Jones says health plan to be fight to the finish

by Geoff Belcher
Staff Writer

Taking a page from President Bill Clinton's campaign play-book, Kentucky Governor Brereton Jones kicked off the first leg of a statewide bus tour this week, stopping in Floyd County Wednesday to stump for support for his controversial new health-care reform package.

The major elements of Jones' reform package, he told a small crowd assembled Wednesday at Porter Industries at Allen, are health-care cost-containment; universal access to medical treatment; health-care delivery reforms; quality assurance; and financing.

"I think this will be the fight of my life..." Jones said Wednesday. "I'm willing to fight on this issue 'til death do us part."

Round one of that fight may begin around the first of April, when Jones said he will call a special session of the Kentucky General Assembly to discuss and adopt his reform proposals. Jones has come under fire from small business leaders and some members of the General Assembly, who say that his proposed reform package, which includes provisions for mandatory employer-sponsored health-care coverage, will devastate "mom & pop" businesses and cost thousands of Kentuckians badly-needed jobs.

The governor's plan has also met considerable opposition from members of the medical community, who object to his tinkering with the state's health-care industry.

One of the cornerstones of Jones' plan is the establishment of a five-member Health Care Authority, which would "regulate all aspects of the health-care industry and... would be empowered to set rates to control the cost of health insurance premiums and payments made to health-care providers."

Jones' was somewhat vague in his discussion of some of the finer aspects of his five-pronged reform mission, particularly about a federal law that prohibits states from mandating employer health-care coverage.

Jones told the audience that his proposed plans, assembled partially from information garnered at a number of community health-care forums early last year, were flexible, and were put forth at this point merely to invite input from the public and the Governor makes stop at treacherous crossroads

As a sidebar to his health-care reform campaign-stop in Floyd County Wednesday, Governor Brereton Jones traveled with Floyd County Sheriff Paul Hunt Thompson to the intersection of new U.S. 23 and Route 1428, the site of three tragic auto accidents since the new road opened late last year.

One-year-old Katherine Baker, of Clintwood Virginia, and 43-year-old Jimmy Howard Brewer, 43, of Seagrove, North Carolina, both died in a 30-day span in separate accidents at the intersection.

Crashes at the site also nearly claimed the lives of Matthew Mullins, 19, of Jenkins; Sam Bentley, 24, of Virgie; Kimberly Sue Baker, 31, and Teresa Cottrell, 30, both of Clintwood. All four victims suffered serious injuries and required extensive medical care.

Thompson said Wednesday that his main goal in taking Jones to the site was to convince the governor to have lights installed at the intersection in order to illuminate the rock wall that abuts it.

The general circumstances in each of the accidents were the same: the drivers, traveling at night, failed to stop at the intersection's over-sized stop signs, crossed the highway, and struck the rock wall head-on at full-speed. Brewer's vehicle, a fully-loaded tractor-trailer, exploded on impact.

Brewer's family, through the Biscoe, North Carolina based law firm of Thigpen and Jenkins, is pur-

Small business coalition mustering troops to arms

by Geoff Belcher

The Kentucky chapter of the Chicago, Illinois-based National Federation of Independent Business has begun forming a loose coalition in opposition to Governor Brereton Jones' proposed health-care reform package.

According to a press release issued Thursday by the federation's state director, Tom Underwood, a special ballot survey of businesses belonging to the Kentucky chapter of the federation has determined that "Almost seven out of ten small businesses would suffer adverse employment effects from the high costs of paying for state-mandated health coverage..."

"Based on the latest ballot returns," Underwood said, "we estimate that there could be as many as 37,000 jobs lost just among our membership if Kentucky were to enact Governor Jones' mandated health-care plan."

According to the survey, Underwood said, 47 percent of the 1,000 firms surveyed responded that mandated coverage would cause them to reduce employment levels; three percent would relocate their firms out-of-state; and 17 percent would go out of business altogether.

Underwood said that rural Kentucky areas would be hit hardest by the loss of jobs and commercial business if the governor's health-care plan is enacted. Based on Underwood's calculations, three out of five of the state's 7,400 National Federation of Independent Business member firms are located outside of the state's major urban centers.

Underwood agreed that the Ken-

Special meeting set next week to review questioned documents :

Contract payments stopped by board

by Susan Allen
Staff Writer

Payments have been halted on construction management and architect contracts pertaining to three school construction projects in Floyd County.

No more payments will be made on the renovation of the D.W. Howard Fieldhouse, the Betsy Layne 21-classroom addition and South Floyd gymnasium until professional services contracts are "squared away," Floyd County superintendent Steve Towler said Thursday.

The Floyd County Board of Education voted Thursday during a special meeting to stop payments to the architect and construction manager until questions are answered concerning the validity of those contracts.

Board member Eddie Billips suggested that the board call a special meeting "immediately" with their attorney to formulate questions that need answers from the architect and CM.

"There are a lot of serious questions that need answers," Billips said. "I move that we withhold payment on any professional service contracts on those projects until we have answers."

A tentative meeting date of March 9 was set.

Towler said the payments to Martin Engineering and Construction and architect Paul Hoffman will be suspended until their contracts are reviewed by legal counsel and the contracts are approved by the board of education.

"Those are not valid contracts, in my opinion," Towler said Thursday morning. "They are under review by the board attorney. I'm hoping that we'll have... at least some agreed upon language by our attorney and the attorneys for the architect and CM."

Architect and construction management contracts are under review because the state has questioned whether or not those construction contracts have been approved by the Floyd County Board of Education.

State Education Commissioner Thomas Boysen levied charges against board chairman Ray "Shag" Campbell after Campbell signed architect and CM contracts on the 21-classroom addition without full board approval.

Since Campbell was charged, board attorney Cliff Latta has asked to review architect and CM contracts on the classroom addition and the South Floyd gym.

Latta was not aware until last week that a CM contract existed for the renovation of the Betsy Layne gym.

Last June, interim superintendent Eldon Smith announced that no CM services would be used on the gym renovation project after an initial plan for renovation was rejected by the Department of Education.

Bobby Rowe, legal counsel for Martin Engineering, said Thursday that he was not sure how the contract came about, but that it "developed"

Feds name two from Floyd in true bills

Two Floyd County men were among four individuals and one corporation indicted by a federal grand jury in Lexington Thursday in connection with an investigation into falsification of coal dust sampling tests.

The grand jury charged Glenn Kidd, doing business as Martin as Kidd Technical Service, with mail fraud and 18 counts of making false statements in respirable dust samples.

The indictment charges that between June, 1989 and May, 1992, Kidd falsified dust samples which he submitted to the Mine Safety and Health Administration (MSHA) on behalf of 18 coal companies.

In a separate indictment, the grand jury charged Leonard Clark, operator of Diamond C Fuels Number One Mine, at Eastern, with 12 counts of causing falsified respirable dust samples to be submitted to MSHA.

Others indicted included Stamper Technical Services, Inc., located in Pikeville; company president Claude Stamper, and employee Marvin Ray Leslie.

If convicted, the four men face a maximum sentence of five years on each count; a fine of $250,000 on each count, or both.

Respirable coal dust is considered to be a cause of "black lung" disease. Mine operators are required to periodically test the levels of respirable dust for testing to determine if those mines are in compliance with federal safety standards.

Indictments are not an indication of guilt, but a determination by a grand jury that charges merit further court deliberations.

Plaintiffs settle for cash before start of court trial

Six plaintiffs who had filed suit against Johnson County alleging they were fired from the county system due to political reasons recently settled out of court.

The cases of former road workers Monte Blevins, Robbie Stambaugh and Delano Cochran were scheduled to go to trial Wednesday in U. S. District Court, but the three agreed to settle out of court after lawyers for Johnson County Judge-Executive Gail Gillem and the county agreed to pay each man $50,000 to settle their lawsuits.

Three other plaintiffs in the suit — Ronnie Younce, Bob Vanhooze and Brian Melvin — settled last Friday for $68,000, to be split among them.

"Hopefully, this will be a warning in this year's (county) elections so that there won't be these kinds of political massacres," said Prestons-burg attorney Ned Pillersdorf, one of the lawyers representing the workers.

Eleven workers filed a lawsuit in 1990, charging that Gillem fired them because they had not supported him and other Democratic candidates in the 1989 election. Blevins and Stambaugh are the grandsons of three-term Republican Judge-Executive Wayne Blevins, who lost to Gillem in that election.

Gillem contended that the workers were let go for budgetary reasons.

Defense attorney Mike Schmitt said a key factor in the settlement was the judge's decision to disallow evidence about Wayne Blevins' hiring and spending practices. For instance, he said records indicated that the two grandsons were paid more than other

State task force for high school project to meet

Members of the Kentucky Task Force on High School Restructuring will conduct a regional meeting Monday evening in Paintsville in order to hear suggestions from the public for reshaping high school education, including reorganizing educational structure and changing graduation requirements.

The task force has scheduled fifteen regional meetings throughout March and April to solicit comments, concerns, support and input regarding the preliminary draft of new graduation requirements.

Monday's meeting, hosted by task force members and the Department of Education, will be conducted from 6 p.m. until 8 p.m. at the Johnson Central High School Library. Students, parents, teachers, administrators and the general public are urged to attend.

D.A.R.E. grant

Governor Brereton Jones presented a check for $11,510.08 to Floyd County Sheriff Paul Hunt Thompson Wednesday as the first installment of a three-tiered grant to the county's D.A.R.E. anti-drug campaign.

Secretary of State Bob Babbage explains political party change laws

Floyd Countians who change their political party affiliation this spring won't be able to vote for partisan candidates in the May 25 primary election but will be allowed to vote in the nonpartisan races, according to Secretary of State Bob Babbage.

Babbage said that state law requires that voters in the primary can vote only in partisan races if they are registered with the same political party in the preceding November general election.

Babbage explained that state laws tucky General Assembly needs to legislate some form of health-care reform, but stressed that state-mandated employer health-care coverage should not be part of that effort.

As an alternative to Jones' plan, federation members suggested such measures as medical malpractice tort reform awards; state-mandated cost controls for health-care providers; and making mandated special health-coverages optional.

"NFIB members are practical people," Underwood said. "It comes from selling a product or service, collecting revenue and meeting obligations such as payrolls and taxes. Nothing is more meaningful to them than the health of their families and employees... and pocketbooks."

workers in their classification and received health insurance, while others did not.

A judge had dismissed the other five plaintiffs — including Blevins' late wife, Dorothy — because they held jobs that Gillem had a right to fill himself, Schmitt said.

A similar settlement was reached last year in the case of 31 Breathitt County employees fired after Cecil Clair took over as judge-executive in 1990. The county agreed to pay $315,000 in that case, which U.S. District Judge Joseph Hood said could mean "a birth of a new day in the political process in Kentucky."

"This is just an extension of the Breathitt case," said Pillersdorf, who, along with Joe Childers, represented employees in both cases.

medical community.

Dr. Grady Stumbo, Kentucky Democratic Party chairman, said Wednesday that the main goal of Jones' plan was to make sure that all Kentuckians, regardless of socio-economic status, had easy access to quality, affordable health-care.

"I see people struggling day after day," Stumbo said, "trying to decide whether or not to pay the light bill or whether to buy medication."

Answering questions from the crowd, Jones said that one of the main strengths of his plan would be the creation of a "mega-pool" of Kentuckians that require health-care and health insurance coverage, allowing the state to bargain for insurance premiums and health-care fee rates from a position of strength.

after Deputy Education Commissioner Dave Thomas visited the district last summer.

Jim Parks, spokesman for the Department of Education, said Thursday that Thomas, along with Mike Luscher, director of Facilities Management for the state, visited the district last summer at Smith's request. Smith apparently asked for the meeting with state officials to seek advice on school construction projects in the district.

Superintendent Towler said Thursday that Thomas and Luscher met with Smith, Sam Martin, Paul Hoffman, Sam Martin III, Byron Hughes and Alan Stumbo on July 1, 1992.

Towler said that a handwritten record of that meeting indicated that Thomas had directed Smith to add money to the 21-classroom addition project in order to perform additional repairs to the gym.

