County population shrinks in latest census

Prestonsburg grows by 54; prison boosts Wheelwright

by RALPH B. DAVIS
MANAGING EDITOR

The numbers are beginning to trickle in and, for the most part, Floyd County's figures are falling.

The U.S. Census Bureau has begun releasing location-specific data from the 2000 census, and the numbers show Floyd County's population fell slightly from 1990 to 2000.

According to the census, Floyd County's population now stands at 42,441, which is down 1,145 from 1990's 43,586.

All of that loss and more can be attributed to a decrease in residents under the age of 18. The number of minors in Floyd County fell by 1,363 during the 1990s, from 32,407 to 31,044.

That same trend could also be seen in most of the county's five incorporated cities, with Prestonsburg posting the only real gain during the 1990s.

Prestonsburg's population increased just slightly, rising 54 people from 3,558 in 1990 to 3,612 in 2000.

The city of Wheelwright showed the largest population increase of the county's five cities, but the rise was deceptive. Wheelwright showed a gain of 321 people, rising from 721 in 1990 to 1,042 in 2000.

However, Wheelwright's population gain came as a result of the construction of Otter Creek Correctional Center during the 1990s, with inmates of the prison counted as residents of Wheelwright. Depending on how many prisoners were counted,

Sheriff's office nabs fugitive

Early yesterday evening the Floyd County Sheriff's Office apprehended a Warsaw, Ind., fugitive who had taken refuge in Floyd County.

Charles Junior Haywood, 28, wanted in Indiana on a habitual theft warrant issued on January 9, as well as a class C felonious-burglary charge, was picked up Thursday evening by Sheriff John K. Blackburn and Sgt. Shawn Roop in Auxier.

Haywood was arrested at approximately 4:45 p.m. and Indiana was contacted shortly after as Blackburn explained the nature of the arrest.

"He matched the description and we knew we had the right guy," Blackburn said.

Blackburn and Roop were forced to rely on the information given through description from the state of Indiana, because, initial

The Mountain Coalition for Prevention met at May Lodge in Prestonsburg Thursday afternoon to discuss and share ideas for increasing substance abuse awareness. Those in attendance afforded one another many productive suggestions, including early plans to develop local community coalitions in the tradition of Pike County's SOCK (Support Our Community Kids) awareness program.

Groups gather to share ideas on drug prevention

by SHELDON COMPTON

There are groups, often sadly unnoticed, within our local communities who have decided to stop complaining about substance abuse and start making active efforts toward making improvements.

One such group is the Mountain Coalition for Prevention which met Thursday afternoon at May Lodge in Prestonsburg to continue their quest for prevention of substance abuse through an awareness they hope will spread infectiously into surrounding communities.

After a brief welcome and introduction from coalition chairman Bob Norman, the meeting began with a report from the

"Stop the Madness."

As a part of "Stop the Madness," a newsletter, written by Michelle Keathley, was presented to members in attendance so that the group could have a look at what had been done recently to advance the goal of prevention on the part of Floyd County.

Cleanup worker crushed by tree

Witnesses say man killed after saving coworker

by SHELDON COMPTON

A Floyd County man was killed yesterday at Price while working on the Left Beaver Creek cleanup effort.

Moses Pete Moore, 61, of Price, was working on the cleanup project yesterday afternoon behind the residence of Brian Hughes at McCreary Branch when a tree fell on him at approximately 1:35 p.m.

During an attempt to cut down a tree, Moore fell victim to what could have been a possible oversight or, on the other hand, simple, unfortunate circumstance and timing.

According to accounts given, a deadened tree broke in half, sending the top half down onto Moore.

Witnesses at the scene described Moore's final act as one of heroism, saying he pushed coworker and friend Terry Wayne Collins out of the way of the falling tree.

According to Aaron Contrell,

Ethics board closes book on judge's fundraiser

STAFF WRITER

The Floyd County Ethics Commission met Tuesday evening at 5 p.m. for what turned out to be a rather brief gathering as commission members once again addressed Floyd County Judge-Executive Paul Hunt Thompson's "birthday party" fundraiser at Thunder Ridge several weeks ago.

During their last meeting, members had agreed to take a closer look at the county's ethics code for potential violations Thompson may have committed

Members of the Floyd County Ethics Commission met Tuesday evening to come to a final determination on the ethical nature of a gathering at Thunder Ridge held to raise money for Judge-Executive Paul Hunt Thompson.

Seven Floyd County schools will share in over $200,000 in reward money based on their performance on statewide testing.

The schools are among 702 statewide receiving awards totaling $22.4 million.

The rewards are based on shares of about $959, with each school having shares equal to the number of full-time certified employees.

Under that formula, Prestonsburg High School will receive the most money, with $40,488.98 going to that school.

Other schools receiving rewards and the amount they will receive include:

■ Prestonsburg Elementary, $36,346.10

■ Osborne Elementary, $28,319.27

■ McDowell Elementary,

The schools are eligible for the reward money because they met or exceeded performance goals on the Kentucky Core Content Test.

Schools will begin receiving their rewards by mid-April and each school will determine how to spend its money. Each school's site-based council is charged deciding how the rewards will be spent.

According to a statement sent out by the state Department of Education, reward money can be used "to purchase materials, to provide training, as teacher bonuses or in other appropriate ways to encourage school and student achievement."

Prevention

The newsletter was circulated through Adams Middle School and found a good deal of success as Keathley and others had planned to hurl copies of the newsletter into the crowd during recent area basketball games. The idea was modified, however, for fear of distracting the basketball players.

Devotion in such extreme measure illustrates the drive and ambition behind the prevention group.

Dr. Lori Kepford, a professor of criminal justice at Pikeville College, further exemplified the stamina that has proven to be the backbone of this eclectic prevention team.

Kepford gave a candid account of her attempts to gain radio airtime during the recent 15th Region Tournament to exhibit proclamations from high school students, coaches and others who proudly express their drug free advice.

Although the radio spot was not a success, due to school cancellations and difficulty in obtaining permission from area schools to find likely candidates, it was, yet, another example of the Mountain Coalition for Prevention's relentless energy toward its goal.

In addition to bringing many ideas and spotlighted concerns about substance abuse prevention to the attention of area media, the group also hopes to develop local community coalitions such as Pike County's SOCK (Support Our Community Kids) program headed by Barry Potter. Coalition member Todd

Duff, who has plans to develop similar programs for Floyd County, prompted Potter to detail some of the operations his Pike County group deals with, stating that, perhaps, something could be taken from the comments to be used as a guideline or model for potential groups in Floyd County.

"We took a series of classes on parents' dealing with drugs for a start," Potter explained. "As we started it was a needed basis for a small group of people who said, 'Hey, we have a substance abuse problem in our community.'"

Potter, along with his co-founding wife, extended their comments to include ways in which they had raised funds and contacted individuals who could help.

Duff listened intently as the Potters addressed the group, diligently taking notes at a nearby laptop computer.

"Hopefully, if we can get one of these going, then one will lead to another and so on," Duff said.

The Mountain Coalition for Prevention has not set a date for its next meeting, but anyone who might be interested in taking part in the program is encouraged to contact Darlene Starnes at 886-6883.

Ethics

by accepting money from an arguably powerful group of friends in attendance at the party.

