Rogers bids for seat in new district

Kentucky Congressman Harold Rogers announced Tuesday that he is seeking re-election to a seventh term in the United States House of Representatives.

Speaking at Hazard and Pikeville, which are among the communities that have been added to the Fifth Congressional District, the veteran Republican lawmaker promised to continue his efforts to create jobs, promote family values and help people in need.

Rogers, who also made a campaign stop at Somerset, said he would work just as hard for the Eastern Kentucky counties new to the Fifth District as he has for the Southern Kentucky counties he has served for the past eleven years.

"In asking for your support in my campaign for Congress, I lay before you my record ... and invite you to examine it," Rogers said. "I hope, then, you will join me in this fight for a better life for our people."

Part I: THE MENTALITY OF EXPLOITATION

By Robert Perry Assistant Professor of English

In his essay "The Unsettling of America," Wendell Berry argues that "the mentality of exploitation" is deeply rooted in the American past. We can understand a great deal of our history, he says, if we think of ourselves as being divided between exploitation and nurture, between the impulse to exploit the land's resources and move on, and the impulse to nurture those resources and establish a home. "The first and greatest American, revolution" says Berry, "was the coming of people who did not look upon the land as a homeland.

If Berry's thesis is valid, we should be able to find evidence of such a mentality in the narratives and journals of America's first European colonists. In the following series of articles, I will conduct such an inquiry, focusing primarily on the writings of John Smith, founder of the Jamestown Colony, and William Bradford, the first governor and chief historian of the Plymouth Plantation. Unlike Berry, however, I will not limit my discussion to questions of land exploitation, but will broaden it to include questions of animal and human exploitation as well.

Perhaps it would be helpful if I defined my terms. By "mentality" I mean a cast of mind, a set of attitudes, or a system of beliefs. As a term denoting a belief system, it is similar to "religion" and "philosophy," but unlike those terms it signifies beliefs that have not been enshrined in creed and dogma. The cluster of beliefs I call"Christian dualism," for example, is not central to Christianity, and one can be a Christian without subscribing to them. By "exploitation" I mean the unethical use of something for selfish purposes. The kidnaping and enslavement of Africans during America's ante-bellum period, the wholesale slaughter of the American buffalo during the 1860s, and the clearcutting of Appalachia's oldgrowth forests during the 1890s are three good examples of exploitation in this sense of the word.

I will begin with John Smith, Jamestown's chief historian. At the beginning of his General History of Virginia, published in 1624, seventeen years after he helped establish the colony, Smith made this chilling observation:

"It might well be thought a country so fair (as Virginia is) and a people so tractable would long ere this have been quietly possessed."

Smith was addressing an audience of upperclass Englishmen. The first thing we should note is that he used the language of sexual conquest (fair, tractable, possessed) to describe military conquest. What he is saying about Virginia is what an aristocrat might say about a serving maid. She's young, she's desirable, and she's unprotected. Why hasn't someone long before this made her his concu-

Note also that he placed "a country so fair" and "a people so tractable" in the same category. Both are, to him, natural resources to be exploited, to be "quietly possessed." Why quietly? Because to do so loudly-with fanfare and publicitywould run the risk of involving England in a war with another European power. Besides, as any pirate knows, rape and plunder go better when the world isn't watching.

John Smith was a soldier of fortune, a man well versed in the military arts. In the above statement, he makes it clear that from the very beginning his plan was to conquer Virginia and enslave its Indians, just as Cortez had done in Mexico. Why did Smith have no qualms about possessing something that didn't belong to him? To answer this question, we must examine not only his motives-greed, lust, and ambition-ditioned them. Taken together, these might be called the Theory of White European Supremacy.

First of all, being an Englishman and a loyal subject of the Crown, Smith believed that King James wielded power conferred upon him by God, and that this power gave the King the right to possess any lands he saw fit. This might be called the Divine Right of Kings assumption. Before sailing to Virginia, Smith and other organizers of the expedition had received from the King a patent giving them the right to claim the land in his name. Speaking of the difficulty the organizers had in obtaining this patent, Smith says:

"But nothing could be effected till by their [the organizers'] great charge and industry it [the project] came to be apprehended by certain of the nobility, gentry, and merchants, so that his Majesty by his letters patent gave commission for establishing councils to direct here [England], and to govern and to execute there [Vir-

Secondly, being a God-fearing Christian, Smith believed that the Christian religion-or at least its Protestant variety—was vastly superior to that of the Indians, that the lands beyond the pale of Christendom (and some inside it) were ruled by the Devil, and that it was the duty of Christians to conquer and subdue such lands. In Genesis 1, God commands Adam to "Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth and subdue it." This attitude might be called the God's Chosen People assumption. Like many modern Christians, Smith believed that the world was locked in a great struggle between the Godly and the Godless. Even among his fellow colonists he but the cultural attitudes which con- saw evidence of this conflict. During the voyage to America, he tells us, "some few, little better than atheists," began spreading lies about "Master Hunt, our preacher." Turning the other cheek, Hunt refused to answer the charges. Eventually, however, the "disastrous designs" of the atheists were foiled by Hunt's "goodly exhortations" and "true devoted examples" of Christian char-

> Smith's narrative is replete with language associating the Indians with devils. Soon after Powhatan's men took him prisoner, he witnessed a dance during which the Indians yelled "hellish notes and screeches." During his detertion in Powhatan's longhouse, Smith was visited by "a great grim fellow" with "a hellish voice," a shaman who performed a ritual designed to determine whether the Englishman intended them "well or no." He was accompanied by "three more such like devils." While Smith sat on a mat in the middle of the floor, "Round about him those fiends danced a pretty while."

> Thirdly, as a soldier, surveyor, and map-maker, Smith assumed that European technology was vastly, even laughably superior to anything the Indians had to offer. Even before he embarked on the expedition, he knew, from published reports, that America's natives hadn't advanced beyond the Stone Age, and that their bows and arrows were no match for his cannons and muskets. Obviously, this assumption was central to the whole scheme. What is less obvious is that it gave Smith a stepping stone to an assumption more sinister. If our weapons are superior to theirs, he reasoned, then God must have intended for us to conquer them. This, of course, is the assumption that Might Makes Right.

revealed by what Smith says but by what he does. Again and again, during his first encounters with the Indians, he frightens and intimidates them with well-timed demonstrations of European technological prowess. Consider, for example, the circumstances surrounding his capture. In the late fall of 1607, during his second exploration of the upper reaches of the James River, he was unexpectedly ambushed by "300 bowmen," who chased him when he attempted to return to his barge. During the chase he "slipped up to the middle in an oozy creek." "Near dead with cold," he then "threw away his arms." At that point the Powhatans "drew him forth and led him to the fire."

