage at 11 a.m. Tuesday. By 4:30 that afternoon, the town's water storage tank was dry.

Joe Ed Slone, who reads water meters for the town, confirmed that the coal company had drained the tank, Howard said.

Middle States sales manager Bill Hoppman flatly denied the charge. It is possible the company used 32,000 gallons prior to being notified of the emergency, he said, noting that the period monitored by the meter reader covered the 24 hours beginning around 4 p.m. Monday.

But, once told of the shortage Tuesday morning, Middle States immediately turned to other water sources for its coal-washing operation, Hoppman said.

The company has its own holding pond, is able to use some mine drainage, and pumps water from Middle Creek, Hoppman explained. The only town water it used during the shortage was a relatively small amount—perhaps 3000 gallons—needed to prevent damage to the company's pumps, he said.

FEBRUARY PROCLAIMED
"POTATO LOVERS' MONTH"
Potatoes, one of the most common vegetables grown by Kentuckians, and one experiencing expanding commercial production, is getting special recognition during the month of February.

Governor John Y. Brown, Jr. has proclaimed February as "Potato Lovers' Month" in Kentucky. The proclamation is in conjunction with a national observance promoted by the National Potato Council. While the proclamation is aimed at promoting potatoes as abundant, nutritious food, potato production is economically significant.

Although not a major crop in Kentucky, commercial production of potatoes for chipping and for the fresh market is on the increase in Kentucky. According to Thomas O. Harris, executive director of the Kentucky Council on Agriculture, approximately 500 acres of commercial potatoes were produced last year. Of this amount, about 180 acres were produced under contract with potato chipping companies. The remainder was sold on the fresh market.

According to Harris, there are seven potato chip companies located in or near Kentucky. He said these companies have expressed an interest in contracting with Kentucky growers to produce 540 acres or more of chipping potatoes in 1982. He said this could represent an additional $1.5 million income for producers based on 1981 yields and prices. Commercial potato production is highly specialized, but one which Harris feels could be a new source of income for a number of Kentucky farmers. As transportation costs continue to increase, Kentucky companies or those located in adjoining states look very favorably upon Kentucky as a source of potatoes.

While we do not see potatoes becoming a major commercial crop in Kentucky, the council feels that many farmers might want to take a serious look at the potential for commercial potato production, particularly for chipping purposes. Farmers with soil adaptable to potato production could find this a source of additional income that would not need to be in competition with other farm enterprises.

Mine Tragedies Make Demands

The tragic deaths of seven men in a Floyd county coal mine last week emphasize, of course, the absolute necessity that every precaution be taken against extending the string of mine disasters.

An earlier mine explosion at Topmost, Knott county, a few weeks earlier, and now this one on Mink Branch in this county quite logically bring into question the safety of the shooting method—"shooting from the solid," blasting into the face of the coal—that was practiced in both. UMW President Sam Church immediately suggested that the method of blasting coal loose from the seam be outlawed.

But those who defend the blasting method used in these two small mines point to not one but two explosions which occurred earlier in the Scotia mine in Letcher county which claimed lives, first, of mineworkers and, later, those of rescue team members, and that the shooting method used in that operation was far more sophisticated, and presumably safer, than that of the smaller mines.

One gets the feeling that those who were victims in last week's explosion died, despite their best efforts to practice safety. For these victims included the owners themselves of the mine; their lives were at stake. Neglect of employees' safety cannot, in this case, be ascribed to management.

At best, coal mining can never be a safe occupation. Nature itself can be said to rebel as the removal of coal creates a huge vacuum deep in the interior of a mountain. The imponderables outweigh man's knowledge.

No one knows this better, perhaps, than Kentucky's commissioner of mines and minerals, Willard Stanley, whose dedication to mine safety is unquestioned.

Governor Brown, we think, has acted correctly in naming a commission composed of officials, mining company personnel and miners to study the situation and make an effort to reach a solution to the problem.

If "shooting from the solid" is eliminated, the small coal operation will cease to exist. The cost of cutting machines, continuous miners and such equipment is too great. In that event, only strong, well-financed companies, many of which have out-of-state ownership, would be able to operate.

This contingency, nevertheless, will not justify a shooting practice if it, indeed, is found to invite disaster. But it does justify the closest scrutiny and the best thinking before such a stern measure is put into effect.

that would divide Prestonsburg has long been a matter of record, he said, and there was never any doubt that he would vote against it.

Bailey said he was absent from the senate chamber at the time of the vote on the bill only because Gov. John Y. Brown had asked him to accompany him to Mink Branch, scene of that day's mining tragedy. In any event, outcome of the senate vote—the bill passed by 34 votes to 5—was by then a foregone conclusion, he said.

Floyd county enjoys the balance of power in his district, Bailey said, pointing out that, even with the new boundary, the district he represents will embrace 42,000 persons in this county and only 17,000 in Knott. Knott was, in fact, the only county he lost in the last election, Bailey noted.

"I'm being accused of things that just aren't true," he said in Frankfort Tuesday, adding that he would himself be prepared to file an amendment to the disputed bill if requested.

The council unanimously voted a resolution opposing the bill and urging Rep. Stumbo to seek to amend it.

Commercial and residential garbage rates will be increased soon, according to a council decision. Councilman Paul Phillip Hughes explained that the city sanitation department incurred a $27,000 loss last year, despite the fact that fuel and repair costs were not charged to the department and that no money had been put aside toward purchase of new equipment. With the additional costs figured in, the deficit amounted to about $77,000, Hughes said.

City businesses were advised some weeks ago of the proposed new rates. Residential rates will be raised from $4 to $6 monthly, with a 25 percent discount for senior citizens, it was said. Hughes said comparable cities in the area charge as much or more—in some cases making only one pickup weekly—for garbage collection.

According to a recently-enacted state law, Prestonsburg will need to adopt an ordinance altering the procedure by which council members are elected, City Attorney Paul P. Burchett told the council. Under the law, candidates for city council will be required to file in the primary as well as the general election, he said.

Gwen Heffner will be the instructor.

In any event, by 11 a.m. Tuesday the town reservoir contained no more than 20,000 gallons, Hoppman said he had been told by Beaver-Elkhorn officials—a figure confirmed by Beaver-Elkhorn superintendent Bob Hackworth.

Hoppman said Middle States was being used as a "scapegoat" in the affair. "Whenever the system fails," he said, "the easiest one to accuse is the coal company."

Hackworth estimated this week that the water remaining in David's storage tank last Tuesday morning should have lasted at least two days. "There is simply no way" the town's residential customers could have exhausted the supply by Tuesday afternoon, he said. Nor is there any evidence of a major leak in the David water system, he added.

Hoppman said he doubted whether water district officials had accurate knowledge of the water volume in the David tank at any given time. At any rate, Middle States was being unfairly blamed for last week's sudden outage, he insisted.

In their petition, David residents call for a state Public Service Commission hearing on the matter, citing a "long series" of instances in which Middle States' coal-washing practices have allegedly deprived the town of water.

Hoppman denies that charge, arguing that the company has been a "good customer" of the water district, has contributed to community activities, and has consistently sought to cooperate with town officials.

clinic served as a receiving station for sandwiches, hamburgers, cola and coffee brought throughout the day by store owners, church groups and individuals and distributed as quickly to workers at the mine site and to police and sheriff's deputies on crowd and traffic duty.

Deputy Sheriff Gillis Conn was among them. He was stationed early at the mouth of Mink Branch, blocking passage up the hollow to all but authorized traffic, fending off news reporters bent on getting to the disaster scene, and submitting to news interviews himself until, in the small hours of Thursday morning, traffic and questions were finally stilled.

The John M. Stumbo school at Grethel was early established as an information center, a rallying point for official spokesmen and the press. It was there, too, that, early Thursday morning, the dead miners' families received official confirmation of the worst.

He knew it would be small comfort to the grieving families, but for Mike Sheets, the Public Health Service nurse who has assisted in other disaster operations and who saw as much of this one as anybody, it was remarkable for its order and competence.

And, though even the support of a caring community can ease only somewhat the burden of Wednesday's tragedy, Juanita Compton thought it nevertheless worth mention.

"It's an awful good community to help like that," she said.

and a medical team from the Mud Creek Health Clinic, located about two miles away at the mouth of Mink Branch, had earlier set up emergency aid posts at the scene.

The rescue effort stretched through the day and into the night, workers proceeding cautiously in the knowledge that the mine still contained lethal concentrations of carbon monoxide and that a second explosion remained a possibility. On hands and knees within the 38-inch-high corridor, they picked their way through twisted mine equipment, returning from time to time to the entry portal to be spelled by another crew or to permit the mine to be flushed of its poisonous gases.

Meanwhile, police and sheriff's deputies had set up a road block on KY 979, the Mud Creek road, at its intersection with Mink Branch. Other police units were stationed above the Mink Branch fork and on the road leading to the mine. Even though entry was barred to all but essential workers, traffic sometimes threatened to clog the access road, already reduced to a near-quagmire by recent rains, and a crowd of more than a hundred had gathered near the mine by early afternoon.

