Back to School . . .

Time To Check Children's Vision

As summer vacations draw to a close its time to tuck the memories of summer trips, 4-H camp and good times at the old swimming hole back into a safe corner and begin preparations to return to school.

Along with school clothes, paper and pencils, it is important to remember that one of the most important aspects of learning is to have the basic equipment necessary to obtain that education, such as clear, comfortable and efficient vision. Just before school begins or soon afterwards is a very good time to make certain your child does not have trouble with reading, writing and arithmetic because of poor visual ability.

There are several methods of checking on your child's vision. Many schools have screening tests as do many local health departments or a comprehensive examination can be performed by your family eye doctor. The important thing to remember though about screening tests is to make certain that they are comprehensive and conducted by trained personnel capable of recognizing the symptoms of a vision problem. Alas, even with all the knowledge gained concerning vision in the last decade and the public information dissemination efforts of several groups concerned with vision, many screening tests still check for vision problems using only standard E chart and consider 20/20 vision as perfect eyesight. Although blurred distance vision, for which the E chart screens, is a major cause for problems in school, parents, educators and professionals must be aware that children can have clear or 20/20 vision and still have uncomfortable and inefficient vision for which the E chart does not screen. The visual system is very complex and interrelated to other body systems but consists of three basic components, input, integration and output. This means that to have proper vision the body needs a way to collect information from the outside world usually through the eye (input) the brain must be able to receive this information and properly analyze what it has received (integration), and the body must be able to do something about the information received and analyzed such as throwing a basketball through a hoop or copying from the blackboard in school (output). Problems which can effect learning in school can and do occur at one or several places in the visual system. These conditions rarely threaten a child's sight but do often prevent a child's development into a normal contributing adult member of society by interfering with learning, inhibiting participation in sports and other active pursuits and creating frustration that leads to misbehavior, dropping out of school and even juvenile delinquency.

Many of the more publicly known vision problems deal with the input mode of the visual system and are defects in the manner in which light is focused in the eye for clarity of vision such as nearsightedness, farsightedness and astigmatism. Other not so well known problems deal with eye teaming skills, the ability to coordinate and align the eyes precisely so the brain can fuse the pictures it receives from each eye into a single image, visual form perception, the ability to organize images on the printed page into letters and/or words and visualization, the ability to form a mind's image of previous events or concepts presented by the printed page.

The tests that today's eye doctors use to treat these conditions consist of many different forms of spectacle lenses, contact lenses and vision training. Based on the fact that seeing is a learned process that begins at birth, vision training is a process designed to teach the entire vision system to operate at peak efficiency, to help learn, relearn or reinforce specific vision skills. Today modern fashion eyeglass frames and easy to wear contact lenses make the job of getting your child to wear the prescribed form of visual correction much easier than in years past.

One of the most important jobs a conscientious parent can do for their child is to make certain through either a comprehensive screening test or comprehension analysis of vision by your family eye doctor that their child has the proper visual skills to become a happy, active and participating member of society.

More specific information about your child's vision can be obtained by phoning or writing the Kentucky Optometric Association, P.O. Box 572, Frankfort, KY 40602; (502) 875-3516.

Women's Programs Likely Victim Of Fed. Budget Cuts

Proposed federal budget cuts will have an extremely adverse effect on educational programs for women, according to Alice McDonald, a keynote speaker at the National Coalition for Sex Equity in Education conference in Louisville.

McDonald, who heads the Office of Federal Programs in the Kentucky Department of Education, told coalition members today that the proposed cuts will have a devastating impact on women and their families.

"Current proposals to combine vocational education and adult education into a single block grant and reduce funds by 40 percent will severely limit the opportunities for many women," she said.

The vocational education act currently funds programs placing emphasis on the needs of women in non-traditional jobs. Under the block grant proposal this emphasis would be eliminated.

"Not only are funds for training decreased," McDonald explained, "but child care support is being withdrawn; grants and loans for students are being cut; and some food programs for women, infants and school children are being eliminated."

Proposed changes in federal student aid formulas, coupled with cutbacks in other programs such as CETA may put post-secondary education beyond the reach of many women, she said.

McDonald concluded that proposed budget cuts will mean less vocational education and less job training.

The National Coalition for Sex Equity in Education is composed of sex equity professionals in local school districts, state and federal agencies, and national and local organizations.

Heavier Trucks Are To Blame For Highway Damage: Rail Man

Heavy trucks are primarily responsible for the nation's deteriorating highways and unless the federal and state governments generally adopt a more equitable user charge system, motorists will find themselves in the biggest collective pothole in history.

That's the thrust of remarks made recently by Hays T. Watkins, Chairman of CSX Corporation, before the National Transportation Public Affairs Workshop of the American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials.

"Our trillion dollar federal highway network, the largest single, non-military investment in our nation's history, is wearing out faster than it is being replaced," he said.

He cited numerous state studies and the recent federal Department of Transportation study as conclusive, independent evidence that heavy truck traffic is responsible for pavement damage while, at the same time, covering at most only about 50 percent of its true highway costs.

"Our highways were not engineered with today's higher truck weights and truck volumes in mind," Watkins said. "And, certainly, the engineers never anticipated a public policy which would not require these vehicles to cover their true costs."