Despite his dire predicament, Smith was not without stratagem. Asking for an audience with their chief, he waited until all eyes were on him. Then he showed the warriors his pocket compass. "Much they marveled at the playing of the fly and needle, which they could see so plainly and yet not touch it because of the glass that covered them." Then, holding the instrument up for all to see, he delivered an impromptu lecture on "the roundness of the earth and skies, the sphere of the sun, moon, and stars, and how the sun did chase the night round the world continually." During this performance the Powhatans "stood as amazed with" admiration."

Nevertheless, the warriors continued to prepare for his execution by tying him to a tree and drawing their bows. At that point Chief Opechancanough raised the compass high in the air. The white man's magic had triumphed. Responding to the signal, the warriors laid down their weapons and escorted Smith to their chief's lodge, where he was "kindly feasted and well used."

AMERICAN CONFRONTS JAPAN: COOPERATION OR CON-FLICT?

The future relationship between America and Japan is our most important foreign policy objective in the post-cold war world. Americans as a whole believe that we are more likely to go to war with Japan than with any other nation. In an effort to stimulate the U.S. economy and promote better Japanese cooperation, President Bush recently visited Japan. Despite an untimely illness, the President did achieve several significant victories in opening up Japanese markets to U.S. goods. The current mood in Congress regarding economic relations with Asia is characterized by: 1) belief that unfair foreign business practices are responsible for most of our domestic economic problems, 2) fear that Japan is replacing America as the world's economic leader, and 3) uncertainty about how to change the situation. If not managed properly, the situation could lead to a deterioration of trade relations between the U.S. and Asia. Given the dependence of our economy on exports, particularly to Asia, such a breakdown of relations would be disastrous. To a large degree, congressional attitudes on this issue are a reflection of the current mood of the country.

On the trade front, America's deficit has shrunk, but is still a problem. In the last five years, America's trade balance with the European community has moved from a deficit to a surplus. Our deficit with Japan, on the other hand, has improved only slightly and remains an eye-popping $41 billion. This uneven recovery reinforces what many if not most Americans believe: our international trade problem is a Japan problem.

Concern with foreign investment in this country has prompted calls for regulation and control of foreign purchases of U.S. assets. Japan is and will remain the target of most of these initiatives. The issue of economic nationalism is expected to dominate the upcoming Congressional session, as well as the 1992 presidential campaign. Several bills that would require the President to retaliate against unfair trade practices by any nation will be considered in Congress next year.

During the President's trip, the United States and Japan agreed to increase Japanese imports of American-made autos, auto parts, computers, paper, glass and other products all of which will lead to increased sales for American companies, and eventually an estimated 200,000 new jobs for Americans. The trade agreements may not have an immediate effect on the U.S. jobless rate or the trade imbalance, but these negotiations represent an important first step.

A breakdown in U.S.-Japan relations would hurt Americans and Japanese alike. President Bush's recent meeting with Japan's Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa presented a unique opportunity for Japan and the United States to clearly and decia sively lay out the parameters of a new relationship between the two nations for the next decade. The agreements reached are the beginning of a process which should lead to major improvements in what has historically been a contentious U.S.-Japan rela-

Detective Sergeant Jeff Stumbo, Sergeant Gerald Clark, and patrolman Anthony Castle arrested Ouida Centers, 27, and James Hopkins, 21 both of Shelbiana in the parking lot at Glynn View Plaza following allegations that Centers had been passing checks belonging to Patricia Bartley. Hypothermia, the cold killer

It may be the middle of winter but many people still spend time near the water. Whether they are hunting, fishing, boating or even working, these people could fall prey to a cold killer: HYPOTHERMIA.

Hypothermia is a lowering of the body's internal temperature, and may result from exposure to cold water or air. Cold water chills 25 times faster than cold air. After falling into cold water, it will quickly numb your hands and feet, and your cold fingers will be unable to buckle or hold onto a life jacket, hold rescue line, or your own boat. In minutes, the temperature of the heart, brain and other organs begins to drop. Unconsciousness can occur when your core temperature drops below 90 degrees.

If you fall into cold water, try to get out right away. Right the boat and climb in it, or climb on top of an overturned boat:

If you cannot get out of the water, remain as still as possible, and huddle to preserve body heat. Moving to keep afloat drains heat from the body, so wear a hat and life jacket to keep warm. Keep your clothes and shoes on and button up collars and cuffs. Despite the misconception, wet clothes won't pull you down, but they will keep you warmer.

Stay with the boat, so you will be easier to spot when rescuers come. Even if the shore is close, you cannot swim far in cold water.

Any person pulled from cold water should be treated for hypothermia. Symptoms include intense shivering, loss of coordination, mental confusion, cold and blue skin, weak pulse, irregular heartbeat, and enlarged pupils. Once shivering stops, core body temperature begins to drop below critical levels.

Hypothermia victims require professional medical attention. Keep them warm by removing wet clothes and bundling them in warm blankets, or huddle them between two other people to share body heat. Warm them slowly. Never give alcohol to a hypothermia victim. For more information call Dewey Lake, 886-6709

Loafer's Glory: living dangerously on mule back

palachia, we young people tried very hard to keep up with the Joneses. The day came while visiting William and Mary Ann Hick's daughters, when we needed to go to the grocery store at Hippo for several supplies. We looked for a solution to keep from carrying the heavy load the long distance from the foot of the Middle Creek hill at Hippo back to the mouth of Brush Creek. Ole Barney, the mule, was our only solution. Others in our age bracket rode mules and Jackie Tackett, a girl, owned a horse. So why should we let inexperience keep us from making our workload lighter?