Around 4:30, word spread among the knots of bystanders—the bodies of three men had been found, some 600 feet inside the mine.

As darkness gathered, emergency lights illuminated the mine area and the search continued. It would be nearly 2:30 a.m. Thursday before the bodies of the other four victims were recovered and taken to a temporary morgue at Price for identification. Autopsies followed later at Pikeville Methodist Hospital.

The week's tragedies pressed with new urgency the question of mine safety, especially use of explosives to loosen the coal. "Shooting from the solid," as the technique is called, is a common practice in eastern Kentucky's smaller mines, and was the practice in both the RFH mine and the Adkins mine at Topmost where eight died early last month.

While some United Mine Workers officials called last week for a ban on the practice as being too dangerous, the alternative—use of a cutting machine—is said to be too costly for most small operators to afford.

Willard Stanley, commissioner of the state Department of Mines and Minerals, was scheduled to discuss with Governor John Y. Brown, Jr. this week the question of enforcement of mine safety regulations. State mine-safety officials temporarily closed 18 of 75 eastern Kentucky mines they checked Monday. All the mines shut down use explosive to dislodge the coal.

Ironically, six of the seven men killed in the Mink Branch mine had attended a training session in mine safety the Friday before the tragedy, and the seventh had received similar training in October.

The mine enjoyed an all-but-unsullied safety record. No serious accidents had occurred there before and a weakness noted last November by an inspector—who said stronger roof supports were needed in one section—was remedied during the inspection, it was said.

Whitesburg, executive director of the Letcher-Perry County Independent Coal Operators' Association.

Commissioner Stanley and Farmer are ex-officio members.

Farmer said Gov. Brown wants the commission to make a complete analysis of the state's mine health and safety program and recommend changes.

The commission may hold its first meeting as early as this week.

In a prepared statement Farmer said.

"He (Gov. Brown) has asked that the committee... make recommendations to him at the earliest possible date so that the General Assembly can be fully apprised if new laws or changes in current regulations are recommended.

Brown was described as concerned about recent layoffs of federal mine inspectors. Farmer said he and Stanley discussed with the governor the possible hiring of any U.S. inspectors who have received lay-off notices.

Mine Tragedy Mirrored In Colleagues' Faces

Keeping their thoughts to themselves, four grim-faced miners trudged down the hill from the Mink Branch mine that claimed seven of their colleagues Wednesday. Allard "Buster" Newsome, second from right, had taken a bulldozer up the hill earlier to scrape away the mud that had turned the minesite into a quagmire. Curtis Tackett is pictured on the right; other men are unidentified.

Hollow Residents Stop Coal Trucks

Stumbo Hollow residents pictured Friday as they manned lines to stop the travel of coal trucks in and out of the hollow.

Protesting road conditions which they claim endangers their children and makes access to their homes by conventional vehicles all but impossible, a number of residents of the Stumbo Hollow section of Drift expressed their ire last week by putting a stop to all coal truck traffic along the hollow.

Although the narrow, rutted road, on which residents claim even the big coal trucks of four companies operating in the hollow occasionally "bottom out," has long been a source of consternation, the matter climaxed recently when a truck of the Blackhawk Mining Company ran over a steep embankment due to the poor condition of the road. As one resident explained, "It could have been a school bus instead of a coal truck."

The safety of the school-age children in the hollow is perhaps the primary concern of residents, and Thursday, 18 students reportedly walked nearly two miles up the hollow to their homes rather than ride the distance in the school bus.

The people in Stumbo Hollow point to the coal trucks as causing much of the road damage and complain that they have had no return, in terms of road maintenance or otherwise, on the great quantity of coal that has been transported out of the hollow.

Mickey Martin, owner of Triple M, another of the companies which mine in the vicinity, said his company has tried to provide some upkeep on the road but claimed that the other companies in the hollow were not willing to chip in.

Katherine Elkhorn and Melody Mining companies also operate in the hollow. Residents also blame "politics" for lack of help from the county. They claim the road has not received a load of gravel in three years, a situation they feel has resulted because most of the people in Stumbo Hollow voted "the wrong way."

In Memoriam

In memory of Sara Minta Vaughn who was killed in a car accident on January 31, 1976.

Sis, It has been six long years since God called you home to be with him, and some of your loved ones, but as time goes on here on earth without you, and the days turn into years, they hold a million of heartaches and thousands of silent tears, for we miss you so much not being here with us. But as long as we live, we will always be glad and give thanks to God for as long as we did have you. And we thank him for the most wonderful daughter, mother and sister we had, and we know you'll be waiting for us with God and his angels at His Golden Gate.

Sadly missed by mother, children, sisters, and brothers. Written by sister, Mary (Bob) George.

Jury Makes Award For Blast Damage

A circuit court jury Monday awarded $8000 in damages to a Prater Creek couple who claimed their house was affected by blasting at a nearby strip-mine operation.

Earl and Bonnie Mulkey, of Dana, claimed cracks appeared in the walls and porch of their house and a carport was loosened as the result of blasting connected with a Triple Elkhorn Mining Co. strip-mine operation last January.

Doug Smith, a blasting and vibrations consultant, testifying for the mining company in the case, said that blasting at the mine was within legal limits and was not the cause of any damage sustained by the Mulkey residence.

The jury reached its decision after deliberating about an hour at the close of the day-long trial.

Judge, Court Ready Program On Arts, Crafts

County Judge-Executive Jerry Lafferty, Jr. announced this week that he and the fiscal court have developed a program of exhibiting local arts and crafts in the Courthouse Annex, beginning with the paintings of Tom Whitaker, of Prestonsburg Community College.

The initial exhibit is composed of paintings of local buildings, animals and scenic views. These may be viewed from 8:30 a.m. until 3:30 p.m., Monday thru Friday, in the Courthouse Annex until the next exhibition begins.

Judge Lafferty and court members invite all artists and crafts persons of the area, including the Big Sandy and Kentucky River Valleys to contact County Planner Malcom Layne at 886-9193 to schedule times of exhibits for their works including, but not limited to, crafts, music, folklore, poetry, essays and short stories.

Judge Lafferty's executive order creating the Floyd County Arts and Crafts Exhibition Program will cause no expense to county government and the people of the county. Its purpose, he pointed out, is "for the benefit and perpetuation of our outstanding heritage."

Civil Suit Filed In Shooting Case

A suit filed in circuit court last week by the widow of one of the victims of the shooting that claimed five lives at an Allen truck parts store last October seeks $2 million in damages from the man accused in the case.

Carmalene Hamilton, widow of Rufus Hamilton, claims $1 million in compensatory damages resulting from the "intentional or negligent and wanton" acts of William Okie Blevins, the man charged in the shooting. Another $1 million is sought in punitive damages.

Suits filed present only one side of the issue in dispute.

Subcommittee Hears Advocates For ARC "Finish-Up" Program

The plan of the 13 Appalachian governors for finishing up the Appalachian Regional Commission's program was the subject of a hearing conducted in Huntington last week by the U.S. House Subcommittee on Economic Development.

The finish-up proposal, prepared by the governors at the request of Congress, sets forth a specific timetable for completing each ARC program, with dollar figures attached to each program area.

The hearing is the first in a series to be held this year as Congress considers reauthorization of ARC's enabling legislation, which is due to expire September 30, 1982.

ARC States' Cochairman Governor John Y. Brown of Kentucky told the subcommittee that the proposal would "provide for an orderly completion of ARC efforts now in progress, solidify the gains made during the past 15 years and enable the Region to continue progress toward national economic standards." Said Governor Brown, "This is a businesslike way to wind up a successful progress, if wind it up we must."

Describing details of the finish-up plan, Governor Jay Rockefeller of West Virginia told the subcommittee, "ARC is the best way we have invented yet to share decision-making power among the three levels of government and with the private sector."

In a telegram to the congressional panel, Governor Lamar Alexander of Tennessee, 1981 ARC states' cochairman, said, "We regret we are recommending the eventual termination of a program which we know is the best example of federal, state, and local cooperation. We commend to the Congress the ARC approach as the proper way to administer federal programs."

Other witnesses at last week's hearing testified on their experiences with ARC programs at the local level and urged adoption of the finish-up plan to help counties especially hard hit by unemployment, as well as those that had qualified in the past for economic aid.

ARC proposed completing 550 miles of a remaining 1,303 unimproved miles in the Appalachian Development Highway System, at a cost of $2.27 billion over the next eight years. Cost to complete the entire system as originally planned would be $7.1 billion.

In the non-highway program area, ARC has targeted: closing the remaining critical gaps in its rural health care program; special help, mainly for safe water and waste disposal, in 60 "distressed" counties; and additional program money for creation or retention of private sector jobs. Of the $399 million non-highway authorization sought by ARC, the health finish-up program would require $8 million annually for three years; the distressed counties program would receive $15 million annually for five years; and the jobs program would receive $60 million annually for five years. At the end of five years, the Commission's non-highway programs would be concluded.