He noted that while heavy truck weights have increased significantly since 1974 and highway construction and maintenance costs have increased four-fold since 1960, user fees paid by the trucking industry have declined in real terms and as a percentage of their operating cost.

"There has been no change in the federal motor fuel tax since it was established in 1956 and the last time there was even a minor adjustment in the federal use tax was back in 1961," he said. "The combination of three factors is the heart of the highway dilemma we face today."

Watkins said the subsidy enjoyed by heavy trucks means all other motorists are paying more than their fair share of highway costs.

"While this subsidy to the trucking industry may reduce its rates, it has just the opposite effect on transportation costs in general. The subsidy increases costs for both highways and railroads by causing an under-investment in each," he said.

He urged the highway officials to return to their states and work for a weight-distance tax in every state as well as at the Federal level to meet the crisis.

"While a motorist derives unquestioned personal benefit from a good highway system, it is clear that a well-maintained highway system is an economic necessity to commercial truckers. What is required is a proper user charge which takes this into account," he said.

"Railroads are not anti-truck; they are anti-subsidy," he said. "I challenge the trucking industry to take a similar stand."

Noting proposed federal legislation which would increase truck sizes and weights above today's levels, Watkins said any such proposal which is not linked to adequate user charges to cover current inequity and further increases is not different from the results of "throwing gasoline on a fire".

"Too often, this issue is dismissed as just competitive bickering between segments of the business community. But, until the adjustments which are required are made, we as taxpayers, as motorists and as leaders in the transportation field are all parked on the same meter—and the meter is running out," Watkins said.

"If we did not flatter ourselves, the flattery of others would do us no harm."

Alcoholism... A Drug Is a Drug

By DEL DYAR
A term which is relatively new to modern-day health practitioners is "Chemical Dependency." The chemically dependent person is one that has become emotionally or physically dependent or addicted to mood altering substances. These substances or chemicals are listed, in general, as opiates, depressants, stimulants and hallucinogens.

A closer look at this group shows that among the opiates are: codeine, heroin, laudanum, meperidine, methadone, methadyl acetate, morphine, opium and paregoric.

Among the depressants are ethyl alcohol (liquor, beer, wine, etc.), minor tranquilizers (valium, librium, miltown, etc.), bromides, phenylcyclidine (PCP) and phenothiazines, to name a few.

Stimulants consist of amphetamine (all forms), cocaine, methylphenidate and phenmetrazine.

Some of the hallucinogens or psychedelics are cannabis (marijuana), mescaline, psilocybin, L.S.D. and myristicin (morning glory seed).

Not all of the mood changing chemicals are listed here. If one cataloged all of these by liquor, beer, wine, pill, vapor or other preparation the list would be very large.

Inasmuch as all of the above chemicals are designed to alter or change how we feel, they are all addictive in some way, to humans and animals.

An alcoholic is a person who is chemically dependent. Their drug or chemical of choice happens to be alcohol. A person addicted to minor tranquilizers is chemically dependent with tranquilizers being their drug of choice or preference. A drug addict is in this sense chemically dependent. Technically, then, alcoholics are drug addicts although drug addicts may not be alcoholics—that will depend on their chemical or drug of choice.

Another phenomenon connected with chemical dependency or drug addiction is the cross dependency. Remove alcohol from the alcoholic and he or she may ingest other drugs and abuse those as they did alcohol.

When a physician prescribes a minor tranquilizer to an alcoholic he is adding another source of mood alteration to the alcoholic's arsenal. Conversely, a person becoming hooked on one drug may begin to abuse alcohol and thus become alcoholic because of the easier accessibility that alcohol has over other drugs.

I once treated a lady who had five different doctors in five different cities writing prescriptions for "nerve pills." When her supply was low she drank alcohol abusively, otherwise she drank very little.

Multi-drug or dual drug dependency is very commonly found in patients begin treated for alcoholism today. The dangers of combining drugs and ingesting them are great. The results can terminate in coma, insanity or death.

The media generally reports the news of a celebrity's death by drug overdose (usually a combination of drugs); however, the fact that one out of every ten deaths in the United States today is alcohol and/or drug related goes unpublished.

Alcoholism is a disease. Where alcohol is only one of many mood altering chemicals a person's addiction to any of these chemicals renders him or her in a state of disease or illness. This illness is called drug addiction or chemical dependency.

The diagnostic process and symptoms are the same for alcoholism and other drug dependencies. Moreover, the treatment for alcoholism is identical with the treatment for other drug addictions.

HRMC Security Guards Honored

Highlands Regional Medical Center security guards, Clyde Dollarhide, Bennie May, Robert Ford, Charlie Bumgardner and Kevin Shannon, display their certificates from the International Association of Hospital Security after completing a 40-hour training course.

Five security guards at Highlands Regional Medical Center have earned certification by the International Association of Hospital Security (IAHS). The certification was granted after they completed 40 hours of special training in accordance with IAHS standards.

The guards were honored for achieving this certification during an awards ceremony at the hospital. They were given certificates of completion, letters of congratulations from the Association and pins signifying IAHS certification.

The International Association of Hospital Security is a world-wide organization of hospital security directors with more than 15,000 members. They are recognized by the American Hospital Association. Its certification program has become a requirement for security guards in many hospitals.

