America mourns ... and remembers

A crowd of nearly 100 gathered outside of the Floyd County Courthouse at noon Friday to hold a prayer circle around the flagpole.

Firefighter Darrell Sparks, left, worked alongside Sgt. William Burke of the Prestonsburg Fire Department on Friday afternoon, fixing the flag pole above the Department for Employment Services building. DES had requested that the fire department repair the pole in order to fly Old Glory in response to recent terrorist attacks in New York and Washington D.C.

Prestonsburg firefighters, police officers and city officials held a prayer luncheon Friday afternoon. The occasion was solemn, the group remembered their fallen comrades in New York.

The Floyd County Times showed its support of America Friday by adding a banner just above the office's entrance in honor of those who perished in Tuesday's terrorist attacks on Washington and New York. In addition, the Times included a full page American flag in their Friday, September 14, edition. The flag has again been included in today's paper for those who may not have a flag available and would like to display a symbol of their support.

Muslims gathered Friday afternoon at the Islamic Center of Eastern Kentucky for a 2 p.m. prayer service which included a moment of private prayer to those who suffered and those continuing to suffer after the tragedies in New York and Washington D.C. Tuesday. In a statement just before the prayer began, one member read a view said to be shared by all in attendance — "If you kill one soul, you have done so against mankind. We share in America's deep agony and extend our condolences no matter what religion or faith they are."

PRESTONSBURG — In the wake of Tuesday's terrorist attacks on the United States, flags are being flown in the spirit of patriotism alongside of homes and businesses throughout the country to prove that the "Red, White and Blue," though a bit shaken, still remains strong and proud.

The same is true in Prestonsburg, where flags line the streets and windows of businesses and children draw pictures in those familiar colors to show their support.

Deputy Director of Public Safety Gary Dotson and his crew at the Prestonsburg Fire Department rushed out on Friday to fix the flag pole for the Department for Employment Services in Prestonsburg.

The building had been without a flag for several months, said employee Deborah Allen, who called Dotson for help earlier this week.

"We want to give our compliments to Mr. Dotson and to the Prestonsburg Fire Department for taking the time and interest to fix our flagpole," said Allen during an interview on Friday. "We felt like we needed to show our patriotism and support for our country."

With sales of the American flag soaring across the country, the nation reacts to the catastrophe by uniting in the belief that the U.S. will overcome its enemies, and the spirit of Red, White and Blue will prevail.

This same belief was reiterated in the soft sunlight on Friday as firefighters climbed the fire truck ladder to the top of the Department

No rush to enlist

East Ky.'s outrage not producing new recruits

by SHELDON COMPTON

PIKEVILLE — Despite the attacks on Washington and New York on Tuesday, Pikeville's Army Recruiting Station has seen no change in the number of enlisting volunteers.

In direct contrast to a trend of new recruits nationwide, officials at the station said Thursday there had been no surge in calls or walk-in enlistments, but that the center did receive a "couple" of calls on Tuesday.

The calls, according to the station, came from a "couple of teenage guys" who apparently were hoping to prove a point among one another.

The argument was as to whether or not an only son could be drafted.

Officers at Pikeville Thursday said they expect, once a definitive action is taken in a war-type effort, that the numbers of enlistments will increase.

With over 35,000 reservists being called to active duty, a war effort may not be such a distant possibility.

The recruiting station said Thursday that this war will be far different than, for example, than the Gulf War, adding that an attack on American soil would certainly give rise to patriotism across the nation.

"If I wasn't already signed up," said one recruiter, "I would be banging the door down and the first in line. I'm sure there are others who feel the same. We've just not seen an increase as of now."

Across the nation, the prospect of war has been met with a general acceptance, and already Congress has expressed its willingness to support President Bush in a war effort.

Bush, who has already described the events that

Divorced dads say system against them

by SHELDON COMPTON

PIKEVILLE — For several years fathers have expressed concerns, both in court and privately, about the status of father's rights.

Today, when an alarmingly high number of marriages end in divorce, many of those divorces involve children who find themselves in the middle of what can often be a confusing situation.

One father, Pikeville's John Deskins, has decided to voice his complaints in a very public fashion.

Deskins, a locomotive engineer at CSX, along with co-worker and fellow CSX engineer Robbie Blair, have decided to take the concept of father's rights and make an effort to promote awareness about a subject that Deskins said is often not fully understood by the law.