Tuesday's meeting was, primarily, the result of that examination.

Commission chairman John Rosenberg began the meeting by asking whether any of the members, upon rereading the provisions, found anything the commission should explore further.

Following a comment from commission member Peggy Bradford in which she claimed to have uncovered nothing new from the provisions during the few weeks of review, Rosenberg stated important facts to remember in determining whether any violations occurred.

"I believe Judge Thompson said that he didn't even know they were going to have the party," Rosenberg said.

This, along with previous statements in which Thompson had been quoted as saying that he had no intentions of allowing the donations to influence his decision making, would be a huge step toward insuring the matter did not fall into violation.

"We sort of left this whole thing hanging, but I did not, then or now, know of any specific provision of the code that had been violated," Rosenberg added.

Commission member Curt Hall pointed out a section of the code which states that no official should be involved with a situation that would "secure financial gain for himself."

Rosenberg mediated the concern by heading a discussion about the provision pointed out by Hall.

"I think all of our ethical provisions really deal with the exercise of official duties and unless there's some demonstration that anything that someone does ... in their private capacity wouldn't be anything we have jurisdiction over," Rosenberg said. "Whether some of us would have handled things the way the judge handled them is not for us to look at as a commission."

The commission, in spite of lingering uneasiness from Hall, did agree to put the matter of the party to rest. Hall, however, asked the commission to consider keeping the matter in mind in the event something was brought before the commission in relation to the case.

"Of course," Rosenberg assured Hall as the discussion came to a close. "We would, as a commission, address any matter that came before us relevant to the ethical function of any county official."

Judge Thompson commented

Wednesday afternoon on the commission's decision.

"It looks like I cleared another hurdle," Thompson said. "Of course I'm pleased that I was not found to be in violation of any of the codes. Had I been, I would have voluntarily rectified the situation."

"The surface appearance could have been seen as some impropriety but there was nothing wrong with what happened except for the appearance and how some people saw it. You live and learn, I guess."

Thompson finished by stating that he would like to see the state arrive at a unified ethics code which would set minimum standards for all officials. This would enable matters, such as the recent confusion surrounding the party given for Thompson, to be investigated more productively and handled more efficiently.

Census

Otter Creek's prison population accounts for most or all of the city's growth, and perhaps masks a decrease in the number of residents who do not live behind bars.

The county's other three cities all showed losses during the 1990s, with none more apparent than the city of Allen, which lost more than a third of its population. The number of people residing in Allen dropped from 229 in 1990 to 150 last year.

In a coincidence, both Wayland and Martin lost 61 people apiece. Wayland dropped from 359 to 298, while Martin decreased from 694 to 633.

As a whole, the portrait of Floyd County grew a tad more diverse during the 1990s, with the number of people claiming a race other than white more than doubling.

In 1990, 431 reported being of non-Caucasian descent, with 306 being African-American, 78 being Asian, 32 being native American and 15 belonging to some other race.

In 2000, the total number of minorities in Floyd County jumped to 963, with the breakdown being 546 African-American, 102 being Asian, 34 being native Hawaiian or other Pacific islander, 49 being native American and 52 reporting some other race.

The number of people reporting Hispanic ancestry, regardless of race, also doubled during the 1990s, with the number jumping from 129 to 260.

TFF seminar educates teachers

by MARY MUSIC
STAFF WRITER

Student teachers at Alice Lloyd College were treated to a professional development experience at Jenny Wiley State Park. Teachers were given an overview of forest conditions in the area and a tour of Jim C. Hamer Lumber Company in Prestonsburg.

The day was sponsored by forest professionals around the region, Teachers for the Forests (a non-profit organization that uses formal and nonformal educators to do workshops for school faculties), and Jim C. Hamer Lumber Company.

Professional development is the means by which teachers stay abreast of critical educational issues and career growth. The student teachers were certified to use Project Learning Tree materials and given curriculum to enhance student awareness of the environment.

Project Learning Tree is a non-profit education and conservation organization sponsored nationally by the American Forest Foundation.

The Teachers for the Forest organization (TFF) is dedicated to supporting education and a healthier environment. The organization was founded by Rob Jones, who works in public relations at Jim C. Hamer Company.

According to Solomon Kilburn, a TFF member who instructed Friday's session, Jones has trained over 2,000 teachers within the last three years. The workshop day is a fun-packed, fast-paced, participative training experience, using hand-on activities to demonstrate educational strategies that can be incorporated into the classroom.

Jamie Hughes, a student teacher at Cordie High School in Knott County, spoke enthusiastically about the program. "The biggest thing this program has taught me is that the forestry industry is not harming the environment, as people had once believed. With proper management, it can be beneficial to the community."

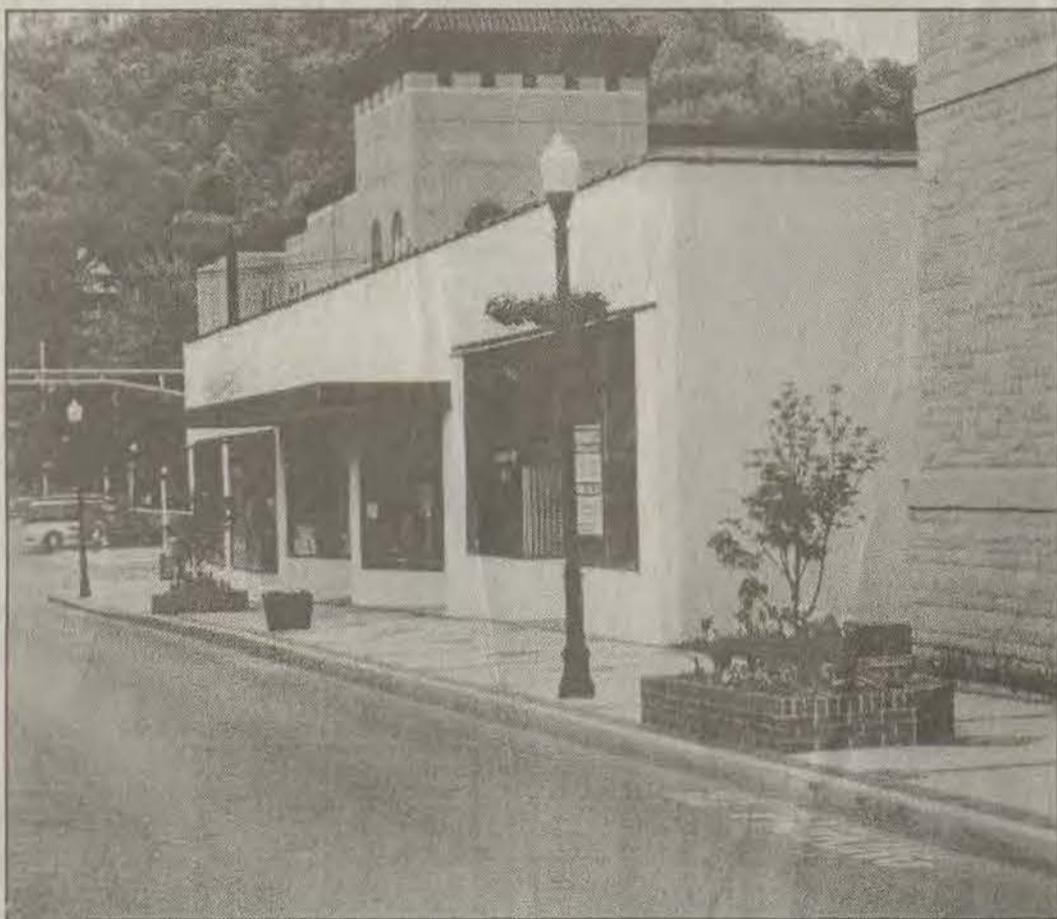

TFF uses university sources as the basis of factual authority. It exists to equip every educator with professional, science-based training about the environment at no cost to schools and educators. Some facts that emerged during Friday's session are: the U.S. has 83 percent more trees today than 40 years ago; we can have forest products, a healthy environment, and jobs at the same time; the key to forestation is exposing the forest floor to sunlight; and younger hardwood trees produce more oxygen for the environment than older trees.