"We are extremely proud that our security guards completed this extensive training course," stated Mason Sexton, director of security. "The certification by the International Association of Hospital Security officially recognizes the training and skills of these men."

Summer Work Program Slated To End Aug. 13

The Summer Youth Employment Program (SYEP) employed 27 of Floyd county's post-high graduates. The SYEP program, a service of the Big Sandy Community Action Program, is funded by Eastern Kentucky Concentrated Employment Program, otherwise known as EKCEP.

SYEP is designed to aid post high graduates between the ages of 17 and 21 who are planning to further their education through college or vocational school. But furthering their education was not the only requirement factor in the selection of the enrollee. Each enrollee also had to fit into the financial guidelines set by the U.S. Department of Labor.

SYEP, which lasts for five weeks, beginning June 28, not only aids the student financially in returning to school, but it will also introduce them to the career in which their academic majors or specific interests lie.

Each enrollee is allowed to work a maximum of 33 hours per week with two additional hours of counseling. The purpose of counseling is to advise the students of financial aid available to them, how to budget money, how to develop a resume, how to find a job, how to hold a job.

This summer there are 14 separate worksites in the county, all of which are with non-profit public service agencies.

The program also developed a community project that utilizes SYEP participants. The Senior Citizens' Center at Archer Park is receiving a new coat of paint in the interior of the building.

The closing date of the program will be August 13.

Detecting a Ripe Watermelon

The sweetest and firmest watermelons come from gardens where the gardener knows how to select a mature melon. Many tests of maturity are available.

Check the area where the melon rests on the ground. When this skin changes from white to light yellow, the melon is ready to eat. Also, the tendrils nearest the fruit change from green to brown when melons are mature.

Many people thump the fruit with their knuckles to test maturity. A metallic sound occurs when melons are immature, while a hollow-sound suggests maturity. Mark Twain claimed that a ripe melon says "punk," while an unripe melon says "pink" or "pank."

One researcher has provided a useful analogy to test watermelon ripeness by the thumping method. If the thumping sound resembles that produced by thumping your forehead, the melon is immature. If the sound resembles that produced by thumping your stomach, the melon is overmature. A ripe melon should sound similar to the noise produced by thumping your chest.

Once you have determined that your melons are ripe, cut them from the vine, leaving part of the stem attached to the melon. This will avoid souring or decaying, which often occurs when watermelons are twisted or broken off of stems.

Handle the harvested melons carefully to avoid internal bruising. The bottoms of the melons are sensitive to sunscald and should be turned down. Do not drop the melons or stand them on end, and do not pile more than three fruits on top of one another.

Don't Blame Cross-Pollination

Are your cucumbers yellow and your muskmelons bitter? Such common occurrences often are blamed on cross-pollination. However, this explanation cannot be true, since different species will not cross with one another.

Cucumbers will not cross with other kinds of vegetables, nor will muskmelons. Winter squash, summer squash and pumpkins may cross with one another, but such cross-pollination affects only the seeds of the resulting plants, not the flesh currently produced.

Sometimes one or two seeds of such crosses may appear in seed packages, and you will grow a bizarre shaped pumpkin or squash. However, the usual explanation for yellow cucumbers is over-maturity, and bitter muskmelons generally reflect poor growing conditions, such as irregular water regimes or cloudy weather. So, don't worry about planting cucumbers next to muskmelons; weather permitting, both vegetables will taste fine.

Child Neurologist Visits County

The waiting room is filled with children, some playful, some tearful and some with vacant stares. They are waiting to see a child neurologist—a rare opportunity for children who live at least 50-100 miles from the nearest metropolitan area. Providing children such as these with access to a child neurologist is part of the neurological outreach services offered by the University of Kentucky Department of Neurology in conjunction with the Floyd County Health Department. Approximately 80 local children were patients at the five clinics during the last year. But simply diagnosing and possibly treating a child's neurologic problems is not enough, says Dr. Robert Baumann, director of the child neurology program at UK. When a child has a neurologic problem, the child, of course, must receive the proper treatment and, depending upon the severity of the problem, the family often needs help adapting to the situation.

Therefore, not only a child neurologist and physicians in training deliver medical care, but a social worker also travels to the seven outpatient facilities to provide emotional support and counseling. Mrs. Mary G. Leonidakis is regional clinic and social work coordinator for the outreach services.

"We see everything from children with neurological afflictions such as migraine headaches to epilepsy, muscular dystrophy, cerebral palsy and brain tumors," Leonidakis says. "These illnesses have a heavy impact not only on the child, but on the family, and it is important we address their needs as well. The social worker helps the family adjust and also acts as a coordinator of special services available to the child that can be provided by other social agencies—special needs at school, for example."

"We do a lot of what I call 'hand holding,'" Leonidakis says. "That means providing support, sometimes by just listening, or sometimes by helping locate the proper services for the families of children with neurologic disorders."

There are still stigmas attached to many neurologic illnesses such as epilepsy, Leonidakis says. Although people may no longer lock children with neurologic problems in the attic, the afflicted children are often treated as incompetents by uninformed teachers and shunned by classmates prejudiced by parental views. A child may have cerebral palsy, but not mental impairments; the same is often true for victims epilepsy and muscular dystrophy. The education of those around the children becomes important in helping the patients adjust to their conditions.