"I have been fighting this for seven years," said Deskins. "We're trying to get an organization started and let the public be aware of how fathers are being discriminated against."

Deskins, who has a 7-year-old daughter, said he has visitation every other

Floyd fiscal court approves new districts

by RALPH B. DAVIS
 MANAGING EDITOR

PRESTONSBURG — The Floyd County Fiscal Court has adopted an ordinance setting its own districts, as the county prepares to switch from a commissioner form of government to a magistrerial system in 2003.

But while commissioners have given their final word on the subject, they might not have the final say.

"There is 20 days from now [Friday] that if anyone in any of the districts wants to appeal this, they can," said County Judge-Executive Paul Hunt Thompson after the measure was unanimously adopted.

If such an appeal were to be filed, one likely basis for it could concern population differences between the districts.

Flight attendants facing dangers in the skies again

by DOROTHY de SOUZA
GUEDES
CNHI NEWS SERVICE

MORRISON, Ill. — During Karen McKee's first day back on the job as an American Airlines flight attendant, two of the airline's flights were hijacked.

The Morrison woman had taken a month off from work to spend the last days of summer home with her three sons, Dane, 15, Charlie, 9, and Danny, 8. The boys were still in bed sleeping when she left for work early Tuesday morning - a two-hour drive to O'Hare International Airport ahead of her, then a flight to Boston.

Karen was just 10 minutes from the airport when she heard radio reports of a plane crashing into the World Trade Center in New York.

At first she thought the crash was an accident.

By the time she parked her car, with JET N USA license plates, and rode a 20-minute shuttle bus to the terminal, Karen heard of a second crash into the Trade Center.

"One of the guys who works on the ground said, 'You might as well just turn around and go home,' and I said, 'Why?' and he said, 'It was an American Airlines jet that crashed.'"

She paused.

"My heart just fell," Karen said.

She proceeded to the operation area to sign in for her flight. Shortly after Karen's arrival, it was announced that the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) had ordered that all flights cease.

It seemed as though everything had changed at the airport. A flight attendant for 14 years, 13 of those with American, she spent countless hours at airports.

"Usually you see people hugging each other. They haven't seen each other in a long time, they're happy ... but everybody just had a real straight look on their face. I think everybody was just kind of numb. I don't know how I would describe how I felt, I was just - it's shocking," she said.

The voice mail on Karen's cellular telephone was jammed, with callers hearing an "all circuits are busy" message, and she had a difficult time making and receiving calls until she got home.

"Can you imagine everybody at the airport when they found out the news? Everybody was calling on cell phones," she said.

With airline operations shut down, Karen was told to go home to Morrison and wait for further instructions. She got into her car and headed west with the radio on, broadcasting all the latest news of the devastation out east.

When Karen learned of the second crash, she thought it was just too much of a coincidence for two flights to crash into the World Trade Center in good weather, in broad daylight, to be anything but a terrorist act.

She was told that the crews of the downed American Airlines jets were based out of Boston and Washington, D.C. "And of course I started thinking 'do I know any of these flight attendants and cockpit crew members?"

"Then it went deeper than that and I thought they could just be anybody and not being

September proclaimed Food Safety Education Month

FRANKFORT — Gov. Paul E. Patton has proclaimed the month of September as Food Safety Education Month in Kentucky.

The Cabinet for Health Services' Food Safety Branch, in cooperation with local health departments, the Kentucky Restaurant Association, the Kentucky Grocers Association, the Food and Drug Administration, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the International Food Safety Council and the Kentucky Food Safety Task Force, are taking part in observance of Food Safety Education Month in Kentucky.

These groups are committed to heightening awareness of food safety education and support this important food safety initiative. The month-long observance focuses attention on the importance of safe food handling and the need for food refrigeration. This year's theme is "Be Cool — Chill out! Refrigerate Promptly."

According to recent consumer research, Americans are more concerned about food safety today than ever before.

"Fortunately, most food-borne illness can be easily prevented by preparing and handling food properly both in food establishments and in the home," said Guy Delius, manager of the Food Safety Branch for the Cabinet for Health Services. "We certainly wish to take advantage of such an opportunity to further promote the importance of having safe food in this Commonwealth and to heighten the public awareness of just how important it is for all of us to have well trained food workers and a safe food supply."

During September, state and local health departments, food service establishments and retail markets will be participating by conducting training activities for restaurant and food industry professionals as well as communicating the importance of food safety to the public.