Dr. Francis Gibson, field experience coordinator at Alice Lloyd, said that student teachers were excited about being able to utilize the educational strategies presented during the seminar into their classrooms. "This could be incorporated into any curriculum," she said. "Student teachers not only have gained materials from the organization, but also the opportunity to interact and exchange ideas."

Anyone interested in participating in future sessions, or sponsoring a session at your school of choice can email solomonkilburn@hotmail.com, or email the organization at TFF_USA@hotmail.com.

How to spot scoliosis in your child

(NAPSA)-According to a recent survey, 66 percent of America's parents know very little about scoliosis, a medical term used to describe abnormal curves in the spine.

The poll, commissioned by 'Check Your Child,' a public education initiative sponsored by Medtronic Sofamor Danek, a leader in the development of products used in the treatment of spinal disorders, found that only 20 percent of parents in America are aware of a simple screening test that can be conducted at home.

Scoliosis is a condition that may go virtually unnoticed in some children, but in others can impair the person's ability to walk, sit or lie comfortably.

It affects teenagers and adults and is more frequent (two percent) in females than in males (0.5 percent). The onset of symptoms usually occurs around the onset of puberty.

Early detection is important and a simple exam, called the 'Adam's Forward Bend Test,' can help detect the unnatural curvature of the spine.

Used by pediatricians, in school screenings or at home, the child is asked to lean forward with feet together, bending 90 degrees at the waist. If a curve is present, the child's shoulder blades will appear uneven. One may be higher than the other one.

Once scoliosis of the spine is detected, it can be confirmed with an X-ray, spinal radiograph, CT scan or MRI scan.

Younger children should be checked using the Adam's Forward Bend Test every six to nine months from fifth grade through adolescence.

Various treatments, including orthopedic bracing and surgery can correct or lessen the degree of scoliosis.

Before recommending a treatment plan, a doctor will consider the severity of the curvature, location of the curve, maturity of the spine, and potential for progression of the curve.

Trash burner could get local support

by SHELDON COMPTON
STAFF WRITER

Recycling Solutions Technologies' proposed waste gasification/thermal oxidation cell, also referred to simply as a garbage plant or trash cooker, that will be tested in roughly two weeks in Martin County may be in trouble regardless of how test results turn out.

There have been concerns lately of the environmental repercussions of the plant but, often in the background of discussions, there is a concern for acquiring more business for the plant so that it can be profitable.

The finished plant has a maximum capacity to handle 25 tons of garbage per day. John Burke, spokesman for RST and a Prestonsburg resident, has stated that in order to make the plant profitable it would need to handle up to 200 tons per day.

Prestonsburg Mayor Jerry Fannin may give RST a start toward gaining more business after recent talks proposing the possibility of Prestonsburg trash, presently being handled by Waste Management, to be sent to the Inez plant.

"Yeah there are possibilities that we will do business with them," Fannin said on Monday. "It's all according to what we see when they come up with the prices. A good factor is it's not going to be going to a landfill this way."

Garbage handled at the newly-constructed plant will go through an innovative process that would convert the trash into, for example, an ash that could then be recycled and used for such things as mixture for concrete blocks. Glass components within trash sent to the plant would be crushed and added to the ash so that nothing is left unused.

"All of it's usable," Fannin said. "I believe there are only a few in the world like it, maybe only one other like it in the world."

Although the exact prices were not disclosed to Fannin in terms of the costs for dealing with the garbage plant, Fannin feels the costs will be within a reasonable range and perhaps save the city of Prestonsburg money.

"The plant told us that they would keep the prices at or below what we are paying Waste Management now," Fannin said.

The city of Prestonsburg presently deals with Waste Management, who hauls the city's trash to a landfill in Lily, in Laurel County, at a cost of $32 a ton.

Another possibility, of course, would be the question of whether or not Floyd County as a whole would do business with the Martin county plant.

That question is viable because, considering the 200 tons a day needed to make the plant profitable, which would obviously include building more plants at a cost that is not being disclosed to the news media at this time, it is important to note that Martin County only produces eight tons a day.

The amount must then be increased by a multiple of 192 tons to achieve the desired 200-ton capacity, which would mean taking on trash from other counties.

Floyd County Judge-Executive Paul Hunt Thompson said that Floyd County has taken a "sideline" approach to considerations of doing business with the new plant, but contract obligations also guide the possibility of Floyd County not redirecting its trash.

"Right now we're just on the sidelines observing," Thompson said during a brief interview on Monday. "I'm familiar with the system and have looked at it, but of course, we have a contract with Waste Management. I think there's two or three more years on that contract and we'll abide by it just as we would want them to abide by it."

Floyd County's current contract with Waste Management is for $34 a ton hauled to the out-of-county landfill.

Thompson stated that there had been some discussion about the new plant, but that nothing had been decided. His more pressing concern was for the visible trash throughout the county.

"We're still pushing to get the garbage picked up," Thompson continued. "Frankly I don't care if it goes in a landfill or in a trash cooker, I just want to get it out of the creeks and the roads."

Police Investigate Shooting

At 1 a.m. early Wednesday morning a call came through to the Kentucky State Police post 9 stating that Emma Altaffer had just found her husband, 34-year-old Henry L. Altaffer, dead at their residence in Salt Lick of Magoffin County.

According to reports, Altaffer had been shot once in the head and was pronounced dead on the scene by Magoffin County Coroner Johnny Lovely.

Altaffer's body has been sent for autopsy and an investigation is underway.

Detective Steve Bowman of the Kentucky State Police is to head the investigation.

Other officers on scene included Trooper Dwayne Price and Trooper Billy Hall.

Strategy needed to lure out-of-state students

When an airplane takes off with an empty seat, it loses the opportunity for needed revenue. The same is true of colleges and universities when they have open seats in a classroom.

The difference is that there are reasons to get students into college other than paying the bills of the university. They are there to learn so they can someday apply that knowledge to the business world and as members of a community — preferably a Kentucky community.

Only 53 percent of Kentucky high school students seek further education upon graduation ... compared to the national average of 67 percent. Kentucky's goal is to meet that national average by 2020, which will take an additional 80,000 students.

More bad news is that of those 53 percent, not all of them stay in Kentucky upon graduation, especially if the state does not offer the type of quality job they seek.

One way of offsetting those losses is to recruit quality out-of-state students.