Governor Brown described to the congressional panel plans to "increase private sector participation in the economic development of Appalachia" through a private, non-profit development foundation funded by individuals and corporations who have an economic stake in the Region. "The foundation will help offset the loss of ARC and other funds over the years and remain after ARC to foster Appalachian development," said Governor Brown.

The ARC finish-up plan also calls for the Appalachian states to pick up an increased share of the cost of the ARC program (at least 50 percent) and for the Commission to receive reduced federal funds for its highway and non-highway activities.

The hearing was conducted by U.S. Representative James Oberstar of Minnesota, chairman of the Subcommittee on Economic Development of the full House Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

Congressman Oberstar said, "The ARC has proved beyond a doubt that federal, state, and local governments working together can accomplish a major victory over economic distress. I want to be sure that we take full advantage of this experience as we determine the future role of the federal government in economic development."

Joining Oberstar on the congressional panel were: Donald Albosta (D-Michigan), Robert McEwen (R-Ohio) and Nick Rahall, II (D-West Virginia).

Pharmacy Footnotes

Aspirin can help relieve the aches and pains of colds, headaches, rheumatism, fevers, menstrual cramps and more. However, too much aspirin can have harmful effects. For those who are especially sensitive, even a little aspirin can be irritating. Especially common to those sensitive to aspirin are stomach complaints. If you experience mild stomach distress with aspirin, try an aspirin substitute containing acetaminophen. This aspirin substitute can be found in pharmacies under various trade names.

Because winter is the time we so often come down with a cold or flu, we often tend to take more aspirin to help with fever and aches and pains. We should remember to use common sense, however, because too much aspirin is not good for us either. At COOLEY APOTHECARY, INC. our Pharmacist is always ready to answer your questions and give advice. We're here for you at No. 2 Town Center Bldg. Open daily 9:5-30; Sat. 9-5, or call us at 886-8106

HANDY HINT:

Avoid aspirin if you have a clotting problem. Aspirin tends to retard clotting.

Kaleidoscope

By WILMAY

It's astonishing how self-revealing our likes and dislikes are, and perhaps self-incriminating sometimes. Our preferences in dress, music, poetry, literature, hobbies, amusements, et cetera speak louder than words. Our speech, goals and priorities in life tell stories, too.

We want the best food but how about intellectual and spiritual development? Do we live in the basement of mere existence, never rising above second or fourth floor, or do we want our minds and souls to soar with wings like an eagle into heavenly places God provides in every sphere of life?

Choices are made daily. Do our spirits reflect love for others, respect for the dignity of every person, kindness, courtesy, trust, thoughtfulness, graciousness, humility, faith, forgiveness, compassion, understanding, concern, long-suffering, friendliness, warmth, sincerity—sympathy when needed? Or is our daily walk characterized by indifference, pride, coldness, deceitfulness, arrogance, hostility, jealousy, sarcasm, temper tantrums, rudeness, covetousness, etc. till one or more such qualities become hallmarks. Behavior goes far in determining the inner calm every soul craves. Internal peace helps promote sound rest. Of course organic causes are often responsible for the prolonged wakefulness some suffer.

Statistics show that the quantity of valium alone consumed nightly by Americans, is unbelievable, despite its known risks. Drugs are necessary for some but many conquer insomnia by other means. Those of us who never experience it make poor sympathizers for its victims, and know little about aids. A friend reads scripture till sleep returns. Some rest quietly, pray, meditate, think beautiful thoughts; relive a first date, or their wedding day, their delight over passing a difficult exam or securing a promotion, family triumph the time Harry won that big race, or Suzan was named beauty queen, the unsurpassed joy when Doctor said Pete would survive, the heartfelt appreciation felt for hands extended when tragedy struck, and infinitum.

Others visualize indescribable scenes—silver clouds, bare trees starkly silhouetted against a snowy mountain, dawn outlining the horizon, sunrise or sunset on the ocean, painted by the Master Artist whose palette no earthly painter can duplicate, a rose with dew kissing its furled petals, a toddler's first steps or his face early on December 25th. Ah, yes, many things beat counting sheep, which a few experts suggest, to counteract sleeplessness.

Leisurely recollection of memorable sounds proves fascinating for some who find time passes quickly by calling to mind the song of a mocking bird, murmuring of a brook, the wind singing gently thru trees, caressing each leaf as it passes, Baby's first words, wild enthusiasm of cheerleaders in the wake of victory, unrestrained happiness of team and fans, the gigantic welcome accorded some service man returned from combat, a choice opera, favorite record or cassette, with stirring strains of "Whispering Hope," "Others," or "How Great Thou Art." Various exercises hasten numerous people to Slumberland.

Why rely on pills when time can be better spent counting one's blessings or recently answered prayers, quoting biblical gems, picturing a log fire and winter hearth where a devout family is holding evening devotions, a four-year-old kneeling beside her bed for nightly prayers, or hundreds of other panoramas plucked from the reservoir of cherished memories that highlight our earthly journey?

Roots in Reality? . . .

Mermaids, Monsters May Have Been Inspired by Real Animals, Theory

Ever wonder about the origins of the weird creatures that haunted your childhood dreams—the dragons, mermaids, and godzillas of mythology and monster lore?

Well, those beasts weren't necessarily spun out of whole cloth, according to the current issue of International Wildlife magazine. Chances are some of them were inspired by real live animals "viewed rarely, incompletely, or by untrained and imaginative eyes," says the bimonthly publication of the National Wildlife Federation.

This theory is being explored by scientists meeting in Washington, D.C., this month to found the International Society of Cryptozoology and to try to establish which of the "fantastic" creatures have some basis in fact, the magazine reports.

Among the mythological creatures International Wildlife examines are these:

The Basilisk: Legend has it that the deadly basilisk, a serpent with a spotted crest and sometimes with wings, could kill on sight. That is, any creature foolish enough to look at the basilisk faced instant death. Only one animal escaped this creature's terror—a small, weasel-like animal with the power to kill the serpent.

Based mostly on this last fact, cryptozoologists believe that the basilisk actually was derived from embellished descriptions of the hooded cobra. The cobra can also be zapped by a small, weasel-like animal—the mongoose.

The Griffin: If you've ever read Alice in Wonderland, you know the griffin, a flying lion with the head and wings of an eagle. With a little imagination, says International Wildlife, a real bird, the lammergeier of Central Asia, could have inspired the myth of the griffin. The lammergeier, a bird of prey with a 10-foot wing span, is also known as the "bearded vulture," because of the tuft of bristles under its bill.

To observers from below, says the NWF report, the lammergeier's tawny-colored underside and its mane-like beard could have evoked images of lions. What's more, the range of the real bird matches the range of the mythical creature: North Africa, Central Asia and Southern Europe.

The Mermaid: Even Christopher Columbus helped propagate the myth of the mermaid. On one of his voyages, he reported seeing three mermaids rise out of the sea. But they "were not so beautiful as they are represented," he wrote.

Today, cryptozoologists think mermaids were the product of optical illusions that make dumpy walrus a mile or two away look like svelter, towering mermaids. It happens when an atmospheric temperature inversion approaches the surface of the sea, according to a report by scientists at the University of Manitoba.

The Unicorn: This proud, powerful and gentle horse, famous in medieval stories for the magical powers of the single horn centered on its head, could have been inspired by the one-horned rhinoceros or by the narwhal, a small whale with a long, ivory protrusion similar to the unicorn's.

But after a biologist at the University of Maine "created" a modern unicorn, some specialists began to wonder whether a true unicorn had really lived. Franklin Dove transplanted two horns on a day-old bull calf to the center of its head, forcing the growing horns to fuse into one central protrusion. Endowed with a horn that gave it more thrusting power than two horns, this "experimental" unicorn soon became king of the herd.

Dove noted that the transplant technique has been around since the days of the unicorns.

Public Hearing Set To Receive Input On Pollution Law

A public hearing to receive citizen and industry comments on proposed amendments to the Kentucky Air Pollution Control Regulations (Kentucky Administrative Regulations 401) will be held Thursday, Feb. 4, in Frankfort.

The hearing will begin at 10 a.m. in Room G-2 of the Capital Plaza Tower. It will be held by the division of air pollution control of the state Department for Natural Resources and Environmental Protection.

Amendments under discussion will deal with emissions from new and existing process gas streams. The amendments will bring Kentucky's regulations into consistency with U.S. Environmental Protection Agency requirements on reasonably available control technology, prevention of significant deterioration and new source review in non-attainment areas, division officials said.

Copies of the amendments are available from the division's Frankfort headquarters or from regional air pollution control offices in Owensboro, Bowling Green, Paducah, Henderson, Florence, Hazard, Ashland, Elizabethtown, Lexington and Louisville.

Division officials are urging all interested persons to attend the public meeting or to present written statements. Any written statements received by the division on or before the Feb. 4 hearing day will become part of the hearing's record. All written comments should be sent to Larry J. Wilson, Supervisor, Development and Evaluation Branch, Division of Air Pollution Control, Kentucky Department for Natural Resources and Environmental Protection, Ft. Boone Plaza, 18 Reilly Road, Frankfort, Ky. 40601, telephone (502) 564-3382.

