Unanswered questions continue to stall start of 911 telephone service

by Susan Allen Staff Writer

Floyd County's E-911 board needs answers to several questions before a recommendation can be made to the fiscal court on where the system should be located.

At a meeting Tuesday, board members decided that a written cost estimate for locating the system in the county needs to be prepared before a decision can be made whether the county or the Kentucky State Police operate the emergency service.

Floyd Sheriff Paul Hunt Thompson told board members that an estimate had been prepared but it was in the possession of Prestonsburg Mayor Jerry Fannin. Fannin did not attend Tuesday's meeting because he is hospitalized with a neck injury, Mike Wells, a Prestonsburg fireman, reported to the board.

Thompson and Fannin drew up the proposal, which would require an additional four dispatchers to handle the emergency calls.

Dispatching services for the county and the city of Prestonsburg have been combined and are located at city hall, Thompson said. The city and county employ seven dispatchers to handle routine police calls, the sheriff said.

Also Tuesday, the board decided that a comprehensive evaluation of communication systems in the county needs to be done. The various fire departments, police agencies and emergency service providers in the county have their own radio frequencies. The evaluation is needed to determine what equipment may have to be purchased in order for all those departments to have compatible radio systems, Thompson said.

"Those departments will stay on the same frequency and we need to make sure the PSAP (Public Service Answering Point) can communicate with the responders," Thompson said. "We adapt at the PSAP point to them."

Bob Meyer is named as Floyd Countian of the Year by Chamber

Service to Floyd County "in two extremely difficult positions" merited Floyd County Judge-Executive Bob Meyer Floyd Countian of the Year honors at the annual Chamber of Commerce banquet June 1.

Meyer was recognized for his service as county judge and as custodian of the Solid Waste Program, both of which he "unselfishly volunteered to accept with no thought of rewards to himself, but with plenty of headaches," according to last year's winner Paul P. Hughes, who presented Meyer with the award.

Calling Meyer "a dedicated and tireless worker," Hughes said Meyer "made it clear from the outset that he was not interested in political considerations...his interest is in providing good government services to the people of Floyd County."

Harold Telephone Company and Tel-Com were given the Business of the Year Award by the chamber. The award was presented by Clarence Traum, CEO of Highlands Regional Medical Center, which received the same honor last year.

Paul Gearheart, president of Harold Telephone, accepted the award and was also honored during the banquet for his selection as First Runner Up for Kentucky Small Business of the Year Award. That certificate was presented by Bill Federhof, director of the Kentucky SBA Office.

Named Business Person of the Year was J.W. Kinzer of Kinzer Drilling Company, Allen, who accepted the award from last year's winner, Dolores Smith, vice president of R/S Truck Body Company Inc.

Three new honorees were inducted into the Floyd County Hall of Fame at the banquet:

William G. Francis, Francis, Kazee & Francis, for his contributions to the Jenny Wiley Theatre, tourism and education;

Bill Harvey Howard, superintendent of the Prestonsburg Utility Commission, for his service in providing clean water and fire protection throughout the county; and Clarence Traum, CEO of Highlands Regional Medical Center, for his efforts at establishing Highlands as a premier health care organization in Eastern Kentucky.

Those awards were presented by Dr. Chandra Varia and Burl W. Spurlock, president of First Commonwealth Bank, previous Hall of Fame inductees.

An unexpected award was presented to the chamber itself by Edna Higginbotham, director of the Carl Perkins Job Corps Center. The plaque was presented to "the Chamber and its members" in thanks for support of the center's operations.

The Kentucky Opry's Munroe Birdshet was the main speaker for the banquet, filling in for U.S. Rep. Hal Rogers, who canceled his scheduled appearance due to the recent death of his wife.

Judge is forced to recuse in 911 suit

by Susan Allen Staff Writer

A special judge will be named to hear two cases pending in Floyd Circuit Court related to the county's E-911 service because County Attorney Jim Hammond would not agree for a local judge to preside over the matters.

Prestonsburg attorney Ned Pillersdorf called Hammond's response an obstacle to getting the cases resolved.

"Jim Hammond's not consenting to Judge Caudill hearing the case is a continuation of obstructionist conduct," Pillersdorf said Monday. "He is being an obstructionist and the effects on the county are devastating. South Central Bell is no longer making payments to the county. Those monies are being deposited with the clerk."

Pillersdorf said that there was no reason for Judge Caudill to recuse from the case and that it could now take weeks to have the issue resolved.

In a hearing Friday, Floyd Judge Danny P. Caudill recused himself from the case because Hammond would not agree that the judge's participation is immaterial.

Judge Caudill had sought a ruling on whether he should preside over the cases because he is himself a taxpayer and a telephone service subscriber.

Earlier this year, a group of 10 taxpayers filed a lawsuit seeking a refund of monies paid for the past five years to implement an E-911 emergency service in the county. That lawsuit claimed that county officials had illegally collected over $800,000 in 911 monies because no ordinance had been adopted by the fiscal court.

Health code violations are corrected on time at schools

by Janice Shepherd Managing Editor

Several schools in the county faced early closure last month after inspectors from the Floyd County Health Department found critical violations in the schools.

Tuesday, May 30, health department environmentalist Russell H. Wallace gave Betsy Layne Elementary's cafeteria one hour to correct a potentially harmful situation. A walk-in freezer in the school cafeteria was not functioning properly, Wallace reported, and frozen food items were beginning to thaw.

He recommended that the food be moved to a new freezer in a new school facility that will be in use next school year.

Another critical component of the inspection at Betsy Layne involved the final rinse of cookware. The final rinse of cookware in the three-compartment sink was well in excess of 200 P.P.M. of chlorine solution. Levels over 200 are considered to be toxic, Wallace said.

Wallace inspected the cafeteria about one hour later and withdrew the notice of imminent closure. Wallace reported that both critical violations had been corrected and cafeteria personnel had been instructed on the proper sanitizing level that should be maintained during manual dishwashing procedures.

At McDowell Elementary last week, Wallace approved the school's reopening after it had been closed for four days due to flooding in the primary classroom building. He issued a boil water advisory and recommended that drinking water be brought into the school until the advisory was lifted the next day. He

Fired city worker files wrongful discharge suit

by Susan Allen Staff Writer

A former public works supervisor for the city of Prestonsburg has sued Mayor Jerry Fannin and the city claiming he was wrongfully dismissed from his job last year.

Prestonsburg attorney Keith Bartley filed a civil lawsuit on behalf of Mike Meade, who was terminated from his job on June 7, 1994. The lawsuit claims Meade was fired in a manner inconsistent with the city's personnel policy and state law.

"That the actions of the defendants have been malicious, intentional and outrageous, and therefore...Mike Meade should be entitled to punitive damages," the suit claims.

Fannin was named individually and in his capacity as mayor in the lawsuit. Fannin could not be reached for comment on the lawsuit because he remained hospitalized Tuesday with a neck injury.

Meade is seeking unspecified punitive damages, a trial by jury and attorney fees.

(Note: a lawsuit represents only the plaintiff's cause of action.)

Violations

also declared the playground off limits until flood debris could be removed.

Earlier in May, Harold Elementary's cafeteria was also put on a one-hour notice to correct three critical violations. Cafeteria personnel had stored rusted cans of food with usable food products and had also stored toxic items with food equipment. The workers also had not maintained proper sanitizing levels for their wiping cloths. The dishwasher was also functioning inadequately. Corrections were made within the hour.

Martin Elementary's cafeteria faced similar problems. The chlorine solution for the wiping cloths was found to be in excess of recommended levels. Employees were instructed about proper procedures and the cafeteria passed the second inspection.

At Prestonsburg High School, inspector John L. Bailey gave the school 90 days to make major repairs to the school or it won't be able to open in the fall.

Bailey rated the school 67, just seven points above a failing score which would have caused immediate closure. The school needs more water fountains and major repairs need to be made to floors, ceilings and in bathrooms, Bailey reported. Bailey also said that, although custodians were keeping the sanitation level very high, the upstairs boys' bathroom had a strong urine smell. Bailey said the bathroom floor was tiled and that the tile had trapped the urine so that it could not be disinfected. He suggested removing the tile and using the concrete floor. He also recommended that the school replace the urinals.

On May 30, Allen Central High School was also given notice to correct several violations this summer or face closing. Health environmentalist John Bailey gave the school 90 days to put its drinking fountains and locker room showers in order, repair ceilings and floors; stop leaks in the chemistry lab and home economics rooms; recharge fire extinguishers and improve water pressure in the girls' bathrooms.

Tuesday is that the E-911 board must be independent of the fiscal court.

Thompson said he felt the board must be able to act independently of the court because "some hard decisions are going to have to be made" concerning the implementation and operation of the system.

"There's going to be a lot of people pushing and shoving," Thompson said.

Judge-Executive Bob Meyer explained that the court would have to make some decisions related to the system. He added that the court can delegate as much authority to the E-911 board as it deems necessary.

Meyer indicated that the issue would be brought before the court.

In other discussions Tuesday:

• Meyer said that the fiscal court will have to address the lack of fire protection in some areas of the county and that all persons in the county will have to be covered by a fire district before the system can be implemented.

• Meyer told board members that there will be a meeting Monday, June 12 at the Big Sandy Area Development District with emergency responders to discuss communication equipment and other concerns. He urged board members to attend the meeting, which begins at 7 p.m.

• South Central Bell representatives will not give a date when addressing and mapping the county will be complete, the judge-executive said. "I can't get even a tentative date when it will be complete," Meyer said. So far, approximately 70 percent of the process has been completed, Meyer said. A 95 percent completion of the process is needed before the county can go on line with an E-911 system, he added.

• The board agreed to meet Thursday, June 15 at 10 a.m. to go over any recommendations to be presented at the regular fiscal court meeting on June 16.

Board members Chris Waugh, Raymond Griffith, David Marlee Sammons and Fannin were absent from Tuesday's meeting.

• Honors night for grades 4-8 on June 9, at 7 p.m.

• Eighth grade graduation June 11 at 4 p.m.

Suit

sued the court and Judge-Executive Bob Meyer claiming that the county could not adopt an ordinance now, establishing the special tax after it has been collected for the past five years.

The court adopted an E-911 ordinance last month.

Under Rules of the Supreme Court, rule 4.300, a judge should disqualify himself if "he knows that he, individually or as a fiduciary... has a financial interest in the subject matter in controversy or in a party to the proceedings, or any other interest that could be substantially affected by the outcome of the proceedings."

Under the rule, a financial interest is defined as "ownership of a legal or equitable interest, however small, or a relationship as director, advisor or other active participant in the affairs of a party..."

Judge Caudill could have remained on the case, under the Supreme Court rule, if "the parties and lawyers, independently of the judge's participation, all agree in writing that the judge's relationship is immaterial or that his financial interest is insubstantial."

Judge Caudill pointed the rule out to the attorneys at a May 24 hearing and gave them until June 2 to file a written response agreeing that he could hear the case.

Chief Judge Stephen "Nick" Frazier will assign the case to another judge.

Liberty of thought is the life of the soul—Voltaire

Ashes to ashes...

by Scott Perry

Egyptian mythology tells us of a bird known as the phoenix which, every five or six hundred years, burned itself to death on a funeral pyre, only to emerge, reborn, from the ashes.

It's an interesting tale and, perhaps, more closely associated with reality than we might expect.

With state and federal grand juries convening to focus their x-ray vision on Floyd County's political establishment, we could very well be seeing the kindling of our own funeral pyre.

If our system and methods of governance are, indeed, reduced to ashes, then the opportunity will be there for a rebirth of significant measure.

Something to consider:

Changing Floyd County's form of government, from the magisterial to commissioner system could help close the gaps that exist between areas of the county and make county government more responsive to the overall needs of its people and less susceptible to district-by-district divisions.

Under the commission form of government, fiscal court seats would not be so easily controlled by small groups, since general elections would be by county-wide vote.

Critics of the commission form of government will argue that it isolates government from the people by reducing the number of districts and the number of representatives on the fiscal court.

That's a honest point.

But divvying up county resources equally among districts, the way things are done now, isn't adequate anymore.

Besides, too many decisions today are based on political expediency, rather than public need.

Finally, we'll suggest it's time to try something new because the old way isn't working all that well.

If it was, we wouldn't be overrun with FBI agents and attorney general's investigators.

Changing the form of government is ultimately a matter for you, the voters to decide.

It's worth discussion and debate.

Now is as good a time as any to begin.

Home economics students urged to contact teacher

Editor:

This letter is written with the hope that it will be read by women who had Hazel Irene Hill as their Home Economics teacher while attending Prestonsburg High School during the 1940s, 50s and early 60s.

Hazel Irene is in poor health following cancer surgery for the second time recently and during the past week buried her husband, Stanley Holland, who had been an invalid for several years. She can be reached at 6030 Allison Avenue, Indian Springs, Ohio 45011.

I am sure Hazel would be pleased to hear from her former pupils.

New college grad thanks supporters

Editor:

I am writing this letter of thanks to a couple of people who are part of two outstanding organizations. These two people are Carl Hall and Sharon Burchett, and the organizations that they are part of are Vocational Rehabilitation and the JTPA Dislocated Workers Program, respectively.

I have just graduated college and obtained an associate of applied science degree in Radiography at Hazard Community College.

It would normally only take 2 or 3 years to complete this degree (it is considered a two-year course by the University of Kentucky Community College system), but it took me four years to accomplish this due to the availability of the class.

Without the guidance from Carl and Sharon, or the resources I received from their respective organizations, such as tuition, books, uniforms and gas, I really don't think I could've finished college due to the costs, which even at a community college can be enormous.

We've all heard people say "The system doesn't work." I know that I have said it myself and in some ways maybe it doesn't, but with the right people, such as Carl and Sharon, and the organizations to which they work for, the system can and does work.

They have both told me that the success I've had is due to my own hard work and determination, and to some extent I would have to agree. But, I would like to add again that the support they and their organizations provided, helped me concentrate more on my studies and less on the financial burden of college.

Thanks, Carl and Sharon. Your help was and is very much appreciated!

Citizen decries inhumane treatment

Editor:

I am terribly grieved at the harsh and cruel treatment meted out to the recently convicted Floyd County officials, Jimmy Stumbo and Sue DeRossett.

From memory, then deputy judge-executive Jimmy Stumbo was convicted of theft of public funds and selling drugs. His extraordinary cruel sentence was probation and drug counseling—somewhere in Florida.

Deputy circuit clerk Sue DeRossett pleaded guilty to three counts of wanton endangerment, apparently shooting at her husband once and firing her weapon three times while scuffling with the state police. She now faces the horrible fate of a one-year probation jail sentence. Both her lawyer and the prosecuting attorney feel confident that this cruel sentence will be imposed.

Fellow citizens, our people should rise up in righteous furor at this terrible injustice to our beloved courthouse officials. Almost all of us know men and women from our creeks and hollows who have been charged with similar crimes as Jimmy and Sue.

Most of these ordinary folks were given free room and board with the state at Eddyville. Some for 10, 15 or 20 years. Many learned new skills and were employed in the transportation industry making license plates.

As is almost always the case, it just boils down to who you know. We must simply insist that our beloved courthouse people not be left out, that they get the same privileged treatment that we ordinary creekers get. After all, most of them seem to deserve a vacation with the state, also.

Coffee Break

by Scott Perry

G. Gordon Liddy, one of the head crooks in Watergate who has become something of a rabble-raising radio man, is urging Americans to be like him.

Liddy, who has provided explicit instructions on how to shoot and kill federal agents, is using his, um, bull crap pulpit now to urge us to ignore laws relating to a ban on assault weapons, suggesting the Constitution permits us to own any kinds of weapons we want.

Maybe it does, and maybe it doesn't, but we sure don't need any lectures on constitutional rights from Liddy, a hypocrite of the first order.

He certainly didn't think much of our constitutional rights while he was spying, stealing and picking locks for the Nixon re-election campaign 25 years ago.

One of the best guarantees the First Amendment offers us on freedom of speech is that while whackos like Liddy can say anything they want, we don't have to listen to any of it.

When bad men try to tell us what is good, freedom from speech may be our most cherished right.

The banks aren't closed, the mail is running, and we don't get a day off of work, but today is a special holiday just the same.

It's Freedom of the Press Day in America.

Hooray!

To mark this rather inauspicious occasion, we'll just do what we do every Wednesday...put the paper out.

You may not realize it, but you're in on the celebration, too.

Why, you're reading it, aren't you?

Since we're on the subject of free speech, etc., how about this uproar over the trashy and violent products from Hollywood and the music industry?

Are these examples of constitutionally protected freedoms or just business as usual?

Probably a bit of both.

There's no doubt that corporate America is raking in big bucks from the sex and violence portrayed on the silver screen and in the lyrics found in "gangster" rap music.

As long as there is money to be made on these products, the producers of them aren't likely to be compelled to assume any moral responsibility for distributing them.

Morals and money don't mix.

Let's remember, too, that younger generations are required by some unwritten natural law to be as repulsive as possible, particularly to their parents' generation.

We accomplished that with long hair, burned bras and rock 'n roll.

The more disgust we show at their chosen form of rebellion, the more disgusting it's likely to become.

Perhaps we should pay less attention to fads and more attention to history, which offers one real lesson on matters such as these...

This, too, shall pass.

Our young folks have no exclusive rights to sleaze, either.

Their music may be rotten, their attitudes may be anti-social and their manners may be forgotten, but they're not all bad.

And, our generation sure hasn't been the perfect role model.

We've killed one president; turned another into a crook; made religion a business that preys on the weak; adopted a system of politics that promotes intolerance; and we've sought self-gratification ahead of all else.

And we criticize them?

Kids today are too smart to fall for that do-as-we-say-not-as-we-do line.

If we expect them to clean up their acts, we ought to do a little laundry of our own, first.

And, we can start by practicing what we preach.

Officers give a 'Trooper Teddy' for comfort

Kentucky State Police detective Jim Stephens, at left, and trooper Ron Peppi gave Ashley Slone a 'Trooper Teddy' Tuesday at Duff Elementary. Slone's mother, Lisa, was killed earlier this year in an auto accident at Garrett. Stephens said that a teddy bear is often given to accident or abuse victims in order to comfort them. The girl was riding in the vehicle with her mother when the accident happened. Ashley Slone was not seriously injured. (photo by Susan Allen)

24-hour relay at Kentucky Kingdom raises about $24,000 for Easter Seals

The 4th Annual 24 Hour Relay for Easter Seals was held May 12-13 at Kentucky Kingdom with teams from Kentucky and Southern Indiana participating this year. Through team pledges and corporate sponsorships, $24,089.62 was raised for Easter Seals. The Relay has raised close to $150,000 for Easter Seals in the past four years.