That is the recommendation of a study by the Southern Technology Council, which studied the migration patterns of engineering and science graduates since 1998. Although native students are 10 times more likely to remain in the state upon college graduation compared to out-of-state students, the study found that a significant number of nonresidential students do remain in the state to find work.

Most of Kentucky's public universities try to entice nonresidential students from bordering states to come to the commonwealth by offering a discount on the higher out-of-state tuition rate. If that is an attempt to bring new talent into the state, it is a good move, said Gordon Davies, president of the Kentucky Council on Postsecondary Education. If it is merely to fill seats and bring in more tuition dollars, it is not.

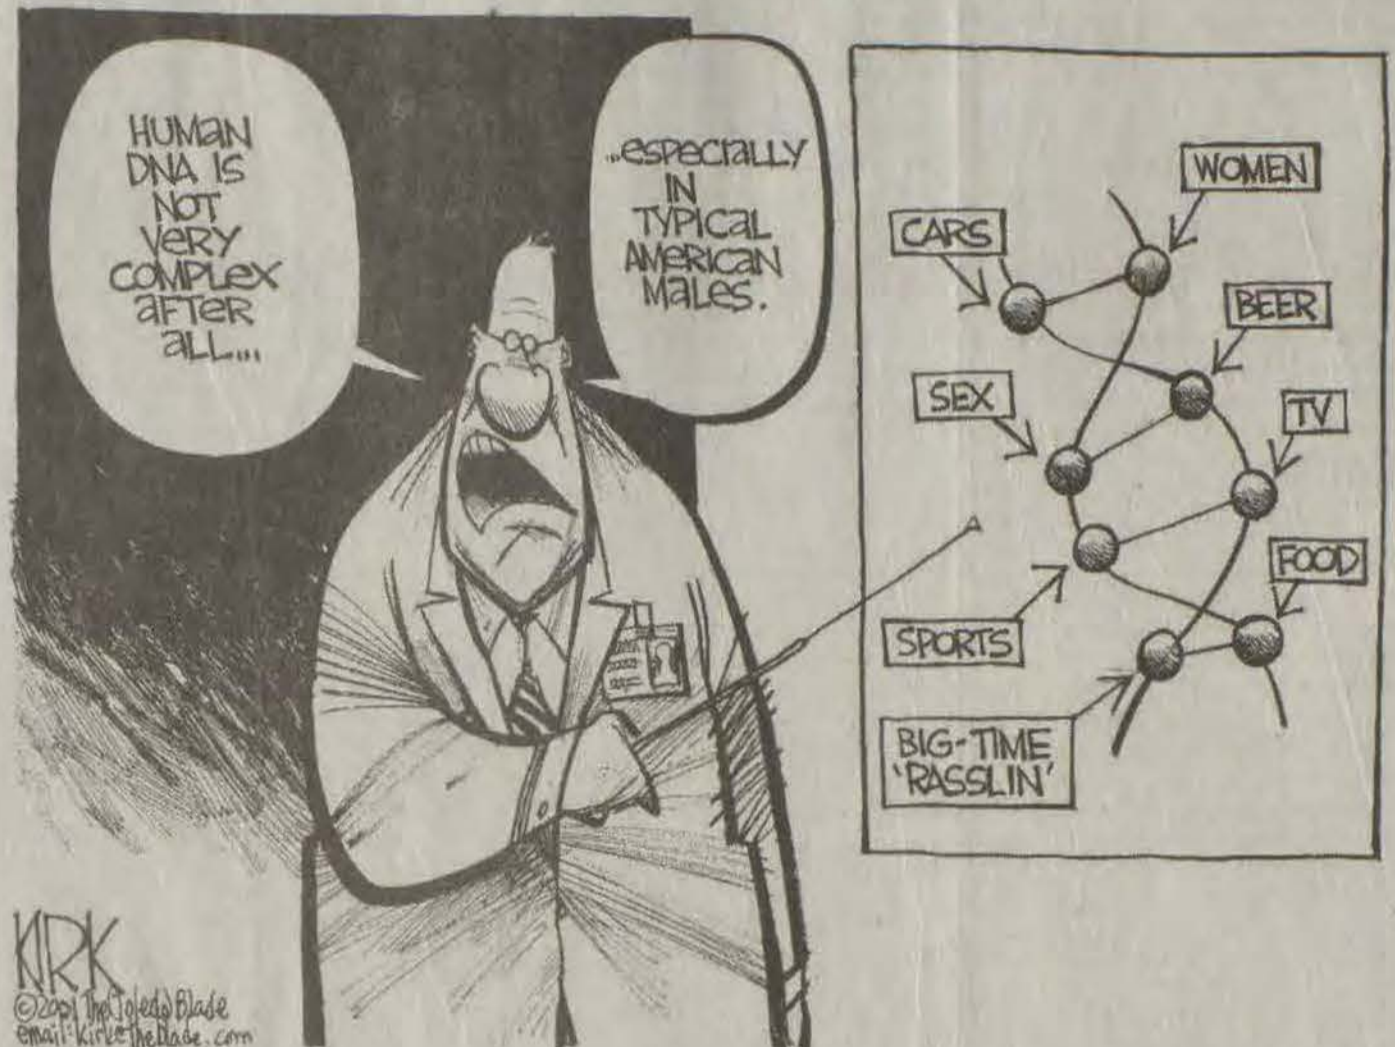

That is because every student in a Kentucky public university is supplemented by $6,000 to $8,000 from state taxpayers, Davies said. Supplementing students who are not Kentuckians and who may add little to the state's economy once they graduate is not a wise use of tax dollars, he said.

That is why Kentucky needs to develop a policy for universities to seek only those nonresidential students who will possibly add to the state's talent pool, Davies said. "I do not know a place in Kentucky where there is an adequate supply of nurses," he said, so perhaps a policy would encourage enticements to attract nursing students.

Next year, the council wants to take a one-year and four-year look at how many recent college graduates stay in Kentucky, to help guide that policy decision, Davies said.

Kentucky's main emphasis should remain on improving its own on-to-college rate, but a clear strategy is needed to find the best way to attract talent from out of state and keep it here.

"Quitting smoking is easy. I've done it a thousand times."
— Mark Twain

I've been smoking about eight years now. It doesn't matter why I started or how, the fact is if I don't get a certain amount of nicotine distributed throughout my bloodstream each day of my life, I will flip my wig.

I've tried to convince myself this is nothing more than a mental need contrived by my all-too-sneaky, and often independently represented, brain. I do well with that rationalization until the shakes start and everything in the room turns a bright red and appears to be filled with tiny men with signs around their necks saying: IF YOU DON'T SMOKE, YOU WILL DIE.

Yeah, that's about the time I break over.

I have tried to quit without taking the suicidal "cold turkey" approach.

I once watched a talk show (can't imagine that it really matters which one, considering ABC and NBC bought cloning rights to Jerry Springer after his first year on the air) which provided me with the most successful attempt I've had at quitting.

The basic idea was to take a teaspoon of cream of tartar (don't ask) and mix it with one glass of orange juice. You take this concoction and have a big gulp before bedtime. You wake the next morning, stumble to the bathroom in your usual pattern to empty the ol' bladder and out comes the nicotine that was in your bloodstream.