One of the most important and easiest ways to prevent the spread of illness through food is by washing your hands before preparing food. Another way to avoid illness is to read food product labels and safe handling instructions on fresh meat and poultry. Food processors tell you on the packages how to properly handle and prepare meats properly.

For more information on Food Safety Education Month, call the state Food Safety Branch at (502) 564-7181.

Officers at Pikeville's Army Recruiting Station said that although the number of people enlisting since Tuesday had not shown an increase, this did not necessarily reflect how people would react overall, adding that some people are still confused and shocked at what had happened but that there was a "sort of rage" stirring below the surface that would prove to bring many who are seeking a reaction to "pitch in and do their part."

for Employment Services building, where an empty flag pole stood along against a cloudy sky.

Sgt. William Burke and Darrell Sparks climbed the ladder, braving the stiff wind to retie the ropes and return the flag to its rightful standing.

"I feel great knowing we're doing it for a good cause," said Burke. "This whole thing is really sad — a lot of our brother firefighters died this week. There isn't much you can say to explain any of it. I just wish we could do more."

Dotson and firefighter Rusty Chaffins saluted as the two firefighters raised the flag to half mast above the building.

After the flag was respectfully displayed, Dotson spoke briefly about the importance of showing proper "flag etiquette." "Everyone should show respect for the flag," said Dotson. "Many great people fought and died to preserve these colors."

"Our country is facing a crisis," said Department for Employment Services employee Devra Hagans. "However, this crisis has unified Americans with a fierce determination to defend our freedom and to display our patriotism."

Fiscal court condemns attacks

Times Staff Report

PRESTONSBURG — The terrorist attacks in New York and Washington D.C. which left a nation numb Tuesday morning have led to many forms of government denouncing the action and expressing support around the nation.

The Floyd County Fiscal Court joined those bodies of government in condemning the unprecedented attacks Friday during a special called meeting.

During the meeting, the court offered a resolution, read by County Judge-Executive Paul Hunt Thompson at the end of the meeting and agreed upon unanimously by Commissioners Larry Stumbo and Ermal Tackett.

Commissioner Gerald Derosssett was not present for Friday's meeting due to a family illness.

The resolution read as follows:

"At the special meeting of the Floyd County Fiscal Court held in the Courtroom of the Floyd County Courthouse on September 14, 2001, at the hour of 11:00 o'clock a.m., the following resolution was offered:

"Whereas, on September 11, 2001, the United States of America and its citizens were attacked in cowardly fashion by terrorists who have caused the deaths and injury of countless of our citizens and members of our Armed Forces, as well as citizens of our sister nations; and

"Whereas, Floyd County, Kentucky and its citizens desire to condemn these actions and to show support for the citizens, members of our Armed Forces, their respective families and all homes that have been affected by the cowardly acts of terrorism in New York, Washington D.C. and Pennsylvania and other States of this great Country; and

"Now, therefore, be it resolved that the Floyd County Fiscal Court and the Citizens of Floyd County, Kentucky do condemn these cowardly and horrific actions by terrorists who have committed acts of war against the United States of America, its Armed Forces and citizens and do pledge all support humanly possible to our President and Commander-in-Chief, our Congress and our Armed Forces in those present and future actions they are now called upon to take in the defense of our great and beloved United States of America in this war against terrorism."

Data recorder found for Flight 93

by MIKE FAHER
CNHI NEWS BUREAU

SHANKSVILLE, Penn. — The flight-data recorder from ill-fated United Flight 93 was unearthed in a blackened crater Thursday afternoon, possibly providing clues to a crash that scattered debris as far as eight miles away.

Investigators said the recorder was found at 4:20 p.m. and immediately was whisked to Washington, where it will be analyzed by the National Transportation Safety Board.

"We are hoping it will have some information as to what occurred in the plane prior to it crashing," said Bill Crowley, FBI special agent, less than an hour after the find.

The data recorder measures information including air speed and altitude, and may contain vital evidence in a crash that killed 45 people as part of a terrorist strike that left thousands in Washington and New York dead.

Officials have guessed that Flight 93, which took off for a cross-country flight from Newark, N.J., also was headed to Washington. The plane's recorder was the first to be found from four hijacked jets used in Tuesday's attacks.

A voice recorder still has not been recovered, with hundreds of federal and state officials continuing to scour a sprawling crime scene just off of Lambertville Road, Stonycreek Township.