The gym project was initially estimated to cost $1.8 million, but that sum was rejected by Luscher because it would have been classified as a major renovation and it was not part of the district's facility survey for school construction projects.

Parks said Thursday that Thomas did not "recall" directing Smith to make the addition. Parks said that Thomas and Luscher only offered advice on the project and recommended the two projects be "tied together."

Smith was unavailable for comment Thursday.

No local board action was taken to increase the scope of the gym project or to approve the construction manager's contract, which provided fees to the CM totaling nearly ten percent of the project's estimated cost.

Generally accepted standards for school building projects set CM rates at five percent, but no official guidelines have been adopted by the state.

When asked Thursday why the CM fees appeared to be twice the standard rate, Towler explained that they had apparently been increased in anticipation of an escalation in the project's scope and cost.

Towler added that it would not be customary to pay higher CM fees before expansion of the project had been approved by the board and before additional financing was secured.

Board records show that approximately $14,000 has been paid to the CM on the Betsy Layne gym project though no construction work has been done on the gym renovation.

Rowe said Thursday that fees were allowed under a provision of the contract which covered areas of work other than actual construction.

Although director of the Pikeville district of the Kentucky Department of Transportation, Denton Billiter, has ordered and overseen the installation of numerous safety signs and deeply-cut "rumble strips," grooves in the road that alert drivers to an impending stop, Thompson said Thursday that he felt additional lighting is still necessary.

Thompson added that he had received the governor's assurance that all necessary safety measures will continue to be taken to ensure that no more accidents occur at the site.

Businesses can help prevent exploitation of vulnerable adults

The desire for independence may leave some Kentucky adults more vulnerable to financial exploitation, but businesses where they keep or spend their money can help protect them, says the state Department for Social Services.

"Defrauding relatives, acquaintances and strangers who prey on vulnerable adults are out there in larger numbers than most of us realize," said Richard Newman, manager of the department's adult protective services branch.

During fiscal 1992, reports of exploitation of Kentucky adults reached 853, up 17 percent from the previous year, 35 percent from five years ago. Of those 850-plus people, 580 were aged 60 or older.

But those involved with adults made vulnerable by diminished physical or mental capacity believe that much exploitation goes unreported.

"Our society dictates that we generally don't intervene in an adult's life. Independence is emphasized so much that sometimes people are reluctant to ask for help, or to report that another adult may be in trouble," Newman said.

"Also, the desire for independence—or personal embarrassment—may make it hard for an adult to admit to being 'taken,' especially when the exploiter is someone the person depends on."

Kentucky's protection statute defines exploitation as "improper use of an adult or an adult's resources" for profit or advantage.

"Banks, stores, and other businesses that see customers on a continuing basis can, and do, play a role in stopping exploitation by making their employees aware of signs that a customer is being defrauded," said Mary Bradley, a state adult protection specialist.

"Draining off someone's financial resources is often an easy-to-hide crime," she said. "That's why we depend on help from alert people in banks and stores, who usually have their customers' trust.

"These employees should alert someone if they see a customer who seems confused, or appears to be uncomfortable with someone accompanying him, or suddenly stops coming in while another person tries to cash checks or bonds in his name without clear consent."

Sometimes firms mention confidentiality concerns, Bradley said, but the law requires anyone who has reason to suspect exploitation to report it.

"It's better to be suspicious, and to call the local social services office or police and let them check into the situation, than to delay and see a person lose hard-earned resources," Bradley said.

If someone is being victimized by "scam artists," it's important to start an investigation before they can hit on a number of people, she added.

"We should remember it's not just older people who may be vulnerable," Newman said. "Adults of all ages who are physically or mentally impaired may also be marks for exploiters."

Within the Department for Social Services, aging services specialists, advocates for nursing home residents, and guardianship specialists join with the adult protection staff to offer a variety of assistance to potentially exploited adults, Newman said.

Businesses wanting more information about exploitation can contact the adult protection branch in Frankfort at (502) 564-7043.

Newman urged any individual who suspects exploitation to call the local Cabinet for Human Resources Department for Social Services office.

Mammoth Cave, Bowling Green Corvette plant featured on 27: Fifty Southcentral Kentucky's Mammoth Cave and a look at a gathering of Corvette enthusiasts produced by WKYU/Bowling Green are featured in an edition of 27: Fifty airing on KET at 8:00 a.m. Saturday, March 13.

In "Mammoth Cave," series host Rich Panter goes subterranean for a visit to the world's longest cave system. Back above ground, he also introduces "Corvette Homecoming," a segment about an annual gathering of devotees of the American sports car, which is built only in Bowling Green. That segment was originally part of WKYU's MainStreet series, which airs monthly on KET.

Other segments include "Ghost Towns," a visit to several abandoned Texas towns, and "Super Dogs," a look at dog racing. Those segments were produced by KACV/Amarillo and KUHT/Houston, respectively.

27: Fifty travels to a different location in the Southeast each week, bringing viewers a variety of stories ranging from the bizarre to the beautiful. The series' diversity is one of its strengths, according to producer Tom Posey.

"We don't do theme shows," says Posey. "Instead, we present a fascinating collection of stories. Locations tie them together."

New lung function tests offer promise in preventing and treating infant lung disease

Lung disease is the leading cause of infant death in America. Each year in Kentucky, nearly 200 children under the age of 5 die from lung disease. New recommendations released by the American Lung Association call for removing a blind spot in the treatment of lung disease in infants by standardizing tests used to measure the lung function of infants.

Lung function tests are a cornerstone in the care of adults and older children with lung disease, but they have not typically been used on children under the age of 5 since they require patient cooperation. This poses a serious problem since more than 20 percent of children suffer from an acute lower respiratory illness in their first year of life and there is also a strong but unclarified link between early acute illness and chronic disease, including asthma.

In recent years, innovative tests have provided a window on infant lung development. Dr. Nemr Eid, Director of Pulmonary Medicine at Kosair Children's Hospital and head of the University of Louisville, School of Medicine Department of Pediatrics, believes new standardized tests could open the door to earlier and better therapies for childhood lung diseases such as asthma and cystic fibrosis.

Eid says, "We've conducted this type of test in our program over the past five years. Using state of the art equipment made possible by the Crusade for Children, we are doing studies on cystic fibrosis patients and infants with persistent wheezing and asthma."

According to Dr. Lynn Taussig, a professor at the Arizona Health Science Center in Tucson and a national advisor to the Lung Association, this type of diagnostic test is becoming increasingly accurate and less invasive, a major concern of parents. Taussig explains that some methods just require blocking off the infant's mouth for a second.

Taussig reports, "There's also a chest compression technique when you put a plastic bag around the chest and abdomen and then quickly squeeze them. The bag exerts less pressure than the baby generates by coughing or crying. It's an extremely safe procedure."

Liberty of thought is the life of the soul—Voltaire

More of the same

by Scott Perry

For two and a half years now, we've reported a variety of concerns surrounding a variety of school construction projects in Floyd County.

Most of those issues lead to the same conclusion: millions of dollars are being spent with little or no oversight and with surprisingly little concern for or from the taxpayers who are footing the bills.

What is most curious about all this is that the problems that were first disclosed nearly three years ago are basically the same problems we have today.

Only the names of some of the players have changed.

According to our calculations, we've built four schools for the price of eight. None of them are finished, completely.

The most constant explanation for cost overruns is that it costs more to build a school in Eastern Kentucky than elsewhere.

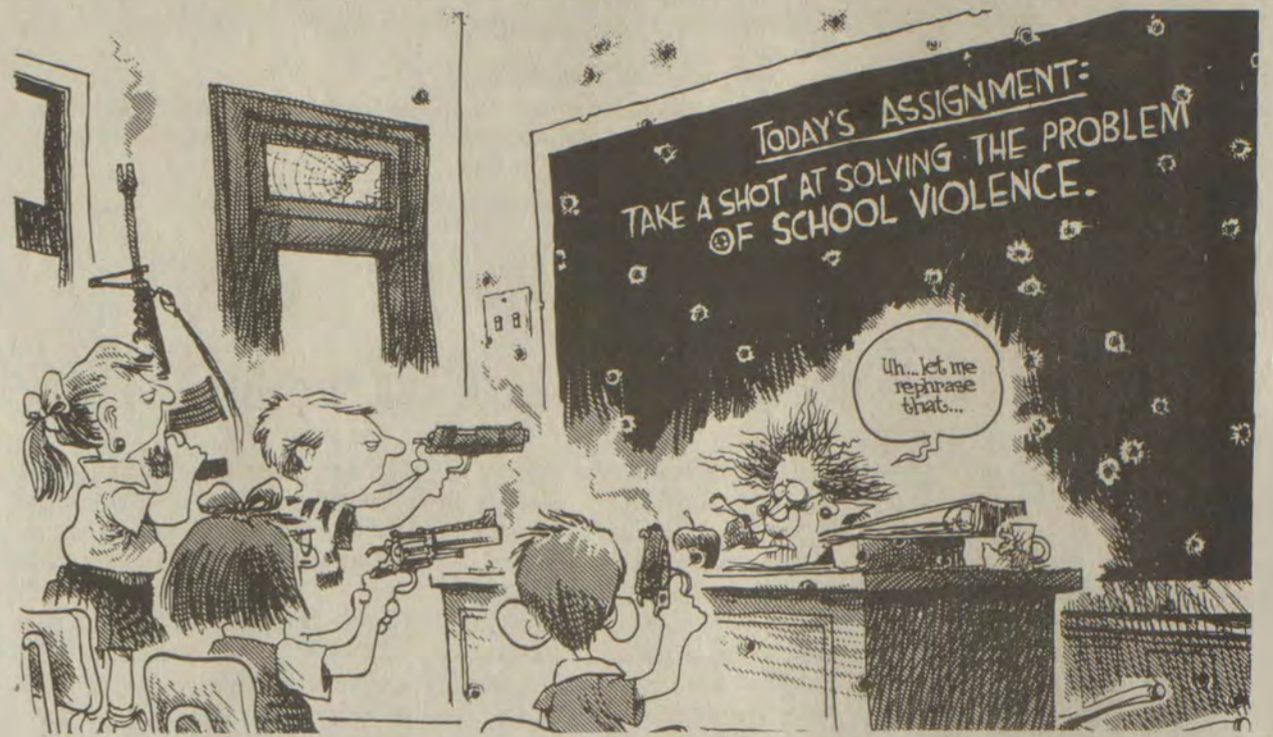

Baloney.

Sure, property around here is at a premium and site development costs are high, but we've seen little evidence that expense has even been considered in site selection.

As for the actual cost of construction, we can't see why it should cost so much more to lay a block in Floyd County than it does in Fayette County.

It would appear after so long that money is no object; that the local board of education is out of its element when it comes to project oversight; that the state Department of Education is deaf, dumb and blind; and the majority of taxpayers either don't realize or don't care that they're getting the short end of the stick.

Is there no end to this madness?

Sad saga of Jake

Editor:

"Feed Jake, He's a good dog,"

Words of a song, but ones that tell how important a dog is to someone. Unfortunately there are some who believe they have the right to destroy someone else's dog.

I live in a rural area of Floyd County, away from the main road. We had a dog, named Jake, a Japanese Akita, who was one year old. He'd had his shots, wore a red collar and tags, was neutered, and was chained most of the time. On occasion we would untie him when we were outside. But unfortunately, one night something happened. He was dead before daylight, in our driveway. He'd made it home to die. We'll never know what happened to our dog but someone does. I will always wonder why it happened, what was he barking at that night. But as I wonder about this, I also wonder why there are no stray dogs or cats around anymore. Even a dead deer is nearby. My children's last dog was shot and word got back to us that all strays are shot.

This is sad, but if you want a pet, you must keep them inside or chained all the time and even that doesn't work because they stole our Husky once, chain and all. Better yet, you can save you and your children heartache by having no pets, but then you'd take the joy from those heartless people who feel that they have a right to destroy someone's pet.