For example, a teacher may complain that a child does nothing but daydream in class. Perhaps that child is suffering from seizure disorders and medication levels need to be adjusted, Leonidakis explains. In many instances, before the handicapped legislation was passed, children with seizure disorders were kept at home and educated by a homebound teacher, she says. "These children were perfectly able to attend public school classes, but they were denied a chance

Group Seeks Better Teacher Education

Reflecting the principle that a direct link exists between quality public education and superior teacher preparation, the National Education Association has approved an action plan calling for a major overhaul of teacher education programs. "As teachers return to the classroom this fall," notes NEA President Willard McGuire, "the public may want to take a moment to reflect on the commitment they have to ensure the future integrity of the teaching profession."

"This new plan confirms that commitment," adds McGuire. "NEA members want tough, rigorous standards for institutions and programs that prepare young people for the demands of teaching."

The NEA plan demands: strong admissions policies; programs based on what practitioners say needs to be known and done for beginning effective practice; ample opportunities for the education student to apply knowledge and skills in the real world of teaching; strong evidence that the graduate of a teacher preparation institution is capable of providing effective instruction; rigorous application of standards to teacher education programs; classroom teacher responsibility for approving the programs that prepare their prospective colleagues.

Good News Report

By THOMAS W. PAUKEN
Director of ACTION

Congressman Frank Wolf of Virginia has a Voluntary Advisory Council of 130 members, organized to keep him informed on all aspects of social and economic activity in his district. Recently, in reporting to him and the Council on ACTION's endeavors in the area of voluntarism, I concluded my remarks with a story about a woman I had met in Fredericksburg, VA., who organized a stroke victims club for wives and husbands who had either suffered a stroke or were the spouses of a husband or wife who had. I explained how these clubs were organized without officers, dues, or business meetings and were based on the concept of mutual help and encouragement, all voluntary, offering therapy of a kind not usually found in the medical books.

Mrs. Gloria Land, along with Mrs. Natalie Elder and Mrs. Eleanor Pettit, had been responsible for the formation of the Fredericksburg club, which had received national recognition for its volunteer work in a program sponsored jointly by the General Federation of Women's Clubs and Sears Roebuck. Gloria told us how, after her husband had suffered a stroke, the doctor believed the patient was going to be a vegetable, and that she should put him away in a nursing home. Gloria was not impressed. "That was my roommate he was talking about," she said, and so she moved in with her roommate and began working with him toward the day they would leave the hospital together. In time, and with therapy, they did so. And now Gloria helps others.

It was then that one of the members of Congressman Wolf's Advisory Council rose and asked if he could come forward and add a thing or two because he had been laid low by a stroke several years ago. His name is George Stroube, and before January 1979 he had enjoyed a busy career in the field of Virginia politics and was very active in voluntarism with the accent on young people. His stroke left him paralyzed on his right side, and he had lost the power of speech. Worse, he had lost the will to live. Physically helpless, he believed his life had become meaningless.

Stroube told the Council that after hospitalization in Virginia, it was necessary for his wife, Ruth, to travel long distances several times a week to visit him while he received therapy at Baltimore's Johns Hopkins Hospital. And how, suddenly, through her faith and love and his desire to go home, he decided not to quit but to fight back, to somehow get on his feet again. In doing so, he planned his own therapy which he admitted was often opposite of what the hospital prescribed. In time he learned to speak again, making a remarkable recovery that surprised his doctors. For a considerable period he needed a cane to support his walking; he needs it no longer.

It was while he was at his local health club continuing therapy that he and Ruth became charter members of a stroke club. What he had in mind, he said, was to find a way to help others who were going through the trauma of paralysis and slow recovery; to encourage them and pull them up from the pit of despair; to share with them the adjustments of a new kind of life and to act as an example of one who made it.

"Not just an example," says Ruth, "but an inspiration." Between them the Stroubes offer their own kind of therapy to the club's nine members, getting together once a week, traveling to various places of interest, keeping spirits up, sharing experiences. And, yes, George also bowls and plays golf. He's about to celebrate his 60th birthday and, as he told Congressman Wolf and the Council, he's looking forward to his sixties...which all goes to prove you can't keep a good man down.

He holds a Bachelor's degree from Berea College and a Master's degree from Xavier University in Cincinnati. He is married to the former Judy Ratliff, of Elkhorn City, and they have a 10-year-old son, Derrick Michael.

Loan Program May Lure Math, Science Teachers

If you want to be a science or math teacher, the Kentucky Department of Education has an offer that's hard to refuse—a loan that you don't have to pay back.

The department hopes to lure more teachers into the math and science field and put an end to a shortage of teachers in those areas with a unique loan program.

In a National Science Teachers Association survey conducted in December 1981, secondary school principals reported that among newly employed science and math teachers, 50.2 percent were unqualified to teach science or math.

To help alleviate the problem, the Kentucky General Assembly, at the request of Superintendent of Public Instruction Raymond Barber, designated $610,000 for the 1982 and 1983 school years for loans to students who want teaching certificates and a major in science or math.

The unusual part of the program comes with the method of repaying the loan. A year of the loan will be forgiven for each year of science or math taught in a Kentucky school.