For additional information on the amendments or the public meeting, contact the division of air pollution control in Frankfort.

Your Social Security . . .

Know When To Contact Social Security

People in the Big Sandy Area should be aware of the times they should contact Social Security, Jim Kelly, Social Security District Director for Big Sandy Area, said recently.

Knowing when to contact Social Security is important. Not doing so could mean a permanent loss of benefits. Or, it could mean an unnecessary delay.

Among the times to contact Social Security are when a person needs a Social Security number, needs to replace a lost Social Security card, or report a change in name. Be sure to apply for a number in plenty of time, since it may take about 6 weeks to get a number after the necessary evidence has been supplied.

Whenever a family member dies, to determine if survivor benefits are payable.

If a person becomes disabled, to find out if disability benefits can be paid.

At 62, or when a person plans to retire. Generally a person who applies between 62 and 65 cannot receive benefits before the month of application.

2 or 3 months before 65 even if the person has no retirement plans, to arrange for Medicare health insurance protection.

Unless a person is receiving Social Security benefits, there is no need to notify Social Security of a change in address.

Most Social Security business can be taken care of by telephone. One exception, Kelly said, is for a person 18 or older who is applying for a Social Security number for the first time. Such a person must apply in person.

The people at the Big Sandy Area Social Security office will be glad to answer any questions about Social Security or Medicare. The office is located on U.S. 23 between Prestonsburg and Paintsville. The phone number is listed in your local directory under U.S. Government.

PUBLIC NOTICE

State Group Urges Research Before Acid Rain Laws Voted

A coalition has been formed to encourage what is termed "a knowledgeable, factual research-based approach to study" acid rain. According to the coalition, this approach is to ensure that jobs and the overall economic wellbeing of the Appalachian and Midwestern states which produce and use coal are balanced with effective, reasonable environmental laws and regulations.

Electric utilities in Kentucky have stated that their customers' electric bills would increase from 25 to 40 percent if the additional environmental controls being proposed are mandated by Congress.

The Kentucky Group is part of the Coalition for Environmental-Energy Balance, which includes the Midwestern states of Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, Ohio and West Virginia. The Coalition is calling for accelerated research to find accurate answers to the many critical questions related to acid rain.

The Kentucky Group's membership includes banks, coal associations in both western and eastern Kentucky, the Kentucky and local chambers of commerce, public officials, attorneys, educators, housewives, investor-owned electric utilities, rural electric cooperatives, and many other businesses, industries and individuals. There are nearly 350 members now.

Members are extremely concerned about the issue. "I am appalled by the potential stampede in Congress to pass a law relating to acid rain," one member stated. "The acid rain phenomenon continues to receive undue public attention. Most of this attention is based on the hypothesis that emissions from coal-fired power plants is the sole culprit of acid rain. There are no scientific data to justify this assumption. Any Congressional action, not based on sound scientific studies, would seriously harm our economy in Kentucky and render us more subservient to the OPEC Sheiks."

Instead of rushing to judgment with decisions that would be costly for Kentucky's residents and yet might not be the solutions needed, the Kentucky Group suggested that Congress should accelerate the Energy Security Act's 10 year acid rain research the program to produce results within five years or less.

The Kentucky Group said it supports the recent statement made before a congressional committee by Al Courtney, a co-chairman of the Acid Deposition Committee of the Utility Air Regulatory Group. He stated, "In enacting the Acid Precipitation Act of 1980, Congress recognized this essential prerequisite (careful consideration) and in response, instituted a program designed to explore the acid deposition phenomenon in a deliberate, methodical manner. We should permit this rational, problem-solving approach to produce the information which we so badly need."

Argument Over Center Control Goes To Court

The battle over control of the juvenile detention center here was joined in court this week, with the filing of a complaint by directors of the center appointed last year and a response and counterclaim by those appointed this year to replace them.

Former Judge-Executive Bill Wells, Frank Arnett, and Teresa Fitzpatrick, the detention center's ousted directors, and Blaine Hopkins, its former superintendent, argued in a complaint filed in circuit court Friday that the new fiscal court had no right to remove them or to interfere in the operation of the facility, the three directors noting that they were appointed to four-year terms last August.

Their complaint also names W. Grady Stumbo, Secretary of the state Department for Human Resources, as wrongfully authorizing payment of state funds to the center's new operators, and the First Commonwealth Bank, for denying the old board access to center funds held there.

The defendants, in an answer filed Tuesday, argue that the present fiscal court is within its rights in taking over control of the detention facility. The former board is attempting to seize control of the county government and "to replace the electoral process...by acts contrary to law," it is claimed.

Moreover, the former directors "compensated themselves" in violation of the rules of the non-profit detention center board, the defendants charge.

SS Student Aid Being Phased Out

Social Security is phasing out its federal student aid program which could put an abrupt halt to college plans for some of Kentucky's high school seniors.

Established in 1965, the student aid program provides benefits for post-secondary students of disabled, retired or deceased parents. Under this phase-up, program benefits will be reduced 25 percent each year beginning with the 1982-83 school year and terminate August 1985.

In addition, students will not receive benefits for May, June, July and August of each year.

However, high school seniors who received benefits in August 1981 can still get a portion of the benefits through 1985 if they enroll in a post-secondary school by April 1 of this year.

In information sent to all local school superintendents, Superintendent of Public Instruction Raymond Barber said some of Kentucky's colleges and universities might let students qualify for admission under their existing early admission policies.

"Each college establishes its own admission policies and some could alter them this spring on a one-time basis to accommodate students eligible under the phase-out plan," Barber said.

Each college establishes its own admission policies and some could alter them this spring on a one-time basis to accommodate students eligible under the phase-out plan," Barber said.

Each school district has some leeway in accommodating students desiring to enter the program before the April 1 deadline, he noted. Options include permitting a student to earn a maximum of two credits through correspondence courses or allowing limited credit toward graduation to be given for college work.

Students entering Kentucky's post-secondary vocational schools are also eligible for the phase-out program.

Information from the Department of Education states some 2,200 students would be eligible to participate in the program provided they establish full-time attendance by April 1.

PBS Trying To Act Like Network, Is Charge Made by KET Officials

When the Public Broadcasting Service (PBS) recently placed an ad in the Kentucky edition of a national publication for the public television special "All Things Considered On Main Street," neither KET nor its air time of the show were mentioned in the ad.

The one-hour special, which aired on some public television stations on January 13, did not air on KET until Monday, January 18.

The PBS failure to advertise the KET airtime is one example of a policy that has two KET officials upset. That policy has to do with the way PBS attempts to schedule and promote evening programming on public television stations across the nation.

As KET Director of Programming Kirk Lehtomaa explains, "PBS placed the 'All Things Considered' ad as though the program were being broadcast as part of the Core programming schedule."

"Core" refers to the PBS policy of encouraging public TV stations to air certain evening programming on the same day and air time, nationally. In other words, the Core schedule is treated in much the same way as prime time is treated by the commercial TV networks.

"We have conformed to the Core schedule whenever that form of scheduling has served KET viewers," states Lehtomaa, "but the 'All Things Considered' special was not offered to KET as a Core program."

Lehtomaa adds that KET was free to schedule the special for an alternate air date, but that PBS officials ignored KET's schedule by failing to purchase ad space announcing the show at the KET time.

"The problem we face is that PBS is behaving as though it were a network in these cases," says KET executive director Len Press. He explains that "PBS was not established as a network (which sets air dates for the stations), but as a non-scheduled distribution system—a mutual association for individual public television stations."

"Now, with underwriter pressure," adds Press, "many of the national underwriters would prefer to have a network-like arrangement. Meanwhile, KET is upset with the PBS scheduling approach because it misleads the public into believing that all public broadcasters must follow the Core schedule."

Such pressure from underwriters and PBS to air programs in a network fashion also concerns Lehtomaa. According to the programming director, "KET's first scheduling priority is to serve Kentucky viewers, not to conform to a national schedule. If KET marches in lock-step to the Core, many of KET's public affairs programs—including the Kentucky General Assembly coverage—would have to be pre-empted in favor of less timely material."

Another factor in scheduling, adds Lehtomaa, is KET's sign-off time. "In order to stretch our diminishing evening programming dollars, we must sign off between 11:00 and 11:30 p.m. (ET) each night. That time limitation means that there just isn't time to schedule all evening shows in a Core time slot. Given these considerations, we need a more innovative, flexible scheduling approach from PBS. After all, PBS was created to serve the local viewers of individual stations, not the other way around."

Junk Food Cited As Brain Damage Cause

By NELL VALENTINE,
Health Educator.

Mountain Comprehensive Care
Sweets, potato chips and pop—their effects in bulging midlines and overtaxed hearts are generally well known. Now comes a study suggesting they may do damage to the brain as well.