I'm sure there are others who have seen their children cry and mourn the loss of a pet, but the helplessness we feel when it is a deliberate act is intensified.

It's the acts of kindness that we need to be remembered for not the inhumane ones. Dogs like Jake are special to someone. He was to me.

They gave their lives so that we may be free

Editor:

This letter should concern each and every one of us, especially those of us who call ourselves proud Americans. But are we?

The real true proud Americans are the Vietnam vets. The ones who died over there and the ones who are still dying, not from wounds to their body, but the wounds to their spirit. We broke that spirit, and turned them loose to hurt alone, be alone, and to cry alone.

Are we really that heartless? Can we not care? They were there for us, can we not be there for them, to share their pain?

This letter is a tribute to two such men who I loved very much. One was Junior Carter, even though I only had him for such a short time. He taught me so much about love and understanding. I learned how to care, to cry with him, and to hurt with him. I learned how to feel his pain. Thank God, he left me with the knowledge to know how to feel.

The other is a very special man, Vance Akers. Even though these men didn't know each other, they have the same value in life, to be left alone to live their life. After all they've done for us, can we not do that for them? These two men were so much alike, with so much love for their fellow man. But, yet, we call them names just because they want to be left alone. Why do we always hurt the ones we love?

The Bible says, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only son..." so that we might live. Didn't these boys give their lives so that we might be free? Can we not tell them how much we love them?

An extraordinary mess

Ordinarily, having three groups investigate a single board would seem like overkill, but who could possibly dub the goings-on at the Kentucky Parole Board "ordinary?"

Records vanish, people are in two places at once, and a felon with a prison record wins parole after an influential lawmaker - who just happened to be on hand as an observer at his parole hearing - testifies on his behalf.

These are extraordinary times at an extraordinary place, and special efforts are required to get to the bottom of what's going on. With its authority to let inmates out of prison early, the board wields enormous power, but, until now, it has operated about as far from the public eye as a public body can get. The board answers to no one but the Governor, and, from all appearances, chairman John C. Runda does as he pleases.

Gov. Jones asked the state police to investigate after the legislature's Program Review and Investigations committee turned up a string of questionable actions. Attorney General Chris Gorman also has an investigation going.

However, still another inquiry may be needed. Dr. Runda took no formal action when an employee complained to him that a board member sexually harassed her; instead, he seems to have treated it lightly. Such a response wouldn't square with the Governor's order that sexual harassment complaints are to be regarded seriously. The governor needs to make sure that Dr. Runda's handling of the complaint is being investigated.

Jones sets out big ideas, raises big questions

It's too early to give thumbs up or thumbs down to Gov. Brereton Jones' plans to overhaul the Kentucky health-care system. It's not too early to give the governor credit for tackling a big problem with big plans.

In a series of meetings Monday with legislators and the Health Care Reform Commission, Jones unveiled two wide-ranging options for making sure that all Kentuckians have health-care coverage. A third plan appears to be on the way.

Under one plan, employers would bear most of the burden for all employees or face a penalty. The other plan would force all individuals to buy their own insurance or face a fine. The state would help our poorest citizens pay their way.

Jones, who is off on his statewide bus tour to explain his program, played the statesman's role Monday in describing his health-care reforms. He made it clear he is open to compromise, to suggestions, to improvements that anyone might offer. But he vowed not to waver from his goals of providing health-care coverage to all Kentuckians and holding down costs.

Those are correct goals for the country, not just Kentucky, because ours is a nation where more than $800 billion was spent on health-care last year and where roughly 35 million people have no coverage at all.

Jones deserves credit for the tone he has set this week and for his determination to strive for an overhaul rather than simply tinkering with the system. He also deserves credit for his emphasis on preventative health care. He wants mandatory seat belt use, yearly physical exams for everyone and "wellness contracts" that would give Kentuckians with healthy lifestyles a break on insurance rates.

We look forward to the next chapters in the story of the most dramatic health-care reform effort in the country.

Detroit drags its heels

Japanese automakers are working intently to develop more and more fuel-efficient engines.

The same cannot be said of American automakers; they fought hard against the most recent push in Congress for a further increase in mile-per-gallon requirements.

In partial extenuation, it can be noted that this heel-dragging reflects Americans' not very likely interest in cars advertised as fuel-efficient. Automakers like to say that they just give the consumer what they want, and there is quite a bit of that.

Putting an end to turf wars

A wire service story Monday reported that the Kentucky School Boards Association may ask the legislature to make some changes in the education reform law. The story focused on possibly cutting the power KERA gave to school-based councils.

Asked about the potential for conflicts among school boards and school councils, state Sen. Ed Ford said such conflicts arise "where turf ... is more important than children."

How true.

Since the beginning of public education in this country, school boards have overseen the operation of local schools from the hiring of teachers to the buying of toilet paper.

School-based management councils can work to undo decades of school board turf wars where children and education are way down the priority list. They can work for excellence in education where the children are the be-all and the end-all of their existence. They can also present the youngsters with concrete examples of what can happen when power is shared, when democracy is practiced and when the benefit of our children is more important than personal gain.

The course for both school boards and school councils seems quite clear. Share the turf. Put the children — all the children — first. — Appalachian News-Express

GOVERNMENT NEEDS TO MAKE SACRIFICES

By Leonard Larsen

Scripps Howard News Service

It's said that President Clinton is chasing the public-relations successes of the Reagan administration, but he may have gone too far, even stealing what had been President Reagan's private property.

Put it this way: Clinton now claims it's patriotic to raise taxes, but it was settled history under the Reagan spell that tax cuts were patriotic and opposition to Reaganomics was probably subversive.

Clinton's grab is not only theft of fiscal patriotism; it might be conversion of stolen property, a complete turnaround from the Reagan happy talk that taxing less and spending more might even produce a tidy budget surplus.

Introducing his spin on the theme of tax policy tied to patriotism, President Clinton ended his recent Oval Office address with a boyhood recall almost as evocative as Reagan's familiar flagdraped "shining city on a hill."

"When I was a boy, we had a name for the belief that we should all pull together to build a better, stonger nation," said President Clinton. "We called it patriotism. And we still do."

Explaining the details of his fiscal program that will take increasingly larger bites from taxpayers beginning in the middle class and on up through the millionaires, Clinton kept on waving Old Glory in his address to a joint session of Congress.

There's no disputing the nation overdosed on Reagan era fiscal patriotism, the kooky "supply side" formula that sent tax rates downward and military spending upward, an odd brand of patriotism that in 12 years helped quadruple the national debt to $4 trillion.

But the patriotic tax-cutting lullabies President Reagan sang to a willing nation are likely to prove easier listening than President Clinton's song that "sacrifice" in a hefty round of tax increases is patriotic, too.

Even discounting the outcry at Clinton economic patriotism from Republican politicians, just plain rich folks and stock market predators, President Clinton still may have trouble convincing Americans that the sacrifice in his program is fairly spread around.

To his credit, the Clinton proposals would chop the holdover Reagan administration space station project down to about $8 billion from $30 billion. But there's other spectacular pork-barrel spending that will apparently escape significant "sacrifice."

A few big-ticket examples make the point, these among hundreds of the kind that American taxpayers will keep on funding while assured by President Clinton that "sacrifice" is universally shared.

For openers, the $3 billion Seawolf submarine project will continue, a gaudy display of waste that survives only as a political contrivance, one in which Clinton pandered to Connecticut voters to aid his own election and salvage re-election for Democratic Sen. Chris Dodd.

Pentagon officials long ago abandoned support for the Seawolf, pointing out the craft was designed to counter a specific Soviet submarine threat from a vessel whose design never got off Russian drawing boards and never will.

Clinton approval is also understood for continued spending in Texas on the $8.2 billion Superconducting Super Collider whose purpose, it's explained, is to "learn about the nature of matter and the origins of the universe."

Aside from that non-urgency, what's more apparent is that Democratic politicians in Texas might be harmed by postponing the search for the "nature of matter," and that's too big a political price for Clinton to pay.

More black-hole spending untouched by Clinton's "sacrifice" is an enormous federal project in downtown Washington, now a hole in the ground three blocks from the White House.

Less than a year ago the cost of the construction was estimated at $656 million and its current cost estimate is $791 million, the most expensive federal office building in history.

What's even more impressive about the pork-barrel gift to the District of Columbia is that in an area already glutted with overbuilt office space, there's no agreed-on plan for the use of this new federal white elephant if and when it's built.

Personally, I prefer to see more sacrifice at the federal pork barrel before I make my own patriotic con-

Pilot education program begins

Teachers of Floyd County Technical High School have begun to reform the way in which the academic classes are taught in accordance with the vocational programs of the school. Applied Communications, Applied Mathematics, Applied Biology and Chemistry and Principles of Technology have been taught over the past few years at Floyd Tech. However, these classes are being restructured in order that they may be better integrated with the vocational programs taught at the school.

A pilot program involving Applied Communications and Applied Mathematics actually being taught within the eight (8) vocational shops is being designed and will be implemented this next six weeks grading period and then evaluated and upgraded the following grading period. Teachers Thomas Hardwick and James Staggs have been planning with the vocational teachers at Floyd Tech for this project as well as sharing their ideas and experiences concerning applied academics with other vocational schools. Both teachers visited Lee County Vocational School on February 19th and met with teachers from the middle school, high school and vocational school to create more awareness of how students can benefit from courses in the applied academics.

Another pilot program already implemented involves the Health Services program. Annette Harris, instructor for the program, designed a one-semester course along with the school counselor Laura Kidd in which students would learn biochemistry with practical applications relative to what they would experience in a health career. For example, a unit on the urinary system and chemical balance due to the function of the kidneys was taught with emphasis on clinical applications used to correct kidney malfunctions. The seniors in the program visited a dialysis unit where they saw the preparation and actual kidney dialysis of a patient. Each unit in the course is designed to teach the students chemistry that they can apply and actually see. The next unit on the respiratory system will involve the students observing the mechanics of a life support system after studying how blood gases are exchanged. Students will participate in field trips to various sites where they will observe respiratory patients and therapy.

The overall objective in restructuring the classes is to not only enhance what has already been done to incorporate the applied academics but to help students with the attainment of the goods of the Kentucky Education Reform Act (KERA). With the implementation of KERA, six learning goals have been set forth with 75 valued outcomes that characterize student achievement of the goals. Since the students have expressed an interest in a particular occupational area by coming to Floyd Tech to enroll, teaching the classes in this way will hopefully give the students the ability to apply core concepts to the vocational study they would encounter later in life.

Plans are now being made to implement the applied physics course, Principles of Technology, in the same fashion next year.

IN LOVING MEMORY

ETHEL CONLEY WILLIS

*I know you've gone from this world
But sometimes I think you're still around
In mom's voice I can hear you
You both have the same familiar sound
Our family has gone through a lot
The things you wouldn't have done
But we are strong, and your memory we have got and the hurt is almost gone.
Granny, you'll never know the love I feel for you, Because you taught me Jesus I'll meet you up above.
Thank you for being with me to watch me grow, but I wish you were here to see Cody and watch him grow also.*

I miss you very much.
Your Granddaughter
Love,

JUNIOR JOSEPH JAILER

Citizens of Floyd County:

We need a new reorganized, revitalized jailing system. This means change and progress—it takes experience and commitment.

I am the man to lead the way to a better system. I have proven my leadership to the people of Floyd County through managing P&B Ambulance Service for 21 years. I will be just as committed and work just as hard as your public servant.

When elected, I will make your jailer's office one you can be proud of. I will treat the public with respect and dignity. I will recognize those placed in the jailing system as human beings and treat them as individuals with individual needs.

Many of you know me, and you know that I am a man of my word.

I need your support and your vote to bring change and progress to the jailer's office.

JUNIOR JOSEPH FOR JAILER
Your candidate for change and progress.

THE LAST OF THE GREAT AMERICAN VACATIONS

A promise to my husband and because regardless of my political preference, he's my president, too, this is my last article in my series of Clinton chasing. At least until he does something that I feel doesn't represent or isn't in the best interest of the rest of us taxpayers.