But CNN has reported obtaining a partial transcript of chatter from the plane recorded by air traffic controllers as the jetliner approached Cleveland. According to excerpts, a fight apparently ensued and the hijackers in the end appeared to have wrested control of the craft.

"We're still looking for the other box and will keep looking until we find it," said FBI Special Agent Linda Vizi in a telephone interview from her Pittsburgh office.

In interview Thursday night, Vizi said she did not know how long analysis of the data recorder would take.

Investigators also disclosed Thursday that debris from the shattered plane had been discovered at Indian Lake, two miles from the crash crater, and in New Baltimore, eight miles away from where the plane slammed into a grassy field.

The find immediately fueled speculation that structural problems, or possibly even an explosion, had damaged the Boeing 757 before it hit the ground.

Some Indian Lake residents reported seeing "sparkling confetti" or hearing sounds like "acorns hitting the house" around the time of the crash.

"Every piece that we picked up was charred," said Indian Lake Mayor Barry Lichty, whose neighbors spotted debris in their yards.

"We found a few small pieces of sheet metal," Lichty said in a telephone interview. "They were about the size of bolts."

At nearby Indian Lake Marina, employees took FBI agents out on boats and helped collect debris that washed up on shore including "parts of the plane and papers — just little pieces," said Tom Spinelli, a marina service technician.

"A lot of California information on it, like phone numbers," Spinelli said in a telephone interview. "We thought we saw pieces of bone — they took it with them."

Federal officials still could not rule out the presence of a bomb aboard the flight, but they quickly added that an explosion and winds could have carried debris long distances.

Officials also said no military planes or other aircraft had played a part in the jetliner's demise, though two planes were within 25 miles of the United Airlines flight Tuesday morning.

"Not only is it plausible that debris from this crash could be in those locations, it is probable," Crowley said Thursday afternoon.

One expert in aviation disasters agreed.

"Debris fields can scatter over miles," said Craig Conroy, who authored the two-volume manual "Effective Aviation Crisis Management" and likened Tuesday's crash to a vehicle moving at 1,000 mph hitting a brick wall.

"If it's a light piece of material, it becomes a projectile," Conroy said in a telephone interview from his home in Gibsonia, Allegheny County. "It can get into the wind currents and be carried."

As teams of agents combed through the site Thursday, a group that includes archaeologists and anthropologists began to recover human remains as fragmented as the plane itself.

"We must be meticulous in the way we approach it," said Wallace Miller, Somerset County coroner.

Some remains have been transported to a temporary morgue in the National Guard Armory on Route 281 near Somerset, where workers from across the country will analyze each body part while heavy security keeps watch outside.

KDA officials join community discussion of livestock health

Animal health has been at the top of the global agricultural agenda throughout the year, and the topic took center stage again at a meeting of North American agricultural leaders September 6-8, in Manzanillo, Colima, Mexico.

The Tri-National Accord meeting included agriculture officials from 18 states in the U.S., 15 Mexican states and nine Canadian provinces. Among the delegates were Harvey Mitchell, Tony Moreno, Marcos Castillo and Dr. Francisco Lugo from the Kentucky Department of Agriculture.

"Livestock health is an ongoing concern," said Mitchell, chief of staff for Agriculture Commissioner Billy Ray Smith. "Kentucky has had great success in preventing and eliminating livestock disease in recent years, and the Department remains committed to that goal."

Participants focused on the roles of states and provinces in preventing the outbreak and spread of foot-and-mouth disease, bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE, or mad cow disease) and other livestock diseases. Other issues discussed

DNA testing, dental records and even X-rays are some tools used to identify victims from the gruesome crash scene.

"With an impact of this type, it's going to be very difficult," Miller said. "It will be quite some time until we're going to be able to identify who a person might be."

Searches at the site for human remains and plane fragments could take as many as five weeks, officials have said.

Meanwhile in Champion, the American Red Cross is set up to receive families at Seven Springs, as soon as the survivors can get to the area.

No relatives were expected to arrive before late Thursday because air travel was nearly impossible for much of the day, spokesman Stephen Kerr said at the resort.

When they arrive, family members will be ushered to a receiving center set up by the Red Cross and United. The Red Cross will provide counseling and information to those in grief. They can stay as long as they need to, Kerr said.

"We're there as support if the families need support," Kerr said. "The Red Cross is often seen as a neutral party."