Jeffrey Bland reports in the January '82 issue of Psychology Today about a recently discovered disorder called "overconsumption-undernutrition" syndrome. This is a condition brought on by eating too many empty calorie foods resulting in disturbed brain function and behavior. Symptoms of this are aggression, sleeplessness, stomach pains, and fatigue.

The biochemical pattern, in which the brain uses energy from glucose to synthesize neurotransmitters, requires the correct balance of vitamins and minerals in the blood. When these nutrients are deficient, the body cannot produce sufficient energy because it is unable to metabolize chemical by-products.

Too many unaltered chemical by-products and too few nutrients, particularly B vitamins, can be detected in blood and urine samples, thereby ruling out other causes for the behavior symptoms. Overconsumption-undernutrition syndrome is treated with a drastic reduction of sweets, a diet rich in vitamins and minerals, and B vitamin supplement pills, so that the fragile biochemical balance of the brain can be restored.

Parents Give Important Guidance In Children's Career Decisions

One awesome task high school students face is deciding, "what should I do with my life?" This question often begins at an early age, when children are dreaming of being cowboys, firemen, nurses and teachers, and the question gets tougher as the years roll past.

People close to teens—peers, parents, teachers, guidance counselors, relatives and other friends—are a big influence on career decisions.

But of all those, parents have the most influence on occupational and educational plans of children, according to a study conducted by the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture's rural sociology department.

"Parents are more influential than are friends on the long-term goals and values of children," said Richard Maurer, assistant Extension professor of sociology. Considerably more than half of 1,819 high school seniors interviewed at 20 high schools in Kentucky said their parents had "some" or "a great deal" of influence upon their future plans for both occupations and education. "Friends have more influence on the less important things such as dress, what is 'in' or 'out' and what to do on Saturday night," said Maurer.

Because parents were found to have the greatest influence on students' career decisions, Maurer said that parents should attempt to be well-informed about potential careers open to their children—and the list is long.

"There are around 20,000 different occupations in the United States, according to the U.S. Department of Labor's occupational titles dictionary. Yet most of the students in the survey mentioned no more than 150 jobs," Maurer said. "We're not saying that parents could be informed about all 20,000 jobs, but they need to help their children explore the opportunities open to them."

One way that may help parents become involved in children's career decisions is the career exploration program sponsored by the Cooperative Extension Service in many Kentucky counties.

The program was not developed to tell children what career is right for them, but to open the doors so they are aware of the possibilities for careers, said Paul Teague, Extension community development specialist and director of the career exploration program.

The career exploration program is a three-step process in which parents can participate along with the child. The first step is an awareness of jobs and work. Children are given the opportunity to study their community and the types of jobs available there. "They also look at the jobs in their school and local government," said Teague.

In the second phase, teens find out more about salary, working hours, lifestyles and training required of jobs their community offers and jobs of interest to them. Here students can evaluate their own personalities to see what types of jobs fit their lifestyle and interest.

Finally, the students in the 4-H career program develop career interests. They are encouraged to participate in hobbies that will help them build skills. They put together resumes and look for part-time jobs. The teens also have a chance to observe people on the job, and many times to work alongside them.

In Warren County last year, for example, 45 businesses participated in a program called shadowing, which gives students a chance to spend a day with workers on the job.

Students spent time with such workers as bankers, dentists and factory workers. At each workplace or office, students were given a chance to try the work or to observe, said Karen Trumbo, Warren County Extension Agent for 4-H. "At the bank, the teens counted money and worked with the computers."

While career exploration programs can help high schoolers make career choices, decisions actually start much earlier and are largely influenced by parents.

According to Teague, parents begin to influence their children's career decision from early in the child's life. "Parents are examples and models for children," said Teague. "How well the parents get along at their job will give children a good or bad impression of work."

Three types of career decision-making patterns can emerge in a family setting. The first is child centered. In this type, there is little or no parental involvement and children make decisions with no guidance from parents. In the second type, family-centered, the entire family becomes involved in the decision-making process. Children and parents contribute freely to discussions and children gradually take responsibility for the own decisions. The third type is parent-centered. Here children conform to parental expectations and parents make the final decision with little consideration for their children's point of view.

"It is generally thought that families operating in a family-centered pattern are more likely to encourage self-confidence and independence," said Teague. "Children who feel they are a part of the decision-making process would be more willing to consider their parents' ideas when making choices."

Teague suggests several hints for parents in helping guide children's career decisions.

- Encourage career exploration at an early age. Children's hopes often are expressed in fantasy, especially during play. Encourage such actions and ask questions, such as "why does this appeal to you?"

- Investigate new ideas by asking children what they would do if they could not do the first job they think of.

- Be responsive when your child asks "What do you think I should be when I grow up?" Point out talents the child has and suggest careers relating to these talents.

- During middle years, help your child to explore and develop skills needed for work.

- Encourage your child to take up hobbies and other leisure activities that will help develop job skills.

- Help your child understand how important school work will be later in a job search.

- Take advantage of friends to introduce new careers to your child. Encourage youngsters to discuss jobs with teachers and guidance counselors.

- When helping children toward a decision, encourage them to look at all aspects of the career. Examine how the career fits the children's skills and long-term goals. Be sure to look at the employment outlook for particular jobs.

BOXING

ABC Sports will present a new series which will feature United States national teams in head-to-head competition with the finest international teams. The new series, titled "U.S.A. vs. the World in Olympic Sports," will debut on ABC-TV SUNDAY, JANUARY 31, with a match between the United States national boxing team and the national team from the U.S.S.R., currently ranked No. 2 in the world. Each week, athletes will compete in one of four Olympic sports—boxing, gymnastics, swimming and freestyle wrestling—with the U.S. teams facing other countries with strong teams in the particular sports. While the majority of the dual meets will take place in the United States, some events are scheduled to take place in the home countries of the competing teams.

For America's Forests

Where We Get Our Wood

Americans use about 13 billion cubic feet of timber a year for housing, paper products, fuel and much more. That's enough wood for a stack almost 55 miles high, the size of a football field. Where does it all come from—and where will it come from in the future? Here are a few facts that may help you find the forests and the trees.

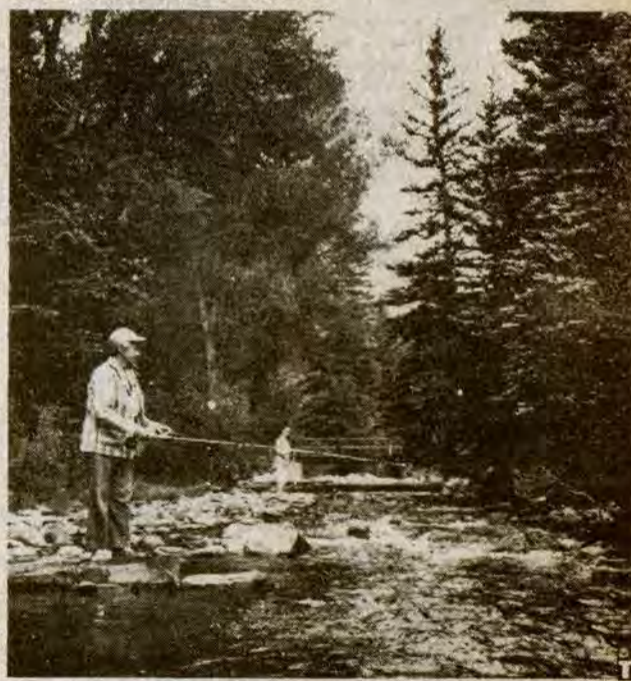

Increasingly, much of our wood is imported. This is a trend that is likely to continue, warn the experts at the U.S. Forest Service, unless we change the way we manage our forests and the wood we get from them.

Canadian softwood accounted for as much as 20 percent of U.S. needs in the mid-1970s. Canada also sends us hardwood, and other countries such as Korea, Taiwan, Japan, Malaysia, Indonesia and the Philippines provide us hardwood, plywood and veneers.

Most of our softwood from inside the country today comes from the South and the Pacific coast. Together they account for about 85 percent of the entire U.S. supply. The remainder is equally split between the North and the Rocky Mountains.

The Forest Service estimates a growth in the demand for domestic forest products over the next two generations that could amount to as much as a 224 percent increase.

Thanks to several technical advances in forest management, a large increase in forest management and making better use of the wood we have could help us cut more trees here and our imports of wood from abroad.

In some places we're growing more trees than we cut down. That could be good for our future.

Unless we manage our timber lands more wisely, they caution, America will not have enough wood and we won't be able to afford what we have.

Careful planning of our natural resources can mean a better life for generations to come.

To The Good People Of Floyd County, Ky.

Support President Ronald Reagan, especially in his military budget. His job is not easy. I was in W.W. II myself. My son died in Vietnam. I know I am not the only father or mother who suffered a great loss, but I can be proud more of my son's military record than mine—for he gave his life to his country. I pray for all who lost and for our President who has a tough job and decisions to make. So Keep America beautiful and be thankful. Send your support and letters to the Republican National Committee 310 First St., South East Washington, D.C. 20003. CHARLES WALKER CLIFTON 503 McKee Ave. Orange Park, Fla. 32073

We especially thank everyone who sent all the beautiful flowers, food, and who helped in any way. A special thanks to Rev. Henry Crider and Rev. Rudolph Lewis for their comforting words, and to the Hall Funeral Home for their kind and efficient service.