According to Frank Howard with the Department of Education, approximately 80 students in 1982 and 85 more in 1983 with a science or math major will receive loans for as much as $2,500. Applications must be filed with the student's college of education by Aug. 1, and sophomore, junior and senior undergraduates are eligible.

"To our knowledge, no other state has a program like this," Barber said. "We are the first state to take any affirmative action to alleviate the problem."

Each of the colleges and universities with teacher-training programs was given an allocation based on the number of teachers certified in the past from that school.

"If a student receives a loan and decides not to teach, they must pay the loan back at the current interest rate on treasury notes plus 3 percent," Howard explained. "Other financial aid programs are at a much lower interest rate so before they take money from this program they should be sure of their intent."

If a loan is not repaid, the individual's teaching certificate will be revoked unless extenuating circumstances can be proven.

Each eligible institution will establish a screening committee to verify that a student is eligible for the loan. They will be looking at a student's grade point average, which must be at least 2.5, college entrance scores and financial need of the applicant among other things.

The screening committee will then forward the applications and names in rank order of eligibility to the Department of Education.

Howard said people with a degree or certificate in another area outside of science and math may also apply for the loan program during the academic year if they want to return to school.

Certified teachers in other fields may attend summer school to become certified to teach science or math and qualify for up to one-third of the loan amount. Howard stressed that only certified teachers can apply for a summer program.

Priorities for awarding the incentive loans will be given to graduates of Kentucky high schools and Kentucky residents, he said. Priority for next year's loans will be given to those students who participated in this year's program.

NOTICE

To all water consumers of the Beaver Elkhorn Water District.

We have found some customers permitting their "neighbor" to connect onto their line, thereby avoiding the hook-up charge and the metered water charge. This is clearly a violation, both on the part of the regular metered customer and the "neighbor" who is permitted to make this connection.

Customers permitting this will, when discovered, be "back charged" for minimum billing as though he had two meters, or in the event he declines to pay the back charges, he will be subject to be disconnected for violation of rules and regulations of the Beaver Elkhorn Water District and The Energy Utility Commission of Kentucky.

Growing Child

FIGHTING
 Young children rarely fight in the first few years of life.
 But some children, as they get older, will react to frustration by fighting, hitting other children or adults, provoking fights by teasing and calling names or by using bad language. This is the way some children show or express their feelings, according to Growing Child, the monthly child development newsletter.

Whether children continue to use fighting as a way of settling problems or taking out their disappointments depends very much on how the parents handle it. Obviously, hitting children is not a good way to set an example to stop them from hitting others. Instead it is most important for you to set firm limits and indicate your disapproval of that sort of behavior without getting violent about it yourself.

Children do imitate each other's behavior and some children learn bad habits from other children. But they imitate their parents even more.

If they hear shouting and see fighting at home they will tend to do the same thing in their play and other activities. The child who is always fighting and bullying others is in trouble. Such children are usually feared and disliked by other children and adults. They find themselves more and more left out by other children which makes them angrier and even more ready to fight.

Children have to learn other ways of dealing with difficult situations. Parents have to help them by setting a useful example.

The child who is always a victim—always being bullied or picked on by other children—is probably also repeating behavior learned at home. These are often children whose parents are never satisfied with them and are always berating them. In the same way the child who is always being beaten at home may learn no other way of relating to people but to be beaten by them in one way or another.

Both kinds of children have a very poor opinion of themselves. They can seldom handle problems in calm, stong way because they have no confidence in themselves. Instead they either become victims or they strike out in rage from time to time at their frustrations in always being the victim.

In either case they seldom get what they want. Children like this find it difficult as they grow up to do well in school, at work, in marriage or in any other important life experiences.

Parents must watch their own behavior. For those who have always been shouters, name callers and hitters this may be difficult to do. Some parents don't even recognize that they are that kind of person until they see their children imitating them.

No matter how difficult it seems, the effort to change this pattern is worthwhile. It can help spare children a lifetime of frustration and difficulty. You can tell when you are in trouble when your child is doing something that you cannot stand and cannot stop. That is the time to get some professional help. (Excerpted from "Your Child From One to Six," HEW publication, Richard H. Granger, MD).

The Growing Child newsletter follows a child's development month-by-month. For more information on the social and physical development of children from birth to six years old, write to Growing Child, PO Box 620N, Lafayette, IN 47902. Include child's birthdate when writing. A year's subscription to the newsletter costs $11.95.

Vows Solemnized

Miss Tammy Lynn Sparks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas L. Sparks, of Grethel, and Mr. Jimmy Dean McCoy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Victor McCoy, of Pikeville, were united in marriage, July 16 at 7 p.m. at the Boldman Free Will Baptist Church.

Rev. Arnold Johnson performed the double-ring candlelight ceremony.

The couple exchanged vows before an altar decorated with red and white silk roses and white candelabra holding greenery and white candles. Nuptial music was presented by Miss Linda Wells, pianist and soloist.

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, the bride chose a traditional floor-length gown of white chiffon with a high Victorian neckline. Chantilly lace accented with sequins and seed pearls formed the front of the neckline and beruffled lace hugged the shoulders. Her gown had long fitted sleeves of chantilly lace and a bodice adorned with tiny pearls and sequins. The full chiffon skirt with a chapel-length train was encircled with six layers of chantilly lace. The Juliet veil was trimmed with matching lace and adorned with tiny seed pearls.