Katherine went over her knowledge of how to rig Barney up. I did not have the slightest knowledge of the workings of harnesses. When we got him all saddled up, neither of us wanted to walk and lead him, so we decided that both would sit in the Even in our remote area of Ap- huge saddle. Kate's legs were long and fit into the stirrups and my feet reached the leather straps holding the stirrups on. Off we went sitting quite comfortably in that manner.

> The trip was going fine but slowly. To speed up we decided to trot Barney. That was a bad mistake - my weight pushed me forward in the saddle. This caused Kate to be carried forward until she was in a standing position, in danger of going over the mule's head. Her feet were still in the stirrups, but she was forced to stand while Barney trotted on. The emergency had prevented us from controlling him. We were more concerned in staying on. Barney was still trotting with us struggling to regain our original positions.

Try as I may, I could not reverse the movement to gain a seat at the back of the saddle, on the mules broad hips. That way she could again be seated. Kate held tightly onto the reins and pulled back. Apparently Barney was not accustomed to this type of manipulation — he refused to stop or even slow down. Maybe he thought the faster he went the sooner he would be rid of the burden on his

Finally Kate decided to rein him into the fence along side the dirt road. We had stopped him at last! Them the worst happened - she dropped the reins, which were separate. One on the right and one on the left. That caused the mule to go into the fence. It was hard to tell if he was going to buck us off or jump the fence with us. It appeared we would have to jump off or be deposited onto the wet dirt

Before we had time to make up ing in computers along with other our minds whether to try to stay on his back or jump, a friend saw our plight and gave us a hand. Paul Cooley came to our rescue! He reached the rein which had been trailing on the ground back to Kate. She tied the two ends together, as a future safety feature, and held the mule until we could get ourselves settled again on Barney's back. This time I sat behind the saddle and Kate lowered herself into the saddle alone. We had both wanted to ride and both wanted to sit in the saddle. Due to her mule handling experience she qualified more than I did to be in the driver's seat. By now I was quite happy to have her do so. Without introducing any more new ideas we made the trip safely to the store and back home. Travel by mule is just normally slow we con-

I recall another experience when leaned in either direction, the saddle we were again living dangerously on mule back. One evening late, Kate and I decided to ride down to the mouth of the creek to visit the Jude Allen family. We could head Chillie Allen's beagles running rabbits up on the hillside. He usually followed in the roadway on foot to listen to the chase around the hill toward Prater

It was later than we thought. It had taken a lot of time to locate Barney and saddle him. By the time we reached Chillie on the roadway, it was almost dark. Kate kept complaining that the saddle did not feel right, and asked Chillie to check it. The girth which held the saddle had worked loose and was hanging down under the mule's belly. If she had and her with it would have slid off into the roadway, leaving me helpless alone on Barney's back sitting on a pillow. (We learned to make my ride a little easier by sitting on a pillow behind the saddle.) This plan had been our best arrangement for comfort on a mule's back.

Chillie told us that if we did not know how to better saddle the mule, we had better get off and walk home - which we did! Barney must have been a rather nice tempered mule, as he responded quite obediently to our commands most of the time. We found that the girth was in bad need of repair, so that was the last time we attempted to ride him.

Maybe that was because we had another trick up our sleeves. Chillie's son, Floyd, had two beautiful ponies, Seabiscuit and Ginger. The next time we wanted to ride, we asked if we could ride them. Floyd patiently went to the pasture and caught them for us. He did not want to ride but he placed them at our disposal.

My riding experience was nil expect with Kate on ole Barney. Feeling adequate to ride this small pony, I attempted to seat myself for a solo on Ginger. My effort was too forceful. As a result I went across the pony's back and piled up on the opposite side in a heap on the ground. After much effort and little success I gave up trying. If I had to travel by horseback I would never get any-

Chillie was always ready to joke with us. He told Floyd to help me into the saddle and lead the pony. He mentioned the name of a man and woman who were often seen going up and down Highway 80 in the early 40s. The man walked and led the horse while the woman rode. We tried that method and it worked fine. Of course that would put an awful lot of mileage on the man.

Sometimes I think that we don't appreciate progress enough today

Our small cars solved the transportation problem quite well. Hatchbacks are handy for taking most anything along with you or for picking up groceries. Once I moved my apartment furnishings in mine, even the bed. My last car is not so efficient as I am encouraging myself to stop such activities. Maybe I have at last reached the ultimate situation for me. Hope how soon they invent a house cleaning machine that does all phases of housework. Come to think of it, I use to be one myself! Why not now? No replacement for worn parts.

"Keep swimming'

Relating the story of the two frogs who fell in a bowl of cream, Dr. Deborah L. Floyd, president of PCC, addressed the 1992 Mid-Term graduates of Mayo State Vocational-Technical School. In her story one frog just gave up in despair and died. The other frog kept on swimming and trying to get out. Finally, the cream turned to butter and the frog hopped out. The message to the graduates was to keep on trying and never give up their dreams. Other speakers included Bronelle Skaggs, regional executive director of Vocational Education; Gary Coleman, director of Mayo; and Lillian Wheeler, assistant director.

Blackcats Snap Trojans' Winning Streak, 72-62

Wheelwright Friday night as the Prestonsburg Blackcats and Wheel-

It was another packed house at needed in this run and gun game. streak for Wheelwright and handed Trojans. them their first conference loss of the season. Wheelwright fell to 3-1 in the conference and Prestonsburg went to

It was an emotional game for the Trojans who have been on an emotional high for the past three weeks.

"We have played three very emotional games lately," said Wheelwright coach Jackie Pack, "I feel that it has taken a toll on our players emotionally."

It was the inside game of Wheelwright versus the outside game of Prestonsburg. The outside game won out as the Blackcats drilled eight threepointers in posting the win. The person lost in the Wheelwright offense was Mike Newsome, who finished with just five points. It was the quickness of Prestonsburg that beat the Trojans down the floor.

"I thought we did play quicker than Wheelwright," explained Parido. "But I was also surprised by the quickness of Wheelwright. The Bailey (Layne) kid was much quicker than I gave him credit for. We had trouble with his penetration.

"There were two quick teams on the floor tonight and a lot of the people got a bargain from paying three dollars for this one. This one was worth five dollars."