Portrait Of Africa's Friend To Lions Slated For KET

A portrait of George Adamson, Africa's friend to lions, comes to KET Wednesday, February 3 at 10 p.m. This hour-long documentary, "The Most Endangered Species...George Adamson," focuses on the life of the legendary figure who maintains a small game reserve for outcast lions in northeastern Kenya. Drawing largely from his diaries, Adamson's late wife, Joy, wrote "Born Free," the popular novel of Elsa the lioness and her cubs. It is ironic that while serving as adviser for the movie version of "Born Free," Adamson developed his interest in rehabilitating outcast and orphaned lions. Adamson and his assistant Tony Fitzjohn continue the mission with no help and, recently, some discouragement from the Kenya government. Adamson is one of the last vestiges of the old British Empire. Born in India, he came to East Africa at the age of 18 and has never left. He has hunted gold, beeswax and big game. Before starting his reserve, he was a colonial game warden. A large part of "The Most Endangered Species..." deals with Adamson's predicament of whether to allow an old "killer" lion to live or die. In the end, it is the lion who provides the solution. The special, narrated by director John Huston, is presented on KET by KUHT/Houston.

Sea Turtle Stumps Science
The female sea turtle, which must lay its eggs on land, will cross hundreds of miles of ocean in order to deposit from 60 to 100 eggs in the sand of the same beach where it was born, reports the National Wildlife Federation. Scientists can't explain how the sea-dwelling reptile, an endangered species, is able to navigate its way back to its birthplace.

ORGANIZATIONAL MEET OF RETIRED IS HELD

A meeting was held at the First Presbyterian Church, here last Friday afternoon, for the purpose of organizing a chapter of the American Association of Retired Persons.

Jack Freed, of Prestonsburg, presided at the meeting. The pastor, the Rev. Timothy D. Jessen, gave the welcome address.

William B. Hall, London, Ky., director of the A.A.R.P. organization in Kentucky, and Mrs. Hall, a member of the Kentucky Legislative Committee and vice chairman of the organization, were introduced by Mr. Freed. Mr. and Mrs. Hall discussed some of the advantages of becoming members of this organization, among which were: remaining in the mainstream of American life; having an input into the important decisions made on a local, state and national levels, making it possible for persons in this age group to be covered with health and liability insurance; being eligible for discounts on medicine, hotel, motel, and other accommodations, and for the value of the fellowship derived in coming together as a group and socializing with one another.

It was explained that persons who are already paid members of the National Retired Teachers Association may become members without payment of dues for the remainder of the period which is covered by the N.R.T.A., and that couples may join for the price of one membership fee.

Officers elected were: president—Jack Freed; vice president, Fred James; secretary, Patricia Mills; treasurer, Irene Cooley. The board of directors appointed were Delmas Saunders, Phyllis Reed, and John R. Baldridge. Mrs. Carl Woods was asked to be publicity director.

The president has announced that there will be a meeting of the board of directors at his home, February 8, at 7:30 p.m., and that the next meeting of the organization will be held at the First Presbyterian Church February 18, at 2 p.m. All members, and prospective members are urged to attend.

Coffee was served by members of the host church. Present and represented at the meeting were: Glenn S. Anderson, Adma M. Anderson, Gladys Allen, Edith Burchett, Irene Cooley, Lois Elkins, Jack R. State Will Fund Park For Auxier

Floyd county has been granted $15,000 in state funds to help develop a community park at Auxier.

Local and federal funds complete financing for the $100,000 project, said Sally Hamilton, acting commissioner of the Department of Community and Regional Development. The park will include a tennis court, basketball court, a baseball field and other facilities.

The grant from the area development fund, which finances improvements involving fire protection, emergency services, industrial development, and water, sewer and sanitation facilities.

Coal Co. Gives To Hospital Fund

Raymond Bradbury, president of Martin County Coal, presenting a contribution for the Highlands Development Fund to Burl Wells Spurlock, chairman of the HRMC board of trustees. They viewed the model of the hospital expansion while discussing potential uses for Martin County Coal's donation.

The largest single check ever given to the Highlands Regional Medical Center Development Fund was presented recently by Raymond Bradbury, president of the Martin County Coal Corporation.

"The Board of Trustees and the staff of Highlands are immensely pleased with the generosity of Mr. Bradbury and Martin County Coal," stated Burl Wells Spurlock, chairman of the hospital board. "This strong demonstration of support encourages us as we continue to progress with our construction plans and expanded service to the region."

The $15,000 check was the latest donation as part of a long-term financial commitment to HRMC by the coal company. "We realize that the continued growth of the Medical Center is vitally important to all the residents of the Big Sandy," Bradbury commented when presenting the check. "We are proud to be involved with the medical center and we encourage others, especially fellow coal producers, to show their support also."

State To Distribute Cheese Rations

FRANKFORT, Ky.—The state Human Resources Department is handling distribution of 400,000 pounds of free cheese being shipped to regional warehouses in Bowling Green and Lexington by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Cheese will be distributed in five-pound bricks in amounts up to 15 pounds depending on family size. To qualify, household income must be at or below the poverty level and liquid resources should not exceed $3,000. Receiving the free cheese will not affect a person's food stamp allocation.

Applications will be accepted beginning Monday, Jan. 25, from households including an elderly or disabled person. All other low-income households may begin applying Tuesday, Jan. 26. Applications may be made at local Bureau for Social Insurance offices.

Announce Engagement

Mr. and Mrs. Graham Boyd, of Vermilion, Ohio, announce the engagement of their daughter, Tamara Sue, to Norman Eric Schultz, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Schultz, of Amherst, Ohio. Miss Boyd is the granddaughter of Mrs. Sarah Turner, of Garrett, and Mr. Estill Boyd, of Dana. Wedding plans are indefinite.

STATE WARNS AGAINST SOME HOME FIRE EXTINGUISHERS

FRANKFORT, Ky.—Several brands of home fire extinguishers being advertised in newspapers and sold door-to-door may produce dangerous toxic gases when in contact with open fire or burning substances, according to officials with the state fire marshal's office.

The extinguishers in question are sold under the trade names Sargon, American Safety Products, Target and Blazer, said Deputy Fire Marshal Morgan Kelly. The Kentucky fire marshal's office issued the warning after receiving test results from the Nebraska and Louisiana fire marshal offices.

To be safe, a person in the market for a fire extinguisher should buy only an extinguisher which has been approved and bears either the Underwriter Laboratories (UL) or Factory Mutual (FM) label, said Kelly.

The small, thorny, bull's-horn acacia trees of Central America have their own "maid service" which keeps them clean and shiny, reports Ranger Rick's Nature Magazine. Colonies of ants live inside the trees' huge thorns and keep the acacias free from dust and leaf-eating enemies. In exchange for their service, the trees provide their insect "partners" with safe homes and plenty of food.

★ Cancer Hopeline

Q. My active, well-educated mother is 80 years old and has breast cancer. She is seriously considering not having surgery. What can we as her children do?

A. It is always difficult for members of a family to stand by and not get involved when they think their loved one with cancer has made the wrong decision. Still, if the patient is capable of deciding, he/she has the right to do so.

You can help your mother by being sure she secured from her physician the necessary facts to make an informed choice.

The likelihood of being cured or made better.

The risk of death or serious disability from the operation or from its complications.

The benefits and risks of not having surgery.

How disabling or disfiguring the operation will be.

The alternative kinds of treatment available.

Once your mother has the information, it may be that the best thing you as children can do is let her make the decision and abide by it. Your support for her, whatever her choice, will prove to her that she raised loving, independent children who are secure enough not to try to control others.

The alternative is interfering, which could cause resentments between you and your mother and among you as children if you force an active 80-year-old to accept your ideas. Such a situation could rob her of her independence and make her feel like a child who must take others' direction. Would she want that, and would you want it for her?

Cancer brings great pressures to a family. For help in handling them, call the counselors at the Cancer Hopeline toll free at 1-800-432-9321 from 9-9 Monday-Thursday or 9-5 Friday. They listen carefully and work hard to help. Written questions may be sent to the Hopeline at 915 South Limestone Street, Lexington 40536. Of course, all communications are confidential.

A very helpful booklet for cancer patients and their families is "Taking Time: Support for People with Cancer and the People Who Care About Them." Call or write soon for your free copy.

Cargo of Caskets Damaged

Slippery roads have accounted for numerous accidents in the area recently but a mishap, last Tuesday, involving a casket truck may be the most unusual to date. The vehicle, owned by Simmons Casket Co., of Louisville, reportedly began to slide after being parked near a building on old KY 80 at Martin where caskets are stored by a Martin funeral home. The driver, Ike Davidson, of Louisville, quickly bailed out of the truck as it slowly but uncontrollably continued its slide over the banks of Beaver Creek, and when the vehicle came to rest, all of its cargo of 25 caskets was found to be damaged. The driver escaped injury.