The bride carried a large cascade of red and white silk roses accented with baby's breath draped over the edge with matching lace and ribbon.

Mrs. Mary Hall was matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Miss Teresa Justice, Miss Patricia Sparks, Miss Leatha Sparks and Miss Elikia Sparks. They were all attired in floor-length gowns of red silk taffeta. They carried white silk roses with red and white ribbon.

Miss Andrea Clark served as flower girl.

Miss Angela Clark and Miss Elizabeth Carroll served as junior and senior train carriers and distributed rice bags.

Mr. Gregory Sparks served as ring bearer.

Mr. Jimmy Williamson served as best man. The groomsmen were Mr. Tim Hamilton, Mr. Thomas L. Sparks Jr., Mr. David Hamilton and Mr. George Hall.

Miss Eugenia Carroll and Mr. Ricky Williams presided at the guest register. Mrs. Sue Clark served as the director of the wedding.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the church fellowship hall where a beautifully decorated wedding cake in red and white roses, made by Wanda Sue Clark, was served along with other foods. Assisting at reception were Mesdames Naomia Tackett, Connie Hall, Brenda Gross, Miranda Hall, Melvina Hall and Charollette Hall.

After their honeymoon, Mr. and Mrs. McCoy will reside at Harold.

Unemployment Ins. Changes Subject Of Workshop Here

Changes in state law affecting unemployment insurance will be the focus of a workshop Aug. 26 in Prestonsburg conducted by the Cabinet for Human Resources, according to Secretary Grady Stumbo.

"When the 1982 General Assembly convened, the Unemployment Insurance Trust Fund was fast approaching a deficit of about 100 million," Stumbo said. "Two laws that will affect Kentucky employees were passed to help offset this deficit, and employers have expressed concern to me about the effect of the legislation on their businesses," he said. "These workshops are designed to help them understand the changes and their impact."

At the 12 workshops scheduled throughout the state, staff from Human Resources' division for unemployment insurance will explain the impact of the new laws, unemployment compensation issues, employer benefit changes, extended benefits and the hearings process.

There is no cost to attend the workshops and reservations are not necessary. Employers and business representatives are invited to attend.

The workshop will be held in room 102 of the Prestonsburg Community College auditorium. The session begins at 9 a.m. and will continue through noon. From 1 to 4 p.m., workshop leaders will answer specific questions for particular individuals or businesses.

A total of 12 workshops are scheduled throughout the state.

Red, White, Blue Day Benefit Nets $1,168

The recent chicken-and-dumpling dinner held as a Red, White and Blue Day benefit netted $1,168, with at least one more contribution yet to report, said Mrs. Marcella Bailey, founder of the annual event.

Help came from various areas of the county. A DAV member, Paul Connors, of Auxier, brought a 25-pound bag of flour. A cake in patriotic colors was baked by Mrs. Nyoka Slone, of Martin, and Mrs. W. T. Foley, of Prestonsburg, came to help make dumplings all day long.

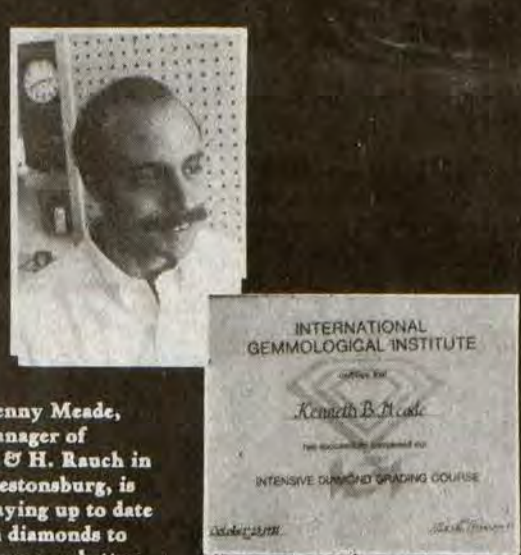

Prizes were donated by Jan's Florist of Martin, and winners of the prizes were Otis Hicks, of Minnie, Verna Messinger, and Rickey D. Greene, both of Martin.

Other events are in the planning stage, Mrs. Bailey said. A Coal Miners' Supper, suggested by Estill Newsome, Martin World War II veteran, is expected to be announced soon, and a Red, White and Blue ball is planned.

Extension Service News

POOR QUALITY HAY MAY NEED SUPPLEMENT

This year more than ever farmers will need to utilize fall production from fescue, orchardgrass and bluegrass. Poor curing conditions during late May and early June resulted in low quality hay because it got wet before baling. Harvesting after June 1 produced hay with the digestibility and protein content too low to satisfy the nutrient requirement of most classes of livestock. To make up for these losses extra forage will have to be grown this fall or the low quality hay supplemented with grain.

Fescue, orchardgrass and bluegrass will produce high quality forage during the fall growing season. Yields of 1 1/2-2 1/2 tons of hay equivalent per acre are common. Tests conducted by Dr. Harold B. Rice, Extension Specialist in Feed Production at the Robinson Substation, yielded 2600 pounds of hay equivalent per acre when fescue was topdressed with 100 pounds of nitrogen per acre in mid-August. Low rainfall during October kept the fescue from yielding as much as it would have produced in more normal years.