"I don't think it was so much as Mike not being in the offense, but that our player could not see him to get him the ball," explained Pack. "Prestonsburg's pressure defense kept the other players from seeing where Mike was. Unlike Boo (Harold Tackett), who can come out and take the short jumper, Mike doesn't

Johnson proved that he is definitely one of the most underrated basketball players in the 15th Region when he scored 34 points for the floor game and tossed in 15 points. Bailey was nine of 10 from the free throw line. Outside of Johnson and Bailey, the Trojans offense was dragging. John Hall, who had been coming on strong lately, finished with five points and Jimmy Helton netted only three.

The game was filled with moments of comebacks. Down 52-42, Wheelwright made a run in the third period as a team that wasn't ready to quit. Johnson stepped outside and hit a three-pointer, Bailey filled the lanes for a short jumper and Johnson scored underneath to close the margin to three, 52-49. Baskets by Eric Fitzer and John Clark at the end of the third period gave Prestonsburg a 56-49 lead. Fitzer, who scored 10 points off the bench for the Blackcats, believes that he was doing what his coached asked of him.

"Coach Parido had a talk with me all week long on how I need to be stronger. That's what I have worked on this week coming off the bench and playing strong in the place of Chris (Burke)," said Fitzer.

Long talks from Coach Parido seemed to pay dividends for the Blackcats as John Clark got in a few

"Coach and I had a long talk and he told me I was to lead this team, and I came out and did what I had to do. Everyone stuck with me and it counted tonight," stated Clark. "Johnson, Bailey and Newsome can all three shoot the ball, and Johnson is the best player in the conference. Wheelwright has a tremendous team."

Trailing by nine points, 62-53, in the fourth quarter, Wheelwright made a late run to cut the difference to four points, 62-58. The closest that Wheelwright could get was three points, 63-60, as Prestonsburg went on a nine to four run to finish the game. Johnson was held to only four fourth quarter points as the Blackcats defense keyed on the high scoring forward.

It was the fifth win in the five years of coaching at Prestonsburg for Coach Parido. "We always seem to play better here at Wheelwright," explained the Blackcat mentor. "We play well here. We shoot well here. I don't know what it is; it just seems to work out that way.

Coach Parido said that Coach Pack had done a super job for the Wheelwright program. "A lot like Coach Turner (Johnny Ray) when he took over the McDowell program. It's a tough job - not just teaching the kids basketball but some winning ways also.

Prestonsburg held a 15-14 lead in the first quarter in a hard played first period. The Trojans tired to slow down the Prestonsburg offense with a full court press but it was not to be.

"We haven't had problems with presses," said Coach Parido. "We have about four good ball handlers that can come in and get the job

"When a team beats us down the floor for easy baskets, we're not doing what we should be doing," said Pack. "We had to many turnovers and secondly we missed some easy shots we normally make. I felt that we got beat in the first half. We didn't get our offense going and we got beat up the floor. We took shots we normally don't take and if Mike Newsome doesn't score in the second half, it

"I don't feel we were as competitive as we have been, I mean within us," explained Pack.

"It's a big, big win when you can come to a contender's home floor

John Clark led Prestonsburg in scoring with 26 points. Clark hit four three-pointers in the game, leading the running game for the Blackcats. Tucker finished with 12 points and Fitzer added 10. Joe Whitt and Jason Crisp each hit two three-pointers.

"There were two quick teams on the floor tonight and a lot of the people got a bargain from paying three dollars for this one."

Prestonsburg coach Parido

Wheelwright falls to 9-5 on the season overall. Prestonsburg evens their record at 5-5. Wheelwright will travel to Elkhorn City Friday night before getting ready for next week's Kentucky All "A" Classic at Pikeville. Prestonsburg will host the Allen Central Rebels Friday night as well as their annual Saturday Night Shootout. Elkhorn City will face McDowell in game one while Prestonsburg will face either Belfry or Hazard.

77-70 Overtime Win Over McDowell

Sheldon Clark Cardinals posted an in for an uncontested layup for a 64overtime win over coach Johnny Ray Turner's McDowell Daredevils. A year later, coach Roger Harless's ball club duplicated the feat with a 77-70 overtime win at McDowell over the Daredevils.

"It was almost to the date a year ago," said the Cardinal mentor. "It seemed to be the same type of game like tonight's game."

Dale Hinkle led all scorers with 28 points for McDowell which drew the praise of Harless.

"The Hinkle kid did it to us again," said Harless. "He's a very good basketball player, and we always seem to have the big game against us."

Brad Tiller was the giant killer this time around for the Cardinals. Tiller, who had just transferred back to Sheldon Clark from Paintsville, came off the bench for Coach Harless and drilled five three-pointers for 17 points to lead Sheldon Clark. In fact, it was his fifth trey that was the big one with McDowell leading 66-63 with less than 20 seconds remaining in the game. The Cardinals had very good ball movement around the perimeter that found Tiller open about two feet behind the three-point circle. The ball hit nothing but net as it found its mark and tied the game at 66-66 sending the contest into overtime.

McDowell had the ball with 1:13 left and a 64-61 lead. Earl Cook was bringing the ball up court against the Cardinals' press when he tried a backbehind-the-back dribble. Kevin Fields

Big game off the bench!

Scotty Stanley (53) of McDowell grabbed a rebound against Sheldon Clark Thursday night at McDowell. Stanley came off the bench and S' CLARK......11 17 16 22 11 - 77 scored 20 points in his team's 77-70 overtime loss to the Cardinals. (Continued from B 1)

In the overtime, Sheldon Clark took a 68-66 lead on Fields' jumper off the right side. Doug Hopkins was called for walking and John Slone scored underneath for the Cards. Scott Stanley, who was impressive off the McDowell bench with 20 points, grabbed an offensive rebound and stuck it back in to keep the margin at two, 70-68. A field goal by Max Hale and Fields' free throw gave the Cardinals the lead for good.

McDowell had problems with Sheldon Clark's man-to-man defense in the fourth period that allowed the Cardinals to climb back into the game. The Daredevils entered the final period with a 50-44 lead and seemed to have things going their way. The Cardinals went on a 14-6 spurt that earned them a 58-56 lead with 5:04 remaining.