"We are very pleased with the success of this year's 24 Hour Relay," said Guion Miller, executive director for the Kentucky Easter Seal Society. "These teams turned around in less than a year to support the move to a spring Relay. We are now on a new cycle that will help us expand into an even larger Relay than before."

This year's Relay moved from the fall to the spring and ten corporate teams participated. Each Relay team had a maximum of 21 individuals that committed to raising at least $2,100 for Easter Seals. After asking for pledges before the event, teams participants raised funds for every mile walked, run, or wheeled. Team miles were logged using a designated course around Kentucky Kingdom's Hurricane Bay.

The top fundraising teams for the 1995 24 Hour Relay for Easter Seals were:

1st place: Century 21, Joe Guy Hagan Hurstbourne and St. Matthews Louisville—$4,734.46; 2nd place: Century 21, First Choice Realtors Radcliff—$2,664.76; 3rd place: Kentucky AMVETS, 3rd District—$2,622.20.

The 24 Hour Relay was supported jointly by the Kentucky Easter Seal Society and the Bridgepoint Center in Southern Indiana.

Daly has been a Training Broker and Counselor at the Vanderburgh Training Center for the past three years working with dislocated workers, many of whom were miners and brings that experience to the Warrick center.

She is a graduate of the University of Evansville and will receive her masters degree from Western Kentucky University in counseling in December. Warrick Center is proposed to retrain over 300 miners during the project and will actively recruit miners that are out of work.

Each miner will receive individual career counseling to determine the most appropriate training available in area educational institutions.

The project will pay for tuition, books and depending on individual eligibility it may pay for transportation and other special needs during training.

Dental Health Today

by Michael K. McKinney, D.M.D.

CHILD'S FIRST DENTAL VISIT

A child going to the dentist for the first time is often a handful of anxieties. Any dentist using the right techniques can transform the most terrified child into a cooperative patient who is no longer afraid—a child who will leave the office with a smile on his face.

The first thing a dentist must do is convince the child of his honesty. Children are smart. They are not easily fooled. If a youngster is promised that a particular thing will be done, the dentist had better be sure he does it.

Usually, the dentist begins with something easy. He says, "Today I am going to count your teeth." After that he must count the teeth using whatever means necessary. Remember this: The child often cries before anything is done to him (even a first haircut). He is not hurt, and the dentist has to prove that he can be trusted to do exactly what he says he is going to do—no more, no less. The noise and hysterics generally disappear after the first visit. If the dentist establishes his reliability and that he is trustworthy, there will rarely be any more trouble.

It is very important that the parents help at home. They should encourage the child to take good care of their teeth and to not be afraid of the dentist. A parent should never threaten a child with dental treatment, this is what sets up lifetime dental fear.

The play will be performed at Prestonsburg Community College's Pike Auditorium on the evenings of June 9 and June 10 at 8:00 p.m. Tickets for the performance are available at the door or from cast members, and a five dollar donation is requested. As this is a non-profit educational production, all donations will be used for expenses associated with this production or future productions.

lice—fulfilling the prophecy that twins parted at birth will die on the day they find out their heritage. Actress Jennifer Taylor says, "This drama is one that will touch every person in the audience. The characters and events are true to life and, you find yourself sharing both in their triumphs and, more often, in their bitter failures. Even though we've done the final scene what seems like a million times, I'm always touched and get chills." The cast of this production includes Ashley Turner, Nelson Gullett, Stephen Stone, Amanda Howard, Chris Reynolds, Herb Stapleton, Chris Stapleton, David McFaddin, Jennifer Taylor, Jimmy Wheeler, Hayley Trimble, and

Kent Leedy. It is directed by John R. Williamson, and Virginia Robinson with Cindy McCarty as student director and Janet Taylor as stage manager. Others involved with the production include Joey Estep, photography; Stephanie Hannah and Beth Brown, make-up; Cindy McCarty and Jennifer Taylor, publicity; Kristy Estep, prop mistress; and Jody Conley, musical accompanist. cal from set construction to final production. Selection will be made through auditions, dedication, and previous experience. Auditions are open to all Eastern Kentuckians, grades 7-Adult. Participants must purchase a script and T-shirt. David McFaddin says, "I would encourage anyone with an interest in the theatre to come out to the auditions. I've been involved in three productions, and I feel that I improve each time. I always walk away with great memories of the experiences I've had and the other people involved, as well as a sense of achievement, an appreciation of the theatre, and high hopes and expectations for future productions."

Bailey places second in discus, Robinson fourth

by Ed Taylor
Sports Editor

The Kentucky High School Athletic Association (KHSAA) State Track and Field Meet got underway under some cloudy conditions and intermittent rain.

But the skies did clear in the afternoon as umbrellas were used to shield off the sunshine that came from behind the clouds.

Three Floyd County schools took part in the events. South Floyd took part in the Class A meet while Betsy Layne and Allen Central participated in the Class AA division.

Allen Central's Chris Bailey continued to surprise fans, but not his coach, in the discus.

"We've always said that Chris had the build for being a good discus thrower," said Allen Central coach Dewey Jamerson. "He's 6' 3" and has those long arms."

Bailey, who was always the number three thrower for the Ridge Runners in his freshman and sophomore seasons, emerged as the number one thrower this year.

He placed second in the state with a throw of 143' 2" -- a new school record at Allen Central.

Shawn Robinson placed fourth in the state with his throw of 140' 3". Robinson had the throw in the preliminary round and set a new school record with the toss.

Bailey surpassed the record with one of his own on his first throw in the state finals. Bailey had a throw of 142' 11".

Robinson's discus slipped out of his hand on his next throw and Bailey once again set a new school record with his toss of 143 feet, 2 inches.

The throw moved Bailey up from sixth place to second. On Robinson's last throw as a senior at Allen Central, he went for the "gusto" and sent the discus sailing. But he fouled on the toss that traveled an estimated 148 feet or more.

Coach Jamerson said that Bailey's technique is not the best, but he gets results.

"Chris has never placed lower than second in any meet he has been in all year," said Jamerson. "Saturday was by far the best day for us."

Allen Central set a new school record in a state meet by scoring 12 points.

"It is the most points that we have ever scored in a state final," said the Allen Central coach. "We've never had double medal winners before for the boys, especially in the same event."

Out of the 54 teams that took part in the state meet, Allen Central placed 13th.

Robinson made the preliminary cuts and placed seventh in the state in shot put. Robinson had a throw of 43 feet, 11 inches, his second best ever.

Estill Stumbo broke ahead of the field in the men's 300-meter hurdles and looked to place high in the state finals only to stumble and fall after clearing the final hurdle. Stumbo crawled across the finish line, but was passed before he could finish. He

Coach Smallwood satisfied with season at South Floyd

by Ed Taylor

For the third consecutive year, Lori Tackett placed seventh in women's discus in the state finals at the Kentucky High School Athletic Association (KHSAA) Track and Field Meet.

While the top six finishers are awarded medals, the meet officials realized the accomplishments of Tackett and recognized her at the infield of the facility -- a great honor.

Tackett placed seventh with a throw of 92 feet, 9 inches.

Tiffany Compton placed sixth in the state finals in women's discus with a throw of 94 feet, 1 inch. Coach Keith Smallwood said that it has been a very gratifying season.

"I am very satisfied with the way we performed here in Lexington," he said. "Lori Tackett did a great job for us despite a bad case of poison ivy. It was her third straight year of finishing seventh."

Coach Smallwood said that the performance of Compton was a surprise.

"Normally, when you go to the state finals away from home, kids usually don't do as well," he said. "Tiffany hasn't broke 90 feet all year and then in the state finals, she throws over 92 feet. That surprised me."

"Again, I didn't realize it, but this was the school's first medal in the state meet," he said.

Compton took eighth place in the state finals in women's shot put. She had a toss of 32 feet, 2 inches for eighth place.

"In her warm up throws she broke 34 feet, but just didn't quite do it in the finals," said Smallwood. "But she knows what she had to do for next year and she will be working hard this summer getting ready for next year."

Coach Smallwood liked the way seventh grader Lindsey Hall handled herself in the state finals of the 3200-meter race. She placed 16th overall and that is the way she came into the meet ranked.

"I'm very happy with what she did for us," he said. "I walked down to the starting line with her and I asked her if she was nervous. She said yes. I told her about all the school kids that would like to be here and are not."

"She ran a good race. She did run as fast as she did in the regionals because she didn't pace herself. But she is going to be a good one here at South Floyd," he said.

Coach Smallwood said he couldn't have asked for anymore from the three state finalists South Floyd sent to Lexington.

"We had the two smallest girls in the discus throw," he said. "Lindsey is going to get better and she definitely has a bright future here. Tiff knows what it is all about now."

"We're definitely going to be stronger next year. I am tickled to death with them. Last year we didn't even score in the state finals. This year we did. That's a great feeling."

"We had to run against schools that have track and field facilities. That made a lot of difference. We competed against schools that had good cross-country programs."

Smallwood said there is a difference in Eastern Kentucky kids and those at larger schools.

"Tiff played basketball and ran track. Lori played basketball, softball and track," said Smallwood. "Those we competed against were concentrating on one sport, track."

The South Floyd coach said that he believes that not only his South Floyd team, but all of Floyd County teams are gaining on the other schools.

"We just need our own track and field facility to work out on," he said. "Hopefully, we can have that here."

Coach Smallwood stated that having students who want to compete is necessary.

"I've got a lot of good kids," he said. "I think that last year was too easy for us and this year we got a wake up call," he said.

Last year South Floyd breezed through their regular season, as well as the regionals. This season they placed third in the region.

"I heard them talk coming home about going to summer camp this year," he said. "I've never heard that from them before. We plan to work this summer on weights and get stronger."

"Our kids need to realize that colleges are looking for good track and field people. Crystal Isaac is a good example of that (Isaac is currently running track at Cumberland College on a scholarship). Justin Ray will be going to Cumberland next year."

Smallwood is hoping to get his kids interested in running in the Bluegrass State Games next month.

He also wants to take his team to more invitational meets next season and is hoping that a Floyd County Conference can be formed next season.

"Floyd County is strong in track now," said Smallwood. "But we just don't have the tradition that other places have. We need to get the grade school kids involved."

Bo Rogers placed eighth in the state in discus for South Floyd. Adam Wright finished eighth overall in the shot put.

The Raiders' 400-meter relay team took 14th place and the 3200-meter relay team finished 15th.

Cubs mercy Rangers 22-10 behind Sosebee

by Ed Taylor
Sports Editor

It wasn't exactly a pitcher's duel, but the baseball was certainly flying around the ball yard when the Prestonsburg Cubs and Rangers met at Archer Park.

John Sosebee picked up the win in going the distance for the Cubs. But he was racked hard as the Rangers collected 10 runs in the game on just four hits. He did fan eight batters and walked an equal number.

Matt Setser suffered the loss, working the first two and two-thirds innings. Setser allowed 10 runs on just three hits, walking nine batters and striking out four.

Josh Meade hurled the final two innings of the abbreviated game. He allowed 12 runs on three hits, walking six and fanning four.

The Cubs sent 14 batters to the plate in the third inning while scoring nine times. Eight batters paraded to the plate in the fourth and fifth innings for the Cubs with five runs scoring in the fourth and seven in the fifth.

Sosebee was the leader at the plate for the Cubs as well, with two hits, a double and home run. He collected four RBIs.

The Rangers' pitching suffered big time, walking 15 batters and hitting six.

The Rangers grabbed a 3-0 lead in the first with the Cubs coming back with a single run in the bottom of the inning. It was 7-1 after the Rangers batted in the top half of the third. Then the Cubs exploded for nine in the bottom of the third to assume a 10-7 lead.

The Rangers plated a lone run in the fifth and put two across in the sixth. The seven-run fifth for the Cubs gave them a 12-run deficit and the mercy rule came into play.

Josh Meade had two hits for the Rangers.

Slone drives in three, Arnett homers in 11-6 Reds' win

by Ed Taylor
Sports Editor

The Prestonsburg Rangers went down to their third consecutive loss in a 11-6 setback at the hands of the Prestonsburg Reds last Monday at the Auxier ballpark.

The games were moved to the Auxier field after flood waters made the Archer Park field virtually unplayable.

Craig Prince went the distance for the Reds in securing the win. He worked six innings, allowing six runs on nine hits. He fanned eight while walking five.

Zack Bradshaw suffered the loss in a three inning stint. He gave up nine runs on six hits before leaving. Matt Setser hurled the final two innings for the Rangers, allowing two runs on three hits.

Bradshaw walked six batters and struck out five. Setser had two strikeouts and he walked two.

The Rangers took an early lead with a run in the first inning after retiring the Reds in order in the top of the inning. Prince walked shortstop Josh Slone who scored on Chad Wallen's RBI single.

The Rangers made it a 3-0 game with two in the second. Chris Crider singled home Josh Shepherd and Bradshaw, who had reached on walks.

A bases loaded walk and a two-base error helped the Reds take the lead in the second inning. Wallen, the Rangers' catcher, sailed a pickoff attempt into left field to score two runs. Slone then ripped a triple to add two more and give the Reds a 5-3 lead.

It was big third inning for the Reds as four more runs came home for a 9-3 game. Greg Arnett and Slone had RBI singles and a run scored on an error.

The Rangers made a pitching change in the fourth as Matt Setser relieved Bradshaw. Arnett gave the right-hander a rather rude welcome as he blasted what would have been a two-run home run.

However, Arnett was called out before he touched home plate when a teammate congratulated him on the base paths.

The Rangers rallied for three runs in the fifth inning with four straight hits. Setser tripled and scored on Slone's double. Wallen singled and came around to score, along with Slone, on Josh Meade's two-run double.

But the rally was too little too late as six of the last seven Ranger batters went down.

Slone had three hits and three RBIs for the Reds. Arnett had the two runs batted in and two hits.

Wallen was a perfect three-for-three at the plate for the Rangers. Meade and Setser had two hits each. Meade drove in two runs. Crider had two RBIs.

Final run!

Nikki Reid had an excellent high school track career and she placed sixth in the state in last weekend's state final track and field meet in Lexington. Reid received a medal for her sixth place finish. (photo by Ed Taylor)

- The Junior Olympics will be held at the Boyd County track and field facility on June 24. For more information about this event, call Coach Jamerson at 358-9543.
- Allen Central will lose only two seniors from this year's team.

Burke, Hunter combine for two-hitter in 7-1 win

by Ed Taylor
 Sports Editor

Jason Burke hurled no-hit baseball for three innings and Gary Hunter allowed a run and two hits over the final four as the Betsy Layne posted a 7-1 win over Prestonsburg in Babe Ruth Senior League baseball Sunday afternoon at the Allen Park.

Donnie Combs suffered the setback for Prestonsburg in going the distance. He allowed all seven runs, only one earned, in giving up seven hits. Combs struck out seven batters and hit one while walking four.

Prestonsburg committed nine errors behind combs.

Prestonsburg managed only two hits in the game, a seventh-inning single by Brandon Hicks and Robbie Risner's sixth inning double.

The game was tied at 1 when Burke left, giving the win to Hunter in relief.

Betsy Layne scored six runs in the fourth inning to snap a 1-1 tie. Prestonsburg committed three errors in the inning, making all six runs unearned.

Mike Roberts picked up an RBI in the frame and Hunter had a two-run single for Betsy Layne.

Prestonsburg's only lead came in the third when Ryan Ortega walked and moved to third on two errors by James Jarrell from first base. He scored when Hicks bounced out to shortstop.

Betsy Layne tied the game in the bottom of the third. With one out, Burke was hit by a pitch. He moved to third on a sacrifice fly off the bat of Jarrell, went to second on a wild pitch and scored on Brandon Castle's RBI single.

Burke had two strike outs in the three innings he worked. He walked three. Hunter fanned one batter and issued four walks.

Thomas Ratliff and Donnie Combs drew two-out walks from Burke in the first inning, but were left stranded when Risner fanned. Prestonsburg left eight runners on base.

Joesph Risner had two hits in the game for Betsy Layne. Hunter finished with two runs batted in.

Prestonsburg will face the Beaver Creek Reds tonight at 5 p.m. with Betsy Layne entertaining Pikeville at 7 p.m. Both games will be played at the Allen Park.

Jarrell's home run powers Betsy Layne past Beaver Creek

by Ed Taylor
 Sports Editor

The Betsy Layne senior league team got some good pitching and timely hitting to post a 11-1 mercy win over the Beaver Creek Reds this past Sunday afternoon at the Allen Park.

James Jarrell drilled a long home run over the right field fence with Jerry Lafferty on board to give Betsy Layne the 10-run lead, bringing in the mercy rule.

Greg Hunter started on the hill for Betsy Layne and worked the first two innings before giving way to Jerry Lafferty in the third.

Hunter allowed the Reds their lone run in the second on a walk to Larry Hunter, and Alan Hicks' long double that scored Hunter. Hicks was cut down trying to stretch the hit to a triple. Nathan Sexton and Eric Cook had hits in the inning for the Reds.

Betsy Layne plated three runs in each of the first, second and third innings. Cook, who started for Beaver Creek, walked the first two batters he faced, but Hunter was nailed at third on a steal attempt. James Jarrell, who walked, scored on an error off the bat of Chris Holbrook. Cook then walked Sammy Nelson and Bo Howard to force in two other runs.

The Beaver Creek right-hander issued consecutive walks to Jason Roberts, Hunter and Jarrell to load the bases to start the second. Jason Burke then worked Cook for a walk to force in Roberts. Hunter scored on Doug Keathley's sacrifice fly and Jarrell came home on a rundown play.

Hunter and Jarrell had RBI singles for Betsy Layne in the third inning as they took a 9-1 lead.

Jarrell had three runs batted in the contest with two hits.

Donnie Owens finished with two hits for the Reds.

Beaver Creek committed the only error in the game and they left five runners stranded in the game.

Betsy Layne stranded four base runners and played errorless baseball.

Betsy Layne will host Pikeville tonight at the Allen Park at 7 p.m. The Reds will take on Prestonsburg at 5:30 p.m. tonight at Allen.

Skeens goes the distance in 12-5 Drift win

by Ed Taylor
 Sports Editor

The Drift Astros scored eight times in the first inning and never looked back as they improved to 5-2 overall after posting a 12-5 win over the Wayland Jaquars in the Beaver Creek Little League at Minnie last Friday.

Joe Skeens went the distance for the Astros striking out five batters. Jerry Bailey suffered the loss of the Jaquars.