Last week one of President Clinton's newly appointed Cabinet members announced that they were increasing the cost of admission on tourists visiting National Parks.

That's right, folks. Once again middle America is going to foot the bill for all other Americans just like they've been doing since they threw the tea in Boston Harbor and tried to blame it on the Indians.

Maybe I'm over-reacting again like my husband says I do, but this time I think I'm right when I say that the lower and upper-class citizens of America aren't the regular patrons of these wonders of the wilderness.

Somehow my mind can't conjure up the image of people who usually spend their leisure time on the Riviera opting to forego it for a few days with the likes of Yogi and Boo Boo Bear.

Can you imagine? If you can't, let's pretend:

"Giles, old man," a gray-haired gentleman sitting in the backseat of a stretch limo says to the driver. Could you park near someone who has the foresight to bring along some Grey Poupon?"

"Of course, Suh. It would be my pleasure," answers the driver as he attempts to maneuver the limo into a space reserved for a camper.

"Giles", the man asks. "Are the facilities nice?"

"Yes, Suh. I believe so, Suh." "Wonderful, Giles. Then it won't be an inconvenience for you to put a lock on the door for privacy."

"But, Suh. Hundreds of other people will be using the facility."

"You mean to say that we paid that much money to get into this park, and we have to share a bathroom? How unsanitary! It would have been cheaper to vacation in the south of France again this year."

"What did you say, Spendwood?" the gray haired man's wife asks.

"Oh, dawling! We've spent a fortune on getting into this park, and it doesn't even have private bathroom facilities."

"That means they probably don't have a resident masseuse, either then, Love," the wife states.

"There is a spa," Giles quickly adds. "It's called Old Faithful, and it erupts every 30 minutes give or take a few minutes, Madam."

Their conversation is interrupted by a knock on the window of their limo.

"Hey, you! Donald Trump! Could you move that long car of yours? You took our camper space."

"But, Sir," Giles answers. "We need the extra space in which to erect our tarpaulin."

THE TIMES' WEEKEND

Rocking to the country beat

by Janice Shepherd
Managing Editor

Betsy Layne sophomore Garland Rogers' friends knew he was talented, but no one else did until he stepped out on stage during his schools' talent show and into the limelight of the Kentucky Junior Opry Pros.

Billie Jean Osborne, in the process of organizing the Junior Pros, attended the talent show, and recognized his musical abilities.

Rogers, whose shyness prevented him from performing before groups, was talked into participating in the school talent show by a friend. Before the show, Rogers, 17, said his stomach was tight and his mouth was dry.

But after his performance of "Any more" he received such an enthusiastic response from the crowd that now he welcomes the chance to be part of the world of music.

"Now, where I've been playing, I've gotten used to it. I enjoy it. I love music," said Rogers.

He loves music so much that when he hears a song he likes, he immediately buys the tape and begins learning how to play it. Sometimes he picks his guitar until his fingers bleed. He plays bass guitar, keyboard and "some" drum.

He began learning to play the guitar about three years ago. While visiting his cousin, Rogers, who lives at Betsy Layne, listened as his cousin's date played the guitar. He then asked the guy for lessons. It took him less than a year to learn the guitar. He had previously taken lessons, but didn't stick with it because they "couldn't teach it fast enough."

After joining the Junior Pros, he's taking lessons again and also learning how to read music in his chorus class. Though he's had to give up some of his leisure time — such as the baseball he used to play in grade school, he doesn't regret a minute of the hard work that goes into preparing for a career in music.

He practices from four to five hours each day, and looks forward to his performances — sometimes that includes unexpected songfests at his friends' parties.

His friends constantly tell him he sings like Travis Tritt. He bases his style on Tritt, Alan Jackson, and Tracey Lawrence. A country music fan, he doesn't want to reach for a Nashville star.

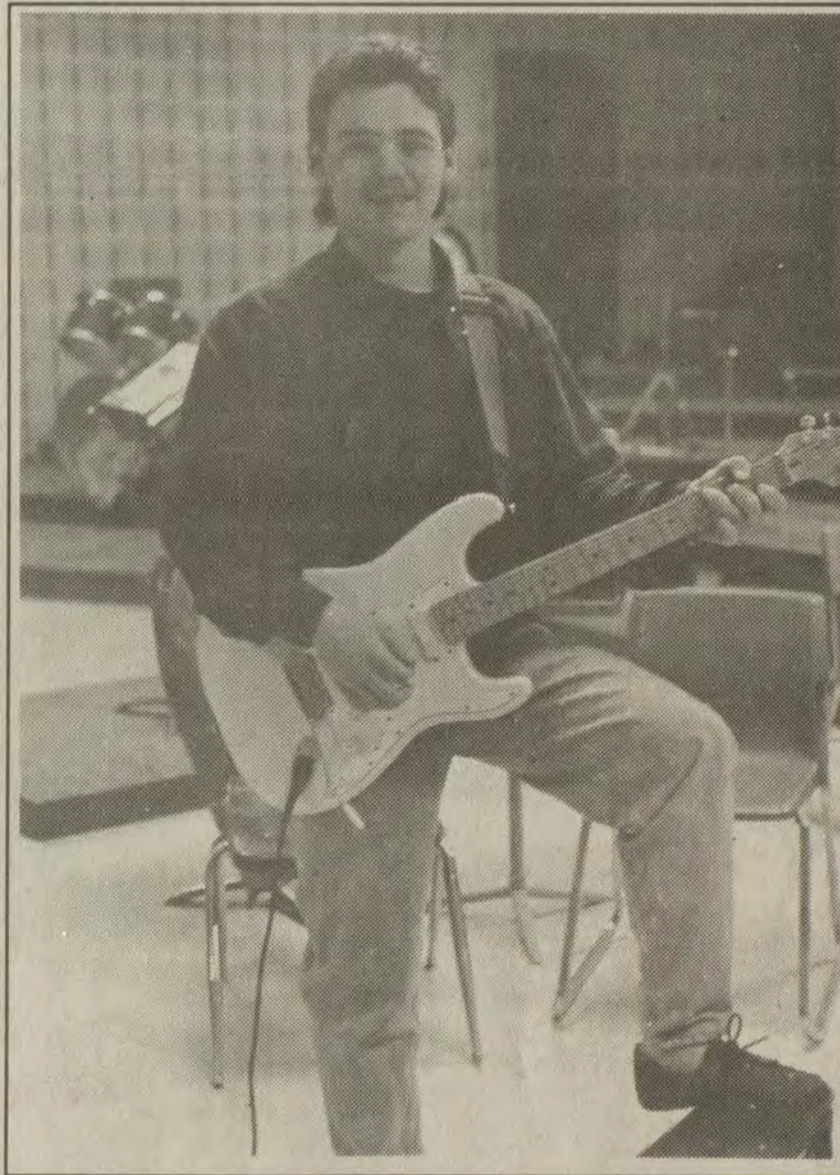

"That's a big chance you take," he explained. "I'm afraid to take the chance to go to Nashville."

Rogers wants to stick with the Opry groups. He said he appreciates the opportunity that Billy Jean Osborne and backers of the Opry troupe have given him and others like himself. Rogers, a member of Champions Against Drugs and the Technology Club at his school, is determined to succeed in music. His mother, Betty Rogers, and father, Garland Rogers, encourage him in this endeavor, but sometimes that encouragement comes in the form of a challenge.

"My dad teases me and says 'you don't have a chance,' but I say I do — and I'm going to show him," said Rogers.

With his talent and his determination, he will.

Truth, Justice and the American Way

by Geoff Belcher, staff writer

The good rain, like a bad preacher, does not know when to leave off.
—Emerson, Journals (1834)

Couldn't stand the weather....
—Stevie Ray Vaughan

Yea, though I float through the valley of the shadow of death, I shall fear no evil—but all this %&!@ water is really starting to get on my nerves.*
—Noah

Is it just me, or has the weather lately just seemed really screwed-up?

First, we had summer in December. Then, last week, we had a blizzard, when I know good and well there haven't been two snow flakes in Kentucky at the same time in the last three years.

Now it seems to be monsoon season, and I'm not real happy about it. I had to get Charlton Heston to come over and part the waters just so I could get out of my driveway this morning.

And, worse than that, between melting snow and torrential rains, my front yard's become a playground for the Swamp Thing. I'm afraid to go outside because there might be alligators or giant fifty-foot long poodle-eating boa constrictors or something. Of course, I'm pretty sure there are too many poodles in the world anyway (and before any of you poodle-owners call me up to complain, don't bother—I eat sissies like you for breakfast).

Now, the scientists'll tell ya that this wild and wooly weird weather is caused by something they like to call "global warming," in which the polar ice-caps are melting because the sun's harmful ultraviolet rays are striking the planet full-strength because the Earth's protective ozone layer is being eaten up by everything from Right Guard to cow gas. You read me right.

Cow gas (and let's face it, if the cows are that bad off, maybe somebody oughtta consider givin' 'em some Kaopectate—or at least stop givin' 'em Mexican food—and by the way, if you feed a cow Kaopectate, will it give Milk of Magnesia? Somebody look that up for me, okay?).

Anyways, about this global warming bizness—let's bear in mind for a minute that the people who are telling us now that the whole world's becoming a giant sauna are the same people who told us ten years ago that a new ice age was coming. Boy, that was accurate.

Personally, I have a couple of theories about this whole thing, including (a) most scientists don't have the faintest clue what they're talking about because their brains melted after all those years of playing with mice, and (2) the rotten weather isn't being caused by a new ice age or global warming or even by Willard Scott—it's being caused by a little thing scientists like to call "nature."

Pretty simple theory, huh? As far as I'm concerned, it doesn't matter what the "experts" say is happening. The Earth, the sun, the universe, all that stuff was here a long time before we were and it'll be here a long time after we leave.

In the meantime, if it gets hotter or colder or somewhere in-between, well, that's just our tough luck and after we're gone, the next species' finest scientific minds can go over our fossils and so forth and try to figure out why we kicked off (and I'd just love to be there when they unearth our non-biodegradable baby diapers—I can just imagine the late-breaking news reports from the archeological dig-site: "Well, (insert futuristic-sounding anchor man's name here), archeologists still aren't certain why the long-extinct humans saved all their doody, but they seem to think it may have been part of some perverse rite-of-worship to the great god 'Pamper'").

And hey, even if the Earth is heating up, how bad could it be? Kentucky will be warm all year long, and Florida will just be too hot to handle so all the tourists will be coming here for the winter and spreading all that cash around where it'll do some good and the rich geezers'll come here to retire and Dewey Lake'll be like an oasis of beautiful bikini lines.

I don't know about you fellers, but I'm buyin' stock in Coppertone.

On the other hand, right now the weather is still miserable and the rain is still falling and if anyone in the Auxier area owns a boat and is feeling particularly helpful, my wife, myself and our eleven dogs will be on the roof patiently awaiting rescue.

Bear in mind that ten of my dogs are still pups and have not been properly boat-trained, so you might want to bring some Pampers.

Just don't bring along none o' them boa constrictors.

Poperri

by Scott Perry

If you're really interested in finding out just what size dent you've made in the world during your life, all you have to do is drop dead.

For instance, we now know that Lillian Gish and Ruby Keeler had monumental impacts on the way the world turns because they made movies that most of the currently living have never seen. They must have been special people because their obituaries consumed lots of space on the front pages of all the papers and their contributions were retold time and again by teary-eyed television newscasters.

Albert Sabin, now, is another story. He got to die quietly on the obituary pages with the rest of the folks who didn't make silent movies. All Sabin did during his life was develop an oral vaccine for polio, which helped all but eliminate the deadly disease from the industrialized world.

As far as we can tell Sabin never appeared on any of the television talk shows or in any made-for-TV movies, prerequisites these days for being remembered in front-page style like, say, Chuck and Di, who made the media's top story list for weeks because their marriage croaked before they did.

Anyway, most people hope they'll be remembered by somebody after they're gone.

Andy Warhol proclaimed once that each person would get fifteen minutes during their lives to share the spotlight. That's a pretty profound prediction from someone who made their living painting pictures of Campbell's Soup cans.