McDowell led most of the game taking a 16-11 lead at the first stop and going to the locker room with a 30-28 advantage. Fields tied the game at 30-30 at the start of the third period but Doug Hopkins hit a three-pointer for a 33-30 McDowell lead. Matt Johnson, who was the key in the loss, was held to just four points as he spent most of the game in foul trouble.

"Sheldon Clark is a fine ball club that has a world of talent," explained Turner. "I feel like we are a good ball club and we have played a tough schedule. It doesn't get any easier for us. I feel that Matt, Dale has done it for us all season. I am real proud of everybody and the way they played. It's just in that last minute we made the mental mistakes."

The Cardinals out rebounded McDowell 31-25. Duddleson had seven rebounds and Stanley pulled in six with Hopkins getting five. Stanley also had four assists in the game with Hinkle, Duddleson and Cook getting three each.

Hopkins finished with 10 points for McDowell which included two three-pointers. Duddleson scored eight.

Fields had 15 points for Sheldon Clark and Max Hale tossed in 14.

McDowell (9-8) will take on Elkhorn City in the Prestonsburg Saturday night shootout this Saturday at the Prestonsburg Fieldhouse. Prestonsburg will face either Hazard of Belfry in game two.

Conn breaks career high school record

Cora Conn, whose parents are from Salisbury, recently tied and broke a career high scoring record at North Bullitt High School. Conn, who has already signed a letter-of-intent with Indiana State University, scored 22 points against Bullitt Central to tie the scoring record at 1178. Then this past Monday night against Anderson County, Conn tossed in 34 points to break the record at North Bullitt High School. Conn needs only 31 points for the seasonal high record at the school which should come within the next few games. Conn was the second best rebounder in the state last season and is currently averaging around 16 boards a game to go with her 25.5 points per game average.

Conn is the niece of County Court Clerk, Carla Boyd.

The Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources (KDFWR) has closed the Russell Fork River and Elkhorn Creek in Pike County to gigging and snagging methods of fishing.

According to Ed Carroll, KDFWR eastern district fisheries biologist, the Russell Fork River and portions of Elkhorn Creek in Pike County have been newly stocked with rainbow trout, and the normal procedure is to close trout streams to gigging and snagging to protect the trout popula-

"We just want to make the fishing public aware of the change in advance of the gigging and snagging season which opens the first of February," said Carroll.

The daily possession limit on rainbow trout is eight fish. Anglers who may have questions about the change may contact Carroll at the district office in Prestonsburg by calling (606) 886-9575.

HOW TO CHOOSE A TACKLE BOX

Professional bass anglers are famous for the sheer number of lures they own, which often includes dozens of the very same model. Many of them have entire rooms in their homes devoted strictly to tackle.

How do they store all these lures, especially when they're fishing?

"Basically, you have a lot of tackle boxes," laughed well-known angler Cliff Craft, a long-time touring professional and member of the Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff.

"In fact, at last count, I believe I owned more than two dozen separate tackle boxes."

Seriously, says Craft, the secret to properly organizing fishing tackle is to store all similar lures, such as shallow running crankbaits, in a single box, then store these smaller boxes in one larger box.

"The majority of the tournament pros I know usually have one big, basic tackle box," he explains, "which contains a good all-around selection of lures. This is the basic tackle box they always carry with them in the boat for tournaments, and because it's filled with so many lures, it's usually pretty heavy, too."

Then, explains the Evinrude pro, extra lures are carried in a collection of smaller, compartmentalized plastic boxes. The lures are stored according to size or function, and also carried in the boat during tourna-

Today, large tackle boxes have even been designed to store these smaller boxes, rather than the individual lures themselves.

"Soft plastic lures may be kept in these types of boxes, too," adds Craft, "but just as often, we leave them in plastic bags. Then, all the different plastic bags are carried in one larger duffel bag.

"Several companies are now manufacturing what are known as soft tackle boxes, and these are also good for plastic worms and grubs. They're made from canvas and plastic and contain a number of different pockets in which worms can be stored.

"When you unroll one of these, you see all the pockets at once and can find the worm you want right away. Sometimes when you simply have everything stuffed in a duffel bag, finding the right color or style may take a few minutes, he laughs.

Basically, most of the tournament pros have, over the years, accumulated far more tackle than they can ever use, says Craft. Most of them give this extra tackle - and the tackle boxes - to youth organizations that teach fishing.

All boat owners should carefully check their propellers for bent blades and "dings" that can effect performance and even damage gearcase bearings. A file can be used to remove small burrs and nicks, say the technicians at OMC, but a bent blade should be taken to a marine dealer for repair. If you frequently run your boat in stump and log-filled waters, a stronger stainless steel propeller may be a good choice.

HOW TO LOCATE CONCENTRATIONS OF FISH

The goal of most bass fishermen, especially the tournament professionals, is to locate concentrations of fish in one area so they don't have to spend so much time running and searching different spots.

How do they know when they've found such a concentration?

A lot of times, we don't, admits Denny Brauer, a highly successful tournament angler and member of the Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff.

The only time we truly find out what's there is when we go into a spot and fish it thoroughly.

Of course, the pros can't do that during their pretournament practice days, because even though every fish they catch would immediately be released, most probably would not bite again for several days.

"A lot of it is experience," says Brauer. "You have to look at an area carefully and try to estimate its po-Are you seeing a lot of baitfish? These are questions you need to ask yourself when you do start catching fish.

fish them, or pick one in the middle. If you catch bass from them, you might guess all the remaining piers could have bass on them, too. You've found a concentration of fish, and you haven't hurt them by trying to catch them all."

The Evinrude pro believes one of the most common mistakes fishermen make, especially in tournaments, is catching too many bass during

"If I get two or three quality bites in the same area, I stop setting the hook, or at least bend the hook back. I may then speed up and move through the area quickly to see if I can get two or three more strikes, then I'll leave entirely.

"If I get three or four bites fishing really fast, I'll come back during the tournament and slow down, and hopefully get eight or nine bites from the same area."

One thing Brauer looks for is egrets and herons feeding on minnows along tential. Is there an abundance of the shoreline where he's fishing. If a cover? Is there deep water nearby? lot of birds are present, or 11 those present are hesitant to leave, it often means baitfish are plentiful.