J.J. Hall had a two-run double in the eighth run first for Drift. Stumbo doubled home two runs as well in the inning.

"Errors hurt us," said Astro coach Clinis Hall. "We played good defense but we need to work on our hitting."

Wayland scored three runs in the second inning to make it a 8-3 game but the Astros plated a run in the second, two in the third and a lone run in the fourth.

Bub Goins had an RBI double for the Astros in the second inning.

Wild horses and burro expo and adoption

The newly formed Mustang Troop will be the focus of attention during the Sixth Annual Wild Horse and Burro Adoption and Expo at Kentucky Horse Park in Lexington July 29-30.

The U.S. Department of the Interior's Bureau of Land Management (BLM) will bring 100 horses and 50 burros from overgrazed Western rangelands to the Blue Grass facility in search of good homes. The adoption fee is $125 per horse and $75 for burros. The event will run from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. each day and admission is free.

The Mustang Troop, a pilot program of the Kentucky Horse Park and BLM, consists of 24 at-risk students from Lexington and 12 Mustangs provided by the federal government. The program provides the 9-13 year old young adults an opportunity to learn more about horses, each other and responsibility.

The Mustang Troop, along with past-adopter volunteers, will perform daily at the Horse Park Fair inside the covered area. Another highlight will be Morgan James, a national spokesman for the Adopt-A-Horse Program. Additionally, James, an up-and-coming country singer, will perform a mini-concert during the fair. All events will be sponsored by the BLM, Breyer Animal Creations of Wayne, N.J. and Alan Brock of New Way Boot Shop in Lexington.

BLM Eastern States' Director Carson W. Culp, Jr. said the Adopt-A-Horse program is two-fold. It gives qualified persons the opportunity to adopt symbols of our nation's heritage while providing an excellent way for the government to maintain a balance between wild horses, native wildlife and domestic animals grazing on fragile Western rangelands.

The Adopt-A-Horse Program began in 1973 in order to control the increasing populations of horse herds on federal lands. Prior to the late 1950s, wild horses were preyed upon by "mustangers," people who cruelly rounded up the animals and sold them for slaughter. This activity, however, was outlawed in 1972 when Congress passed the Wild Free-Roaming Horse and Burro Act. This law protects wild horses from extinction and preserves them as "living symbols of the historic and pioneer spirit of the West." Under federal protection, the wild horse herds increased rapidly since they have no natural predators.

The horses now compete for limited forage and water with native wildlife and domestic livestock that also graze public lands. In 1973, the government began removing excess numbers of horses in order to achieve proper herd management levels. As part of this management activity, the BLM established the Adopt-A-Horse and Burro Program and made the animals available to people who would agree to give them good homes.

Application forms can be obtained from the Bureau of Land Management, 411 Briarwood Drive, Suite 404, Jackson, MS 39206, or call (601) 977-5430. Only those receiving approval of their applications, either in person or by telephone, by the close of business July 21, will be eligible for the "Lottery Drawing." Numbers will be drawn between 7-8 a.m. on Saturday, July 29, to determine the selecting order. "Walk-up" applicants will not participate in the lottery, but will be accepted on a first-come, first-serve basis.

Individuals who wish to adopt horses and burros from the government must sign an agreement to provide proper care and to either not abuse or commercially exploit the animals. On the first anniversary of the animal's adoption, the adopter is eligible to make an application for certificate of title. If the animal has been humanely cared for, the BLM will award the adopter clear title to the animal. Until that title is issued, the horse or burro remains U.S. Government property and may not be sold, traded, or given away.

To get to the Kentucky Horse Park, take I-64 East from Louisville, then I-75 North through Lexington to Exit 120 onto Iron Works Road. The facility is located on the North side of Iron Works Road.

Large purse awaits winners of Blackcat Golf Scramble

The meet is open to the first 18 teams and early sign up is urged.

The basketball people will hold a cook-out Friday and after the cook-out, Calcutta will perform.

Also, prizes will be given to the closest-to-the pin and the longest drive.

Watatuck mixes historic with contemporary

by Associated Designs

The central section of the Watatuck, with its long covered porch, is reminiscent of Spanish Colonial homes built in the Southwestern United States from the 17th through the 19th century. But the attached garage, front-facing gables, stone siding and Palladian window give this home a totally contemporary flavor.

A massive stone fireplace is one of the plan's most striking features. It's open on two sides so you can appreciate the flames and warmth from either the dining room or the gathering room. In the gathering room, wood storage flanks the fireplace on the left, shallow shelving on the right. A deeper alcove in the dining room could serve as a hutch.

Sunlight streams into the gathering space through two sets of French or atrium doors that open onto a wide, rambling terrace with an old-fashioned stone barbecue. A wet bar nestles in a corner by the rear wall. The breakfast room is also naturally bright, as is the dining room.

The kitchen is designed for efficiency. Stove, sink and refrigerator cluster in a tight triangle. Two passageways into the dining room allow for a circular flow when traffic is heavy—holiday meals, for instance. The peninsular counter adds work space and doubles as an eating bar. Utilities are handy, hidden behind folding doors.

A door leading from the garage is convenient for unloading groceries. Steps leading down to the basement are just inside.

In the Watatuck's vaulted master suite, a high rounded window provides a touch of class. Other luxuries include a spa tub, twin basins a walk-in closet.

Collins, Martin capture features at 201 Speedway

by Chris Belcher
Contributing Writer

In between rain showers and, at times monsoons, the 201 Speedway Fan Appreciation Night was a success thanks mainly to some very patient drivers who wanted to be sure the large crowd that showed up got their money's worth.

The rains were not enough to dampen the zeal of the fans and the more than 75 drivers that showed up for the big night.

Prestonsburg driver Don Collins drove his Claims Bomber to victory and Martin's Brad Martin took the ARMA Modified feature.

After the rains had subsided, the track appeared in perfect form for David Powers to drive his Late Model racer to victory in getting the checkered flag in the eight lap feature race of the Late Model Shootout.

Ronnie Cole took second place in the Late Model feature and Salyersville's Jim Lemaster finished third.

The 12 lap Claim Bomber feature proved to be a competitive event for the 15 drivers who roared around the three-eighths mile track.

At times, the drivers were side-by-side trying to gain ground on Collins. While Collins was constantly challenged, he was the first to arrive under the checkered flag for first place.

Garland Mills finished second in the Late Model feature. Third place went to Doug Saylor and Ronnie Booth placed fourth.

It was a second time in the winner's circle for Martin's Modified. Martin took home $600 from the victory circle in winning the Modified feature race. Kurt Hoffsess took second place and Robbie Perkins placed third.

After winning the Late Model Shootout, Powers returned to the track and claimed the $1,000 prize money by winning the 20 lap Late Model Feature. Scott McCloud crossed the finish line for second place.

Bill Butcher won the first Claim Bomber Consolation Race, holding off Menifee Napier. The second consolation race went to Benny Butcher of Boonescamp.

It was a first of the season win for Gary Jennings in the Road Hog Class as he held the lead six of the eight laps ran. He held off Roger Brown down the stretch and took home the $100 prize money.

In the AMRA modified heat race,

Martin's Harry Branham nosed out brother Jimmy for first place.

Eddie Blair's bad luck continued in the Super Bomber feature. He took the lead from the onset but could not hold off the charge of Rodney Webb for the first seven laps. Blair lost a right rear tire and axle on lap eight causing Webb to make contact with the back of Blair's racer. The damage caused the front two cars to be eliminated from the field.

The bad break for Blair and Webb was the good fortune of Gary Combs who took the lead and held it for the final seven laps and picked up his third feature win of the season. The victory was worth $350 for Combs. Randal Stamper took second and Kenneth Prater ran third.

Soccer series begins tonight, June 7, on KET

Soccer enthusiasts can enjoy the June additions to KET's daytime viewing schedule. It's a Kick airs on KET at 11:00 weekdays. The thirteen-part series begins Wednesday, June 7.

Soccer, or "football" as it's known throughout the world outside the United States, is the world's most popular sport. Most of the estimated 16 million soccer enthusiasts in the United States are under the age of 18 and include little league players as well as high school and college students. Key to the sport's growing popularity among young people and parents in soccer's emphasis on "whole body fitness" and its relatively low incidence of serious injuries among players. Soccer also has become a popular co-ed sport, particularly in the younger age groups.

It's a Kick gives viewers inside information on the rules, players, and history of this international sport. Co-hosted by Greg Lee of Where in the World Is Carmen Sandiego?, and young stuntwoman and actor Jennifer Badger, It's a Kick presents stories on the development of the sport; footage of historic matches, and humorous segments featuring bloopers and other funny moments. A "Coach's Tips" segment, conducted by former Olympic coach and current National Staff coach of the U.S. Soccer Federation, Tom Fitzgerald, focuses on rules, strategies and skill development.

Bassin' with the Pros

NIGHT-FISHING CAN BE PRODUCTIVE NOW AS WATER WARMS

Professional bass angler Ron Shuffield spends more than days on the water this time of year. He spends nights, too.

"Night fishing now can produce some of the best action of the season," says the Johnson Outboards Pro Staff angler. "The bass are shallow because the water is warming and they're looking for a place to spawn."

"All you have to do is fish a shallow shoreline with a spinnerbait." Shuffield, winner of four national bass tournaments as well as several big fish awards, prefers a 1/2 ounce spinnerbait with a black skirt and a single size four or six Colorado style blade. He also uses a black pork trailer with the lure.

"The key is fishing parallel to the shoreline, not straight in to it," explains Shuffield. "Bass are cruising the shallow water so you have a better chance of finding them by casting parallel."

"Try different depths but don't work too deep. I usually stay in water less than five feet deep."

Shuffield's spinnerbait retrieve depends on the aggressiveness of the bass. He tries several speeds until he determines how the fish are reacting.

Although any calm spring night is a good night to be on the water, the Johnson pro prefers the week of the full moon, concentrating on the three nights prior and three nights after.

"The full moons in spring, starting as early as February in some lakes and continuing through May in others, always seem to have the greatest shallow water bass activity," says Shuffield.

"I think what may happen is that the fish come shallow and see the silhouette of the dark spinnerbait against the bright moonlight. I know other lure colors just don't seem to produce as much action as black does this time of the month."

Shuffield notes that the type of shoreline being fished does not matter as long as it has a hard bottom bass can use for spawning. He has caught fish around weeds, logs, rocks, and clay banks in the spring.

"It's important to work areas that have the potential to be spawning sites," adds Shuffield. "I look for shallow coves or flats that have some type of deep water nearby and which are protected from strong winds."

"These are areas you can locate easily by studying a map or by being on the lake during the day. I also try to find a launching ramp close to the area I'm going to fish so I don't have to make a long run in the dark."

"That way I have more time for fishing."

THIS PRO MAY FISH 'BACKWARDS' TO LOCATE BASS

If you're having trouble locating post-spawn bass this time of year, consider doing what top professional tournament angler Larry Nixon does.

He fishes backwards. "Well, not exactly 'backwards'," laughs the Evinrude Pro Staff Angler, "but I do search from shallow water to deep, rather than the more common method of moving from deep water to shallow."

The reason for fishing this way, says Nixon, is because the bass have just completed spawning and are moving back to deep water. He knows for certain the fish have been shallow, but he does not know how far they have moved.

"The key to using this technique," he explains, "is being able to identify spawning areas used by the bass, and to do this you can use either a map or your own experience on the lake being fished."

"What you're looking for is a fairly large, shallow flat, usually in a tributary creek but not always. Bass may spawn in shallow coves, on long points, or in sloughs on the main lake, too. It depends entirely on the lake and what's available."

Places like this, adds the Evinrude pro, can usually be identified from map study or from on-the-water observation.

"Once you find the spawning area, you can work from there out to deeper water. This means casting spinnerbaits, jerkbaits, or possibly even worms or jigs, over the flat and looking for ditches and channels bass might use when moving back to deeper water.

"If you can find little channels like this, then you can concentrate on working them back out to deeper water. That's what fishing 'backwards' means. Because you don't know how deep the bass have moved, you don't know what depth to start fishing. You start shallow and simply follow the fish deeper."

If Nixon can't find channels or ditches like this, he gradually moves across the flat until he locates a dropoff or fairly distinct depth change. It does not need to be a major depth change, either, he notes.

"Often, just a three or four foot breakline will hold bass on their movement into deeper water," says Nixon "especially if it also has cover like stumps or rocks."

Actually, adds Nixon, fishing backwards like this will work throughout the year, not just in spring. That's because bass do not move that far from a good shallow spawning area, irregardless of the time of year.

Braves score four in sixth to win over Reds

by Ed Taylor
Sports Editor

The Prestonsburg Braves scored four times in the top of the sixth inning and then held off a late Prestonsburg Reds charge to record a 12-9 victory at Archer Park in the Prestonsburg Little League.

The game was tied at 7 when the Reds came to bat in the bottom of the fifth inning.

Josh Slone started the inning with a walk off Braves' pitcher Hank Mullins and he scored on Chris Blackburn's long triple to give the Reds an 8-7 lead. Blackburn scored on J.T. Abshire's RBI single for a 9-7 Reds lead.

Mullins got out of the inning by fanning the next three batters.

The Braves sent eight batters to the plate against Reds' starter Chris Blackburn in the sixth inning, and they scored four times for a 12-7 lead.

Blackburn walked Heath Chaffins to start the frame. With two out, Blackburn issued three consecutive walks to force in Chaffins. Jason Isom, who walked, scored on a wild pitch and Danny Layne and Mullins came home on Chris Spriggs' two-run single.

The Reds got two runs back in the bottom of the sixth against Hank Mullins but the rally fell short. Craig Fleener singled and Matt Slone followed with a base hit. Mullins walked Greg Arnett to load the bases and Blackburn singled home two runs with a base hit.

Mullins, who had fanned two batters in the inning, got Craig Prince to bounce back to the mound for the final out. He had 12 strikeouts in the game in a route-going performance.

Blackburn suffered the setback and he had 10 strikeouts.

Arnett had a two-run home run in the first inning for the Reds when they scored three times for a 3-0 lead. Matt Slone, who walked, scored ahead of Arnett.

Isom doubled home two runs for the Braves in the second as the Braves tied the game at 3.

Four runs were scored for the Braves in the third for a 7-3 lead but the Reds came back and got two runs in the bottom of the third on a double by Josh Slone.

Paintsville baseball team being formed

The 1995 version of the Paintsville Big League Baseball Team is now being formed. The first day of sign ups and practice was Monday, June 5, 1995. Eligible kids age 16 through 18 can sign up the whole week (June 5 through June 10).

It looks like another great year for Paintsville Big League is ahead. With games beginning June 9th with Floyd County at Charlie Adkins Field in Paintsville and going through the State Tournament in Louisville the end of July.

This years 4th of July tournament will feature some of the best teams in the area. It will begin on Friday, June 30th at 5:00 p.m. and go through Sunday with the last game being at 7:30 p.m. Teams from all over the state like Cumberland, Hazard, Laurel County, Lexington, will be in town.

Coach Ronnie Wells would like to invite all the kids in Floyd, Johnson and other surrounding counties to be a part of this years team. With the Paintsville team never finishing worse than state runner-up in its 7 year history, Coach Wells feels this years team maybe one of the best.

Officials to hold referees' camp

Ed Taylor
Sports Editor

If you have any aspirations of officiating basketball games this coming fall, then you will be required to attend the 15th Region Association Referees' Camp to be held June 19-22 at Pikeville High School.

Even if you are going to call only grade school games, attendance is mandatory, as well.

The 15th Region Official's Association has hired Johnson Central basketball coach Johnny Ray Turner as assigning secretary for all grade school games.

HRMC and UK to host medicine sports symposium

Highlands Regional Medical Center and the University of Kentucky Sports Medicine Center, in cooperation with the Kentucky High School Athletic Association and the Kentucky Medical Association will host a symposium on the Medical Aspects of Sports. The symposium will be held on Saturday, June 17, from 8:00 a.m. to 3:45 p.m., at the Wilkinson-Stumbo Convention Center at Jenny Wiley State Park in Prestonsburg.

The symposium is designed to provide head coaches in high school sports with some fundamental information which will enable them to prevent player injuries and other health related problems. Coaches will be able to understand their own importance in the practice and enforcement of protective measures which will maintain the well-being of the athlete. Coaches will also be able to gain some valuable information with regard to the immediate care and handling of the injured athlete.

Attendance at the symposium will satisfy the mandate approved by the Kentucky High School Athletic Association Board of Control for a biennial sports medicine meeting. Registration will begin at 8:00 a.m. on June 17. Pre-registration fee for the symposium will be $20, with on-site registration being $30.

Answer the phone, Honey, it's not for me

Last week Wilma and I celebrated our 32nd wedding anniversary, so I guess I'm as qualified as anybody to make this statement: Wives have always been this way.

To back up such a statement, I refer to an old English ballad called "Get Up and Bar the Door," that was allegedly recited for the first time (no doubt by a married man) about 500 years ago.

Although centuries old, the basic situation that this old rhyme addresses is still occurring, the 1990s. At least it is at my house.

The gist of the poem revolves around a pact made between a man and his wife about whose time it is to get up and lock the door before they go to bed. After a brief argument, they agree that the next one to speak has to do it.

The only difference in this situation and the one at our house is, instead of who's going to lock the door, our problem is, who's going to answer the phone.

Like most people probably do in this day and time, we have phones all over the house, as well as one that's portable that we can take outside. The idea, of course, is that no matter where a person is when the phone rings, it's close at hand and convenient.

Right?
Wrong.

The way it really works is that when it rings, I'm nearly always where it's not. And, to make matters worse, regardless of what time of day or night it is, Wilma yells, "Get that, it's not for me."

Although I do question her psychic powers inasmuch as one ring sounds to me pretty much like another, I usually do end up answering it.

"Where's the portable," I yell back. (After all, Bill Pack didn't raise any fools. I'm not getting out of this recliner if I don't have to.)

"Oh, I don't know," she answers.

"Maybe I left it in the bathroom."
"Oh, yeah," I say to myself, "that's where you were talking the last time it wasn't for you."

And so it goes.

Of course our plight with the phone doesn't go to such an extreme that would cause me to risk what might happen if a modern woman were forced to remain silent over an extended period of time, but things wouldn't be so bad if, maybe one time in ten, it was for me.

Oh well, even though many things over the years have remained unchanged, at least wives today do have a sense of humor.

At least I hope so.

If not, you just might be reading my last column.

Young Authors learn to communicate by exchanging ideas and feelings

by Polly Ward
Times Feature Writer

There were many highlights during the ninth annual Young Authors Awards Ceremony held Thursday evening, May 25, at the Wilkinson-Stumbo Convention Center at Jenny Wiley State Park.