If you do this consistently enough, the nicotine is eventually washed from your system.

I believed this. I suffer from brief lapses of ignorance.

The odd thing was that as long as I believed it, it worked. I was down to three cigarettes a day and then I lost faith — my body began to question my brain — and out came the little men.

Perhaps the most logical, and most often chosen, alternative would be to switch to the patch. I say "switch" because a smoker is really only substituting one habit for another, but at least the patch won't kill me.

There are benefits other than the obvious, however, such as the fact that patches only come by the carton, so to speak, and I would then be forced to purchase accordingly and save money.

As an added bonus, I would rarely be confronted by someone wanting to bum a patch and, best of all, there is no need for a lighter.

This last perk will save me an estimated $5,000 a month in lost or forgotten lighter fees.

You non-smokers still having a hard time seeing where I'm coming from?

No problem, I understand. Try this: Go outside on a cold winter day, strip naked and stand there for about 10 minutes.

Try to think of anything other than an overwhelming need for warmth and the fact that your teeth just froze and busted.

Allow me to introduce you to my old friend, Withdrawl.

MDA thanks lock-up supporters

All of "Jerry's Kids" in Floyd County join me in expressing thanks for a successful Floyd County MDA Lock-Up held at city hall March 8.

The event was fun for more than 40 local "jail-birds" who generously volunteered to serve for MDA. Everyone worked hard, calling friends and business associates to raise over $12,000 in charitable contributions to benefit the local programs of the Muscular Dystrophy Association. We want to congratulate and thank Tammy Jervis, Brenda Powers, Linda Martin, Sandy Zemo and Cheryl Little who raised over $1,000 each.

Our sponsors for the day were Prestonsburg Fire Department, Prestonsburg Police Department, Cingular Wireless, Pizza Hut and Hobart's Pizzeria. A very special thank you to Mrs. Sharon Johnson, who has proven to us year after year that she is dedicated to our mission. Sharon has spent countless hours helping MDA with lock-ups, Harley events and more. Words cannot express our heartfelt gratitude.

It has been proven once again that our community cares enough to make a difference. The dollars you raised translate into direct local patient services. Research and patient services are being conducted at the University of Kentucky Department of Neurology. From summer camp and wheelchair repair to research and support groups, you have made a huge difference in the fight against neuromuscular disease.

Renter beware

I recently moved out of a mobile home that my family rented for one year. Of course, I won't say who the landlords were or the location of the home, but I would like to give all other potential renters of any other property elsewhere some sound and reasonable advice. In order to do this, though, my story must be told.

We moved out of an apartment complex so we were anxious to get out on our own and to actually have some privacy. We were very excited about the move, although the mobile home needed some work and some desperate cleaning, but that wasn't of concern at the time. The landlords told us the huge, heaping piles of trash out back would be cleaned up and that they were left there from the previous renters. Needless to say, I was young and naive to the situation, so I believed them. The only stuff that they got rid of were two junk cars that people who delivered firewood to us bought from them. Had those people not come up there and let me call and inquire about it for them, those would probably still be there. They also had the county come and pick up heaping piles of coal truck tires. Anything else that was cleaned, we did on our own and we did quite a bit, but it was so bad that anyone who hadn't seen it before all of our work would never know it had been touched.

We lived there only a month or so when we began to regret ever moving in and before we began our search for a new place to rent. The ceiling over the bathtub had a leak over it, there were animals in the ceiling (later to be revealed as hundreds of bats). The heating and cooling system didn't work as we were told it did. The sewer backed up (that emptied into the creek), causing my commode to overflow when my washing machine emptied its water in the spin cycle. The water pipes froze due to holes in the underpinning. The ceiling started leaking in several different places and water came through on my furniture during the last week we were there. I called them and informed them of this and I was told that someone would be there the next day to look at it. Needless to say, no one showed up. I assume since we were already moving out it didn't matter to them. These were all things that the landlords were informed of and, yet, were never corrected during the entire year we lived there. These are just the things I can think of while sitting here.

I imagine I am pushing the envelope in terms of size for a letter to the editor in order for it to be published as it is, so I choose not to get as detailed as I could in my descriptions of the incidents or to list every incident.

Thank God we finally found a decent and affordable place to rent in January. We didn't receive any of our deposit back, but that is okay. I did tear a piece of linoleum the day we moved our furniture out and I did tell them about it and told them to take money from the deposit for that. However, since then and in the two times I have spoken with them since we moved, I have been accused of tearing holes in the carpet that were already there. I was accused of scratching the wall up, tearing up the heating and cooling ductwork, putting holes in both the ceiling and door and not telling them about stuff that I know good and well that I did tell them about. Everything I have been accused of damaging was already damaged when we moved in, thus leading me to my point for this letter.

Potential renters and landlords everywhere read this and take it into wise consideration. When moving into a place, document everything that is already wrong with it and have the landlord/renter to sign the document or take pictures and date them. Whenever you call a complaint in, write down the date and time you did so and whom you spoke with. Do whatever you have to do in order to protect yourself and your reputation as a respectable renter/landlord. Had I known what I know now, I would have never rented that place and had I found an affordable place that was decent before this January, I would have moved a lot sooner. And one last thing, don't take the word of people who know the landlords as the basis of renting a place. Everyone I spoke with gave them nothing but praise (aside from the previous renter I spoke with after we were already experiencing trouble there). The people may be nice and sociable, but that doesn't make them good landlords.

Looking for fun?

MAC volunteer program may be the answer!!

The smiling individuals dressed in maroon vests who greet you in the lobby, take your ticket, show you to your seat and provide you with assistance during the performance are all members of the Mountain Arts Center Volunteer Program.

Although volunteers are frequently seen during performances, ushering and working in our coat check room, in reality, volunteers are involved in all phases of the Center. Prior to a show, volunteers stuff playbills, and once the crowds are gone, they assist with cleaning the theater. On non-performance days, there is still work to be done at the MAC.

Quite simply, without the dedication and continuing support of our volunteer staff, the Center could not function.

Nation's teachers salute education plan announced today

Calling it a "true formula for successful schools," the nation's teachers praised a plan unveiled today by leaders of House and Senate education and appropriations committees that would invest in teacher quality, smaller classes and modern schools.

National Education Association (NEA) President Bob Chase said, "These congressional leaders have demonstrated a commitment to raising the level of excellence in all America's schools by focusing on proven solutions. We thank them for their wisdom and vision for children and public education."

Chase said the plan proposed by Reps. George Miller of California, David Obey of Wisconsin, and Sen. Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts, and Tom Harkin of Iowa, is focused in critical areas for school improvement—teacher compensation, class size reduction, and school repair and modernization. It would reduce class size for all grade levels to 18 students per teacher. To keep pace with expanding enrollments and teacher retirement, the plan would also provide funding to recruit and retain quality teachers. More than two million new teachers will be needed in the next decade.

Funding for critical school repairs would also be allocated to accommodate enrollment growth and modernization needs. A recent NEA study documented more than $300 billion in unmet infrastructure and technology needs—nearly three times the level estimated in previous research by the General Accounting Office. Although a House school construction bill boasted 231 cosponsors from both sides of the aisle—a majority of the U.S. House of Representatives—it was not included in a final budget package last year.