Layer Your Clothes for Warmth

The mercury is hovering near zero. The thermostat is set at 65 degrees. You're wearing your ski jacket inside and jogging in-place. But the cold still manages to seep through and chill you to an uncomfortable degree.

What next? Extension specialists in clothing at the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture have some ideas.

"Instead of turning up the thermostat when you feel chilly, reach for warmer clothing," advises Dr. Jo Ann Hilliker.

WINTER IS CRITICAL TIME FOR WILDLIFE
There's a country song going around called "If We Make It Through December." This could well be the theme song for many wildlife species, but only if we add January, February and some of March to the title.

In the natural scheme of things, winter and early spring are critical times for wildlife. The abundance or scarcity of a species may well depend upon how many individuals make it through winter.

Under even the best of conditions, population fluctuations can be surprisingly great. Research has shown that on the average only 20 percent of the quail hatched one spring will make it to the next breeding season.

This 80 percent loss (or annual mortality, as wildlife biologists call it) is due to a number of factors, but the greatest losses generally occur in winter, when chilling cold increases the need for food at the very time that food is most scarce. Deep, longlasting snows can further compound the problem by burying foods that would otherwise be available.

But the relatively few quail that do make it through the winter are enough to repopulate the species, so that by the following winter there is again a surplus of birds—many more than the habitat can support. So the annual cycle repeats itself, year after year, with many more individuals produced than can possibly survive.

This annual mortality rate is the same whether the quail are hunted or not. A controlled hunting season allows hunters to take a portion of this surplus population before nature does and the net result is the same—a 20 percent survival rate.

We've used quail as an example because research figures are readily available on this bird. But the same general population cycle (with different percentages) holds true for all species, game or non-game. A good index of the degree of annual mortality is the species' birth rate. A large number of offspring indicates a low survival rate and a high annual mortality. That's why rabbits, the favorite prey species of just about every predator, reproduce like—well, like rabbits.

The key to abundant wildlife populations is allowing more individuals to make it through the periods of high population loss. A great deal of wildlife research and management is devoted to discovering the "limiting factors" on wildlife populations and correcting them. Sometimes this limiting factor is food, sometimes shelter or, particularly in arid regions, water.

So wildlife management, in many cases, is actually habitat management, the changing of environmental conditions to allow more individuals to survive the critical phase of the yearly cycle.

"You can be either a little bit or a whole lot warmer by making wise decisions about what you wear," adds Bette Jo Dedic.

The key to dressing warmer is in wearing several layers, according to the specialists.

Several light layers are warmer than one heavy layer because the clothes help trap air that insulates the body. Clothes should be closefitting so that warm air won't escape, but the garment itself needs to be loose enough to provide air spaces next to the body, explain Hilliker and Dedic.

"Clothes which fit too tightly don't provide enough room for air to be trapped between them and your skin," says Dedic. Clothes that are too loose, however, allow air to move around and carry heat away from the body.

Besides layering for more warmth, choosing warm fabrics can make the difference between shivering and tolerating the cold. The specialists point out that natural fibers such as cotton, linen, silk or wool—especially wool—do a good job of absorbing moisture from the skin and allowing perspiration to evaporate from the skin.

Many people also are turning to long underwear to ward off the arctic blasts. Knee socks, textured stockings, or lightweight cotton socks under heavier socks also add warmth. "Just plain pantyhose will add one degree of warmth and an undershirt will add one-half degree," say the specialists.

They also suggest choosing "warm" colors, such as red, orange, purple and yellow to give a greater feeling of warmth.

"If you're wearing several layers and still feel cold, move around," say Dedic and Hilliker. For those with restricted movement, such as some elderly and handicapped people, the specialists suggest still more layers.

A lightweight long-sleeved sweater will make you two degrees warmer. A heavy sweater will make difference of 3.5 degrees. Two sweaters can mean as much as five or six extra degrees. And the addition of slacks will add three degrees warmth.

Hilliker and Dedic have developed a computer program called "Staywarm," which analyzes the insulation value of clothing. The program is designed to acquaint individuals with ways to stay comfortable indoors when thermostats have been lowered.

The specialists see the program as a new way to educate the public on ways to stay warm while conserving energy.

Publications on keeping warm with clothing, as well as the selection and care of outerwear garments, are available through county home economics Extension agents.

STATE LIBRARIES USING CONVERTED STEP VANS

FRANKFORT, Ky.—The Kentucky Department of Libraries and Archives is receiving national attention for savings it has realized through converting step vans for use as bookmobiles rather than buying expensive custom-made vehicles.

The step vans are bought through competitive bidding. Then, under a contract between the department and Eddyville Penitentiary's prison industry, prisoners design and remodel the van interiors.

Under current prices, a commercially-designed bookmobile costs $36,000 while it only costs $19,000 to convert a step van. That means a savings of $17,000 per bookmobile. The Kentucky project was discussed in an article which appeared in "American Libraries."

Inspect ARC Projects Here

Members of a Congressional subcommittee, which will play a part in deciding the fate of the Appalachian Regional Commission, toured the area recently to view development projects funded, at least in part, by ARC since 1965.

The future of the Commission remains in doubt as a result of federal budget cuts authorized by Congress last year as part of President Reagan's economic strategy.

Sites inspected here included Highlands Regional Medical Center, which has applied for a $1.5 million ARC grant to build a new primary care facility, part of the hospital's planned expansion project; the David Community Development Corporation; the Highlands Terrace elderly housing and Cliffside public housing projects; site of the proposed water-line link between Pikeville and Prestonsburg; and a number of highways, including US 23 and the Mountain Parkway.

Science Seminar Services Planned

The Division of Science and Technology of Pikeville College will present a Science Seminar series during the spring semester. The series will consist of weekly guest lectures by scientists in the region and will encompass a wide range of science disciplines.

All persons in the community are invited to attend any of the presentations. Science majors enrolled at the college will be eligible to receive one credit hour if they register for the course.

One of the notable guests includes the foremost hydrologist in the region, Willie Curtis, of the U.S. Forest Service Experimental Station at Berea, who has been investigating the effects of mining on watershed hydrology for many years and has authored numerous papers on the subject. On Feb. 10, he will speak about "Hydrology on Strip-Mined Area."

Another speaker of interest to mining personnel is Dr. Dave Hylbert, of Morehead State University, who will present a lecture and slide show on "Satellite Imagery; Applications to Underground Mining," on April 14.

Other scientists in Kentucky who are active in coal and mining-related research have been invited to speak about their findings. Dr. Pierre Allaire, of Lees Junior College, has a background in ornithology, the study of birds, and has discovered some unusual findings on strip mined areas. On Feb. 24, he will discuss "The Birds of Eastern Kentucky Strip-Mined Areas." In addition, Dr. Harry Enoch, in charge of the environmental section of Kentucky's Department of Energy, will speak Feb. 17 of the "Environmental Effects of Burning Coal."

There will be several presentations by biologists in the state but their subjects will range from Dr. Mat Pryor's research in Antarctica near the South Pole to Dr. John Theiret's research in the Northwest Territories of Canada, near the North Pole. Closer home, Dr. William Martin, of Eastern Kentucky University, has been managing the natural areas set aside by the state of Kentucky for preservation. These areas include Lilley Cornett Woods, Pilot Knob, and Grassland Restoration Projects that he has worked on in the western part of the state. He will present a slide-lecture on "Natural Areas of Kentucky" on March 3. John MacGregor, of the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife has collected amphibians in various localities of Pike county, including Virgie and Johns Creek, and will speak about his findings on April 7.

The physical sciences will have presentations that range from the earth's interior to the outer atmosphere. State Geologist, Dr. Haney will speak of geology and Dr. J. P. Lee,

INTERESTS AND DIVIDEND EXCLUSION ON TAXES

For 1981 you may exclude from taxable income $200 of combined interest and dividends. On a joint return you may exclude up to $400. It does matter which spouse receives the income.

Income from most bank deposits, bonds, money market funds, certificates of deposits, and similar investments now qualifies for the exclusion. The income from both interest and dividends will be listed on Form 1040 or 1040A, and the exclusive will be taken according to the filing status as listed above.

For example, if a husband received $250 in interest from a savings account and his wife received $300 in dividend income from corporate stock, their total interest and dividend income would be $550. On their joint return, the couple could exclude the first $400, and only include $150 in their taxable income.

If you have further questions on this exclusion you may call IRS at 584-1361, 255-2333 in Lexington, 628-0055 in Covington, or toll-free 1-800-428-9100 elsewhere in Kentucky.

National Geographic Profile Of Ancient Egypt On KET

KET presents this season's second National Geographic Special, "Egypt: Quest For Eternity," Wednesday, February 3 at 9 p.m.

The one-hour special delves into the mystery of eternal life and explores the enduring fascination of one of the longest-lasting civilizations on earth.