The evening was kicked off with a reception that included a display of county-wide winning books, and musical selections performed by the Adams Middle School band under the direction of Kathi Caudill.

The ceremony featured, first, an inspirational song by Adams Middle School teacher and Kentucky Opry singer Tony Whited; next was a speech given by children's book author and illustrator Paul Brett Johnson; then was the student presentations of four county-wide winning books. But the climax of the ceremony was the recognition of all 72 county-wide Young Author winners in Kindergarten through the eighth grade. For the winners, nothing quite matched the honor of being recognized as budding young authors. Cameras flashed and the audience applauded as the winners in five categories, grouped according to school grade, received a $50 savings bond and a personalized certificate from Paul Brett Johnson and Patricia Watson, Writing/Language Arts Coordinator of the Floyd County Schools. Johnson also gave each teacher of a Young Author winner an autographed copy of one of his works. The winners were announced by Thelma Spears, writing/language arts assistant, and Gayle Justice, a teacher at Stumbo Elementary.

Three schools with the most Young Author winners this year were also recognized. Betsy Layne Elementary had 16 winners, followed by Duff Elementary and Adams Middle School.

Guest speaker Paul Brett Johnson, who is a native of Mousie in Knott County, spoke a few minutes before the presentations about the rewards of writing. "The one thing I find exciting is when students begin to think of themselves as authors," he told the audience.

The professional writer then said, "I'm not rich yet, but I'm working on it. You don't get paid for your work, but someday you may...Even if you don't get paid, there will be a lot of rewards."

After humorously describing his passage as a writer from first grade to the present, Johnson defined the essence of writing. "Writing all boils down to communication, the exchange of ideas and feelings. Humans are social beings....We've always had the need to communicate."

In conclusion, the author/illustrator gave this advice to the young authors: "The difference between writing and good writing is rewriting."

This year's Young Author program involved 5,012 students, 905 classroom winners, 416 school winners, and 73 teachers.

"This was the largest number of winners we've had so far," Watson said. "The Young Authors is one of the best programs we have for students to be published and to be rewarded for publishing."

The Young Authors competition was judged by writers, retired teachers, and other members of the professional community.

FROM THE MOUNTAINS
by Jadon Gibson

Casey Jones and the Cannonball Express

Trains played an important role in the last century and John Luther Jones grew up in Jackson, Tennessee, wanting to become an engineer on one of the big trains.

When he turned twenty-one years of age in 1885 the handsome Jones applied for a job as fireman with the Illinois Central Railroad. The railroad hired the six-foot-four-inch tall young man who seemed much older than his years.

After five years as fireman he fulfilled his lifetime dream by becoming an engineer on a freight train. His record included some minor infractions but he developed a reputation for bringing in his train on time.

When Illinois Central offered Jones the chance to be the engineer on a passenger train in 1897 he jumped at the opportunity. He had his engine equipped with a distinctive Whippoorwill whistle and became known for keeping his big engine "as shiny as a new penny."

Soon thousands of people along Jones' route came to know John Luther Jones by a wave and a toot from his whistle if they were on the right side of the train. His fireman waved to those on the left side.

In early 1900, Jones was piloting the Cannonball Express, the fastest train in the fleet, on a 190-mile run between Canton, Mississippi and Jackson, Tennessee.

An hour after Jones completed the run from Canton to Memphis on April 30, 1900, he was notified that the engineer who was to make the southward run had not arrived for work. Upon investigation they found he was too ill to command the train so Jones was asked to take the Cannonball Express on its southern run.

He agreed, but by the time the train departed it was an hour and a half behind schedule. Jones vowed to arrive in Canton on time.

His record was an enviable one since taking over on passenger trains as he had never lost a passenger, in fact he had no accidents while consistently bringing his train in on schedule.

Sam Webb accompanied Jones as fireman in the engine and he was kept continuously busy shoveling coal. The train was making the fastest trip in history and by the time the train arrived in Grenada, 102 miles later, the Cannonball Express had made up over fifty minutes. The passengers were unusually quiet but the ride was smooth although fast. Thirty more minutes were made up when they reached Winona.

Train personnel in Vaughn, Ms., attempted to clear the track for the Illinois Central by moving a slower southbound and a northbound train onto a side track.

The train was too long however and part of it remained on the main track on which the Cannonball Express was rapidly approaching. These circumstances called for a flagman to hurry several hundred yards up the track, explode charges and swing a red lantern as a warning. If this was done neither Jones nor Webb saw it.

The Cannonball Express neared Vaughn at a speed between seventy-five and eighty miles per hour and rounded a final curve.

When Casey saw the train on the track ahead he applied the brakes. The train screeched for what seemed like an eternity to the railroad workers and passengers on board as the speed reduced to seventy, sixty, fifty, forty, as it bore down on the second train.

"Jump, jump," Jones yelled to his fireman as he saw that a collision was unavoidable.

Webb automatically accepted Jones' order and leaped into the darkness.

Jones stayed at the helm as the train continued to slow before colliding with the caboose of the other train. The train had slowed to the extent that none of the passengers were hurt.

Although John Luther Jones' record for never losing a passenger remained unblemished, he himself was killed—the lone casualty.

Jones was already loved by his workers and many along his route. His reputation grew when it became evident that he stayed with the train in order to save his passengers and to diminish the loss.

A song was written about the engineer and it became one of the widest known ballads ever written.

The engineer who had spent time growing up in Cayce, Kentucky, was nicknamed Casey and he became famous as Casey Jones, the Brave Engineer. Everyone talked about him and recited poems about him as I grew up in the mountains of Eastern Kentucky.

*Jadon Gibson is a free-lance writer now living in Harrogate, Tennessee. His writings, From The Mountains, are both historical and nostalgic in nature. Don't miss a single issue.

Senior citizens, I've still a few more stories to share with you about some older Americans who have touched my life through the years. These are true stories about real people who were very much like you. I learned valuable lessons from each of these senior citizens just as people today learn valuable lessons from you. Learning is an ongoing process regardless of one's age. Perhaps this story about Magdalene will benefit you today.

I'll never forget the day I met Magdalene. It was a hot, sultry Kansas afternoon. I was driving down a long, asphalt drive from a hospital where I had just completed a business call. A little old woman, her white hair pulled back from her face in a bun, was walking under the scorching sun. It was evident she was laboring for breath each step of the way. I thought to myself, out loud, "Where in the world could she be going out here in this scorcher? She doesn't need to be in the heat. The way she's acting, she'll be going back to the hospital on a stretcher."

When I neared her, I pulled my slowing car to a stop. "Would you like a ride?" I offered. "Oh yes, Darie." She accepted. I opened the door for her. "Will you take me to my apartment?" She asked. "I only live over at the Projects."

Her apartment was about two miles away. We talked as we rode. She was 77 years old and she had walked to the hospital to visit her ill son. She couldn't afford a taxi.

I felt tears welling up in my eyes as Magdalene was about to get out. An urgency to find out more about her came over me. I asked, "Do you have a fan?" "Oh yes." She answered as she opened the car door. "Do you have food?" I asked. "Oh no, Dearie. Not very much. I have a little bit of milk and a few pieces of bread."

She invited me in. Once inside, at my request, she opened her refrigerator. There was perhaps a cup of milk in the gallon jug, and a few pickle slices in a jar. That was it.

She excused herself to go to the bathroom. I used that time to "peek" in the cabinets. They were as bare as her refrigerator. I didn't see the few pieces of bread she claimed she had. When she returned from the bathroom, I gave her my name and a telephone number where I could be reached. I'll come back and see you again, real soon, I promised. She thanked me for the ride.

Within 45 minutes I was back at her residence. She was sitting on the porch when I drove up. From the expression on her face, it appeared she was surprised to see me so soon. She stood up to acknowledge my presence. When she saw me approaching, with two bags of groceries, she began to cry. That evening, when I got home from work, I called a local church to see if they could help her.

What did Magdalene teach me? She taught me that people can be hungry or hurting and not say a word about it.

I also taught her something. I taught her not to give her food stamps to others in the project. This little old lady was being abused by others on food stamps. Some of her neighbors misused theirs. Then, when they or their children got hungry enough, they'd go knocking at her door with their hard-luck stories. Usually "somebody had stolen theirs," or "they had been lost in the mail," or "there was a mix-up of some kind down at the Food Stamp office and we didn't get ours this month."

Senior citizens, these tactics are still used today right here in Eastern Kentucky—and not only in the Projects as Magdalene referred to the low income housing complex where she lived. Sure, Food Stamps get stolen. Sure, they are sometimes lost or delayed in the mail. And, yes, sometimes there is a mix-up at the office. But beware of those who would attempt to abuse you with their hard-luck stories. It's commendable to share—to help responsibility—but don't allow someone to take advantage of you. If you feel you are being taken advantage of, or, if you know someone in desperate straights who needs assistance, then maybe the Kentucky Benefits Counseling Program For Senior Citizens can put you in contact with an organization that can help you. Abuse, in any form, should be reported. If you have a need, call us at 886-3876 or toll-free at 1-800-556-3876. We are here for you.

Jack May's Wars

by Dr. Robert Perry

Part one: THE CAUSE OF CIVIL FREEDOM

Editor's Note: The following is an excerpt from Jack May's Wars, a book written by Robert Perry, president of the Friends of the May House. The book will be printed in installments.

During the first months of the Civil War, Governor Beriah Magoffin and other Kentucky leaders fought hard to keep the state neutral. Their hopes were dashed by the August 1861 election, which sent a Unionist majority to Frankfort. When the new legislature convened in early September, it passed laws which encouraged Federal occupation and suppressed the rebellion. Home guards were organized in every county, Federal Marshalls began arresting men suspected of treason, and Federal troops took possession of Paducah, Louisville, and other strategic points.

This sea-change in the state's political fortunes had a dramatic effect on Kentuckians who favored the Southern cause. Take Hiram Hawkins, for example. A Bath County farmer, Hawkins was a pro-secessionist member of the legislature and a colonel in the state militia. One afternoon in early September, 1861, a messenger arrived at his home in Owingsville and warned him that Federal troops were coming to arrest him and throw him in jail. Hawkins immediately called together 17 of his most trusted militiamen, and, at twelve p.m., armed and equipped for battle, they set out for West Liberty, a town 35 miles east of Owingsville, where Jack May was organizing a pro-secessionist company of "Morgan County Guards."

When Hawkins reached May's

camp, the two men analyzed the situation and decided that it would be prudent to move their little army to a more secure location. Prestonsburg was the logical choice. There, deep in the mountains of Eastern Kentucky, surrounded by people of Virginia ancestry, recruits could be collected, organized, and trained for battle. Moreover, Jack's cousin William James May owned a farm north of town—Jack's boyhood home—with a meadow big enough and level enough for a military camp.

One of the problems facing the two men was the question of how their recruits would be fed. The best thing about the May Farm was that it was located next to the steam-powered grist mill which Jack's father had erected at the mouth of Abbott Creek in 1849. Indeed, this feature of the farm eventually became so important that throughout the duration of the war, commanders on both sides referred to the farm as "the steam mill" in their battle reports.

Hawkins' men were the first soldiers to pitch their tents at the farm. On the following day, May's company arrived, and several days later a company led by Owingsville storekeeper G. W. Connor showed up. Meanwhile, at the Floyd County Courthouse, meetings were held, committees were formed, and resolutions were passed calling for the local population to organize, arm, and prepare for war. W. H. Burns of West Liberty, Judge of the Circuit Court, was elected Commissary in charge of supplies, and Captain Hawkins was elected Camp Commander. Throughout the last half of September, recruits continued to arrive, including two companies from Harrison County commanded by John Shawhan and Benjamin Desha, and two companies from Bourbon County commanded by E. F. Clay and James M. Thomas.

During this hectic period, the road through Prestonsburg was thronged with Confederate volunteers and other men seeking refuge behind Confederate lines. Lewis Collins' Annals of Kentucky shows that during the last four days of September, 1861, "nearly one thousand armed Kentuckians" passed through Prestonsburg on their way to Southwestern Virginia. "All finely mounted and well-armed," they included William E. Simms of Paris, Colonel George B. Hodge of Newport, and Senator John C. Breckinridge of Lexington, the nation's most famous advocate of the Southern Cause.

The Democratic Party's nominee for President in 1860, Breckinridge had many enemies, and it was rumored in some quarters that he had been murdered. On October 7th, however, the Wheeling Press reported that he had eluded his captors and arrived safely at Tazewell Court House, a town in Southwestern Virginia, after a two-hundred-mile journey by carriage through Eastern Kentucky.

Along the way he stopped at Owingsville in Bath County, West Liberty in Morgan County, and Prestonsburg, where he had toured the camp of the 5th Kentucky Infantry at the May Farm.

"At this latter place (Prestonsburg) he made a speech and rallied some three hundred recruits. Thence to Picketon, in Pike County, where he staid three days, and thence across the Cumberland Mountains at Dogwood Gap into Virginia, through Buchanan, Russell and Tazewell Counties to Tazewell Court House, where he remains," the Wheeling Press reported.

Meanwhile, back at the May Farm, tents were springing up like mushrooms after a summer rain. On October 2nd, Jack May and his comrades-in-arms sent the following letter to Jefferson Davis in Richmond:

His Excellency Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederate States of America:

Sir: Our Legislature has betrayed us. We have marched to this point on account of its strategic importance with 1,000 men. Hundreds are gathering around our standard daily. We can have 5,000 men here in two weeks. We would most respectfully petition your excellency to send us immediately some experienced military men to command us, and place us upon a footing to make ourselves available in furthering the cause of civil freedom, in which we have enlisted, and to which we pledge our lives and our sacred honor.

Ben Desha, Captain of Light Infantry Company (armed).

E. F. Clay, Captain of Cavalry Company (armed).

James M. Thomas, Captain Mounted Rifles (forty minies, with equipment).

T. R. Worsham, Infantry (unarmed).

H. C. Swango, Infantry (unarmed). Captain Morgan Guards, Infantry (unarmed).

A. J. May, Captain, Morgan Guards, Infantry (unarmed).

Jesse Meek, Infantry (unarmed).

G. W. Connor, Captain, Infantry (unarmed).

G. M. Ewing, Captain, Infantry (unarmed).

John W. Sparks, Captain, Infantry (unarmed).

John Shawhan.

These men were not low-class ruffraff. John Shawhan and Benjamin Desha owned farms near Cynthiana, and Shawhan, an older man, was a veteran of the Mexican War. James Thomas and Ezekiel Clay came from Bourbon County, and the latter was the son of Brutus J. Clay, a wealthy Bourbon County cattle-breeder. G. W. Connor's father owned a store in Owingsville, and G. W. Ewing's father was the owner of an Owingsville foundry. Henry Chapman Swango owned a farm in Wolfe County near Hazel Green.

 Add greens and mix. Stir-fry for 2 to 3 minutes, until leaves are coated. Cover and cook several minutes more,

Callis elected to board

The Floyd County Bar Association has elected Jay Callis a local attorney to replace John Mann on the Appalred Board of Directors.

Mann has served over five years, and resigned recently for personal reasons. At its meeting on April 14 the Floyd County Bar Association Membership voted to specially recognize John Mann's efforts for his diligent work as an Appalred Board Member. The Appalred Board also voted to present a plaque to Mann recognizing him for his conscientious service on the Board. The Appalred Board meets four times a year on Saturdays, which requires board members to give up part of their weekend in order to attend board meetings.

Callis is a partner in the law firm of Boehl, Stopher & Graves, in its Prestonsburg office. The local office has nine attorneys and its main office is in Louisville. Callis has been an active participant on the Appalred's volunteer lawyer panel, Volunteer Lawyers for Appalachian Kentucky. He is a member of the pro bono committee of the Kentucky Bar Association, and will be the moderator of that committee's presentation at the Kentucky Bar Association's annual meeting in June.

Local hospital will become part of statewide network

An organization managing a Martin hospital has signed a letter of intent with the chairman of Kentucky Health Network and the president of Southeastern Group.

Sisters of Charity of Nazareth Health System (SCNHS), a not-for-profit health care provider, manages Our Lady of the Way Hospital, Martin. SCNHS, along with Alliant Health System, Baptist Healthcare System, and St. Elizabeth Medical Center, through their integrated-delivery-network (IDN) joint venture, signed the letters of intent.

Kentucky Health Network (KHN), made up of one health-care system and nine hospitals serving western Kentucky, was created in 1994 to serve as a provider-network organization for the western region of Kentucky.

The letter of intent calls for the IDN (formed by Alliant, Baptist, SCNHS and St. Elizabeth) and KHN to work together toward an agreement to provide services as a statewide integrated delivery network. The organizations which make up KHN also will become the statewide network's regional integrated delivery system (IDS) for western Kentucky, just as the Louisville integrated delivery system was founded to serve Greater Louisville and surrounding areas.

In a separate letter of intent, leaders of the statewide IDN and KHN and Southeastern Group agreed to enter into talks that could lead to a jointly owned managed-care company. The intent of the joint venture will be to make available a full range of health-care services and insurance products throughout Kentucky.

The letter of intent with Southeastern lays out a plan to work toward both short- and long-term agreements. The short-term plan includes offering managed-care health services through Blue Cross/Blue Shield plans to the Health Purchasing Alliance, as set out in House Bill 250 by the Kentucky General Assembly. It is hoped that a longer-term agreement creating the managed-care company can be reached by the end of summer.

It is the goal of these organizations to meet the demands of the marketplace and health-care reform by creating a network of physicians, hospitals, managed-care providers and others who will offer patients a coordinated approach to health care. An integrated delivery network blends physician care, hospital care and a financing mechanism to serve large patient groups.

Bob Dampier, chairman of Kentucky Health Network and CEO of Regional Medical Center in Madisonville, spoke for the KHN board when he said, "First and foremost, the statewide relationship of providers will allow us to effectively utilize our joint experience and knowledge to meet the changing needs of health care. We have the opportunity to link existing, individual systems and hospitals and ultimately transform the way patients receive health care. We are pleased with the potential of joining with the statewide integrated delivery network and with Southeastern to meet those goals."

"The addition of the Kentucky Health Network makes our statewide system even stronger, and when we create this joint venture with Southeastern Group, we will add another component to our ability to provide a complete range of services to the people of Kentucky and surrounding areas," said Mark W. Dundon, president and CEO of SCN Health System.

"We'll be ready to pursue contracts with purchasers of health care on a statewide basis. Coming together with Kentucky Health Network and an alliance with Southeastern will allow this IDN to function as an Accountable Health Plan through the state purchasing alliance," added Joseph W. Gross, president and CEO of St. Elizabeth Medical Center.