"And when baitfish are plentiful," "You can also spot-fish an area to says Brauer, "you know bass are

The overall water quality is also from the first two piers in a cove, and important in estimating how many bass might be present. Muddy water and a shallow, silty bottom seldom "Move to the last two piers and hold many fish, explains Brauer, while harder bottom and slightly clearer water will hold more.

The service experts at OMC recommend bass boaters install a water pressure gauge on their boat. Outboards can lose water pressure if the motor is trimmed or raised too high, or if the water intake is covered with weeds or mud. This can lead to overheating. A water pressure gauge gives an earlier warning of trouble than an engine temperature gauge.

ALC Lady Eagles Edge Union Lady Bulldogs

The ALC Lady Eagles recoiled from the brink of disaster to record a narrow win over the Lady Bulldogs from Union College, 81-77, in a home hardwood contest on January 13.

"It was a 'gutty' performance from our players," said an enthusiastic coach John Mills. "Our girls would not give up and the scoreboard is there to prove it."

Led by All American Katrina Short, with 37 points, and standout guard Brenda Hamilton, with 22 points, the score was tied on Short's two free throws with less than two minutes remaining. With 1:16 show-

The Lady Bulldogs set up a play in an attempt to get the ball to Cathy Spenser, who scored 26 points. But the ball was stolen by Short and she was immediately fouled. With only five seconds remaining, Short stepped to the line and made both free throws. This hard-earned victory followed an easier win over Midway on Saturday, November 11, 96-47.

Fish S-L-O-W For Cold Weather Bass

win a three-day national fishing tourtimes dipped nearly to zero.

How did the pros catch so many fish under those conditions?

"By fishing so slowly you hardly thought you were fishing at all," explains Johnson Outboards Pro Staff angler Randy Dearman, who participated in the grueling event.

"The fish were not active at all, so you had to leave your lure in the water in front of them much longer than normal. They weren't biting hard, either, so you had to really pay attention to what you were doing.'

The main thing that particular tournament proved, says Dearman, is that it is possible to catch bass in extremely cold weather.

"The bass were holding extremely ight to cover," he says, "which they do under those conditions. The primary lure was a jig with a big pork chunk attached, which we flipped or pitched into the cover, and then worked slowly up and down through the limbs.'

Productive depths ranged from coatings of ice. four to nine feet, although much always nearby.

"It surprised a lot of fishermen that the fish were relatively shallow," explains the Johnson pro, "but in this case the bass were using the cover

It took nearly 50 pounds of bass to rather than the depth. I'm sure the fish were probably moving up and nament recently where the tempera- down from deep water to shallow; we ture barely rose above freezing and at just caught them when they were shallow."

Bass can be caught in cold water, Dearman says, but not by fishing fast, or with fast-moving lures. Anglers have to be very patient and realize they aren't going to get a lot of strikes, but the strikes they do get will usually be from heavier fish.

"I believe that's because we tend to use traditional bigbass lures in cold weather," says Dearman. "The jig and pork trailer is famous for catching big bass, and it just happens to be a lure you can work very slowly in thick cover."

The biggest problem when fishing under such adverse conditions, says Dearman, is not the lack of action, but rather, making certain the angler is prepared for the conditions. Wearing the proper cold weather clothing is extremely important in preventing frostbite or hypothermia.

Care must also be taken not to fall overboard, a major problem when boat decks are slippery with thin

"One angler did slip and fall overdeeper 20 and 25-foot depths were board during the tournament," says Dearman, "but fortunately he and his partner had enough extra clothing for him to change into and stay warm. He actually continued fishing the remainder of the day after he fell in."

PEOPLE, PLACES AND THINGS by Beth Jones

> "YOU CAN'T JUDGE A BOOK ... "

I have learned that most people who say they don't like country music have never actually listened to it. To me, that makes absolutely no sense. A popular reason for not listening to it is because the titles of the songs sometimes seen a little ridiculous. I'll admit some of them are a tad bizarre, but that fact does not ensure that the song is not good. Some songs I really enjoy have unusual titles.

One of my favorite singersongwriters is "The Voice," Vern Gosdin. He has several songs with outlandish titles. A few that come to mind are "Do me a favor, don't do me no favors," "If you're gonna do me wrong, do it right" and "Nobody calls from Vegas (just to say hello)." I enjoy all three of these songs; all of them tell vivid stories. "Nobody calls from Vegas...", for example, is a song about a man who is awakened by a ringing telephone at about 3 a.m. His ex is on the other end. She says she just called to say "hello," but he knows she wants something else, probably money. It is quite a humorous tune, a sort of satirical song. In my opinion, one should not make fun of Vern's choice of topics and titles before listening to his work.

Imustadmit I thought someone was crazy to have named a song, "I watched it all (on my radio)." The first thing that came to mind was a hallucinating drug addict. What an idea! Even I, devoted country music fan, could not come up with a reasonable story behind that song. After hearing it, however, the title made perfect sense. The song is about a man's recollection of his childhood, in which he would listen to the radio every night when he was supposed to be in bed asleep. One verse of the song reads "I'd search through the static 'til I found a game/ I know how they played by the sound of their names/ The Sluggers hit homers, those pitchers threw smoke/ and I watched it all on my radio." Don't we all have memories like that? That is what an imagination is for. I think Lionel Cartwright was very smart in releasing that song, which became a big hit for him.

Who could forget George Jones' immortal tune "(Yabba dabba do) The Kin is gone (and so are you)"? It's a creative song title, anyway. Did you even think there was a connection between Fred Flintstone, Elvis and someone's woman leaving him? Perhaps I should explain this one, too. This song tells the story of a man who opens a Jim Bean decanter that looks like Elvis. He pours the liquor into a Flintstone jellybean jar. I'd imagine he gets pretty drunk, because he thinks Fred and Elvis are discussing his ex with him. That old boy is in sad shape. Who else could sing such a song? Nobody but the 'Possum himself. So all of you anti-country music people should listen to a couple of songs before you say you definitely don't like it. Especially, don't make fun of it before you listen to it. I don't think many poke fun at "Here's a quarter (call someone who cares)" by Travis Tritt. Many of us have felt that way before. What about Garth Brooks and his song titles such as "Two of a kind (Workin' on a full house)," "Much too young (to fell this damn old)" and "Friends in low places." There are many people who like his music and Garth is laughing...all the way to the bank. Remember that point.