We suppose we used up our allotted time some twenty years ago when we were caught in the spotlight of a police car after buying a six-pack before reaching the legal age.

Of course some people hog the spotlight, using more than their share and reducing the odds of fame for everybody else.

Elvis, for example, has been presumed dead for more than a decade yet he got more ink last year than the scientists who discovered a drug that might stop the spread of AIDS.

But, we've always been preoccupied with the glitz and glamor of Hollywood so its no real surprise to see more emphasis placed on the deaths of stars than on people who make real contributions.

Who are we, anyway, to judge the importance of one life over another?

After all, we thought life as we knew it was over when Tommy Kirk shot Old Yeller.

After she assured him that Michael was in New York, he called back to accept the part. Neil proposed to Drucilla, who happily accepted. Lauren freaked out when the eighth piece of the puzzle made up a photo of her in bed with Brad. Despite Jill's denials, Kay suspected she was trying to become pregnant, and reminded her that John, who had already raised his family, might not appreciate a new cycle of fatherhood. Dr. Laski told Jack, Nikki was on medication to prevent premature labor. Wait To See: Lauren is confronted with a strange demand from Sheila.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD

At a November public meeting of Los Angeles County government's 4-year-old Ritual Abuse Task Force, several members of the 14-person commission renewed their claims that satanic forces were spraying a pesticide into their offices, homes and cars in order to prevent them from revealing their experiences of human sacrifice, torture and sex orgies. One member said she was poisoned during a task force meeting in the Los Angeles Hall of Administration. None of the members who have made such claims have given any medical evidence of the poisoning. Said the county's chief of toxic epidemiology, who was in attendance, "I can't believe I'm sitting here listening to this."

NOVEMBER ELECTION RECAP

--New York state Sen. Howard Babbush won re-election despite efforts by prosecutors over the last five years to bring him to trial on corruption charges. Babbush has claimed for the last two years that he is too ill to stand trial. Said he, "There's a big difference between standing trial and taking care of the needs of my constituents."

--Bernard Hale, candidate for treasurer of Cannon Township in Michigan, was arrested in July when his car was stopped at 5 a.m. and found to contain 31 political yard signs, most of them for his opponents. He said he was just trying to clean up the neighborhood.

--Althea Garrison, 52, a black female Republican, was elected to the Massachusetts Legislature. Before 1976, according to records obtained by the Boston Herald, Garrison was a man, known as Al Garson.

--In North Bend, Ore., Arlis Akin won a city council seat in a dice roll after he and Dean Smith had tied with 2,236 votes each. Akin had been charged in October with raping a 20-year-old woman in Coos Bay and will stand trial in March.

--Iowans, by 540,000 to 400,000, voted to amend their constitution so as not to permanently disqualify from public office anyone who has ever engaged in a duel.

FAMILY VALUES

--For more than a year, Sandra McMahan Irwin has blocked the execution of the will of her late ex-husband, William Kane, who committed suicide in October 1991. Kane's girlfriend, Deborah Hecht, is claiming from the estate the vial of Kane's frozen sperm, which he had stored just for her. However, Irwin, and Kane's grown children, are challenging Hecht, saying that Kane was not of sound mind when he promised Hecht the sperm. In December, a judge ordered the sperm destroyed, but Hecht appealed.

--A 53-year-old Vancouver, British Columbia, man identified only as Michael S. said in November he would appeal to the B.C. Supreme court in his efforts to gain custody of the two children (aged 5 and 7) he fathered during a 10-year affair with his daughter, now 28. Though she says he manipulated her, he said the affair was consensual and wants the law against incest declared unconstitutional.

--Witnesses told Chicago police in September that Matthew Hall, 32, held his 2-year-old son out the window as a shield while he pulled a drive-by shooting. And Arturo Buitron, 32, died in a shootout in Sacramento, Calif., in November after a car chase in which he dangled his year-old daughter out the window by her feet because he wanted his wife to come back home following a quarrel.

--Dacey Mae Weathers, 83, was arrested in Covington, Ky., in December and charged with attempting to pass drugs to her incarcerated son, William, during a jailhouse visit. She had sewn the drugs into the label of a pair of sweat pants she had brought him.

--Artis Anderson and Phyllis Brashears were married Sept. 1 in Monticello, Ky. Anderson had filed a lawsuit against Brashears in November 1991 for backing out of the wedding but dropped it in February 1992 when they rescheduled it. She allegedly changed her mind again in July, and Anderson attempted to reinstate the lawsuit. Said Anderson, after the wedding, "We just aim to deal with our little problems and get on with our life."

--Julia Pena, 31, was arrested in Los Angeles last April for a drive-by shooting. Pena was angered when her son came home early one morning and complained that a gang had robbed him at gunpoint of 25 cents. Said police Sgt. Gary Grubbs, "She got out of bed, got dressed ... drove back to the school," and fired off several shots at gang members.

--Mary Middleton was injured in Batesville, Ark., in May, when cars driven by Mary and by Oscar Waymon Middleton (Mary's father-in-law) crashed. After the crash, the two got out of their cars and exchanged gunfire. When family members went to bail out Oscar and Mary later, more fighting broke out, and several police officers were injured.

SOMMERSBY

The inspiration for this film is a medieval play about a soldier returning from the Hundred Years' War. It was made into a film by the French who dubbed it, "The Return of Martin Guerre." Unfortunately, the original version was very thin and transparent, and this latest incarnation fares no better.

Richard Gere portrays the title character. He has returned from the Civil War to be reunited with his "wife," Jodie Foster. For her part, she's been dreading his return. He had been cruel and abusive, and we are given to assume that she probably hoped for his demise in the war.

Lo and behold, when Gere does return, he's completely different. He is kind, considerate and one hell of a lover. Could the war have caused such a dramatic character transformation and redemption? Of course not! You see, Gere is not her husband. The husband did die in the war, and Gere decided to take the guy's identity.

At some point, Foster catches on to this, but by then, it doesn't matter. She's in love with this guy, and she's going to stick to the story. However, the local townsfolk, spurred on by a jealous ex-suitor, find out the couple's dirty little secret, and they are brought up on morals charges. (James Earl Jones is wonderful as the judge.)

Gere and Foster do their best to make this an exciting, believable film, but they're defeated by the weakness of the script. It's too bad. They're both wonderful actors. Hopefully, they'll be more careful when choosing their next cinematic outing.

Smile Awhile

"Listen, Buddy," the agitated camper says. "I don't care if you intend to pitch a tent, you're taking up way more than your share of the space. If you needed two camper spots, you should have reserved them earlier."

"How much would you take for your spot?" the gray haired man asks. "Are you kidding? I've been trying to get reservations here for the past two years. We were thrilled when they called and said we could come this summer. My wife would kill me if I gave up our spot after we saved for 10 years to come here."

"I'll give you $1,000 dollars for your spot, my good fellow," the gray-haired man says as he plucks ten crisp hundreds from his genuine alligator wallet.

"Load 'em up, Gertrude, we're going to Vegas!" the man yells to his family, trying to build a fire by rubbing two sticks together.

President Clinton needed to take his family to visit Mt. Rushmore this summer. If he really wants the park's to get their money's worth, let them charge them for viewing one president's head at a time.

The first windmills were probably built, not in Holland, but in Iran.

Dear Abby

Door-to-door witnesses are subject to woman's defense

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to the writer who complained of solicitors knocking on her door—especially at dinnertime. Many announced that they were not selling anything—they were there to "share" their religious faith, and were required to make door-to-door visitations.

I used to just close the door in their faces, hoping to dissuade them with a curt, "No, thank you; I already have a religion."

After I had my first baby, even taking time to answer the door became irksome, so I had a "NO SOLICITING" sign posted on my door, but these people insisted that they were not "soliciting"—they were witnessing the word of the Lord, and could I please give them some money for their magazine?

The solution: I simply took an oversized index card and wrote in large black letters: "NO SOLICITING, NO WITNESSING, NO KIDDING!" Since posting that sign, I have not had one person come to my door to sell me his "old-time" religion.

JANE N. POOLE, ROHNERT PARK, CALIF.

DEAR JANE: If for some reason your sign is overlooked, try the following sign suggested by one of my clever readers: "Warning, I am mean and my dog is hungry." Or, an even stronger warning might read: "Beware of our two Rottweilers!"

DEAR ABBY: I went to an optometrist recently and had my eyes checked. I also bought some contact lenses from him. Upon leaving the office, I asked the receptionist for my prescription. She said that she'd give it to me in two weeks when I returned for the follow-up checkup.

I was out of town on business and did not make the appointment. Worse,

I lost the bag containing the new contact lenses. When I returned, I called the optometrist. The receptionist told me that she could not give me the prescription over the phone. We later had a conference call, but I never did get my prescription!

A few days later, I went to the same optometrist and the receptionist handed me my prescription which I took to a new optometrist, who informed me that the prescription was for eyeglasses and not contact lenses!

I called the first optometrist to tell him about it and the receptionist put me on hold forever, saying that she'd "ask the doctor." Then she came back and asked if there was any way I could buy another pair of contact lenses from them. I told her, "No, I didn't like your service." This time she put me on hold for so long that I finally hung up.

Abby, how can I obtain my prescription? My theory is that this greedy optometrist won't give it to me because he wants me to buy the lenses from him. Please help me fight back.

PRESCRIPTION DENIED

DEAR DENIED: Demand your prescription! According to my optometrist, the records belong to you. Tell this to the receptionist if you cannot get in to see the optometrist immediately or appear to be getting the runaround. And it wouldn't hurt to mention that you will have your lawyer handle this if they give you any trouble.

Abby shares more of her favorite, easy-to-prepare recipes. To order, send a business-size, self-addressed envelope plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, More Favorite Recipes, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Primary Summit

Several Floyd County educators gathered recently at Allen Elementary to discuss full implementation of the primary school (K-3) program. Each of the county's 14 elementary schools must fully implement the ungraded primary program next year. All 14 schools have already implemented some or all of the program, which was mandated by the Kentucky Education Reform Act.

Primary School District Summit

Several Floyd County teachers and administrators involved with the primary program met at Allen Elementary February 24 to discuss the best methods of fully implementing the new K-3 program.

Kentucky Commissioner of Education Thomas C. Boysen recently recommended that each superintendent convene a district-wide summit before March 1 to discuss problems encountered in primary program implementation. The Kentucky Education Reform Act requires that all schools in Kentucky must fully implement the primary program in the 1993-94 school year. All 14 of Floyd County's elementary schools have already implemented part or all of the program.

The voluntary summit served as a means to clarify statutory requirements for the continuous progress primary program and share recommended best practices; to choose local solutions for identified barriers hindering primary school implementation; and to generate district and school plans to implement these solutions for the program in 1993-94.

Representatives from 13 of Floyd County's 14 elementary schools participated in the "Primary School District Summit." Each school was represented by two primary teachers, two parents and the principal.

A district team — consisting of Superintendent Dr. Stephen Towler, Assistant Superintendent for Instruction Gary Frazier, Board Member Hattie Owens and Director of Instruction Connie M. Tackett — also participated in the summit.

Cathy Collins, Instructional Supervisor with Letcher County's primary program, gave the group an overview of the program.

Tackett reviewed state regulations and recommended best practices for the primary program.

Susan Compton, principal at Osborne Elementary, gave the group an update on the program. Compton and Wayne Combs, principal at Clark Elementary, led the group through solutions chart completion.

Rita Caudill of Osborne Elementary and Jan Dingus of Clark Elementary served as facilitators for the summit.

Update on primary school

Osborne Elementary Principal Susan Compton gave an update on the ungraded primary program at the Floyd County Primary School Summit, Feb. 24 at Allen Elementary. Educators from around the county came together to discuss state regulations and best practices for implementing the K-3 program, which is mandatory in every elementary school next year.

Getting word home to parents...

The primary students at Maytown Elementary published a newsletter in February. Each homeroom submitted activities and events. The children in each homeroom chose a class name at the beginning of the year. These names were: Johns' Kittens, Duncan's Eagles, Castle's Thinkers, May's Koalas and Martin's Sharks. The children wrote stories and drew pictures and they appeared under each class name.