Jim Murphy, president and CEO of southeastern Group, expressed his thoughts on the joint venture, "Southeastern Group provides Blue Cross and Blue Shield health benefit plans in Kentucky, marketed and administered by the Acordia companies. We are delighted to announce this new working relationship with these outstanding health-care providers. In fact, Southeastern was in discussion with both Kentucky Health Network and the board of the statewide integrated network, so it's exciting to us to see the two organizations begin efforts to work together. This will allow us to build an even stronger network of care. We're convinced we can have a major impact in continuing to improve the quality and affordability of health care in Kentucky."

"Bringing together providers and payers to serve our patients in a unified system has been our goal since we began planning for all the changes that are happening in health care. These letters of intent are critical steps toward that goal," said Stephen A. Williams, president and CEO of Alliant Health System. "The added benefit of having partnerships with such outstanding providers of health care and insurance products can make our network and unmatched resource for the people of Kentucky and surrounding areas."

"The fact that we're talking with Southeastern Group shows how serious we are about building the first truly comprehensive statewide integrated delivery network. I am very hopeful that our talks can lead to an agreement which will serve our patients and their physicians, our hospitals and employees, and our communities. Having the Kentucky Health Network partners join with us will make our efforts even more significant," said Tommy J. Smith, president and CEO of Baptist Healthcare System.

How To Keep Tiny Insects From Causing Big Problems

(NAPS)—When it comes to beating pests, the pen can be mightier than the stinger.

Here's the story: the pain and itch of insect bites can be soothed with the help of an insect bite treatment packaged in a convenient pen-like vial. It works well no matter what type of critter bit 'ya.

There are basically three types of insect offenders: stingers, biters, and chewers. With stingers, like bees and fire ants, the main source of the pain is the venom injected. In addition, fire ants actually destroy tissue in the sting area.

Biters include mosquitoes, chiggers and black flies. Although, the bite itself causes discomfort, the main culprit is the saliva left behind. Highly acidic, the saliva contains allergens that create welts, swelling and intense itching.

Chiggers secrete a substance that dissolves skin cells. To make us unaware of their bites, black flies anesthetize the skin before each bite. Left behind, this toxin creates painful, itchy swollen areas.

Fortunately, humans

There are more than a million species of insects in the world, many of which feast on us. Fortunately, a soothing treatment is available.

can fight back, even if we can't bite back. In one study, all subjects who received an insect bite treatment called After Bite® from Teller Corporation, reported relief from itching and/or burning without the return of any symptoms. No subject reported any skin irritation as a result of the treatment, so it can be applied without limitation. It is effective on all insect bites, including mosquito, black fly, chigger, gnat, fire ant, bee, hornet, even marine-life stings.

For more information on how to protect yourself against biting insects call 800-258-4696.

A Must-Have Tool For Home Repair

(NAPS)—A handy little tool for do-it-yourselfers is the versatile power carver that accomplishes the same tasks as a chisel, but with much greater speed and much greater control. The Detail Carver from Ryobi, for example, weighs just two pounds and fits comfortably in the palm of the hand. Its chisel bits do their work by means of a powered reciprocating motion that is pressure-activated.

Uses for this hand-held power carver include repairing doors that won't close or removing layers of old paint around window and door fixtures. It can even be used to give a quality hand-made look to any wood surface—carving matching rosettes on a fireplace mantle or frame, for example. The carver has two speeds, 10,400 strokes per minute and 12,500 strokes per minute to deliver hand-carving results with power-tool speed.

Until now, a tool such as this could only be found at specialty stores at a price of $200 or more. The new Ryobi, however, is now selling at most major hardware stores and home centers for under $70. The new carver is the latest in a series of power tools developed by Ryobi for handymen/women and hobbyists. It joins the company's two hand-held Detail Sanders, both of which also retail for under $70.

The power carver has dozens of uses, including fixing door lock sets and hinges recessed in wood.

Turtles, like many kids, avoid veggies

by Mike Capuzzo

Wild Things readers ask the strangest questions. Take the following, for example: "If my box turtle lives 100 years, how can my children provide for it in their will?" This brings us to the odd mystery of Zod, a box turtle who, like many children and even former presidents, won't eat her broccoli. Megan Breslin of Bryn Mawr, Pa., writes:

DEAR WILD THINGS: "Zod, my Chinese box turtle (Cuora flavomarginata), will go to any lengths, including starvation, to avoid the consumption of vegetables. Over the four years we have spent together, I can recall only one occasion on which she willingly ate broccoli—three summers ago. Once in a great while, however, she deigns to ingest a single pea. I have tried subtle deceptions and outright trickery. I chopped Zod's vegetables into small pieces and concealed them in a cloud of banana-turtle vitamin mush. Zod ate around the vegetables. No amount of coaxing, no degree of pureeing into imperceptible green flecks hidden amongst Zod's meat, no strawberry sauce can fool Zod. I am confused, Mike. The reptile vet to whom I took Zod said that vegetables are crucial to Zod's diet and that she should theoretically like them. But Zod still hates vegetables. On the other hand, Zod is partial to Canadian nightcrawlers and earthworms, and also delights in receiving some of the slugs which accumulate on my doorstep in the cool evenings of the late spring and early summer."

Wild Things

Zod the Chinese box turtle had more than a philosophical objection to vegetables

DEAR MEGAN: Take heart. Zod knows what is best for Zod: meat. Although box turtles are indeed herbivorous, they love to pig out on fish, eggs and insects. This is normal. So, too, is Zod's seemingly strange diet. You have been getting generic box turtle advice aimed principally at the vegetable-loving American Box Turtle, which is, "Oh, it crawls around in a meadow and eats strawberries," says Richard Farinato.

Farinato is director of wildlife matters at the Humane Society of the United States, and he consulted his reptile library in Washington, D.C., with your question. Turns out that the Chinese Box Turtle or yellow-headed turtle (Cuora flavomarginata) is much more aquatic than its terrestrial American cousin.

"Cuora flavomarginata would be hanging out on the fringe of swampy regions and thus have a more carnivorous diet. Fish, snails, whole mollusks, tender vegetables growing in water, water plants, insect larvae. Being a more aquatic turtle he is much more likely to be surviving on living things. Given his choice, Zod is doing what he should be doing—going for the meatier stuff."

To get Zod some roughage, Farinato recommends grating carrots or apples into a mush, sprinkling the gratings on Zod's water. Add floating lettuce or spinach leaves on his water dish to remind him of those swampy regions of yore.

DEAR WILD THINGS: What are the most talkative birds?—Eleanor P., Phoenix

DEAR ELEANOR: According to the editors of Bird Talk magazine, the top 10 talking birds are: African greys, blue-fronted Amazons, budgerigars, double-yellow-headed Amazons, mealy Amazons, mynahs, Panama Amazons, ring-necked parrots, Quaker parakeets and yellow-naped Amazons.

Wild Things also recommends the starling, better known as a public nuisance than the brilliant mimic it truly is. Starlings are incredible bargains, as they can be found by the thousands on telephone lines. Starlings make wonderful pets, according to Meredith West, editor of the journal, Animal Behavior. Mozart had a beloved pet starling and so does West, whose bird chants "Defense! Defense!" at the TV during NBA playoff games.

EAGLE

The strength of easy flight of the Eagle has been admired down through the ages. Over the years they have become symbols of freedom and power and have been pictured as courageous hunters. With their curved beaks, eagles have a fierce, proud look.

Indians on the plains wore the feathers of the golden eagles in their war bonnets. The eagle became known as the "war eagle." The golden eagle has also been called the "king of birds."

A familiar eagle in North America is the bald eagle, which got its name from its white feathers on the top of its head. Its tail is also covered with white feathers. It is the national bird of the United States.

In captivity, Eagles live 50 years or more. They have a shorter lifespan in the wild. Man is one of the eagle's deadliest enemies. The bald eagle was put on the endangered species list in the 1960s. Eagles were trapped by hunters until the mid 1900s when it became protected by federal law. Agriculture development, urban expansion projects, and industrial waste pollution have endangered the eagle as much as the hunters of old.

Conservation groups have been working to restock the population of eagles and the number of eagles are growing.

POPPY

About 250 species of poppy exist, but the poppy growing along U.S. 23 on Abbott Mountain belongs to the corn poppy variety, Shirley poppy is a member of the corn poppy family and has brilliant red flowers. Shirley poppies are grown from seed and are the most common poppy seed planted in flower gardens. Poppies usually have four petals.

They can have scarlet, white, orange, yellow, or rose-pink shades of flowers. One of the most beautiful varieties is the Oriental poppy, which has large flowers that display a blackish-purple center.

Poppy seeds are harvested and used as bird seed. Oil used in preparing food is also derived from poppy seeds. Poppy seeds also are sprinkled on top of cakes, bread and rolls to add flavoring.

Juice from the poppy family Celandine was once used to treat warts and jaundice. Celandine has yellow flowers and grows to be about one or two feet tall.

The seed does not contain any narcotics. However, the opium poppies are also used to produce opium, a drug that is used in narcotics and also in medicines such as codeine.

STEAM NAVIGATION ON THE LEVISA FORK

By Russell Lee Whitlock
 Even before the town of Auxier existed, the Big Sandy River provided a major means of transportation into this area. When Jenny Wiley was rafted across the river by Henry Skaggs in about 1790, the only means of transportation was by primitive trails or the canoe and flatboat on the river. A suitable highway system giving access to this area would not be developed for many years and railroads, except for experimental operation, would not be developed anywhere in the United States until the 1830's.

The first successful steamboat was operated on the East River of New York by Robert Fulton in 1807. In a few short years, steamboats became a common sight on rivers all over the country. According to well-known historian Henry P. Scalf, the first steamboat sailed up the Big Sandy River in 1837. The name of that historic craft is no longer known. A prominent steamboat owner on the Sandy was Captain Archibald Borders of Lawrence Company. In 1860 Captain Borders built the steamer Sandy Valley. The vessel was requisitioned by Col. James A. Garfield to transfer supplies from Catlettsburg to Prestonsburg during the winter of 1861-1862.

Records at the Ashland Public Library indicate a sizable number of steamers operating on the Big Sandy in the 1860's and 1870's. Among these were the Tom Hackney (said to have been named for the ugliest man in Pike County) and Jerry Osborn built by Captain O.C. Bowles. The Tom Scott and Major O'Brain were built by Captain Daniel Vaughan and were commanded by Captain W. Fuse Davidson. Records indicate Captain Vaughan built five large steamers for use on the Ohio and four smaller boats for use in the Big Sandy trade.

One of those boats, the Favorite sailed the Big Sandy for some thirty years before she was lost in about 1900. On her last trip the steamer was captained by Capt. J.A. (Alf) Banks and was loaded heavily with flour, lumber, clothing and nails. No doubt much of this merchandise was destined for settlers near where the town of Auxier now stands.

The river was quite high and Captain Banks was having difficulty controlling the boat in the heavy current. Swift water from the mouth of Georges Creek forced Favorite out of the channel and she struck a large snag near the shore which stove in her wooden hull. The boat began to break up and sank almost immediately with the total loss of all cargo. Records indicate there was no loss of life, but Capt. Banks' health was ruined, as with most captains, he considered the loss of his ship as a personal failing.

During the latter 1800's a completely different fleet of steamers traversed the swift narrow waters of the Big Sandy.

was built in Paintsville and operated by Captain Green Meek.

The steamers Sip Bay and Josie Hoskins were also built and operated on the Levisa Fork by Captain Meek. Captain Meek also owned the steamer Argand, a coal burning three decker and the largest steamboat on the Big Sandy. Despite the large number of boats owned by Captain Green Meek, it seems that the best known the ship. Thealka was a shallow draught boat able to operate in only 30 inches of water and ideal for use in the Big Sandy.

Records indicate water level to have been adequate for steamboat operation on the Big Sandy for only about six or seven months each year and when Hells Gate shoal near Paintsville became difficult to cross, captains knew the summer steamboat lull was near.

Henry Litteral in late 1909. North East began construction of the town in 1910. It seems that during his early years as a school teacher, Mayo taught Captain Green Meek's pretty daughter Alka. In early 1895, following a business trip through the Big Sandy country, Mayo fell seriously ill. After returning to Paintsville he obtained lodging in the Alger House Hotel operated by Captain Meek. Records indicate that Mayo remained at the Alger House for slightly more than a year while regaining his health. During his stay at the Alger House, the friendship between Mr. Mayo and Alka blossomed into a much deeper relationship. Records indicate they were married on February 21, 1897 at the home of Captain Meek in Paintsville.

Through my research of the subject I have been able to document no less than 45 steamboats which operated on the Levisa Fork of the Big Sandy. A few of their names were Miles H., Lena Leota, Mountain Boy, Mountain Girl, Beulah Brown, Ingomar, Ada, Maxie Yost, Fanny Freese, Sonoma, Mary L. Hatcher, Guyandotte, Dewdrop, Sandy Valley, and Sea Gull.

Another sternwheel steamer, the Cando, was a fairly large, triple deck boat built originally for the C & O Railroad. Before the boat was named, a local painter was hired to place the C & O logo on the side of the superstructure.

The painter, whether by accident or intent, spelled out the word "and" instead of using the script "&" normally used by the railroad. The letters were placed so close together the logo became "CANDO" instead of C & O. Obviously the railway officials approve and the misspelled logo became the ships name for all the years she plied the Big Sandy.

The Cando seems to have lived a long and useful life. She was still in service and making calls at Auxier in the early 1920's when the railway company delivered supplies to striking miners. The railroad up Big Sandy reached only to the community of White House. Heavy cargo was brought to the end of the track at White House and shipped on upriver toward Pikeville by steamer. Obviously owning their own steamer made this process much more convenient and profitable for the C & O.

After the railroad was completed upriver, steamboat usage decreased at a rapid pace and eventually stopped altogether. I have not been able to determine exactly when the last steamboat made its final trip up river to Pikeville, but it appears to have been sometime in the early 1930's.

Places in History

What do you know?

The Levisa Fork of the Big Sandy is approximately 164 miles in length and rises in southwestern Virginia as Russell Fork. The Tug Fork rises in southwestern West Virginia and extends 154 miles in length. The headwaters of the two forks are only about 20 miles apart. Both flow on parallel lines.

According to Altina Waller in her book Feud, concerning the Hatfields and McCoys, the Andy Hatcher plied the Levisa Fork as far as Pikeville, during these years of clan warfare. Andy Hatcher was a very pretty sternwheel steamer which often operated as a show boat and even carried riverboat gamblers. Records indicate Andy Hatcher was built by Captain John Hopkins and a gentleman named Marcum. She and the "batwing steamer" Virgie Ratliff, ran in direct competition with the Frank Preston, which was the little "batwing" steamer Thealka, named for his daughter Alice Jane (Alka) Meek. Alice Jane had been nicknamed "Alka" by family and friends and when the painter began to paint the boats name, he allowed the words "The" and "alka" to run together and the little steamer became Thealka. Thealka was built by Henry Connelly and was classified as a "batwing" boat due to the arrangement of her paddle wheels. Instead of a single stern paddle wheel, she was equipped with two smaller side wheels, set well toward the stern of Old-timers recall the Thealka as having a whistle that sent shivers up your spine. It is believed Thealka was the last "batwing" boat to operate on the Big Sandy. She was lost near Whitehouse, when she was crushed in heavy ice.

Although the little steamer Thealka came to an unhappy end, the lady who provided her name did much better. Well-known business man John C. C. Mayo, acting as agent for North East Coal Company, purchased the land where the community of Auxier now stands from Mr.

Editor's note: The article is reprinted with permission from the History of Floyd County.

Wheelwright stands where before 1916, there was only an isolated Hall Hollow, 40 miles from the county seat. A few scattered families living in log cabins, along the creek bank, wrung a meager living from the steep cultivated hillsides.

Corn and wheat were staple crops for the hills, bottom land was used to grow cotton and flax. Cattle, hog, chickens and sheep roamed the hillsides to provide meat and apparel for the families. The area was self-sufficient except for salt. Roads were mainly rock creek beds and news was passed on orally.

Coal's usefulness was unknown, wood was the universal fuel. No one knew of the wealth that lay under their feet. It was about 1900 that the outside world became interested in the coal in the Hall Hollow area. John C. C. Mayo and his agents brought a group of foreign capitalists to the Big Sandy area in 1909 and a much larger group in 1910. It is reasonable to assume the Elk Horn coal seam in the Hall Hollow area was one tional program, as well as First Aid instruction.

When Inland took over Wheelwright, they not only improved the working conditions, but the town as well. Wheelwright is a narrow, twisting valley about two and a half miles long. Near the upper end Otter Creek splits. Looking south, the right goes to Branham Hollow, and the left swings east into Hall Hollow. Where the branches join is the center of town. Here is where Inland built its office building, remodeled club house (the basement had four bowling alleys and two pool tables, the rest was really an inn and restaurant), community building (which housed the post office, barber shop, soda fountain and the second floor was a dance floor), movie theater, church, hospital, mine tippie, bath house, swimming pool, playground, tennis court, railroad station and Boy Scout club house. The construction of the buildings were in the colonial architecture of Williamsburg, Virginia.

Inland also built a nine-hole golf course and paved the town's main street. However, the number one improvement for health was an adequate water supply and a filtration plant. A gas well on houses. The next improvement was a telephone system, followed by a sewage system...The system was an engineering feat because the valley is so narrow. At points, the valley barely has room for a creek, railroad track, one land road and a row of houses. The sewer lines had to cross and recross the creek, railroad and road, in all eight miles of sewer lines were laid. The disposal plant was built for a population of 3,600. The town got at the same time a garbage and trash incinerator...

Inland property was cleaned out and gas made available to all mine worker

Wheelwright had three churches. The Community Church was located in the center of town, across from the club house and each evening at 6 p.m., organ music was broadcast throughout the town. There was a Baptist church at the entrance to the valley and a church in the black settlement.

By 1933, there were four school buildings for whites, two brick and two frame. The schools had two auditoriums and a gymnasium. There was also a grade and high school for black children. The Wheelwright schools were under management of the Floyd County System... Inland instituted a scholarship program and by 1939 gave eight scholarships to worthy students.

Inland...saw the need to establish a small hospital with equipment and a staff of three doctors: Dr. John W. Bailey, Dr. Russell L. Hall, and Dr. G. Griddlefinger. Two other doctors, Dr. George Gumbert and Dr. Brad Bennett, later joined the staff...

In 1946, approximately eighty percent of the miners were native white. The remainder were composed of Czechs, Hungarians, French and Negroes. All were members of the United Mine Workers.