Repairing and renovating schools also enjoys overwhelming public support. "With so much support, school modernization is an obvious uniting force in Congress this year," said Chase.

"This plan simply makes sense," said Chase. "I don't know of a single school that wouldn't improve student performance when presented with this common sense formula—quality teachers, smaller class sizes, and modern facilities."

A bipartisan poll of voters released this month found unprecedented public demand for legislative proposals to attract and retain quality teachers, reduce class size, modernize schools, fully fund special education programs, expand preschool opportunities, and provide afterschool programs. Bipartisan proposals in the House and Senate would achieve these goals. To see the poll visit www.nea.org/lac.

Tackett snubbed

Rusty Tackett was snubbed at last week's boys' state basketball tournament. After scoring 29 points and grabbing 13 rebounds in the opening round game against Clay County, Tackett was forgot about when it came time to vote for the all-tourney team. The South Floyd junior's first-game load was one of the very best individual performances in the state tournament. Alas, he was overlooked for the all-tournament team. Yes, the Raiders did bow out to Clay County in the first round, and yes if South Floyd had made it to the second round he might have made it. However, give credit where credit is due! Rusty Tackett should have made the all-tournament team.

KDFWR Commission sets deer season dates for 2001-2002, proposes fishing regulation changes for March 2002

The Kentucky Fish and Wildlife Commission has set dates for the 2001-02 deer season and proposed fishing regulations for March 2002. The Commission recommends all boating, fishing and hunting regulations to the General Assembly and approves all expenditures of the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources (KDFWR). Zone changes for the 2001-2001 deer season include

Butler, Edmonson, Grayson, Hart and Metcalfe counties to be moved from Zone 2 to Zone 3. Breckinridge County will move from Zone 1 to Zone 2 and Owsley County will move from Zone 3 to Zone 4. All other county zones will remain the same. The commission approved that hunters who have not reached their 18th birthday by the start of Youth Deer Hunt Weekend may hunt during that special season. This adds two years of eligibility for youth to participate in the October youth-only gun season. Age requirements for adult hunting and fishing licenses did not change. The under 16 age requirement for quota youth hunts on Wildlife Management Areas (WMAs) also remains the same. Hunters participating in a KDFWR WMA quota hunt are no longer required to check in and out daily. They must check in at the beginning and out at the conclusion of the hunt. Check station hours for quota hunts in 2001-2002 will be noon-8 p.m. local time the day preceding the hunt and from 4:30 a.m.-7 p.m. in the central zone and 5:30 a.m.-8 p.m. in the eastern zone on hunt days. Food City's Chairman of the Board honored as Grand Marshal of this year's Food City 500

Jack C. Smith, Chairman of the Board of K-VA-T Food Stores, Inc., parent company of Food City, has given commands throughout his business career. Yet, perhaps none have been heard by as many people as will his commands to start the engines of the forty-three Winston Cup stock cars that make the field for the tenth running of the Food City 500 to be held this Sunday at Bristol Motor Speedway. 147,000 fans at the speedway and a network television audience of millions will hear Smith bring the field to life with the most famous word in motor sports. "Gentleman, start your engines!" "It is truly an honor and a privilege to be named the Grand Marshal of one of the largest spectator sporting events in the world," Smith stated. "The commitment Food City has made to motor sports marketing over the last fourteen years has been a great asset to the company's associates, vendors and most importantly to the customer," he continued. Smith, a graduate of the United States Naval Academy, entered the retail grocery arena following his tour of duty with the U.S. Navy. In 1955, Smith, along with his father, a cousin, and an uncle, opened his first store, a Piggly Wiggly, in Grundy, Virginia. Since that time, the sincere effort and dedication to the trade exhibited by Jack C. Smith has resulted in the formation of a successful company committed to excellence in serving shoppers and their communities throughout the tri-state region of east Kentucky, southwest Virginia and northeast Tennessee.

The growth of the company came in the form of new store constructions and a variety of acquisitions. The philosophy and the commitment of Jack C. Smith to his associates, vendors, customers and communities are the true catalysts of the company's success. This statement, once made by Smith, clearly attests to his philosophy. He said, "The ultimate objective of K-VA-T Food Stores is to fulfill its ongoing commitment to planned growth. My wish is that the public, our corporate officers, associates and patrons can find their lives enriched because of this company's existence and its efforts. But first, and foremost, let us remember that the friendship of those that we serve is the foundation of our progress."

Food City, Tug Valley Bass Anglers set date for open bass tournament

TIMES STAFF REPORT

On Saturday, April 28, the Tug Valley Bass Anglers will be holding an open bass tournament at Fishtrap Lake in Pikeville, Kentucky. The tournament will be a day event starting at 7 a.m. and continuing until 3 p.m.

Food City is the title sponsor for what will be known as the "Food City Open". This event will be the biggest, most outstanding bass tournament Eastern Kentucky has ever seen. The weigh-in show will be held at the Food City supermarket parking lot in the Town & Country Shopping Center in Pikeville, Kentucky. When the tournament is concluded, a police escort will lead the anglers from the lake to the Food City store.

In order to make the anglers the stars of the show, both anglers will be placed in the boat and driven up to the weigh-in stage. They then will get their catch out of the boat in front of the crowd and walk up on the stage similar to the Bass Masters Classic. The fish will be chemically treated in aerated tanks at the weigh-in site and transported back to the lake for release after the tournament.

Details of the tournament are still being worked out. Additional sponsorship for the event is still being discussed. More information will be coming as details are finalized.

Around the first of April, Food City will be running in-store audio commercials about the tournament. Johnson Central falls 61-43 to Allen Co.-Scottsville

TIMES STAFF REPORT

Coach Phillip Wireman took his third Johnson Central Lady Eagles basketball team to the girls state tournament on Wednesday. Johnson Central was 0-2 in previous appearances at the state tourney. The Lady Eagles' state tournament mark fell to 0-3 on Wednesday, as they fell 61-43 to Allen County-Scottsville.

The two teams went into the half tied at 32. A hot-shooting Allen Co.-Scottsville came out in the second half, and behind a strong performance from 5-foot-11 senior Stacy Felchner took over control of the game. The Lady Patriots of Allen County-

Scottsville outscored 15th Region representative Johnson Central 16-4 in a pivotal third quarter. The Lady Pats kept pace in the final frame outscoring Central 13-7 en route to the first round win.

Felchner led the way for Allen County-Scottsville with a game-high 26 points. Emma Burke paced Johnson Central with a team-best 15 points. She hit on four-of-five three-point attempts. Johnson Central as a team was 4-of-15 from three-point land. Allen County-Scottsville attempted two three-point shots and came up dry on both tries.

Goldie Wells added eight points in the season-ending loss. Selena Williams and Ashley Wireman chipped in with five points each. Becky McKenzie and Emily Salyer ended the game with two points apiece.

With the win, Allen County-Scottsville improves to 26-6 on the season. The Lady Patriots will take on Manual in a second round game today at 1 p.m. Manual defeated Bishop Brossart 75-51 in the first game of the state tournament on Wednesday.

The Lady Eagles of Johnson Central end their season with an outstanding record of 30 wins and just 4 losses.