Egypt has intrigued, inspired and mystified the world for almost 3,000 years. The monuments, built to last through eternity, are now keys to her past.

This documentary is woven around the life of the pharaoh who left his imprint on nearly every group of monuments in Egypt-Ramses II, perhaps history's most prolific builder.

Working at the temples of Luxor and the temple to the sun god at Karnak for over 50 years, Egyptologists from the University of Chicago have tediously created volume after volume of beautiful facsimile drawings of these now damaged and deteriorating masterpieces.

In an effort to preserve rather than expose more priceless antiquities to possible decay, erosion or even vandalism, the scholars hope to learn from what is already present.

Centuries ago, the Egyptians believed in a luxurious life after death. Today, the monuments to that notion may survive their existing state. Archaeologists are dedicated to resurrecting and protecting their exquisite works.

★ CONSUMER ALERT ★

"STOPPING PAYMENT ON CHECKS"

Kentucky residents frequently call the Attorney General's Consumer Hotline with inquiries about stopping payment on personal checks. A consumer often wants to stop payment on a check when defective merchandise has not been received or repair work has not been done satisfactorily.

"An individual may order his or her bank to stop payment on a personal check," says Attorney General Steven L. Beshear. "A verbal order is binding upon the bank for fourteen days, unless confirmed in writing within that period. The written order is effective for only six months, unless renewed in writing."

If the bank does not follow a valid order to stop payment, it is up to the consumer to establish this fact and any resultant loss. To avoid this problem, a consumer is advised to go to his or her local bank and ask about the exact procedure to be followed for stopping payment.

Whenever payment on a check is stopped, the consumer should write to the business or individual involved and state why payment has been stopped. This should be done even when the party has been verbally advised about the stop-payment order. The written notice should be sent by certified mail, and the consumer should keep a copy for future reference, in case trouble arises.

Some business people may attempt to prosecute a consumer for passing a "cold check" when payment is stopped and the company cannot collect its money. If prosecution does result, it will not be presumed that the customer intended to deceive the merchant if he can show that he stopped payment on a check written on an account containing sufficient funds to cover it. The certified letter of notice to the business will help show this.

In any situation involving a demand for a cashier's check or money order, a consumer should check with his or her bank before obtaining and handing over such a check. It is very difficult to stop payment on cashier's checks, money orders, and certified checks. Never use a check of this type if you have any question whatsoever about the integrity of the transaction for which the check is to be used.

"Remember, before stopping payment on a check, give the company a chance to resolve the problem," advises Attorney General Beshear. "If, for any reason, you decide to stop payment on a check, it is best to consult with your attorney and your banker before doing so."

The Consumer Protection Division of the Attorney General's Office provides consumer information and helps solve consumer problems. If you need their assistance, write to the Consumer Protection Division, 209 St. Clair St., Frankfort, Ky. 40601, or call the toll-free consumer hotline: 1-800-432-9257.

'NOVA' To Detail Search For Lethal Microbes

"NOVA" takes an in-depth look at the manhunt for the microscopic killer of American Legionnaires on "NOVA: The Hunt for the Legion Killer," Sunday, January 31 at 8 p.m.

The year is 1976 and the place is the Philadelphia Bicentennial Celebration. Hundreds of Legionnaires are gathered for patriotic banquets and celebrations of America's 200th birthday. Without warning, many become violently ill and die. With the death toll at 34, the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, Ga., is contacted. Hundreds of biotoxins and toxic chemicals are isolated for possible implication in the deaths. After 90,000 research hours and months of futility, the killer microbe is identified as "Legional Pneumophila."

In this program, "NOVA" offers a unique look behind the headlines at doctors rushing against time and using high technology equipment to isolate the lethal bacteria.

Cooking in the Cumberlands

By IRENE HAYES

February is the shortest month of the year and is best known for Valentine's Day and the birthdays of two famous presidents, George Washington and Abraham Lincoln. I always look forward to the last of February because I know that spring isn't far away. I love spring best of all, but it takes all the seasons to make us appreciate the one we like best.

When I was a child we could buy beautiful valentines for one, two, and three cents each. The valentines had tissue sections inside that made them stand up when opened. A ten-cent valentine was a work of art. Words can't express the thrill we experienced when we received one of these. Valentines are recipients were chosen carefully, as money wasn't spent lavishly on unnecessary things. We were limited as to the number of valentines we could buy. I honestly believe that children would be happier and appreciate things more if they received "no" more often than "yes" from the cradle through the teenage years.

I have a recipe I want to share with you from my cookbook because it is delicious and very easy to prepare. The sauce can be made ahead and refrigerated for as long as two weeks. Spare ribs or chicken can be brushed with the sauce and whisked into the oven along with baked potatoes. A salad and rolls complete a delightful meal with little effort. The recipe was given to me by Brenda Music, of Prestonsburg, Kentucky.

Barbecued Ribs

CHOP: 1 large onion
SAUTE until soft in: 2 tbsps. oil

ADD:
2 tbsps. salt
1 cup catsup
1/2 cup water
1/2 cup molasses
1/4 cup prepared mustard
1/4 cup Worcestershire sauce

Simmer 10 minutes on low heat. Divide 3 lbs. short ribs or spare ribs for serving. Place in shallow pan. Bake 1 1/2 hours in 325° oven. Brush every half hour with the sauce and turn. Serves 4 to 6.

Note: This can be cooled, wrapped and frozen for quick meals later.

Most every one not familiar with the mountain area thinks that everyone eats a very limited diet of biscuits or corn bread at every meal, potatoes, beans, greens, etc. It may have been true when there was no access to bakeries and supermarkets, but times have changed. Although some still bake bread for every meal, most use bread from the bakery and only make biscuits and corn bread occasionally. Although we love corn bread, I seldom make it. When I do, it is a special treat. For traditional corn bread, I melt bacon drippings in a heavy iron skillet. I stir the excess drippings into the batter and pour it into the hot skillet. This makes a better crust on the corn bread. For an unusual corn bread which is very easy to make, try the following recipe for Sour Cream Corn Bread by Ruth Arrowood of Drift, Kentucky. I know you'll like it. Note that the pan is not heated before pouring the batter into it.

Sour Cream Corn Bread

COMBINE:
1/2 cup salad oil
1 cup cream-style corn
1 cup self-rising cornmeal
2 eggs
1/2 tsp. salt
1 cup sour cream

Mix well.

Pour into well-greased 8x8-inch baking pan.
Bake 30 minutes in 450° oven.

Another food associated with the South and the mountain area is grits. I never liked grits until I tasted Cheese Garlic Grits. If you have never eaten grits try this recipe. It could become a favorite. If you can't find the garlic cheese, use a plain soft cheddar cheese roll and add 1/2 tsp. garlic powder to the recipe. The recipe was given to me by Mrs. J.H. Haydon, of Mt. Sterling, Kentucky.

Cheese-Garlic Grits

BRING TO A BOIL: 3 1/2 cups milk
ADD: 1 cup grits
Cook over medium heat, stirring constantly, until thickened (8 to 10 minutes).

THEN ADD:

1 stick butter or margarine
1 (6-oz.) roll garlic cheese
1 tsp. salt
Stir until melted.
BEAT: 2 eggs
ADD: 1/2 cup milk
Add to grit mixture. Pour into well-buttered 1 1/2-qt. casserole.
Bake 30 minutes in 350° oven.
SPRINKLE on top: 1/2 cup grated cheddar cheese
Bake 15 minutes longer. Serve hot.
Serves 4 to 6.

I want to share my own recipe for Butterscotch Pie. It has been my claim to fame since early in my cooking career. I have a standing offer of a hand-done car wash and wax job from my son-in-law for a butterscotch pie. I don't know where the saying "easy as pie" came from, because pies aren't easy. I make the crusts the day before and store them in the refrigerator and bake them before I make the pudding.

Butterscotch Pie

BEAT: 3 egg yolks
ADD: 2 cups milk
COMBINE and ADD to above:
1 cup brown sugar
6 scant tbsps. flour
1/2 tsp. salt

Cook over medium heat until thick, stirring constantly.
Cook 5 to 8 minutes after it begins to boil.

THEN ADD:

4 tbsps. butter
1 tsp. vanilla
1 or 2 tbsps. fresh brown sugar (see Note below)

Pour into baked pie shell.
TOP WITH meringue made from:
3 egg whites
3 tbsps. sugar
Add sugar while egg whites are still frothy. Beat until stiff.
Bake slowly in 350° oven to eliminate watery meringue.

Note: Adding brown sugar is the easiest way to improve butterscotch flavor. For the best flavor, after pudding is done, caramelize 1/2 cup granulated sugar over low heat, stirring constantly. When sugar melts and turns a rich brown color, remove from heat immediately or it will get too hard. Allow to cool a minute or two, then pour slowly into pudding, beating constantly. If some of the syrup lumps, strain pudding.

There is no doubt that some women make an art of cooking and are experts. I know women who take a good recipe and improve it. I consider them experts. There is an old saying that the way to a man's heart is through his stomach. I believe that there is truth in this saying. Good luck!