Wheelwright was planned and created, not in any futile hopes of gratitude, but of sober conviction that doing everything possible to make a wholesome, attractive community would prove to be thoroughly good business.

The huge mining complex was sold in 1966 to Island Creek Company for 1.3 million. Island Creek sold the town to George Nifone of Florida who sold the town to Kentucky Housing.

In turn, Kentucky Housing sold the property to Mountain Housing. Private individuals were able to buy homes in 1966, 1967 and today.

Today a large number of the remaining homes are privately owned. The town no longer has a hospital, clubhouse, community building, theatre and golf course. The town does have an elected mayor and city council an IGA, Dollar Store, clinic, pharmacy and Otter Creek Correctional Center.

It has been said that "a mining town" span of life is for as long as there is coal to be mines.

By the time the coal is gone the town will be gone, either moved or left to rot, a ghost town. The citizens of Wheelwright are trying to save their town and not let it be a lost mining town.

shown to the investors. In both November, 1910 and January, 1911, Mayo turned over six deeds to Consolidation Coal from Northern Coal and Coke for a total of 100,000 acres of mineral lands, included were mineral lands of Hall Hollow. This transaction was all of Elkhorn or Elkhorn seam of coal. On February 6, 1911, Jere H. Wheelwright took office as president of Consolidation Coal Company. The need for Consolidation to open new mines was great as World War I was approaching. However, Consolidation did not have the money to develop its coal rights.

In 1915, J.P. Morgan Jr., John D. Rockefeller Jr. and others came to look at Consolidation's holdings and purchased bonds in the company. It is unclear how, but Elkhorn Coal Corporation became owner of the Hall Hollow area. In 1916, a section at the confluence of Hall and Branham Branch on Otter Creek was transformed into a tent camp. Soon the tents gave way to floorless frame structures lined with building paper. The first 15 laborers worked 10 hours a day in the building of the camp. Materials were brought in by ox teams over the mountains from Pike County.

Wheelwright was incorporated at this time and the post office established on December 23, 1916. The first mining took place in July, 1916 when a drift mouth mine was opened. Coal was stored until completion of a railway.

Living conditions were typical of a coal town: water was provided by a series of wells and pumped by hand; open sewage went into pits with drainage into Otter Creek. This type of coal town existed until 1930.

In 1930, Inland Steel came to Wheelwright. In 1929, Inland Steel found it needed so much low sulphur coal for its steel operation that they decided to buy a coal mine in the Elkhorn field. After analyses of coal from several mines, the Wheelwright mine was found to be of exceptional quality. The mine was up for sale as a deal was already underway by the Kopper Company to purchase 50,000 acres. Then the 1929 financial crash occurred and the Koppers stepped out.

On February 1, 1930, newspapers announced that Inland Company had leased 11,000 acres of coal from the Elkhorn Company and would make improvements in the plant. Company accounts show that, the deal in brief was, Inland Steel purchased the town of Wheelwright, the mine plant and equipment—tippie, track, cars, tools, etc., and leased over 14,000 acres of coal lands. They assigned E.R. (Jack) Price to manage the operation.

The Wheelwright mine had never been a money-maker and was not in the best condition. The accident record was bad. Inland's first task was to rehabilitate the mine to achieve operating efficiency and safety underground.

The first thing in the mine upgrade was a better ventilation system and substations to provide adequate power. In 1931, a steel and concrete tippie that would handle 6,000 tons in eight hours was installed.

New all-steel mine cars were purchased and engines overhauled. A repair shop was built, as well as a miners bathhouse with individual lockers. In 1950, the preparation plant was constructed.

Another of Inland's safety measures was the adoption of protective hats, hard-toed shoes and goggles. They also had developed a safety educa-

Parenting and Television

Use the Television as Your Literary Pal

By Dr. Bobbi Kamil

Did you know that your television can be a magical peephole into the world of good books and reading?

By using your imagination, you can enlist your television set as an electronic literature teacher for children... and for you, too.

Viewing involves different senses and different parts of the brain than reading, but when you link them you can forge a sense of fun in both book reading and TV watching. The combination, psychologists have found, can increase understanding of the reading material, and provoke better recall of the story.

Here are some imagination stimulants that will be useful as a road map to literacy:

- Check your local TV listings or monthly program guide for scheduled book dramatizations. There are hundreds available on cable channels in the form of films and videos adapted from plays, novels and short stories of literary merit.

A & E Classroom, on Tuesdays from 7 a.m. to 8 a.m. ET, and Bravo's Culture in the Classroom offer commercial-free literary adaptations for readers of all ages. Assignment Discovery, on Thursdays from 9 a.m. to 10 a.m. ET, focuses on authors and their creations.

- Select the video stories from the listing that you think your children will enjoy; tape the program; and get the book or story in written form from your bookstore or library. After your child has read and digested the printed version, then view the taped program together.

- Discuss the differences and similarities between the written version and the televised one. How did the visions your child saw while reading compare with those on the screen? How well did your child feel the director chose the scenes? Were there scenes from the book that your child missed in the film? How would your child have done it differently, and better?

This multimedia conversation will illuminate insights, as well as increase respect for and memory of the material for you and your child.

Romanian woman brings her to

by Pam Shingler
Contributing Writer

Florica Todirut-Mears is outspoken and opinionated. Her favorite question is "Why?" and she doesn't hesitate to ask.

Those characteristics are precisely why she never quite fit into the culture of her homeland, Romania, an Eastern European country that became a part of the Soviet Communist bloc before Flori, as she is known, was born.

The added traits of courage and daring led her on an odyssey that includes a bicycle escape from Romania, time in a German refugee camp, a stopover in Lexington and, finally, a home in Floyd County.

"I was always questioning," says Flori, who left her country in 1990. "I always needed to make my own choices. I needed to find out and make up my own mind."

Under Communist rule, however, Romanians were told what to think and what to do, and, according to Flori, little actually changed when the Soviet influence began to disintegrate in the late 1980s.

She tells of working in a factory that was "dirty and cold all the time" and of coming home to an unheated apartment stocked with very little food. She tells of a boss who tried to hit her because she disagreed with an order and of a cannery job where she was forced to put new labels on thousands of cans of food that were past the expiration date.

Twice when she quit jobs, she was arrested for being unemployed, which was in itself a crime.

Once, she and her twin sister, who was pregnant, were charged with prostitution -- a common charge for women without state jobs, Flori says.

The charges were dropped, but her sister who had tried to emigrate in the early 1980s was constantly harassed by authorities for wanting to leave.

Merely complaining was dangerous. "Everybody said, 'You are crazy. You can't change things,'" Flori recalls. "Secret police were everywhere. You couldn't be sure about your neighbors or your friends or even members of your family."

Oddly, the event that prompted her own departure came after the Communist ruler was ousted but no real changes took place. The outcome of the first so-called free election was known a year before the election, she says.

In the spring of 1990, university students and intellectuals began a two-month demonstration in a public square in downtown Bucharest, Romania's capital and Flori's hometown. They were demanding not only a new president, but also that no member of the Communist Party be included in the new government.

The demonstrations continued more or less peacefully until June when local police and thousands of miners from the northern part of the country descended on the square. The miners' appearance, Flori contends, was "orchestrated by the government."

When the melee subsided, the demonstrators had been arrested, killed or simply "disappeared," and Flori who lived near the square was in the hands of the secret police.

Awakened by the sounds of screams, the small, dark-haired woman put on a T-shirt, skirt and house slippers and went into the street to see what was going on.

She met a group of the marauding miners and questioned them about the noises she had heard. Their answer was to beat her and to take her to the secret police office. "My neighbors saw them beat me and turned away because they were scared. I thought 'There is no way to live anymore with these people,'" she remembers.

(She is convinced she would have been killed if some foreign journalists had not witnessed the beating.)

At the police headquarters, she saw "40 or 50 dead bodies in the courtyard." She had lost her shoes, her glasses were broken and her clothes were shredded. "I was scared and naked and praying," she says. A woman at the police office gave her a sweater with blood on it.

After several hours, Flori was released. She encountered an Italian television crew and allowed them to videotape her bruised back and chest despite friends' warning that she might be putting herself in greater danger.

Romania: Fa

Though on the other side of the globe, Romania shares some traits with Eastern Kentucky. Its terrain, for instance, is about two-thirds mountains and hills, hiding rich oil, gas and mineral deposits and creating transportation problems.

Also, with a perpetually sagging economy, it has historically been among the least developed European countries. And its language differs from that of its neighbors; Romanian is a Romance language (Latin-based), but the country is surrounded by ethnic nationalities that speak Slavic-based languages.

Some other facts:

- Romania occupies 91,699 square miles, slightly smaller than our state of Oregon. Among its states is Transylvania, home of the legendary Count Dracula. It is bordered by Yugoslavia, Hungary, Russia, Bulgaria and the Black Sea. The Carpathian Moun-

man's odyssey Floyd County

"I decided then to leave the country," she says. "My friends thought things would change, but I didn't. I said it is better to die when you're trying to be free than to die doing nothing."

Methodically, she began to sell all her possessions, "furniture, books, everything I had, to make money."

On July 24, 1990, she and three friends left. They bicycled for four days and nights to the Hungarian border. Inside Hungary, they sold one of the bikes to purchase train tickets.

For the first time in relating her story, Flori begins to cry. The anger of earlier words are muted. "A train employee told us we were dirty and should go home. He called us gypsies and treated us like criminals."

In Budapest, the capital of Hungary, she and her fellow escapees knew they were not in Romania anymore. "We went to a store and it was like another world. I thought I was dreaming. Everything was clean and you could buy anything."

"I cannot make you understand," she continues. "At home, the stores were empty—nothing, no clothes, no shoes, just enough food to survive."

From Hungary, the Romanians took the train to Germany, at the time a haven for Eastern European refugees.

In Berlin, they lived in a refugee camp until mid-September when the German government set Flori up in an apartment in Stuttgart where she worked as a housekeeper.

Meantime, Germany was becoming overwhelmed by people fleeing former Communist countries in search of political stability and work. To ease a growing problem, German officials began to send some refugees back to their homelands. So Flori made the decision to try to join her sister who had earlier obtained an American visa and emigrated, settling in Lexington with her husband and daughter.

When Flori's visa was approved in 1992, the family for whom she worked helped her make arrangements to leave for the U.S. At the airport, they gave her an envelope and instructed her to open it when she reached Lexington. The envelope contained $1,000.

In Lexington, she worked again as a housekeeper and met her husband-to-be, Glen Mears, at the swimming pool at the apartment complex where she lived with her sister.

Communication was difficult. The Romanian had learned German in the previous two years, and now the arduous process of learning another new language, English, was beginning.

"I don't know how," Flori says of her initial meetings with Glen, "but he could understand me even though I couldn't speak English."

The pair was married last year while Glen was still studying for a Master of Social Work degree at the University of Kentucky. Last December they moved to Floyd County where he works for Mountain Comprehensive Care.

Barely settled into a duplex apartment on Little Paint Road, Flori began classes at Prestonsburg Community College in January.

Although she graduated high school in Romania, going to the university was a long lost dream, but she was always an avid reader and learner. To be attending college now at the age of 40 and an ocean away from her homeland is exciting and absorbing.

When the college is in session, she spends every day in class or in the library, much as with a job. And she marvels that so many other students are not as committed as she.

"My big priority now is to improve my English," she says. "Everything will be much easier when I can read, write and speak better in English."

The innate curiosity that landed her in jail and made living in Romania impossible, ironically, will serve her well in her chosen profession - journalism.

Flori's mother is visiting her daughters through the summer. Despite their pleas, the elderly woman refuses to leave the only home she's ever known even though life has changed very little for her.

In September, Flori and Glen will accompany Flori's mother back to Romania because Mrs. Todirut is afraid to travel alone. However, Flori does not want to go. "My memories of Romania are so bad that I never want to go back there. This is my home now."

A time for professional growth and renewal

by Carol Stumbo
Director of Region 8 Service Center

"Gladly would I teach...Gladly would I learn."
—Geoffrey Chaucer, Canterbury Tales

About this time each year, a curious phenomenon takes place in most schools. Teachers who have spent almost nine months doing everything from caring for student cuts and bruises to assessing student performance grow numb or just a little anxious. Like some of their students, they are watching the calendar, waiting expectantly for the first days of their summer vacation. It is a time that most educators look forward to and need in order to return to the classroom with renewed enthusiasm in the fall.

Across the state, summer, however, is also becoming increasingly a time when teachers themselves are taking on the role of learners. In response to the high standards of education in Kentucky, more and more teachers are spending part of their summer vacations enrolled in workshops, institutes, or university programs learning more about the craft of teaching and their content areas and returning to their classrooms renewed.

PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT CLOSE TO HOME:

Traditionally, teachers from the mountains have had fewer opportunities for professional development than their counterparts in Lexington or Louisville. Attending summer sessions has usually meant traveling great distances and leaving families behind for several weeks. This summer, the educators in Region 8 will have unique opportunities for professional development without leaving home or traveling those distances.

Region 8 Service Area

August 1-2 at the Rowan County Board of Education in Morehead.

More information about summer offerings can be obtained by calling Cheryl Endicott with KEDC in Prestonsburg at (606)-886-0205 or Nedra Wheeler at KVEC in Hazard at (606) 439-2311. In most cases, these summer workshops will fulfill teachers' staff development requirements for the upcoming year.

institutes) offer professional development credit or a stipend and will take place in different parts of the region in order to make attendance more convenient for educators. Participation is limited and is on a first-come first-serve basis.

Summer institutes:

Primary Institutes: Hazard June 26-30; Prestonsburg July 24-28 (Primary Teachers)

Participants will learn about the critical attributes of the primary program, how to address individual student learning needs, how to create learning centers, use technology in the classroom.

Science Institutes:

Jackson July 24-29; Prestonsburg July 31-August 4 (Elementary and High School Teachers)

Teachers will learn how to develop science units using Transformations, the curriculum frameworks, how to integrate performance assessment into instruction, and develop instructional strategies for the science classroom.

Math institutes:

Pike Central June 12-16; Perry Co. Central July 31-August 4 (Grades 6-12)

Focus: LATTICE (*Learning Algebra *Through Technology *Investigation *Cooperative Experiences)

Writing Institutes:

Whitesburg July 10-13 and July 17-20; Prestonsburg July 10-27 (Monday-Thursday) Teachers from all grade levels

The writing institutes will prepare teachers to work with writing portfolios, KIRIS assessment, word processing and telecommunications. For more information, you may contact Nancy Price, administrative assistant at Region 8 Service Center (606) 886-0205.

To all of the educators in Region 8, thank you for allowing us to serve you this year at the service center and for all that you have done this year to improve education.

We hope that your summer will be a restful one and we look forward to seeing you at one of the workshops or institutes this summer.

ABCs Of Education

The Kentucky Educational Development Corporation and the Kentucky Valley Education Cooperative, the two consortia that serve school districts in Region 8, are offering a wide menu of training this summer. Both KEDC and KVEC will be sponsoring sessions in the arts/dance for teachers of all grade levels as well as individual sessions in using Internet, developing curriculum, assessment, leadership training. Two special workshops this summer are (1) a presentation by Dr. Willard Daggett, the Director of the International Center for Leadership in Education, which will take place on June 20 and 21 at Jenny Wiley State Park in Prestonsburg and (2) a presentation called "For Our Students, For Ourselves," a two-day facilitator workshop on instructional strategies for high school students on

Pilot project:

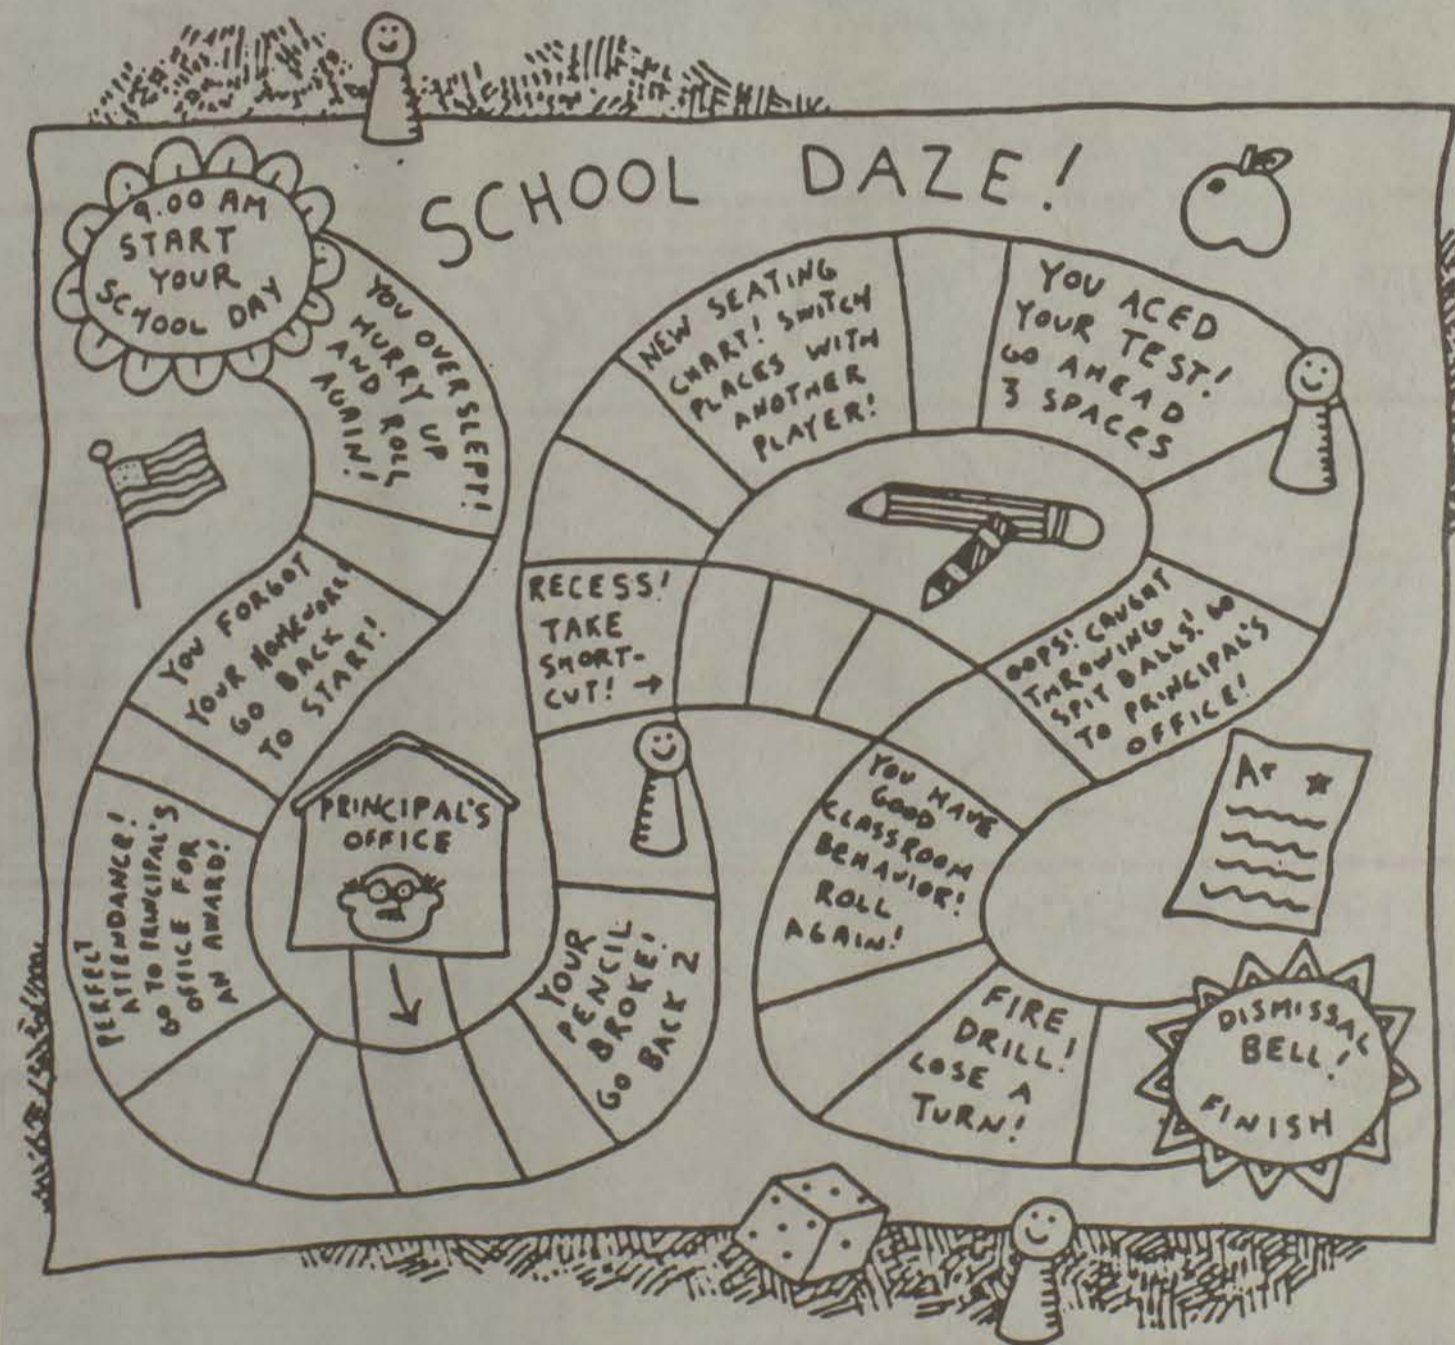

In addition to a growing number of offerings by the consortia, Region 8 teachers will also have the opportunity this summer to attend a series of summer institutes being sponsored by the Kentucky Department of Education, the Kentucky Writing Program, and PRISM, a science and math program funded by the National Science Foundation and the Kentucky Department of Education. Recognizing that many teachers in Kentucky have problems in attending professional development opportunities away from home, Commissioner Thomas C. Boysen initiated eight summer institutes which will serve as pilots for the rest of Kentucky.

A turtle comes out of his shell

EXTERNAL FEATURES OF A FRESHWATER TURTLE

by the editors of Dorling Kindersley

If someone told you that they carried their house on their back, you'd probably think they were crazy. But that's exactly what turtles do. Their bodies have wonderful hard shells that go wherever they do. When they become frightened or just want to take a nap, they simply pull their arms and legs and head into the shell.

Sometimes people will say of a shy person, "He needs to come out of his shell." When they say this, they are likening the bashful person to a turtle. The difference is that the shy person's "shell" is invisible, while the turtle's is as hard as nails.

EXTERNAL FEATURES OF A FRESHWATER TURTLE: Turtles belong to the Chelonia order of the class Reptilia. The order Chelonia includes marine turtles, freshwater turtles (terrapins) and land turtles (tortoises). Characteristically, chelonians have a short, broad body encased in a bony shell with an outer horny covering into which the head and limbs can be withdrawn, and a horny beak instead of teeth.

The Confederate coat: Fit for a general

by the editors of Dorling Kindersley

If you've ever seen a soldier's uniform hanging in a museum, you might have been surprised by how crisp and clean it looked—by the shiny buttons and the unfaded fabric. After all, everyone knows that wars are ugly and messy. Real soldiers couldn't possibly have looked this good.

They certainly didn't during the Civil War, which ended 180 years ago on April 9. Many of the young boys, who lied about their age to enlist in the Confederate army, got no uniform at all. Cloth was scarce, and even recruits who were lucky enough to be issued uniforms were soon disappointed. Their ill-fitting coats were made of "shoddy"—recycled rags—which fell apart after just a little use. Many boy soldiers fought in their own clothes—or in what they could beg, borrow or steal. One young Confederate cook was even wearing the uniform of his opponents when they captured him at Kinston, N.C. His explanation was simple: "I took from one of your dead during the peninsular campaign, and was allowed to wear it if I would turn the buttons with the eagle's head down." Sure enough, the eagles hung their heads.—Peter Kindersley

CONFEDERATE GENERAL'S FROCK COAT: Seldom had the gap between uniform theory and practice been wider than in the Confederate Army during the American Civil War (1861-1865). A gray coat, gray forage cap, and blue trousers were the regulation Confederate uniform, but the actual clothing worn showed greater variations in color and style, due largely to severe supply problems. One type of infantry uniform had a short gray jacket, beige trousers, and kepi-style cap; another was made of rough-weave "butternut" cloth, and topped with a slouch hat. Some officer's coats were gray, edged with the red piping of the artillery. The beige general's frock coat shown here has the rank insignia on the collar and sleeves.

Get That Job!

To land the right job, you must polish your networking, resume writing, and interviewing skills, say the experts at The Wall Street Journal's National Business Employment Weekly. Some additional tips:

- Networking. Remember, networking is not interviewing, and its primary purpose is not to ask for a job. It is a low-key, low-stakes "chat" to gather information, reality-test job search objectives and put yourself on display.
- Resumes. Always target your resume. Don't just list your credentials. In fact, the best idea is not just to tailor the cover letter, but resume as well.
- Interviewing. Not enough experience can often raise a red flag during an interview. You can counter this by selling your related experience and potential, using a "Yes, but" strategy to neutralize objections.

Origins

June brings the end of school, summer vacations and the celebration of zoo and aquarium month. Zoos can be a source of entertainment, education or scientific research. Zoos can also be an inexpensive way to spend a day.

Zoos are basically a place where wild animals are kept and displayed. Most large zoos exhibit mammals, birds, reptiles, and amphibians from all parts of the world. Some also feature fish and insects.

The word zoo is short for zoological garden. Zoology is the study of animals, which is what the first zoo did.

In the 4th century B.C., the Greek philosopher Aristotle helped pioneer the systematic study of animals. He persuaded a former student to provide him with living samples of unfamiliar species. Since the student was Alexander the Great, who went on to conquer much of his known world, the collection of animals was impressive.

In his History of Animals, Aristotle classified and described some 300 species of vertebrates, about as many as can be found in a well-stocked modern zoo.

However, many of the early zoos were not used for science, but were used as a way of showing wealth and power or to get the love of a certain maiden.

The first so-called formal zoo was assembled for the love an Egyptian queen, Hatshepsut, who usurped the throne in the early 15th century B.C. Her collection of animals presumably included wild leopards, exotic monkeys, and a strange long-necked spotted beast known as a camelopard.

In Rome, the zoos were used as a show of power and as a way to entertain the public. These public collections of wild animals were used mainly in the bloody fights in the Colosseum.

Also, many people who collected wild animals during this time, felt that the stranger the creature, the more desirable it was.

Ptolemy II, ruler of Egypt, owned a rhinoceros and a snake (probably a python) that reportedly measured 45 feet long. Emperor Augustus brought to Rome the first tigers ever seen there. Henry III of England collected an even rarer prize: a polar bear. And when Cortés and his men came to Montezuma's court, the emperor showed them his collection—cages of deformed human beings, including dwarfs and bearded women.

In time, many royal palaces in Europe acquired menageries or small exhibits. Pope Leo X established one, complete with elephants and lions, inside the Vatican. At Schönbrunn Palace in Vienna, Queen Maria Theresa, wife of Emperor Francis I, liked to breakfast in a small pavilion where she could watch zebras and camels grazing. And at Versailles, Louis XIV had the unsightly cages of wild animals surrounded by shrubs and flowers, thus originating an idea that professional zoo managers use to this day.

Zoos, like museums, went public around the time of the French Revolution. Emperor Joseph II decided in 1765 that the Viennese citizenry should be allowed to share in the pleasure his mother had enjoyed. The Schönbrunn Zoo still exists and is one of the finest in the world.

The first zoo in the United States opened in Philadelphia in 1859, and still draws enthusiastic crowds. Indeed, the 200 zoos in the United States annually attract some 115 million visitors, almost double the combined attendance at all professional baseball, basketball, and football games.

Zoos are also irresistible magnets for children; truant officers learned long ago that the local zoo was the first place to check for students playing hooky.

Once merely a source of amusement, zoos have begun to play a serious role in ecology or bionomics.

It is estimated that in nearly four centuries some 94 species of birds and about 36 species of mammals have disappeared from the face of the earth and that many more species face extinction. Zoos and zoo officials have assumed the responsibility for preserving the endangered species and, where possible, reintroducing them into nature.

But before a zoo can reintroduce an animal, it must first acquire the animal.

Zoos buy most of their animals from people called animal dealers.

An animal dealer obtains specimens from other zoos and dealers, or from hunters who specialize in capturing wild animals. A dealer sends a list of animals to different zoos. If a zoo wants any of the animals, it buys them from the dealer. Zoos also deal directly with one another, buying and trading animals.

The United States government severely restricts the import of many animals, especially endangered species and those that may transmit diseases to livestock. Because of these restrictions, zoos must rely increasingly on breeding programs as a source of animals.

The breeding program is not an easy process. The scientist must study the animal's habits in the wild and then try to help the animal duplicate that behavior in captivity. Unfortunately, it is not always as simple as studying and helping. Many wild animals change in captivity in ways scientists don't understand.

Breeding captive wild animals also creates special problems.

A month before Raji, the female Indian rhinoceros at the National Zoological park in Washington, D.C., was to give birth, it was deemed necessary for the staff at the zoo and a battalion of 100 volunteers to set up a round-the-clock watch. It was worth it, for on the 487th day after breeding, the baby, which weighed in at 125 pounds, was the first Indian rhinoceros born live in the Western Hemisphere. This Rhinoceros was named Patrick in honor of Daniel Patrick Moynihan, then the U.S. ambassador to India.

However, breeding programs are just a small part of what zoologists and other scientists do when studying animals for zoos. These scientists study the animals and then come up with displays or cages that are more like the animal's natural habitats. Scientists also decide on the best feeding schedules and type of food for the animals. These, and other programs, help in wildlife conservation.

Who knows, maybe zoos of the future will be more like the San Diego Wild Animal Park in California: human beings will be in cages watching the wild animals live in their natural habitats.

Dear Beakman,
How do fiber optics work?
Justin Kuo
Lexington, Kentucky

Dear Justin,
Fiber optics is a term we hear a lot these days. Sometimes the talk is just hype—a way of selling something by getting everyone all excited.

Fiber optics is pretty much just a new kind of cable. A regular cable sends electricity into a wire circuit. The fiber optic cable sends pure laser light into a thin strand of glass. The big difference is You Can send lots more stuff with fiber optics.

experiment #1

Fiber Optics At Home

WHAT YOU NEED:

Small jar with lid - long black sock - flashlight - the kitchen sink - nail - hammer - total darkness - grown-up help

WHAT TO DO:

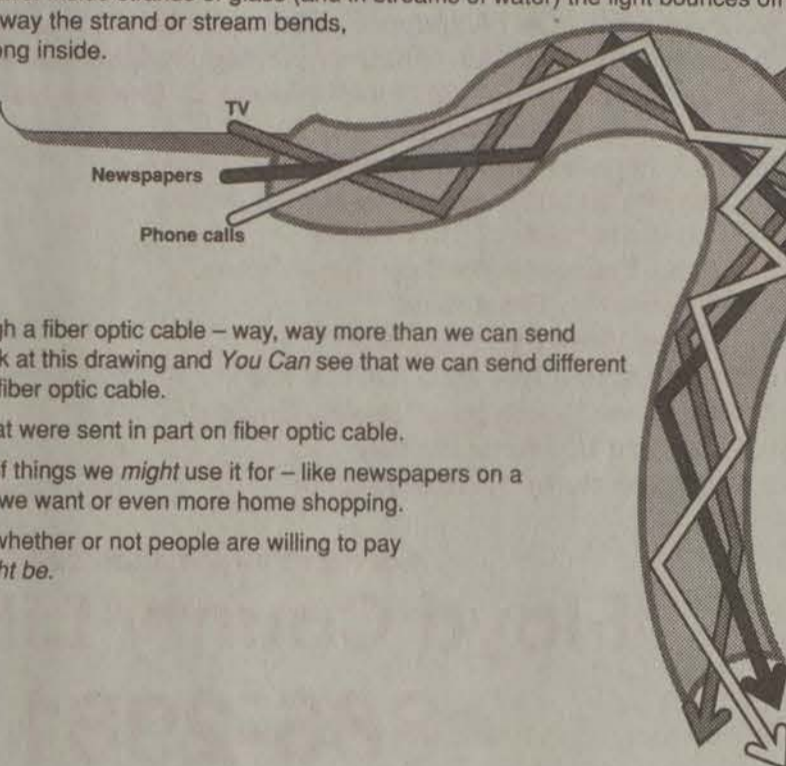

Punch 2 holes in the lid of the jar. Put the flashlight all the way into the bottom of the sock. Fill the jar with water and put the lid on. Slide the jar into the sink.

Turn off the lights. Turn on the flashlight. Now pour the water into your sink.

SO WHAT: Light travels in straight lines. That means your experiment should shine light along the line marked A. But it doesn't. Your light shone along line B.

You just bent a beam of light around a corner. This is exactly how we can use laser light to send telephone calls down a long, curvy fiber of glass. Inside strands of glass (and in streams of water) the light bounces off the inside walls. No matter which way the strand or stream bends, the light will follow it, bouncing along inside.

so what:

We can send lots of stuff through a fiber optic cable—way, way more than we can send through regular wire cable. Look at this drawing and You Can see that we can send different colored light through the same fiber optic cable.

You already get phone calls that were sent in part on fiber optic cable.

The hype is about what kinds of things we might use it for—like newspapers on a computer or movies whenever we want or even more home shopping.

What turns hype into reality is whether or not people are willing to pay money for all this stuff that might be.

SHORT STORIES

Chase Gibson

About the author

The Floyd County Times and the Department of Instruction of Floyd County Schools jointly feature the student work of Chase Gibson, a fifth grade Young Author's winner from Karen Conn's class at Harold Elementary.

Chase is the son of Jack and Dena Gibson of Harold. His book, The Living Dead, was the winner in the fifth grade Computer Graphics competition. His work is printed with permission.

Tonight was Alex's favorite night of the year, Halloween!! He thought Jim and Barry said to meet them at the haunted farm. It was 6:00 and he had to meet his friends at 7:00. He was going as Jason. He was wearing a hockey mask and a torn old coat with biker gloves and a shiny butcher knife in his hand.

He remembered what Barry was wearing. He was going as Freddy Kruger. Barry had a red and black striped sweater and black hat and brown boots. He had a Freddy glove but he took off the plastic blades and put on real ones.

Jim was going as the Texas Chainsaw Master. He had holes in his blue jeans, a ripped t-shirt and a torn old dusty coat. He had went to the horror store and got a gross mask. He was going to steal his dad's chainsaw and take it with him.

As he started to the door he heard the phone ring. He answered it. "Hello," Alex said. A dim voice replied, "Don't go to the old farm you'll..." As the voice faded away, he thought, "I wonder who that was." Probably just a prank. He went out the door and jumped on his bike and started to the farm.

When he got there Jim and Barry were already there. "What took you so long? We've been waiting 10 minutes and we told you to be here at 7:00," said Barry. "I know but there was this phone call and it was real scary Alex replied.

That's alright. Let's just go in," said Jim. As they entered the door Alex had a tingly feeling on his neck. They knew there was something dangerous about the barn. They walked to the ladder in the barn and heard a loud bang. They could see hardly nothing because of the closed barn doors. The little light they had came from the cracks in the barn from a pale full moon.

They started hearing creaky noises as if somebody else was in the barn with them. They started to hear a thump, thump, noise as they were climbing up to the loft. They were almost to the top of the ladder when they heard the crack of thunder. Light brightened up the sky and they saw a man with bloody hands, long black hair, and a bloodied face. Also lying behind him on the barn floor were four dead bodies.

Alex had heard about the missing bodies and the mental maniac (who was a mentally imbalanced person who murdered ball players). He had escaped from a mental hospital on the outskirts of town. I had read about him in the newspaper this morning, remembered Alex.

Alex, Barry, and Jim fell down the big ladder. They headed toward the big barn door but couldn't get out. It was locked. Then Jim screamed a blood curling scream that could wake the dead and it did.

There was an old cemetery behind the barn. It wasn't big, there were only seven graves. The corpses were awake and came after the three boys. They broke the barn door down and in they came. Four bodies, old skeletons actually, and they were coming after the three boys. The killer was on a wooden beam hanging swinging back and forth dead. The man had been killed by one of the four bodies he had killed. There were eight bodies in all now. They knew they would have to fight them off and try not to be killed themselves. One of the skeletons jumped at Alex. Alex ducked out of the way. The skeletons rammed into the wall and broke into little bones so there were 7 left. Barry took a pitchfork and threw it at one of the bodies upstairs. The body fell down to the ground laying in a puddle of blood.

Jim took his chainsaw and sliced two of the bodies in two pieces. There was no blood from any of the dead bodies because they were almost all bones. There were 4 left now so it was just about even. Barry took his claws and sliced one of the bodies that had jumped down from the loft. All of the sudden Alex felt big claws tear his leg. He looked over at the skeleton staring face to face with it. He picked up his axe and hit the skeleton. There was now two skeletons left. Barry and Jim ran at the remaining two skeletons and hit them with their weapons. The skeletons broke down to just bones.