Mrs. Duncan volunteered her time after hours to organize, type and print the information. The newsletter was time-consuming, but worthwhile.

Throughout the rest of the year a newsletter will be published monthly. If a primary parent has not seen a copy of the newsletter, contact Kelly Duncan at Maytown Elementary.

Drama classes at ACH gear up for production

The Allen Central High School Drama classes announce plans of their upcoming Spring productions. This year's classes will be performing two plays, a comedy and a murder mystery.

First, "Off the Track," by Felicia Metcalfe, is a three-act comedy set in a waiting room of a small, wayside railroad station on a dark and stormy night. A strange and conglomerate mixture of people are thrown together when their trains derailed and the passengers must wait for a relief train. The crowd is thrown into pandemonium when one character discovers that her $10,000 string of pearls is missing. Someone in the waiting room has them, but who?

Our second production, "Murder on Center Stage" by Jerry Tweldt, is a mystery set on a blizzard evening in the theater of a liberal arts college. The cast is rehearsing for their upcoming production of Romeo and Juliet when it is revealed by the janitor that if they remain in the darkened theater, they will discover the identity of the ghost that haunts the theater. When they discovered they they are trapped, they must pit their wits against a demented mind filled with real and imagined abuses.

D.A.R.E.

The Maytown Family Resource Center through the Sheriff's Department sponsored a Drug Abuse Resistance Education (D.A.R.E.) Program for parents and teachers on March 1. Floyd County Sheriff Paul Hunt Thompson and Deputy Sheriff Ricky Thornsberry explained the importance of the D.A.R.E. program in our schools. They discussed signs and symptoms of drug use, their harmful effects and what drugs are most commonly being used in our schools. A variety of drugs were displayed for the parents to view, and a 18-minute video was shown so the parents could see their role in drug prevention. The program ended with a question and answer session.

Positive attitudes at work

Harold School may not look like one of Kentucky's best schools. But that is exactly what it is.

Located within a few feet of busy U.S. 23, the small school has no library, no science labs, no band room and no gymnasium. The Floyd County Schools Local Planning Committee recently characterized the school's physical plant as "tiny, much too close to the highway, and in the flood plain; building is not good and too small to be workable."

But the staff, parents and students at Harold have proven that it isn't the building that matters most in education. It is the attitude. For several years, Harold students have scored some of the highest test scores in the state.

Recently, the Lexington Herald-Leader published a story about the school's academic excellence.

"I don't care what kind of examination you give them, they tend to do well," said Floyd County Superintendent Dr. Stephen Towler. "Harold has been consistently at the top of elementary schools in Floyd County — and the state."

Harold ranked number six among the state's middle schools when the Department of Education released base-line scores on tests to measure academic levels at 1,400 Kentucky schools. But number six is not even Harold's top statewide ranking.

"Two years ago, if Harold School's test scores had been pulled out of Floyd County, we would have ranked second in the entire state," said teacher Sarah Barker.

What is the formula for success at the 311-student school?

Teamwork, according to the president of the school's parent-teacher group. Beatrice Jacobs told the Herald-Leader that Harold's principals, parents, office staff and teachers have worked together to achieve the high standard of excellence.

Teacher Denny Layne, who taught the school's top-scoring eighth graders, deserves extra recognition for her outstanding work, said Jacobs.

"I've been tooting her horn up here for years," Jacobs said. "It just didn't get around."

In addition to Layne, Harold has a lot of other factors which have made a positive impact. The importance of regular attendance is stressed at the school, according to former principal David Hinchman and current principal Ronald Salisbury. The school has led the county in average daily attendance for the last six years.

"We also didn't accept the fact that low socioeconomic students couldn't learn," Hinchman said. "We felt that if they would come, we could teach them."

That attitude — that all children can learn — is a cornerstone of the Kentucky Education Reform Act.

"I can't take any credit for it, but somebody is doing a lot of right things at Harold," Towler said. "The rest of Floyd County's schools can learn a lot from what's going on there."

The old custom of home funerals

As we grow older, we see customs that gradually die out completely. When I was growing up, all the funerals were held at the home of the deceased. Now the practice is seldom used and may, in fact, be illegal.

When I was a young teenager, it was considered a young man's responsibility as well as privilege to sit up with a corpse that was in the neighborhood. I say privilege because many a romance was started at a wake. I must admit that I could never get the hang of this custom. Sure, I would enjoy being around all the young girls that inevitably showed up and there was always good food and drink, but by midnight I was missing my sleep so badly that I found it difficult to see the advantage of this custom.

There were some interesting moments before the need for sleep overtook my senses. After the services for the night were over, the preachers and most of the older people left since most would have to work the next day. A few retired folks and the young people were left to spend the night with the deceased. This was our way of honoring the dead.

A funeral also meant that friends and relatives would be in from such places as Columbus, Ashtabula, and Dayton. It would sometimes be comical to see how some of them tried to put on the dog about their new-found city sophistication. For the most part, we weren't that impressed. Not all were of this ilk. Some were truly good friends and relatives whom we were glad to see even if it was under less than favorable circumstances.

Sometimes during the night a discussion of the deceased would take place. I was always amazed at how wonderful the person was. It didn't matter that he/she was a scoundrel a few days earlier. On such nights only positive attributes were brought out. I suppose that was appropriate since the person certainly could no longer do anyone any harm, and it was comforting for the family members to hear these kind words.

My grandmother, father, and mother were brought home for their funerals. It seemed such a cruel thing to do to the family members, but that was the way it was done and no one asked any questions. When my mother's and father's funerals were held, I would simply slip out and take a long walk while the services were going on. I was hurting enough and I didn't want to hurt any more. I realize now that I missed the whole point of the services, but that was the way I handled it at the time.

The last service of this kind that I was involved in was Linda's stepfather. I think we all realized how hard it was on the family, but if some member of my family should ask for it, I would try my best to honor their request providing, of course, it isn't illegal.

That brings up a question that Linda asks from time to time: How do I want my funeral to be handled? One time I jokingly told her to just feed me to the fish. She told me the fish wouldn't have me. I suppose I want a traditional funeral with the Old Regular Baptists officiating. I hope that people find it in their hearts to say I was a good husband, good father, good teacher, and that I left this world just a little better place to live than I found it. It all may not be true, but hey, whose funeral is this anyway?

Maytown meetings set

Maytown Grade School has scheduled their regular monthly meetings for Monday, March 8, 1993. Everyone is "welcome" and urged to attend.

Family Resource Center, 5 p.m.; Site-Based, 6 p.m.; P.T.A., 7 p.m. and Booster's Club, 8 p.m.

Dinosaurs in Ashland

The primary students from Maytown Elementary School visited the prehistoric exhibit at Ashland's Town Center Mall on February 17.

Taken by bus and chaperoned by primary teachers and parents—the trip was an exciting learning experience and was easily adapted as part of the whole language approach.

The visit marked the beginning of a dinosaur unit, to be taught throughout the primary block. Classes have been involved in various learning activities: Creating number books with prehistoric animals viewing films, singing dinosaur songs, doing creative writings, and making clay models during art activities.

Many other interesting dinosaur activities are being planned to complete this unit of study.

Designing students

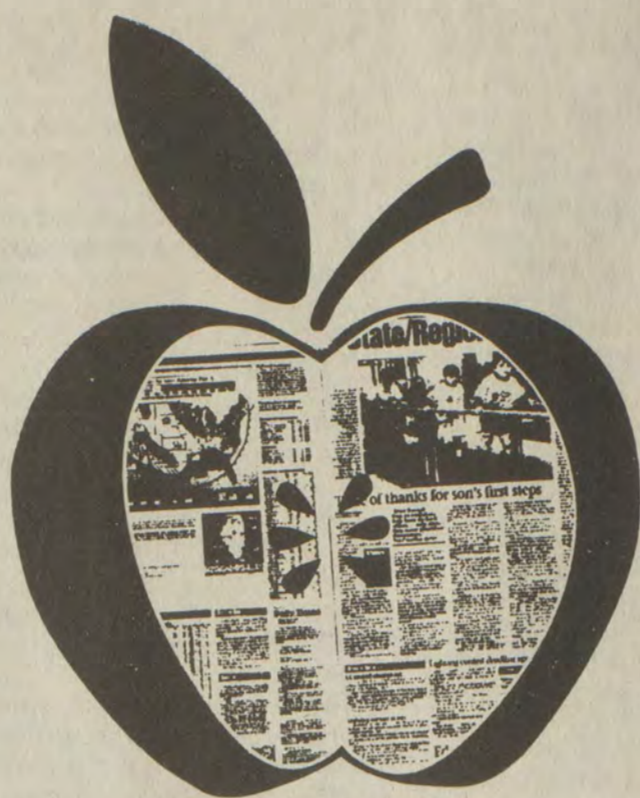

Students in Mr. Potter's fourth grade class at Mountain Christian Academy, this week, are learning about the importance of advertising during Newspaper in Education week.

Advertising is a valuable part of the newspaper because it helps to keep freedom in the press, said Neeley George, advertising manager for the Floyd County Times. Because advertising revenue comes from various companies, and not strictly from one business, the newspaper is free to print news in an unbiased fashion, she explained.

Advertising is also an important form of communication, according to George, because it advises consumers about products available and services which they need.

Designing these advertisements was also an exercise in English skills for the students because ads must be grammatically accurate and have correct punctuation, just as the editorial part of the newspaper does.

"Good advertisements, like you see here, are visually interesting and exciting to read," George said.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY TO...
Jeremy Rogers of the Betsy Layne Bobcats, who just turned 16. The best of birthday wishes to a good ball player. Jeremy plays on the junior varsity at Betsy Layne.

He had to miss about six weeks this year due to an injury. We look forward to his participation next year. Happy birthday Jeremy from old Ed!

THERE'S STILL AN-OTHER ONE

A special, special Happy Birthday greeting and wishes to "Chuckles" Chuck Rowe. Chuck turned the ripe old age of 20-year-old today.

I appreciate Chuck and the help he had been to me during the football and basketball seasons. He will be around the diamond this summer.

Happy Birthday Chuck!
Have someone you want to wish a happy birthday to? Give me a call or drop me a note in the mail.

SENIOR NIGHT, PART 2...

Tradition has always been that on senior night at UK, the seniors get to start. No matter if you are a bench warmer and a senior, you knew that you would at least start one game and that is senior night.

But for Todd Svoboda that start did not come. Neither did he get in the game at all.

Now, Rick Pitino wants to win every game. He has to. And I know that Svoboda is just a walk-on and walk-on's are not suppose to play. But couldn't the UK coach have let the senior in the game just for the first 10 seconds?

Svoboda is just glad to be able to sit on the bench and is resigned to being a cheerleader over there. He is always smiling. He's having fun. This is great. Sitting on the Kentucky bench. Wow!

But, what if he had gotten in the game? Even started. How do you think he would have felt?

Pitino you should have played the senior at one point in the game. When you were up 12 points. That would have been a good time.

CENTURY MARK BY LADY BLACKCATS...

I haven't been able to confirm if the 107 points scored by the Prestonsburg Lady Blackcats against Wheelwright Tuesday night is a county single game record.

Reports are that Allen Central scored 100 points in a game back in the early '80's when Judy Eversole was coaching.

Perhaps someone out there can remember such a game. There wasn't much reporting on the girls games back then.

Well, anyway it was alot of points for a girls' basketball game.

No doubt, many who witnessed the game were thinking that the Lady Blackcats coaching staff was trying to run the score up. But I don't believe that Bridget Clay would do that intentionally. She did play her entire bench and Amy Reed only played six minutes of the second half with some of the other starters sitting down.

Carolyn Jones played well for Prestonsburg. So did Misty Price. I liked the determination of the Lady Trojans against Prestonsburg. While flatly getting beat, they never did quit. They played hard. I appreciate the Lady Trojans effort.