For Floyd county farmers to produce an extra feed on grass pastures, the following program is suggested: (1) determine how much forage you will need during November and December; (2) with normal rainfall fescue topdresses with 80 pounds of nitrogen per acre in late August should produce enough forage by November 1 to maintain two dry cows per acre during November and December; (3) remove the present growth by grazing or mowing; (4) topdress 80 pounds of nitrogen per acre, if phosphate and potash are low, apply 40 to 60 pounds of each with the nitrogen; (5) defer grazing until the first of November and; (6) utilize all that is produced.

If nitrogen costs 30 cents a pound then 80 pounds per acre would cost $24. In most years this will produce enough feed to maintain two dry cows during November and December or $6 per month per cow. This is cheap feed anytime and when hay quality is as low as it is this year farmers should consider fall forage production.

Some Fish, Wildlife, Unwelcome

You've probably heard the term "persona non grata," meaning an unacceptable or unsuitable person. But did you know that there are also fish and wildlife species which are "non grata" and are barred by law from being imported or possessed in Kentucky?

Actually, just about all non-native species are as welcome as unexpected dinner guests and special permits are required to bring most into the state. But some have been singled out as particularly unwelcome.

Biologists are justifiably wary about introducing, either deliberately or inadvertently, any non-native species into an ecosystem, since the results can sometimes be disastrous. Rabbits almost ruined Australia, where there were no natural predators to keep them in check.

In this country, we've seen English sparrows, starlings, rats and carp (just to name a few) grow from small numbers to pest proportions. It is the fear of similar occurrences which make laws governing the importation or possession of non-native species necessary.

While it's permissible to keep most non-native fish species in an aquarium, it is illegal to release any non-native live fish into waters of Kentucky. A few species may not be kept even in captivity.

At the head of this proscribed fish list is the piranha. Anyone who's ever seen a jungle movie, where schools of this small but vicious fish strip the flesh from the unwary in a matter of minutes, will understand why this is one character we don't want in our lakes or streams.

Another undesirable character on the "non grata" list is the sea lamprey, an eel-like parasite which attaches itself to a fish and eats its tissue. Lampreys got into the Great Lakes a few years back and practically devastated the lake trout fishery there.

It is also illegal to import or possess walking catfish, a species which has caused some trouble in South Florida. This character can actually walk from one body of water to another and is generally considered a pretty nasty customer.

Two little known species have made the list: The Mexican banded tetra and the snakeheads of Asia and Africa. Both are efficient predators which could possibly compete with more desirable fish (like crappie or bluegill) for food.

The list of prohibited wildlife includes wild hogs, jack rabbits, javelina, nutria, San Juan rabbits and monk parakeets. This last species has become established in New York and a few other states and is potentially harmful to fruit crops. A permit and a veterinarian's certificate are required to ship any other wildlife species into or through Kentucky.

A sonnet is a poem of 14 lines with a fixed pattern of meter and rhyme. Its name is an Italian word meaning a little song.

Letcher Co. Forest Dedicated As U.S. Natural Landmark

A ceremony to dedicate Lilley Cornett Woods in Letcher county as a Registered National Natural Landmark was held Monday at 11:30 a.m. Lilley Cornett Woods is one of the natural areas protected and managed by Eastern Kentucky University's Division of Natural Areas under the direction of Dr. William H. Martin.

Taking part in the ceremony was Charles Schuler, U.S. Department of the Interior, National Park Service, Atlanta; Wesley Leishman, National Park Service, Cumberland Gap Historical Park; and Dr. J.C. Powell, EKU president. A plaque was placed in Lilley Cornett Woods to commemorate the event.

The Lilley Cornett Woods is a preserved remnant of the forests that once covered all of the slopes of the Cumberland Plateau and mountains of Eastern Kentucky. The area is characterized by a topography which includes coves, benches, ridge crests, and steep slopes associated with over 900 feet of relief from flood plain to the highest peak, according to Martin.

He said several plant communities, numerous wildflowers and shrubs, and over 700 breeding pairs of birds can be found in Lilley Cornett Woods.

The area is named for the late Lilley Cornett who purchased the first of five tracts that today comprise the woods shortly after World War I. Cornett loved the forest and refused to allow one living tree to be cut. When he passed away, the woods were left to his children, who, like their father, refused to let the timber be cut. Instead, they tried to find some agency to purchase the area and preserve it for future generations.

In July 1969, the state acquired title to the area and officially named it Lilley Cornett Woods in honor of the man whose foresight saved it as one of the last stands of virgin timber in Kentucky.

EKU was given responsibility for protecting and managing the area. The university uses the Woods for advanced ecological research and instruction in related college-level courses.

The funds raised in this years events will go to support the hospital's programs of research, patient care, and education.

CONSUMER ALERT

"CHAIN LETTERS AND PYRAMID SCHEMES"

Attorney General Steven L. Beshear warns all Kentuckians to be aware of the problems created by the distribution and use of chain letters and pyramid schemes. Beshear said, "The pyramid schemes and chain letter circulating today have one thing in common—they all depend on an infinite number of people being willing to participate in them."