Sideline

cess. They could see a significant amount of success sooner than a lot of folks think. Accept it! Rick Pitino is the new University of Louisville men's basketball coach. We might as well get used to it.

the new men's basketball coach at Texas Tech today, if he hasn't already by the time you read this. Is the southwest ready for 'The General'? If not, they better get ready for him!

Davis gets extension; Green, UT call it quits
Indiana Coach Mike Davis, who replaced Bobby Knight at Indiana, yesterday had the 'interim' removed off his coaching title. Davis got a new four-year deal from IU.

Davis is in, and Jerry Green is out. Tennessee and Jerry Green have parted ways. Who will end up at Tennessee? It's hard to tell. Billy Donovan's name has been mentioned, but I think he's happy at Florida. How about Travis Ford? A wee bit inexperienced? Yes, and besides, Travis just got a four-year extension from ECU. I doubt if he's going anywhere anytime soon.

I thought Jerry Green did a good job at Tennessee. I guess it just wasn't good enough. UT, being the big basketball school it is, probably couldn't tolerate another 20-win season.

That's all for now, be sure to get out to a game this weekend.

Cumberland River from Wolf Creek Dam to the Tennessee line.

The trout waters of Otter Creek inside the Fort Knox Military Reservation and Otter Creek Park shall be placed under delayed harvest regulations. All trout caught between October 1 through March 31 shall be released and anglers may only use artificial lures and flies during this period.

The boundary of Nolin River Lake will extend to Wheelers Mill Road in the Nolin River arm and to the Hwy. 728 bridge in Bacon Creek.

There will be a 10-fish daily limit with no more than five fish of the daily limit longer than 15 inches or longer for white bass, yellow bass, striped bass and their hybrids at Taylorsville Lake. The upper boundary of Taylorsville Lake will be Dry Dock Road on Salt River.

There will be a 15-inch minimum size with a one-fish daily creel limit on largemouth bass and a 4-fish daily creel limit on channel catfish on four ponds on Taylorsville Lake WMA that

What's a girl to do? Let the Outdoor-Woman program show you

There's a lot of things a woman could do with her time, and unfortunately most of it is already spoken for. The everyday routine is just about written in stone for most, and sometimes it's tough to get a break from it.

Yet, for those who need a change of pace, and can whittle out a weekend this spring, there's a great chance to step out of the crowd, explore some new territory, and take a step beyond the usual leisure time activities.

You can take part in the Becoming an Outdoors-Woman Program. You could call it an opportunity for continuing education for women, but it's really closer to a chance to enjoy a weekend of continuous fun in the outdoors and learn a little something useful along the way.

Sponsored by the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources (KDFWR), the Becoming an Outdoors-Woman, or BOW Program for short, offers women 18 years old and older a broad choice of activities to choose from. Unlike the WTBS weekend movie, this isn't just "a guy thing." The outdoors offers recreation for all.

Workshop classes include, for example, hiking, backpacking, survival skills, introduction to safe handling of firearms and archery equipment, basic fishing and hunting skills, wildlife and bird identification, wildlife photography and tips on general woodsmanship.

If doing something a little different - getting a bit off the beaten track, or if you need to shake the winter routine by experiencing something new sounds appealing to you, consider a BOW Workshop and broaden and brighten your horizons this spring. Women with like interests, veterans and novices both, will be there to learn with you and help you increase your skills for your own outdoor adventures.

For $150, participants can select up to four classes, get their meals and lodging, and receive qualified instruction and have most class materials and equipment provided.

The next BOW workshop is slated for April 6-8 at Pine Mountain State Resort Park in Pineville, Kentucky. Registration is going on now and workshop size is limited, so for more information you need to call toll free (800) 858-1549 today. You'll be sent a registration and class selection form.

All you do is complete it and return it with the workshop fee. All other arrangements are taken care of for you.

Becoming an Outdoors-Woman - it will increase your knowledge, your skills and your confidence, but most of all, it will increase your enjoyment of nature and the outdoors for a lifetime.

Louisville Ballet to perform on Tuesday, April 3 at 7:30 p.m. at the MAC

Program co-presented by the Mountain Arts Center and Dance, Etc. of Prestonsburg

The Louisville Ballet, the state ballet of Kentucky, was formed in March, 1952 as a civic ballet company. At that time, the Louisville Ballet employed guest artistic directors and choreographers for each production. In 1978, Alun Jones became the Louisville Ballet's Artistic Director. The company now employs 30 professional dancers who come to Louisville from around the country as well as maintaining a civic company chosen from the Louisville Ballet School for large productions.

Besides its regular subscription series, the Louisville Ballet presents "The Nutcracker" during the holidays and a series of educational outreach programs throughout the year.

The program to be presented at the MAC will include: "Appalachia Waltz," choreographed by Ginger Thatcher with music by Edgar Meyer and Grammy Award winning fiddle player, Mark O'Connor...the movement is a suite of dances set to Appalachian music and is rich in mood and imagery from the region.

"Grand Pas de Fiances" from the ballet "Swan Lake," is a timeless masterpiece that tells the story of a prince who meets a princess that has been transformed into a swan by an evil sorcerer.

"Legends of the Last Century, with Chaplin," recreates the hilarious antics of Charlie Chaplin during the silent movie era through innovative dance moves and stage designs rendered in black, white, and gray.

And, lastly, "Le Spectre de la Rose," is based upon a poem by the French poet, Theophile Gautier. The story revolves around a rose whose spirit appears to be that of a maiden who wore the rose to a ball.

For ticket information, call toll-free 1 (888) MAC-ARTS (622-2787), or locally, 886-2623.

Folk art exhibitions scheduled at MSU

Four folk art exhibitions in the Adkins Gallery highlight the 2001 schedule of events in the Kentucky Folk Art Center at Morehead State University.

"Out of Hiding" opened January 16, and runs through March 25. Of the show, curator Adrian Swain says: "The permanent collection is the heart of a museum, but most of the collection typically remains in storage, used for study, periodic special exhibitions or loans to other museums. This exhibit brings 59 of these items Out of Hiding, demonstrates the diversity of contemporary folk art, and the incredible range of these artists' creative expression."

Opening March 29 and running through June 17th, will be Urban Folk Art, proving that folk art is also alive and well in our cities, and that Kentucky's urban areas include many highly creative self-taught artists.

On June 24, the opening reception for "Textile Art from Southern Appalachia: The Quiet Work of Women" will coincide with the awards ceremony for the 2001 Morehead State University "Appalachian Treasure," an individual who has contributed to the mountain culture by personal accomplishment and sharing.

The Textile Art exhibition, which will be on display through September 23, features woven coverlets from Appalachian Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia and North Carolina, made between the 1830s and the 1930s, most of them before 1900. "Textile Art From Southern Appalachia" is a traveling exhibition on loan from the American Textile History Museum in Lowell, Massachusetts.

The 25th Appalachian Celebration runs June 24-30 on the campus of Morehead State University, with a full week of traditional Kentucky music, workshops, lectures, tours, and concerts, ending with the Appalachian Arts & Crafts Market on Saturday, June 30.

Also on June 30, just 35 miles east in Isonville, is Minnie Adkins and Herman Peters' "Day in the Country," a gathering or regional folk artists which will include an auction of art from those present plus selected items from the Museum Store of the Kentucky Folk Art Center.