They rushed Alex to the hospital and he got 25 stitches on his leg. The end or was it?

Tips For College Bound Students

Thousands of qualified students enter college each fall, but for many of them, their stay will be a short one. In fact, nearly forty percent of college freshmen never get their degree. That amounts to a lot of broken hearts and depleted checking accounts.

On their own for the first time, freshmen are often unprepared for the many choices and challenges they face in college. The Secrets to College Success, a video from Success Films of Burbank, CA, delivers a frank assessment of the college system and potential pitfalls. With the help of 24 honor students, the program's hosts reveal insider information and proven study techniques in 14 segments, such as: taking tests, classroom skills, writing papers, studying alone and dorm life. Among the dozens of helpful hints are:

- Arrive at least a week before classes begin. Get settled and learn the layout of the school campus and library. Read up on university policies and guidelines.
 - Start carrying a daily organizer. In college there are too many deadlines and details to effectively track without notes.
 - Always sit near the front of the classroom. Students see and hear better up front and will be recognized by their instructor there.
 - Never turn in a term paper without first taking an early draft to the professor, a teacher's assistant or tutor. The grading of papers is too subjective to take chances.
 - Friends and even school libraries often have old tests on file. Students should not rely on such tests to study, but they can learn the topics deemed important by their instructor and expect the types of questions, i.e. essay, multiple choice, or true or false.
 - Be choosy when making your new friends. Good students provide positive peer pressure, and party animals are hard to shake.
- Unlike a book on the same subject, a video can be shared by students and parents at the same time, opening lines of communication that are essential when both parties have so much at stake.

Memories from yesteryear

History!
I always enjoyed history in high school. American history, world history, just anything about how things used to be. Sherrill Frazier was my history teacher, as he was to other countless generations. We used to love to hear Sherrill tell his jokes and entertain us. But he was an excellent teacher on top of that.

So much of the past is still very much part of my present. The old adage, "you can't live in the past" is true, but sometimes reliving the past makes you feel a little younger.

I have become a nostalgia buff, you might say. Old things interest me and memories from the past are very much part of my life today.

I got a thrill out of visiting Gary Frazier's home about three years ago or maybe four, when I did a story on his baseball collection. Gary has some of the original seats that came out of old Crosley Field where the Cincinnati Reds played before moving to Riverfront in 1970.

Now, just the sight of those seats brought back so many memories of the games I watched at old Crosley Field. I used to drive from Warsaw, Indiana, at least three times a year to see Frank Robinson, Gus Bell, Vada Pinson, Johnny Edwards and others play for the Reds. Those seats reminded of those days.

I wish I had just one that I could sit in when the Reds are on the tube. Nancy could fix me a "Big Red Hot Dog" and I could sit back and think of Crosley Field.

I can remember growing up in Floyd County and like everyone else, I remember the 'good ole days.' Old photographs are very interesting to me. I love to look at the old team pictures that hang in many coaches' offices today.

Phil Osborne, who lives in Mims, Florida, and who is a former Martin Purple Flash, sent me the picture on this page. It certainly brought back many memories of my growing up around Martin. It is a very rare photo, and I have hesitated about sending it back to Phil, but I will, not to worry.

Phil wrote with the photo, "Ed, we enjoy your articles and look forward to reading them every week. I thought you could help identify some of these people. It truly is a rare photo. I'm sure you remember being in this picture!"

Thanks, Phil Osborne.
When I looked at the photo what memories came to mind, as the folks that I grew up with were pictured in an old photo in front of me.

I must confess, like Phil, I have forgotten some of them. But most of them I remember.

In the photo are my two cousins that I practically grew up with. We were constant companions and we just enjoyed being together. Stevie Hampton (holding the basketball, C 54 C) joined the Air Force, retired from the military and is currently living in Alabama. Jessie Hampton (number 17) played and starred for the Martin Purple Flash in the '60s.

Raymond "Muggsy" Griffith (number 16)—who could ever forget Muggsy? What an influence for the young players in our county when he taught at Martin. He was instrumental in starting the first Junior Pro basketball team.

I remember when Muggsy was just starting school at Martin, they asked him what he learned in school the first day. "How to play hooky," was his reply. Muggsy is employed by the C&O railroad.

Big "Bear" Salisbury (holding other basketball last row). Real name: Terry. He was a card. He, along with his brother Tim (number 11) used to keep all of us laughing by arguing all the time. They really did care for each other.

Eugene Frazier (number 12) was a dear friend, along with his brother Larry "Boodle" Frazier (number 9). In baseball, Eugene had wickedest curve ball you would ever want to bat against. I always thought Buford Allen had a wicked curve ball, but Eugene's was the worst.

Everyone in the Floyd County school district would be interested in number 15 (arms crossed) in the photo.

He is our own Bud Reynolds, a South Floyd teacher.

I spent a lot of days at the home of Wayne Damron Dings (number 8) and Wayne has passed away since our school days. Jimmy Harwicke (number 5) was really a decent basketball player. He could have played high school ball. Garland Stewart (number 3 back row) and J.H. Osborne and Roger Osborne were also fine basketball players in those days of yesteryear.

Please draw your attention to the middle of the picture, front row of players. That is Martin's very own James Stout, now a railroad man.

The team was known as the Christian Crusaders and all attended church at the First Christian Church in Martin. The very flashy uniforms were purchased at Halberts Sport Shop in Martin for the large sum of $250.

The team had cheerleaders in those days as well and some are very well known today. Let's start with the two in the back row. Mary Belle Dings and Mary Beth Samons. Mary Belle was the daughter of Gardis Dings, who for years ran the Beaver Valley Hardware store at Martin. Mary Beth's mother, Margie, still lives at Martin.

The front row. Very interesting. Now the first girl (moving left to right) was a Slone, the daughter of Hass Slone, who was the scout master then. Her first name escapes me. The second and fourth are twins (that's plain to see) named Christie and Tommy Griffith. (Now which is which, I do not know.) Tommy owns and operates Jan's Floral in Martin. The very last one at the end is Janice Griffith, now a Dings, and the original founder of Jan's Floral Shop.

Now the identity of the middle one is questionable, but several have said that is Floyd County's very own Francis Brackett. Could it be?

Number 10 in the photo was the pastor's son and his name is unknown.

In the back row is Homer Swindell, pastor, and Tom Martin, youth director at the church and basketball coach. Tom Martin, the last I of heard of him, had moved to Florida.

Not pictured, absent from church that Sunday, were Phil Osborne and Stevie Halbert.

All those persons pictured in the photo were a big part of my younger days. The photo was taken in front of the very old Martin Grade School building (which burned down). It was taken by J.D. Payne, owner of Payne's Studio in Martin. Now that could be another article in relating the many, many days spent at Payne's. It was there that I became very interested in photography.

Well, I hope you enjoyed our trip to yesteryear through the photograph.

Lasers remove tattoos painlessly

by M.R. Hiller

Q: When I was in the military 25 years ago, I had a tattoo put on my biceps. I have wanted it removed for 10 years, but the scars I've seen from tattoo removal have stopped me. Now my teen-age son thinks it would be cool to get a multi-colored tattoo and my wife wants to tattoo on permanent eyeliner. Can tattoos be removed without scars? Is the procedure painful?—M.T., Richmond, Va.

A: There are three lasers now commercially available which remove tattoos without leaving scars. Experts report that complete tattoo removal requires seven to nine treatments spaced at one-month intervals. It's apparently less painful to remove a tattoo than it is to get one, and local anesthetic can make the process pain-free.

Dermal tattooing with pigment introduced through a puncture wound is believed to have originated around 8,000 B.C., according to a report by Dr. Richard Fitzpatrick, professor of medicine in the department of dermatology at the University of California, San Diego.

Men traditionally have used tattoos as a symbol of belonging to a group, such as the military. Gangs have inspired a recent resurgence of interest in tattoos. Others simply want a tattoo as a statement of individuality or artistry. In a recent study of tattooed adolescents, 69 percent were high school students with A or B grades.

Studies estimate that 3 percent of all adults in the United States have a tattoo. Most are on men. But in the past five years, cosmetic tattoo have become very popular among women. In 1984, permanent eyeliner, called blepharopigmentation, were first introduced and promoted to women who had difficulty applying makeup because of some physical condition, such as arthritis. Now permanent eyeliner, along with tattooed lip lines and cheek rouge, are believed to account for well over 125,000 tattoos a year.

A tattoo can become undesirable if it is deemed inappropriate or no longer fashionable. Cosmetic tattoos may be improperly applied or the pigment may migrate, marring the effect.

Until recently, most tattoo removal worked by treating the skin containing the pigment.

Dermabrasion involved rubbing the tattoo with abrasive material such as sandpaper, cryosurgery removed by freezing; and caustic materials, cutting away tissue, use of an infrared coagulator or laser all destroyed the tattooed skin. All these techniques almost always left a scar, which "has often been as objectionable as the original tattoo," writes Fitzpatrick.

This problem has been reduced with the introduction of several types of lasers that use a very-high-energy pulse to fragment the tattoo pigment itself but not the tissue surrounding the pigment.

Once the pigment is fragmented, experts believe it is carried away from the site by the body's immune system. Macrophages, part of the body's defenses against disease, engulf the pigment and remove it as they would bacteria. The pigment also may disperse through the skin surface.

The first laser to successfully remove tattoos was called the Q-switched ruby laser. First developed in 1967, it had drawbacks. Sometimes it didn't remove the tattoo and other times it caused hypopigmentation, in which the treated area took on a bleached appearance.

The Q-switched ruby laser is still effective and used, and two additional laser systems are available for tattoo removal—ored tattoos now in vogue may take several types of lasers to remove.

A study by Dr. Brian Zelickson, professor of medicine in the department of dermatology at University of Minnesota Medical School, Minneapolis, identified which laser best removed each color.

Studies show that complete removal requires multiple treatments. According to Dr. Mitchel Goldman, a leading authority in laser use for tattoo removal from the University of California, San Diego, the average tattoo requires seven to nine treatments to remove all pigment. Treatment sessions consist of pulsing the pigmented area with laser bursts. Goldman and other experts optimally space treatments a month apart.

As for anesthesia, "Use of pain medication depends on an individual's pain threshold," Goldman said in an interview. "Removal using lasers is no more painful than putting (the tattoos) on. Currently about 75 percent of our patients opt for a local anesthetic during the removal procedure.

Tattooing is virtually unregulated. The federal Food and Drug Administration has some control over the composition of the pigments, just as it does over any material injected under the skin, but the safety of tattoo pigments has not been rigorously established.

In a review of tattoo regulation in the United States, Dr. Whitney Tope of Dermatology Associates of San Diego County found that seven states or territories forbid tattooing entirely; 27 have no statutory regulations; 11 have minimal legislation, such as simple prohibition against the tattooing of minors; and 12 have more complete regulations that address issues such as artist-training verification, recognition and handling of adverse events, and infection control.

Tope wrote that the dearth of infectious complications arising from tattooing suggest that tattooers are adequately controlling infection risks, but said he believes some regulation should exist.

Issues needing to be addressed include safe environments for artists, who are repeatedly exposed to patrons' blood, and for patrons, who are exposed to needles and other equipment; guidelines for the manufacture of pigments with safe levels of lead, arsenic, mercury and other known toxins and contaminants; record-keeping to log and report any problems; and minimum training guidelines for tattoo artists. Tope's study was published in the May 1995 issue of the Journal of the American Academy of Dermatology.

As with most cosmetic surgery, tattoo-removal treatments are usually not covered by insurance. But there are various programs throughout the United States that provide financial assistance, especially to youths seeking to remove gang insignias. University medical center dermatology departments may provide local resources for your area.

Laser tattoo removal

Tattoos are created by using a needle to deposit pigment in the dermis of the skin. They can now be removed by lasers, leaving little or no scarring.

Lasers produce beams of intense light which can be precisely focused. This light passes through normal skin tissue without damaging it. But when it touches pigmented cells, its energy is absorbed and converted to heat, fragmenting the pigment. This happens quickly and surrounding tissues suffer little damage. Over time, the body's own defense systems carry away the damaged, pigmented material. Successful removal usually requires seven to nine treatment sessions.

Different types of lasers are used to remove different colors:

Laser type	Tattoo colors
Nd:YAG	Brown, orange, red and black
Alexandrite	Blue, green and black
Q-switched ruby	Purple and black

Yellow is the most difficult pigment to remove.

the Q-switched Nd: YAG and the alexandrite lasers, both developed a few years ago. Each has proven to be effective in removing certain colors of tattoo pigment.

Most tattoos, especially those gotten a generation ago, are one color, usually black or blue. All three lasers are effective in removing these tattoos. But the multicol-

Walking Is Healthy—In More Ways Than One

(NAPS)—While most doctors will tell you a brisk walk every day can be good for your health, it's also true a special walk on a particular day can be good for the health of a lot of others as well.

This walk is the American Diabetes Association's one-day event to raise awareness about diabetes and contributions to help battle this serious disease. It's the Association's largest fund-raising event and it usually takes place around the first week in October depending on your location.

You can sign up for Walktoberfest by calling 1-800-254-WALK.

The Association is the nation's leading nonprofit health organization supporting diabetes research, advocacy and information for patients, health professionals and the public.

Walkers and volunteers can choose to participate at one of the more than 200 sites across the United States. There will be between 500 and 1,500 participants at each site.

Diabetes is a disease that affects the body's ability to produce or respond properly to insulin, a hormone that allows blood glucose (blood sugar) to enter the cells of the body and be used for energy. It can cause serious health complications, including blindness, kidney disease, heart disease, stroke and nerve damage leading to amputation of the legs and feet. In fact, diabetes is the fourth-leading cause of death by disease in the U.S. and there is as yet no known cure. What's more, over half the nearly 14 million Americans who have diabetes don't even know it. This year alone, more than 650,000 Americans will be diagnosed with the disease.

Echo and Narcissus

Edited by Professor E.D. Hirsch Jr.

The story of "Echo and Narcissus" is a myth from ancient Greece and Rome. Long ago, people told myths to explain things about the world that they didn't understand—where fire comes from, for example. The story of "Echo and Narcissus," which follows, explains two things: what echoes are and where narcissus flowers come from.

There's a big difference of course, between mythological explanations and scientific facts. For example, we know now that echoes happen when sound bounces off a solid surface like a cliff or a wall and returns to us. And since sound moves in waves, sometimes the echo repeats several times, getting fainter and fainter each time we hear it. We also know that the pretty bulbs multiply under the ground until there are more and more of the same flower.

Knowing these facts, why do people still read and enjoy the ancient myths, even when their explanations have turned out to be wrong? For one thing, the myths are wonderful stories. As you'll see, the story of Echo and Narcissus is a sad and lovely tale that still has much to say about people, and about love.—E.D. Hirsch Jr.

When Narcissus was born, all who saw him marveled at his beauty. When he grew to be a youth, all who saw him fell in love with him. But Narcissus, vain and conceited, showed love for no one. He would not give even a glance to many a heart-broken maiden.

One day his beauty melted the heart of a lovely nymph named Echo. Once she saw Narcissus, she followed him everywhere. But she could not tell him of her love, for though she longed to speak, she could only repeat the last words of what was said to her.

How had this come to pass? It was because of Juno, queen of the gods. Juno often left Olympus, the home of the gods, to wander the hillsides in search of her husband, Jupiter, who had a fondness for the nymphs who dwelt in the woods. Just when Juno was about to find her husband, Echo would appear and take her aside to distract her with a stream of lively and amusing chatter until the nymphs and Jupiter had gotten away. When Juno discovered what was going on, she punished Echo. "You have spoken too many words," said Juno, "and now you shall speak only the last words you hear."

And so poor Echo could follow Narcissus, but she could say nothing to him.

One day Narcissus got lost in the forest and cried out,

Narcissus was so beautiful that he fell in love with his own reflection.

"Hello, is there anyone here?"

"Here, here," Echo replied, hidden behind some trees.

"Ho, there! Where are you?" Narcissus called.

"Where are you?" answered Echo.

Narcissus could see no one, so he called out again, "Are you close at hand?"

"Close at hand," came the reply.

Narcissus went toward the voice. "Are you the one who calls me?" he asked.

"Who calls me," Echo answered.

"I am Narcissus," the youth replied.

"Narcissus," said Echo, and, unable to restrain herself, she rushed toward him with open arms.

Narcissus leaped back. "Get away!" he cried. "Not one step closer. I shall go my own way, and I forbid you to stay with me!"

"Stay with me!" said Echo. Her heart broke as she watched Narcissus turn and walk away. In grief and pain, she wandered through the forest alone.

Narcissus continued to spurn all those who offered him their love. Then one day while he was hunting, he stopped to take a drink from a clear still pool. As he bent his head toward the silvery water, he saw a beautiful face looking back at him, and he fell in love—with his own reflection! Now Narcissus knew the desire and longing he caused in others. He stared at the beautiful image in the water and even tried to kiss it, but the touch of his lips disturbed the surface, and the beautiful image vanished in a blur of ripples.

When the water stilled and the reflection returned, Narcissus could not tear himself away. He longed for that which he could never possess. For many days he pined away, and grew weak and thin. Echo came near him, but she could not help him: She could not speak, and his gaze remained fixed on his own image. Finally, with his dying breath he gasped, "My love, my love."

Echo could only reply, "My love."

Grief-stricken, poor Echo wasted away until nothing was left of her but her voice, which still haunts dark caves and lonely hillsides.

By the side of the pool where Narcissus died there grew a lovely flower, with a yellow center ringed by delicate white pearls—it was a Narcissus, still known to this day by the name of the beautiful but vain youth who died for love of his own reflection.

Video Camera and Player

A video camera does not use light to create a chemical change in photographic film, as in the ordinary camera. Instead, the light is focused onto a target plate that has a layer of photoconductive material. This is a material that conducts varying amounts of electricity according to the amount and color of light that shines onto it.

The photoconductive material is scanned point-by-point across the plate by electronic circuitry, and the image on it is coded as tiny magnetized patches on magnetic tape—dozens of images each second. The tape is contained in a plastic case called a videocassette. When the tape is played, the playback head picks up the coded patches of magnetism and converts them into electrical signals, which are fed to the television set. Sound is also recorded, in a narrow strip at the top of the tape.

The recording and playback heads in a video player are tilted at an angle. They record diagonally on the tape, using a scanning technique. Each diagonal track is of microscopic width. The head drum rotates, and the tape moves past it at 3/4 inch per second.