Although chain letters have been heavily regulated and may violate postal laws, they surface with great regularity. Pyramid schemes work on the same principle as chain letters, but they usually do not involve the postal system for initial contacts. However sending money through the mail to pay "the top person on the list" may still violate postal statutes.

"In some cases, the postal authorities may not be involved but the state's gambling statutes may be violated," added Beshear. "Consumers are urged to be aware of this possibility because participation in the scheme would make them personally liable."

Many people believe that chain letters or pyramid schemes are "worth the risk of a dollar or two". In fact, many of these schemes involve several hundreds of dollars. Often, the chain or pyramid will begin to break down before you mail your letters or distribute your list. This means that there will not be riches to be received in return. In most cases, the person who receives an offer to participate has been told that this chain letter "has been approved by the post office" or that "this proven money making system is perfectly legal." These statements may not be true.

"Before you become involved in any scheme of this nature, check it out. Call your local post office for the name and telephone number of the postal inspector for your area," said Beshear. "Your local law enforcement officials should be consulted if nothing is sent through the mails. Report any fraudulent activities or questionable schemes to my Consumer Protection Division."

If you have a consumer complaint, contact the Office of the Attorney General, Consumer Protection Division, 209 St. Clair Street, Frankfort, Kentucky 40601, or call 1-800-432-9257 to request a complaint form.

Strategy Is Designed To Keep Ninth Graders in High School

The best defense against failure is to identify a problem when it first begins and then do something about it in the early stages.

The Kentucky Department of Education has adopted this philosophy for a new program that identifies potential dropouts in the ninth grade and then develops strategies to keep those students in school.

In the last four years, some 20,000 Kentucky students left school prior to receiving a high school diploma. Nationally, there are approximately 1 million youths, age 14-24, leaving school without a diploma. This trend, both on the national level and in Kentucky, is increasing.

Some 21 school districts are now taking part in this state program that begins with ninth graders in each district completing questionnaires which are returned to the Department of Education for computer analysis.

Each district then receives a computer printout with the percent of students in that district, along with a list of individuals, who are considered high risk from the date collected.

In the last phase of the project, each district takes a look at why its students are dropping out of school and then develops a plan for dropout prevention. The Division of Student Services in the Department of Education will provide assistance to the local districts in developing strategies.

"Because of the multitude of reasons why students drop out of school, no one program is appropriate for every school, student or district," said Clyde Caudill, head of the department's Office of Research and Planning. "A comprehensive dropout prevention strategy that provides certain basic elements yet allows each school to adapt its own needs would be best."

The school districts presently participating in the program, ranked poor achievement records as the number one cause for dropout. The districts stated that these students have a low-level of basic skills and have failed in several subjects.

Poor home environment ranked next with such problems as no encouragement from parents, no structured discipline and apathetic attitudes contributing to the dropout rate.

Some students drop out of school to marry, work or go into the military service, according to collected data. A great number of dropouts see no relationship between education, job training and employment. Still others suffer from negative self-images, student stress and an inability to interact positively with peers or teachers.

Gene Wright, director of the Psychometric Services Unit with the department, stressed the importance of both in-school and out-of-school cooperation to encourage students.

"A student may need help in improving basic skills, learning job skills or just experiencing success," Wright said. "Whatever the need, however, a student cannot be forced to fit into a program. The program must be designed to fit around the needs of the student. Knowing why the student is dropping out is essential to developing appropriate strategies."

Some of the types of help needed to reduce dropout rates, as perceived by the school districts, included better public relations by making use of community advisory committees comprised of parents and civic leaders.

Establishing programs which help students develop positive self-concepts also ranked high is priority as did approved work study programs.

Political Humorist Aired Live On KET

One of the city's most popular attractions in Washington's Shoreham Americana Hotel has been Mark Russell's nightly act for he continues to prove that even politics can be a laughing matter.

Mark Russell's live half-hour comedy special from the stage of the State University at Buffalo's Katharine Cornell Theater airs Wednesday, August 25 at 9 p.m. on KET.

On Russell's specials, he performs before a live audience of approximately 400 people discussing material taken directly from the events of the day. There is no discrimination intended as he presents his political humor. As far as his own political preference is concerned, Russell freely admits, "I'm a confused Independent...but I can be bought."

Pharmacy Footnotes

By HAROLD COOLEY

You may hear that "the only thing you should ever put in your ear is your own elbow". While this somewhat overstates the case, you should be quite careful when dealing with this sensitive part of the body. The careless removal of ear wax can block the opening to the inner ear. To safely remove earwax, use a liquid eardrop. Allow the drops to settle in the ear where they will soften and loosen the buildup. Next, exercising great care, a cotton-covered swab can be used to remove the wax. The inner ear is approached through the ear openings and can easily be permanently damaged.

At COOLEY APOTHECARY, INC. we want to remind you to be very careful when cleaning your ears. Trying to remove a wax build-up improperly can cause harm to your inner ear. We care about you and your health, and so we offer the very best in personal and professional service. As your neighborhood pharmacist, your best interest is our best interest. Come see us at No. 2 Town Center Bldg. Open Mon.-Fri. 9-5:30 and Sat. 9-4. 886-8106.

HANDY HINT:

Use ear plugs to effectively block out noise pollution.