'Till next week. "Hello" to Times readers

A couple of weekends ago, my sister-in-law Shari and niece Rachael were visiting me where I now work (is that okay Scott?). Rachael was checking the place out, like all curious two-yearsolds do.

Like any scared aunt, I rushed toward her, saying, "did you bump your noggin' baby?"

This two-years-old, beautiful baby girl, looks at me and begins to giggle her little heart out.

"Mama, did you hear Aunt Kim? Her said 'bump your noggin", as she continued to giggle. My oldest daughter, 11 going on 21, is constantly telling me I talk too country. It wasn't till my niece forgot all about her pain and replaced it with laughter at her aunt's speech that I realized Ash could have something here.

WE DIDN'T KNOW THE JONESES

The older I get, the more amused I am at how people today compete. I'm not talking about sports events and stuff like that; I'm talking about that age-old "keeping up with the Joneses" bit. I mean, sometimes it borders on the ridiculous...how so many people spend money they don't have, to buy something they don't need, just because somebody they don't like in the first place, bought

Maybe the way I feel about it has something to do with my up-bringing. Sometimes I wonder if perhaps society in general wouldn't be better off if everybody had an attitude like folks reared in a 1940's Eastern Kentucky coal camp.

Looking back, there's no doubt it was a hard life. Furthermore, it's now pretty obvious that those days weren't memories make them out to be. At it was indeed better then than it is

For instance, when I was growing up in Muddy Branch, we always felt that everybody was equal. it was like everybody felt that they were in this thing together. As a friend of mine said the other day, during those times anything, we each had 50 cents.

We simply didn't compete, except on the baseball diamond or in the horse-shoe pit or somewhere like that. Of course, in all fairness, there was a good reason for that: it's hard for anybody who doesn't have anything to want what somebody else (who doesn't have anything, either) has.

I suppose it's possible, too, that that sameness we endured went far beyond our physical appearance. For example, every family read the Grit.

Every family pumped its water from the same well. Every family had if I had a dollar and you didn't have an outside toilet. So, what was there for which we could compete? Did we covet our neighbor's Montgomery Ward catalog just because all we had was a flimsy Progressive Farmer?

We didn't compete, nor were we afraid to sleep at night for fear that while we slept someone would take what was ours. As a matter of fact, we didn't even lock our door...except I guess it's safe to say that we had that one on the toilet, and it really

In those days, everybody practithe same time, though, in some ways, suspect it was that same poverty that cally lived out of the company store. Consequently, even our diets were the same. I could have eaten supper at home and had combread and soupbeans. Or, I could have eaten with a neighbor and had soupbeans and combread. Many times I did.

There was certainly no competition in the fashion world. Dad, or some other self-proclaimed barber, cut all the boys' hair. All the young ladies did their own and wondered which twin had the Toni?

As I think back to the days of the company store steps and Jumbo Pies being washed down by a big R.C. or a Spur cola, it's pretty easy to see why we didn't experience the stress of competition. People didn't want what everybody else had because people already had what every body

Healthcare changes affect senior citizens

Our Lady of the Way Hospital and The Big Sandy Area Development District are jointly sponsoring sessions detailing the individuals rights and responsibilities in making healthcare decisions at all Senior Citizen Centers in the Big Sandy Region. The sessions are open to the public of all ages.

"As of December 1, 1991, all healthcare providers will be required to ask patients if they have an Advanced Directive and to give patients information about their right to make their own healthcare decisions," reports Cindy Kidd, Our Lady of the Way Hospital Ethics Committee member. "This includes, "Kidd continues, "the individual's right to accept or refuse life-sustaining medical treatment. This change comes about due to the Patient Self-Determination provisions of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act (OBRA

What are advance directives? As Kidd explains, "advance directives are instructions each person needs to write, in advance of incapacitating illness formal documents that state a patient's choices about treatment or these instructions may name someone to make such choices if the patient becomes unable to make decisions." Through advance directives such as Living Wills, Health Care surrogate and Durable Powers of Attorney, patients can make legally valid decisions about their future medical treatment.

Laws concerning the Patient Self-Determination Act differ from state to state. In Kentucky, the legislature has enacted the Living Will Act, the Health Care Surrogate Act and also the Durable Power to Attorney Law. "All of these give an individual different ways to make their decisions known and to ensure that their wishes are carried out, "Kidd explains."

A Living Will is a document in which a person can stipulate the kind of life-prolonging medical care he or she would want if terminally ill and unable to make medical decisions.

A Durable Power of Attorney for health care is another kind of advance directive. It is a legal document in which a patient names another person to make medical decisions if the patient becomes unable to make the decision. This form of advance directive can relate to any medical situation, not just terminal

A health care surrogate can be designated by patients to make health care decisions for them when these individuals can no longer make choices for themselves. The Health care surrogate would have the power to authorize the withholding or withdrawal of life-prolonging treatment.

The purpose of each of these ADVANCE DIRECTIVES is to ensure that the wishes of individuals regarding medical treatment and healthcare decisions are known and carried out by care providers. Kidd also notes that these directives encourage communication among patients, families, physicians, and professional caregivers so patients may make informed choices about their healthcare.

On Monday, January 27, 1992 from 11:00-11:45 the eleventh of these sessions will be held at the Wayland Senior Citizens Center at Wayland.

A member of the Pink, or carnation family, rock soapwort gets its name from a chemical found in its roots. When mixed with water the chemical called Saponin, generates suds which dissolves grease and oil. Above ground, the plant forms a creeping mat of foliage that spreads about 3-foot wide and 10-inches high. Small grayish-green leaves line its woody stems. In this area, it stays green almost all year long. In late spring and early summer, sprays of starlike blossoms blanket the foliage for weeks on end. The native soapwort's blooms are pink, and the hybrids will range from white to deep pink to crimson.

FAST FOODS

Fast foods play a major part of much of America's eating practices, and the trend seems to be increasing.