Watch out for the returning McDowell Lady Devils and Wheelwright Lady Trojans next year when they become the South Floyd Lady Raiders. They will be one of the district top teams. Mark it down. You read it right here. Whoever gets the girls coaching job at the new school will have a strong squad coming in.

Okay, here it is. My pick for male Player of the Year in Floyd County High School basketball goes to Prestonsburg's senior forward Aaron Tucker.

Tucker has been a player of consistency this season and an all-around performer. He can score, rebounds very well and he is a solid defensive player.

Senior leadership shows as McDowell Daredevils eliminate Betsy Layne Bobcats

by Ed Taylor
Sports Editor

The McDowell Daredevils have been know to give up a lead to the opposition late in the game during the regular season.

But when it came to tournament time Tuesday night, McDowell coach Johnny Ray Turner wanted to make sure his team understood what was happening and he wanted to protect their 15-point lead against the Betsy Layne Bobcats.

So, when his team took the floor for the final quarter in the first round of the 58th District Basketball Tournament, being played at the Prestonsburg Fieldhouse, he had some instructions and a reminder for them — hold on to the basketball.

McDowell had built a 44-31 lead after three quarters against Junior Newsome's ballclub and Coach Turner reminded his team that it was necessary to protect the lead.

The Daredevils took the floor in the final period and held the ball, becoming more deliberate with it.

"We wanted to kill some time off the clock," explained Turner, "but at the same time look for the good shots."

"We had a 15-point lead in the quarter (47-32) and we wanted to make sure that we didn't squander the lead. We almost did."

Indeed, they almost did give up the lead when they let Betsy Layne back into the thick of things.

Down 51-37, Betsy Layne went to a man-to-man defense. McDowell could not find the goal as the Bobcats went on a 10-0 spurt to narrow the margin to four points, 51-47.

Derrick Newsome banked home a eight-foot jumper and Jason Akers followed with a layup, all which followed a McDowell turnover to make it a 10-point game.

Mike Duddleson missed the front-end of a bonus shot with Akers pulling down the missed shot. A feed underneath to Brian Hunter found the forward open and he laid it in with 3:36 remaining.

On their next possession, McDowell misfired and Newsome pulled up with a baseline jumper at the 3:10 mark and the lead was at six, 51-45.

Duddleson drove the baseline for McDowell and hit a short jumper but the officials disallowed the basket. Duddleson was called for the charge.

Hunter slipped behind the McDowell defense and hit the open shot to bring his team to within four points. The Bobcats had a chance to get even closer but threw the ball out-

Both are key players!

The 58th District basketball tournament got underway this past Tuesday night as the McDowell Daredevils and Betsy Layne Bobcats opened the classic. Here Brian Hunter (32) gathers in a loose ball as McDowell's Wally Sexton (25) defends the ball. Sexton scored 10 points as McDowell ended the Bobcats season with a 62-51 loss. Hunter scored 10 points also.

of-bounds.

Chris Hamilton, who came alive in the second-half, hit a scoop shot to extend the lead back to six. With 1:37 remaining, Betsy Layne dug themselves a deeper hole when they turned the ball over on their next two possessions. Hamilton's layup with less than a minute to go made it an eight-point game.

Newsome, who did not miss a shot in the fourth quarter, drilled a 10-foot jumper for a 57-51 score. It was the closest the Bobcats could come to the Daredevils.

Hamilton hit three consecutive free throws and a last second field goal for the final 62-51 margin.

Barry Clark's baseline jumper at the start of the game gave Betsy Layne a 2-0 lead. Scott Stanley tied the game with a basket underneath. The score was tied at 5-5 and 7-7 before McDowell took a 9-7 lead. Chris Potter buried a three-pointer to send Betsy Layne in front 10-9. A rebound basket by Stanley and Matt Rose's last-second shot gave McDowell a 13-10 lead at the first stop.

Potter's second trey to start the second-quarter tied the game at 13-13. Hamilton and Hunter traded baskets for the final tie of the game at 15-15.

McDowell ran off the next 11 points to take a 26-15 halftime lead. Duddleson hit a trey and Alan Joe Moore drilled back-to-back three-pointers for the lead.

McDowell's defense stifled the Bobcats. It kept Betsy Layne out of their half-court game, something Turner planned.

"Our kids played an awfully good defensive game," he said. "They did a good job of cutting the game down on the inside."

"Our game plan was that we didn't want them to get set in their man-to-man offense. They run a real good man-to-man offense and we didn't want them to have a chance to do that."

Coach Turner said that Hamilton was nervous at first, which accounted for his slow start.

"He came through for us in the clutch," said the Daredevils coach. "He made some key steals and hit some key foul shots for us."

Every team needs leadership and Coach Turner saw that quality in a couple of seniors against Betsy Layne.

In 107-43 romp P'burg Lady Blackcats defeat Wheelwright

by Ed Taylor
Sports Editor

If Harry Carey, famed broadcaster of Chicago Cub baseball, had been at the Prestonsburg/Wheelwright game Tuesday night he might have said, "Holy Cow!"

Maybe Batman's partner, Robin, would put it this way: "Holy tornado, Batman!"

Of course, the reference is being made to the outcome of the game between the Prestonsburg and Wheelwright girls' Tuesday night. Prestonsburg became the second team in Floyd County girls' basketball history to crack the century mark and surpass it when they bombarded a young Wheelwright team 107-43.

The two teams opened up the first round of the sixty-first 58th District Tournament at the Prestonsburg Fieldhouse before a large crowd.

Carolyn Reffitt buried four three-pointers enroute to a 30-point performance to lead the Lady Blackcats. Reffitt, who has been playing very well of late, had eight two-point field goals and was two of three from the charity stripe.

But there is more. Six other Lady Blackcats scored in double-figures as all of the Prestonsburg team saw action.

"We weren't going for any kind of record," said Prestonsburg coach Bridget Clay. "We just wanted to play with a lot of intensity and make sure that Wheelwright did not come-back against us."

"You know what kind of a team we are," she explained. "We seem to get a lead and then lose it. We've struggled at times. We just didn't want that to happen to us tonight."

But for Clay, while the win was sweet there was something just as sweet.

"Amy (Reed), the first thing she said to me after the game was 'Coach we won our first district tournament game'."

Prestonsburg has been eliminated in the first round of the tournament for the past three seasons after carrying a favorites role. This year Clay's seniors were not about to let history repeat itself again.

Portrait of a coach

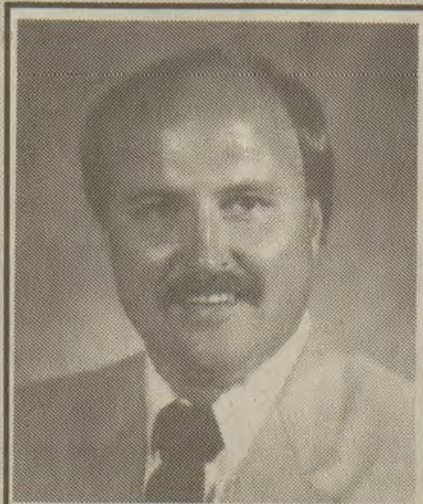

by Willie Elliott
Contributing Writer

This year I traveled with the McDowell High School basketball team to recount the final season of the Daredevils who have built up a great deal of basketball tradition over the years.

Before you tell me how nice it was of me to do such a project, I have to admit that the All "A" Classic committee gave me five hundred dollars to do the project. This project gave me an opportunity to get to know Johnny Ray Turner as a coach, and more importantly, as a human being.

When the season began, I noticed that Johnny Ray was not as rowdy as some coaches I have known. I must tell you right off that I don't know if Johnny is a good coach or not. I say that because basically what I know about basketball is whether the shot goes in or not. I would say from the record that Coach Turner has compiled that he is no slouch. I can, however, tell when I meet a decent human being and Coach Turner certainly falls into that category.

If you followed the Daredevils early on, you know that we gave games away as if every day was Christmas and we wanted to give the coaches a gift. Such losses would make some coaches bitter and sulky. Not so with Coach Turner.

Sure he agonized over the close losses, but he never berated the boys for making what were surely silly mistakes. He would tell me, "You have to remember that they are just young men trying their best and you can never ask more than that."

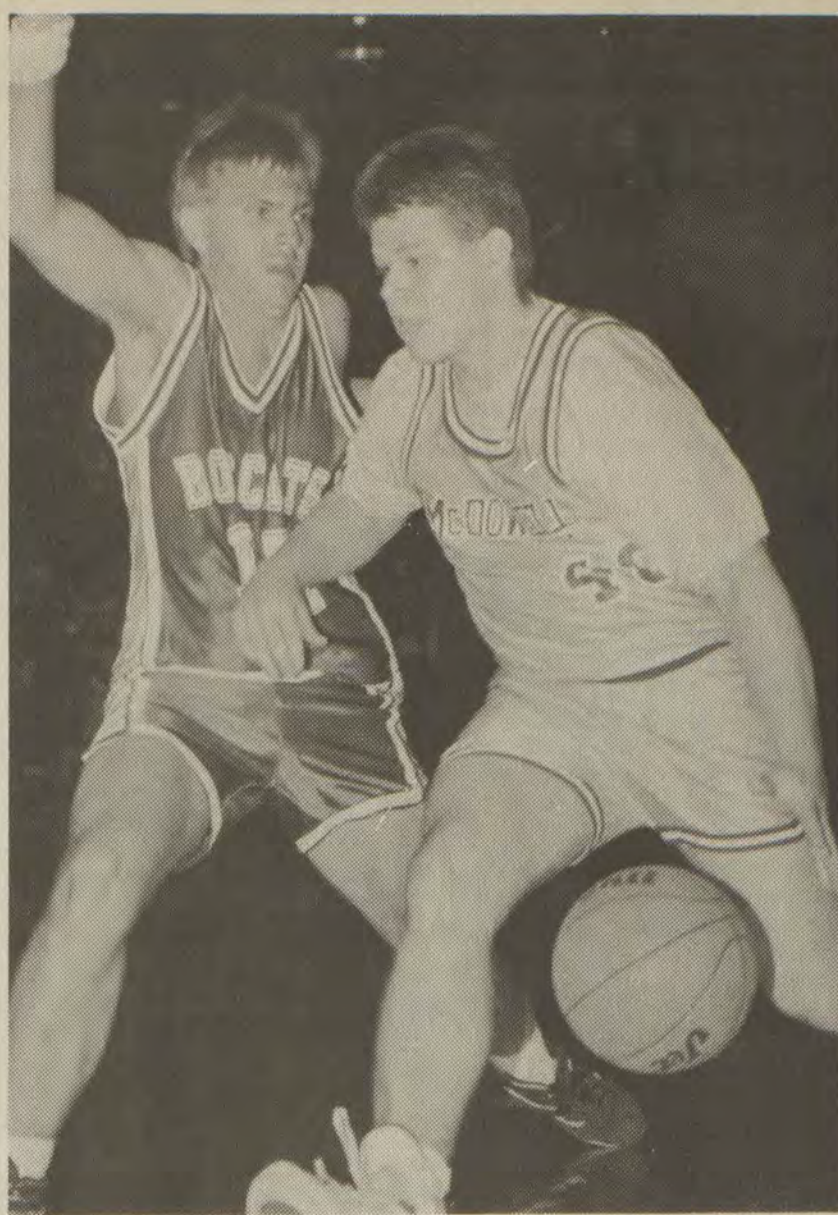

On occasion the coach would allow the team to stop and eat. Even on losses, and there were several of those on the road, the coach was encouraging and friendly to the boys.

District semifinals and finals this weekend

by Ed Taylor
Sports Editor

Two top games highlight tonight's 58th District Tournament semifinals as both boys' and girls' matchups will be battles.

The tournament began on Tuesday night instead of the traditional Wednesday night, and after a one-day break, the tournament resumed last night (Thursday). The semifinals will be played tonight.

McDowell in spoiler role...

The first game tonight should be a good one as the McDowell Lady Devils will matchup against a very good Betsy Layne Lady Cat squad.