On September 8, the 2nd annual WoodFolk Fest will take place in Rodburn Park near the Morehead State University campus. Woodworking, folk art, music and fun, celebrate the arts and the forest.

From October 1-December 21, the Folk Art Center will feature "Lost and Found," art made by self-taught Kentucky artists out of "found objects"—materials that are 'recycled' from some previous use, or natural objects that have been found and assembled by the artist, combined and used in unexpected, often ingenious ways.

On Saturday, December 1, the Appalachian Christmas Arts & Crafts Market will be held in the Laughlin Building on the Morehead State University campus, featuring more than 100 area artisans in a holiday display and sale.

Further information on all 2001 Kentucky Folk Art Center events is available by writing KFAC at 102 West First Street, Morehead, KY 40351, calling 606-783-2204, or visiting the web site at www.kyfolkart.org.

CRITTERCORNER

by DR. CAROL COMBS-MORRIS, DVM

With spring on the way, it's time to make sure that your dog is up to date on his heartworm preventative.

Heartworms are exactly what they sound like - large white worms that grow up to a foot long and live in the heart and surrounding blood vessels of dogs and other animals.

The scientific name of the heartworm is Dirofilaria immitis (which means "evil threadworm" according to a brochure put out by the Kentucky Veterinary Medical Association).

Heartworm also affects cats, although it is not as common in this species. A recent article in the Lexington Herald-Leader discussed this problem, and reported that the incidence in cats is estimated to be as high as 17% in Kentucky.

With their smaller heart and blood vessel size, it isn't surprising that even a few worms can cause major problems in a cat. Don't be surprised if your veterinarian soon begins recommending testing and preventative medication for your cat.

Critter

Signs of heartworm in dogs are variable, ranging from no symptoms at all to sudden death. In general, however, an affected dog will cough, lose weight, tire easily, and may develop a distended abdomen. Affected cats are more likely to show less specific signs such as vomiting, respiratory difficulty, and lethargy.

Now that you understand the basic biology of these parasites, it is easier to explain how heartworm disease is diagnosed. There are two basic ways we can try to detect the presence of heartworms: we can look for the microfilariae or we can look for the adult worms.

Up until a few years ago we pretty much had to rely on tests that looked for the microfilariae. The simplest test is to use a microscope to look for moving larvae in a drop of blood. Concentration tests, such as the Modified Knott's Test, involve passing a blood sample through a microscopic filter to increase the odds of finding microfilariae. Stain applied to the filtered sample makes the larvae easier to see.

There are some limitations to these tests, however. For one thing, about 40% of heartworm-infected dogs have "occult" disease; there are no microfilariae present. This can be due to several things: All the adult worms present can be of the same sex and therefore producing no larvae, or there can be so few adults that there are not enough microfilariae to detect. In some cases scientists believe that the dog's body can become so sensitized to the microfilariae that the immune system kills them off. A dog that was receiving heartworm preventative without being tested first, or who missed some doses, can be infected with adult worms exclusively. Almost all heartworm infections in cats are occult.

Another problem with these tests is the existence of a second microfilaria (Dipetelonea reconditum), which never develops into a large worm, but can be confusing when it is present because it looks so much like the real thing.

A much more accurate test looks for certain proteins (or "antigens") that are present in the adult heartworm. This test has been available for a while, but in recent years it has been improved so that it can be run in the veterinarian's office in just a few minutes. This test relies on a color change—similar to over the counter pregnancy tests—to indicate the presence or absence of adult heartworms, so they are very easy to read. Antigen tests are reliable: built-in positive and negative controls minimize the likelihood of false positive and false negative results, and they are sensitive enough to pick up the presence of just a few worms. Only a few drops of blood are needed to run the test. They are somewhat more expensive than the older tests to run, but are generally twenty dollars or less—worth it, in my opinion, for their increased accuracy.

Next time, we'll discuss the prevention and treatment of heartworm disease.

Kentucky Humanities Council awards $7,000

To Appalshop for Stranger With a Camera Programs

The Kentucky Humanities Council Inc., awarded $7,000 to Appalshop for development and production of public programs using the documentary, "Stranger With a Camera."

Appalshop is an arts and education center located in Whitesburg, Ky. For the past thirty years, artists and scholars working through Appalshop have been exploring the history, culture, and social issues of the region in film, video, music, drama, photography, radio, and print. Appalshop strives to provide resources and training, produce work of high artistic quality, provide the community with workshops, residencies, screenings and exhibitions, and expand and enrich cultural opportunity throughout the region.

"Stranger With a Camera" examines a tragic murder that took place in eastern Kentucky in 1967 at the height of the War on Poverty. Hobart Ison, a local resident and landowner, shot and killed Canadian documentary maker, Hugh O'Connor who had just finished filming poor tenants on Ison's property. Ison took strong exception to the media's presence on his land and vowed to shoot any film crew that came near it.

The Kentucky Humanities Council grant awarded to Appalshop provides funding for public programs using "Stranger With a Camera" to encourage dialogue and give the public an opportunity to discuss the sensitive issues explored in the video. Appalshop will use KHC funds to work with Kentucky-based humanities scholars including Dr. Judi Jennings, Dr. Tom Kiffmeyer, Dr. Melissa McEuen, Dr. Lynwood Montell, and University of Louisville professor Cederic M. Powell. The World within us exhibition opens to the public March 31

The world within us—which opens to the public on March 31, 2001—focuses on "the incredible body that's your for life" by exploring human anatomy, physiology, health awareness, nutrition and lifestyle behaviors. It also highlights careers and professional options, as well as regional research achievements, in the fields of health and life sciences.

When completed, there will be 60-plus exhibits to explore in The World Within Us. For example, you can exercise in the Bone Gym with a helpful skeleton who will show you exactly what your bones are up to when you do "leg lifts" or "pull downs." Join three other visitors in the SynchroBeat challenge and see if you can get all four chambers of an enormous heart beating in synchronization. Or, step into the digital Time Machine to see what you might look like in 20, 30 or 40 years.

The Louisville Science Center is a nonprofit educational institution dedicated to improving public understanding of science, math and technology through films, interactive exhibits and educational programs. The Science Center houses the only IMAX Theatre in Kentucky, serves more than 500,000 people annually and receives generous annual support from the City of Louisville.

"We consider this to be an educational day for high school students," said Frank Oddis, associate professor of music. The day is open for exhibition or competition for all high school concert and marching percussion ensembles, and for individual snare, tenor and keyboard performers.

In the competition, entrants will perform a four-to-eight minute elective work that will be judged on a point system of zero to 100. Festival participants will perform for three-to-six minutes for which they will receive distinguished, proficient, apprentice or novice rating.

The day begins at 8 a.m., in Wetherby Gymnasium. For the general public, there is an admission charge of $6 for adults, and $4 for students.

Registration for the Day of Concert and Marching Percussion is necessary, and must be postmarked by April 1. There is a $125 fee per ensemble or $200 for combination marching and concert groups.

Individuals may enter for a $15 charge.

To kick off the event, the MSU Percussion Ensemble will perform on Friday, April 20, at 8 p.m., with special guest, Dave Samuels, one of the world's leading vibraphone players, according to Oddis. Currently touring with the Caribbean Jazz Project, Samuels has played with Spira Gira. The concert is free and open to the public.