The good news is that fast food, carefully consumed, can be a part of an overall healthy diet, said Darlene Forester, extension nutrition specialist with the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture.

"The typical American eats one of every 12 meals at a fast food restaurant now," Forester said. "Although fast foods usually contain more fat and sodium and less calcium and vitamins than health organizations recommend, they can be part of an overall riutritious diet."

One way, she said, is to skim off extra fat from fast foods.

Typical fast foods contain fat which accounts for 40 to 55 percent of the total calories.

Diet conscious consumers can reduce some of those calories by skimming off the mayonnaise and tartar sauce, she said. They also can order a salad with low-calorie dressing instead of French fries, or have a lightly buttered English muffin instead of a Danish pastry which has three times the fat.

Another option is to choose 2 percent milk instead of a milk shake and save one-half the fat.

"Chicken and fish are lower in fat only if they are skinless and are not deep-fried," Forester said. "Chicken nuggets, typically fried, have about 20 grams of fat in a serving of six. A grilled chicken sandwich with no mayonnaise, on the other hand, contains only 15 percent of its calories

She added, "Many fast food chains are experimenting now with healthier foods — things like fresh fruit, fresh vegetables, soups, and grilled chicken. Some are adding new "lean" burgers which contain less fat. That's good news for the consumer."

Forester outlined an example of a better, low-fat meal a consumer might choose as a grilled chicken sandwich (15 percent of calories from fat) or lean quarter pound burger (29 percent from fat); a baked potato with two pats of butter, (17 percent of calories from fat).

Entrees not quite as good, but okay might include a cheese pizza slice with 29-37 percent of calories from fat; regular 2 ounce hamburger with 31-38 percent; or grilled chicken sandwich with mayonnaise, 38-40

Not good, she said, are French fries which contain 42-53 percent of calories from fat and breaded fish sandwiches which contain 43-53

Interest rates fall for loans

Farmers are finally seeing some lowering of interest rates for farm loans. However, those rates are falling more slowly than the interest rates for consumer loans.

"For both long-term and shortterm ag loans, interest rates will be trending downward a percent or percent and a half, but will likely be higher than lending rates for other business ventures," said Craig Infanger, an agricultural economist with the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture.

While borrowers for long-term housing mortgages can borrow now at a fixed rate of 8 percent, long-term real estate money for farms has remained at about 10 percent. And farmers have been facing rates as high as 10 to 12 percent for shortterm, operating loans, Infanger said.

In the next few weeks, farmers nced find their best rate and lock it in since future declines in ag rates may come too late for spring borrowing of operating money, he said.

In addition, he encourages farmers to shop around for loans to find the best rate, since not all ag lenders are lowering rates.

A sunny spot with gritty, welldrained soil that is somewhat on the lean side is the only requirement it needs. If your soil is acid, sprinkle a cup of lime over the area and water it. No fertilizer should be used because it just isn't need. A good practice with this little gem, would be to run the lawnmower over it as soon as it finishes blooming to remove the seedheads, and to promote the growth of fresh foliage. It is also a good idea to allow one or two seedheads to stay on the plant for reseeding each year because this plant is not especially long-lived and seedlings provide new plants each year to transplant in other areas and to give startings to friends.

Martin Druther's converts to D.Q.

Construction began the first week of January on the structural and equipment modification necessary to convert the local Druther's restaurant located on Highway 80, Martin, to Dairy Queen/Brazier restaurant. If all goes according to schedule, Martin will have a new Dairy Queen/ Brazier restaurant as early as the last of February.

In September of 1990, Druther's Systems, Inc., the Louisville-based franchiser of Druther's restaurant, entered into an agreement with International Dairy Queen, Inc., the Minneapolis-based franchiser of Dairy Queen restaurants, to become a territorial operator of Dairy Queen restaurants. This agreement empowered Druther's to grant Dairy Queen franchises to itself and to its existing

In terms of menu changes, the Druther's breakfast menu will still be available every morning of the week. In addition, the Dairy Queen/Brazier menu will bring many new favorites such as DQ Homestyle burgers, hot dogs, and a variety of specialty sandwiches as well as the world famous Dairy Queen soft serve treats including Blizzard flavor treats, banana splits and Peanut Buster parfaits.

The restaurant plans to remain open throughout the conversion process although some of the remodeling may require it to close early on occasion. Most of the construction will be inside the restaurant to accommodate the new soft serve equipment. On the outside, converting restaurants will get new signage and a red roof.

C & H Rauch files to reorganize

Due to a sagging economy in 1991 and a disappointing retail Christmas season, C & H Rauch Jewelers has filed for protection from creditors while it seeks to reorganize under "Chapter 11."

Harry S. Cohen, president of the company, stated that the chain of jewelry stores will continue operating as usual, as they restructure under court supervision. "The purpose of the reorganization is to make an adjustment to the company's debt structure by closing marginal stores and negotiating satisfactory agreements with creditors," Cohen said.

American are now global. About 40 percent of IBM's worldwide employees are foreign. Toyota now employs 65,000 in the U.S. The largest employer in Singapore is GE. My company now has more than 30 plants in 23 countries. We are bringing more and more design and engineering jobs to the United States and away from

Is internationalization bad? We Americans love to bemoan the socalled foreign threat to so-called American corporations. But as Reich says in his book, a Japanese (or British or whatever) employer which

We should avoid worrying about whether to call corporations American, or Japanese or British. What counts is where they put their high-quality jobs.

Here's another (false) assumption people make. Many say there's too much car production. But we see a world where 60 percent of the people around the world really haven't seen the joys and benefits of the automo-

Last year we sold more than one million Toyota cars and trucks in the U.S. And about 35 percent of those we sold were made in the U.S. That percentage will keep going up.

As Reich said in his book, the true wealth of nations lies in the quality and skill level of the workforce. No doubt the same rule applies to the states. At Toyota, we hope we're adding to Kentucky's workforce quality. Our success goes hand-inhand with the skill level of our workforce. At Toyota we've hired 4,000 Kentuckians from all over Kentucky... fewer than 10 percent had any manufacturing background at all. But all are well educated, good communicators. The result? For two years now, our plant has been recognized as the best-quality plant in the United States.