Both teams experienced just opposites as the regular season ended. Betsy Layne, the second seed in the tournament, played good basketball earlier in the year and toward the middle of the season started to falter some.

The Lady Cats dropped five of their last six games to finish the season 13-14.

In contrast, McDowell played their best basketball in the final three weeks of the regular season, winning five of their final eight.

The Lady Devils won their final two conference games to place third with a 4-4 record. One of those wins was a home victory over the same Lady Cats.

Betsy Layne has the best center in the county in Dee Dee Martin. Martin will have to take a load on her shoulders and perform well for the Lady Cats to advance to the finals tomorrow night.

Help may come from Missy Clark, who has had an on-again, off-again season. Senior leadership will have to come from Ashla Stanley, senior, and Martin.

One thing that coach Bill Newsome is going for him in this tournament is depth. He has plenty of that and he is not afraid to use it.

McDowell, on the other hand, is short on the bench. But four seniors lead this ball club and all four are starters.

Shelby Howell and Michelle Hall, plus an improved Kristy Mullins, have the Lady Devils thinking in terms of district champions. Howell and Hall have been on a tear as of late. They have averaged not only double-figures in scoring, but in rebounding as well.

Mullins has picked up her offensive game and has come on to show that she can score, as well as handle the ball at point guard.

McDowell biggest asset is not its seniors. The team as a whole plays the pressure game. Opponents have found that the Lady Daredevils' defense is among the best in the region.

It will be a contrast of coaching styles as well. Jimmy Hopkins and Bill Newsome will try to take their teams further in tournament play.

Hopkins is a believer in defense. He believes that good defense will bring out the offense. While he preaches blocking out on the boards, he also stresses taking care of the ball on offense, something they haven't done as consistently as they should.

Newsome, on the other hand, likes the finesse game. Play it smart and not be reckless on offense. A motion-type coach who likes the inside/outside game, Newsome stresses the fact that her players must not commit the unforced turnovers as they have been.

Trojans believe this is their year

Perhaps the best matchup of the tournament can be found with the number two seed Prestonsburg squaring off against number three seed Wheelwright.

Both teams are talented and play hard-nosed basketball. This game will be a fans' treat.

Wheelwright lost both regular season games to Prestonsburg, but finished the final two weeks strong. Winners of six of their final nine games, the Trojans three losses were tough ones.

Wheelwright had conference winner Allen Central on the strings at home before losing and they were up on Prestonsburg in the final quarter, only to lose in the final two minutes.

The biggest loss was to regional power Elkhorn City in a game that looked like a definite win.

This is the final year for Trojan basketball, and Coach Jackie Pack would love for his team to be known as the last Trojan team to win a district title.

The Trojan players are confident entering tonight's game.

"We believe we can win this year," said Charles Johnson. "We're ready and confident this can be our year."

Johnson, who has been consistent from off the Trojan bench, will have see teammates Greg Johnson and John Hall play well. Both are strong scorers for Wheelwright and a good outing is a must for both.

Prestonsburg will come at the Trojans with their guard-oriented offense. And all three can shoot the basketball.

Prestonsburg won six of their final 10 games in February, but dropped their last two to some pretty stiff competition. The Blackcats fell to state Class "A" champion Dilce Combs and they were routed by top-ranked Sheldon Clark in the season finale.

Cory Reitz, Jason Crisp and Joe Whitt form a guard nucleus that could be hard for the Trojans defense to contain. The inside game of Prestonsburg has been inconsistent this year, but with a player the caliber of Aaron Tucker, it is enough to keep any defense honest.

Tucker is the most athletic player on the Prestonsburg squad. He is quick on his feet and he has the ability to shoot well from the outside.

Chris Burke and Eric Fitzner must, I repeat, must come to play if the Blackcats are to return to the regional tournament next week. Both players haven't been that consistent down in Follow the bouncing ball!!

Crystal Tackett (30) of Wheelwright and Prestonsburg's Jamie Clay (10) seemed to be following a bouncing basketball down court. Actually, Tackett is in front on a breakaway where she scored two points. But the two were not enough as the Lady Blackcats routed the Lady Trojans 107-43 in tournament action Tuesday night. (photo by Ed Taylor)

WHERE ARE THE WALLEYE?

For the past two years, fisheries biologists with the KDFWR have mentioned time and time again that several of the state's walleye fisheries are doing exceptionally well, but that Kentucky anglers just aren't taking advantage of what's available.

Part of the reason biologists believe little interest has been shown in walleye is because anglers aren't familiar with the species' habits and seasonal movements. A few years ago, there was a similar situation for striped bass in the Ohio River, especially with regard to the summertime movement of that species.

Therefore, as was done with the strippers, this March the KDFWR will implant some 25 walleye with radio transmitters to track the movements of the fish in Paintsville Lake. The fish will be monitored through the telemetry study for a year, and once biologists get a handle on what the fish are doing, information will be available to anglers.

"The primary purpose of this study is to get the anglers on the fish," said Dan Wilson, assistant district biologist in the Eastern fisheries region.

"We have already documented a very good walleye fishery at Paintsville, and now we want to get a better idea of where these fish are located throughout different times of the year," said Wilson.

"We are offering $25 for the return of transmitter from any of the implanted fish that may be caught, and encourage anglers to get in contact with us if they take one of the sample fish," said Wilson.

"At the completion of the study, we hope to create some maps and compile some good, usable data about the walleye population so anglers can be more successful. There really is some super opportunities out there and we want the angles to get in on it," the biologist concluded.

Plans are also underway for a telemetry study on walleye at Laurel River Lake next spring.

PEABODY WMA USERS WILL NEED PERMIT

The Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources (KDFWR) and Peabody Coal Company, Peabody Development Company and Beaver Dam Coal Company have signed a cooperative agreement that brings approximately 70,000 acres of surface-mined land located in western Kentucky under KDFWR management.

The KDFWR expects to open the area located in Muhlenberg and Ohio counties to public use on or about July 1. Exactly when the area will be opened depends on how quickly user permits can be printed and made available for purchase.

Until permits are available, the Peabody lands will remain closed to public access. This means no turkey hunting will be permitted on the Peabody WMA during the 1993 spring season.

The girls' team was much harder to pick than the boys'. It will certainly be close to pick a Female Player of the Year from this group. There are so many who are deserving.

No, I'm not going to pick one. No! Forget it. Not me. Let those crazy enough to try, do it.

BOARD SAID SO....

Someone asked why the girls' tournament games have not been televised like the boys' and I just told them that I don't know.

But upon asking someone that did know, I found out that WPRG was given permission to skip the other girls' games upon the condition that the local channel carry the championship round.

All radio and television stations were required to carry both girls' and boys' games of the tournament. The radio stations were on hand to broadcast both games back to homes.

WPRG is carrying other district games and air-time might be a shortage. The games are shown on the night they are played and with so many games going on, I suppose the crew feels that right now all they can handle are the boys' games.

Dr. Don Bevins and his crew are doing a great job. I hear alot of comments from folks who take in the games. Some will go home and watch it over again with just that hope of catching themselves on the tube.

Don, scan the crowd more and make sure you cover each side of the gym.

It has been good to have my brother Bob here to visit with Nancy and me. Bob enjoys the tournaments. He also enjoys retirement. He's a former Purple Flash and former superintendent of schools in Georgetown, Ohio.

He has taken up golf and bought himself a boat. Now, that's retirement.

Until Wednesday, good sports everyone and be good sports!

Lady Blackcats

Sophomore Jamie Clay put the Lady Blackcats at and over the century mark when she buried a three-pointer with 1:18 left in the game to make it a 101-39 game. Clay had three treys and finished with 15 points.

Reed tossed in 13 points and Stephanie Music scored 12. Kerrie Merion netted 11 with Raquel Cain and Jamie Ratcliff totaling 10 each.

Kristy Little had five points and Carolyn Jones tossed in two.

Prestonsburg came running out of the gate and when the first quarter ended Prestonsburg was setting on a 36-6 lead.

"This is the first time we have scored this many points in one quarter since Karen Frazier played here," said Clay.

Prestonsburg's full-court pressure was too much for the young and inexperienced Lady Trojans to handle. Steals and good transition by Prestonsburg put the points on the scoreboard.

Reffitt burned the nets for 22 points in the first-half as the Lady Blackcats held an insurmountable lead, 61-19, at the half.

Was Prestonsburg thinking of the century mark?

"Some of the players mentioned it in the locker room at halftime," said Clay. "I didn't say anything about it. I just told them to go back out and play their game and let it happen if it does."

Clay said that she wasn't trying to run the score up, but that it was just one of those games where her team played well.

"We pulled out of our press in the second-half and fell back into a zone defense," she said. "You know me, I don't like to play a zone."

Clay was hoping the game would act as a momentum builder for her ballclub for the rest of the tournament.

"Our kids came ready to play against Wheelwright," said the Prestonsburg mentor. "They made believers out of me. They didn't tire. We had five days to prepare for this game and most of our baskets came off the transition game."

Prestonsburg held a 50-point lead at the end of the third period, 79-29. The lead was 98-35 when Cain went to the free-throw line for two charity tosses. She missed both attempts. But Clay came back with her trey to break the 100 point mark.

After two free throws by Ratcliff that made it 103-39, Clay hit one free throw and drilled her third tri-factor for the final 107-43 score.

Clay hopes that this is just the beginning of something good for her team that has had its ups and downs this season.

"I'm on cloud-nine," she said. "Carolyn played an outstanding game for us. We just looked like the team that I thought we would be all season."

Clay said that she wanted her to team to play a fast paced game in trying to build some momentum for the tournament. "We just needed a game that would be a confidence builder for us," she said. "I would love to get to the finals of the district."

Wheelwright was led by junior Rhonda Thornsby's 15 points. Melissa Tackett added seven and Crystal Isaac tossed in six. Lori Tackett netted six points also and Tiffany Compton scored four.

Nine freshmen make up the Wheelwright Lady Trojans, along with two juniors.

Coach Tommy Pack's ballclub closes out their season with a 1-20 record, but with a lot of promise for the next three years.

The Lady Trojans played hard and although the score was one-sided, they never quit trying.

Prestonsburg goes to 9-15 on the season and advances to the semi-finals against Allen Central (Thursday night).

Battle of the boards!

McDowell

"Mike (Duddleson) really came on in the second-half of the season for us," said Turner. "He has shown that senior leadership that we needed."

McDowell placed four players in double-figures with Hamilton leading the Daredevils with 14 points.

Stanley finished with 12 points and Duddleson tossed in 10. Duddleson led McDowell in rebounds with nine. Wally Sexton also scored 10 points. Matt Rose added seven and Moore totaled six. Earl Cook had one trey for three points. Cook dished off five assists.

McDowell, who was averaging 25 turnovers a game, had only 13 against Betsy Layne.

"In the last five to six games we have really cut down on our turnovers," said Turner.

Newsome led Betsy Layne with 12 points. Hunter scored 10 and Akers tossed in nine. Clark netted five points with Mark Ousley getting four.

Betsy Layne completes the season with a 11-17 record.

Portrait

Back on the bus after the meal, he would tell me how he would play the game over in his mind a hundred times until the next game. He could always find some positives from the losses.

There were times when the coach thought that the boys were down on themselves and had stopped giving their best effort. He started different players and different combinations of players. He got the players' attention and they went back to playing hard-nosed basketball. One must give Coach Turner and the team credit for hanging in there.

The team would play a top-rated team such as Shelby Valley very close one night and lose to a lower-rated team the next game.

Near the end of the season the team came together and began winning games that they were supposed to win. Coach Turner must be given credit for keeping the team from folding during all those weeks of losing.

If I had a son (or daughter) who played basketball, I would want him/her to play for a coach like Johnny Ray Turner. As far as I could tell (and I'm fairly good at detecting such things), Coach Turner never put winning above the welfare of his players.

As it stands now, it appears that Coach Turner will be the coach at South Floyd High. If that is the case, look for that school to make some noises in the 15th Region in the next few years.

Who knows, maybe I will travel with the team again next year.

Editor's note: Mr. Elliott teaches journalism at McDowell High School.