He did not know how many relatives plan to travel to Somerset County, or whether or not they would be willing to speak to the media.

"You get some, they're going to want to do it. It's therapeutic to them," he said.

Thursday afternoon, a handful of state workers quietly raised two poles bearing U.S. and Pennsylvania flags flying at half-mast.

A simple bouquet of yellow flowers was placed between, bearing a handwritten inscription on a sheet of white paper: "God bless you for your heroic actions — Rest in peace."

What he did for love

by EILEEN LAWRENCE

Reprinted by permission of Eileen Lawrence. (c)2000 Eileen Lawrence.

Sam, at age 17, had the normal dreams and desires of a young man embarking upon adulthood. He hoped to marry a good and loving woman, to work hard and study, and to create a bountiful existence for raising a family.

But in turn-of-the-century Polish Russia, a young man couldn't always hope to achieve his dreams. The threat of the draft loomed over every male of fighting age and burdened the hearts of his parents. If a man was drafted into the Russian army, he had little hope of ever coming home. He was drafted for life or died in service. Sam was destined to be one of those boys.

Some families accepted this fate as unavoidable and tearfully said goodbye to their sons. Others took the extreme measure of chopping off the son's right index finger — the trigger finger — making him ineligible for service, viewing mutilation as the lesser evil compared with prolonged suffering or even death. Sam decided on another course, one that held larger dangers he could not even imagine — and the promise of a good life if all went well. He chose to escape.

Sam wasn't just running away from the perils threatening him in Lodz, Poland; he was running toward something — or rather someone. He had fallen in love with Gussie, a young Polish girl, shortly before her family had fled Lodz for America. Sam had received word that she was safe in New York and missed him. Sam was determined to marry Gussie and fulfill his dreams, so he prepared himself for a treacherous and courageous journey.

was to find his way to some German friends who could help him reach New York.

As Sam embraced his family the morning of his departure, he wondered if he would ever see them — or Gussie — again. To pass the time and bolster his courage during the journey, Sam concentrated his thoughts on his love for Gussie and his plans for their future. This one hope would give him the strength to complete his pilgrimage. Finally, Sam

Sam prayed as he slowly walked toward the crossing. He needed a miracle.

As Sam drew closer, he recognized one of the guards as his father's friend, one who had visited the family many times. Sam caught the guard's eyes. When the guard recognized Sam and saw the look on his face, he immediately understood what was happening. Suddenly, the guard started yelling wildly and pointing in the opposite direction. The other guard, distracted, turned away. Sam had just enough time to dash across the border and out of danger — and he still had all his bribe money.

Sam made it safely to New York, and he found Gussie. After they married, they used the unspent bribe money to start a successful business. Despite his newfound happiness, Sam never forgot his family back in Polish Russia. Within two years, Sam was able to bring his three brothers to New York, and he and Gussie had a gift waiting for the boys when they arrived: Gussie's single sisters.

This young boy whose future in Polish Russia had been so uncertain lived long enough to see his grandchildren. In fact, I am one of those grandchildren. While Grandpa Sam was still alive, my cousins and I never tired of hearing the story of his courageous journey, or his ingenuity and self-sufficiency. But most of all, we treasured hearing about what brought him to his Gussie: not a stroke of luck or a twist of fate, but a miracle of love.

His parents packed him food and water for the trip, but his most vital necessity was money. If Sam wanted to cross the German border, he would have to bribe the border guard. Sam's parents gathered all their savings, tied the money into a handkerchief and hid it deep under the many layers of clothing Sam would wear for his countryside trek. When, or if, Sam made it past the border, he approached the German border, reached for his stash of money and froze in his tracks. He saw two guards at the border patrol; he had only enough money for one bribe. He couldn't possibly get through. Worse, one of the guards had spotted him, so he either had to advance or flee back home.

Gussie, Sam said to himself, I'm doing this for you, and I know God won't let us down.

able to ever go home and see their kids again," she said.

Then, a second chilling thought — her younger sister, Rhonda McKee, of Fulton, Ill., is a flight attendant with United Airlines. Karen didn't know if she was working or at home in Fulton.

"Since Rhonda works for United and a good friend, Chris, works for United I wondered where they were, especially when I heard that there was a United flight involved," Karen said.

Driving home, she called her sister from her cell phone, but Rhonda wasn't answering the phone. Karen left a message on her sister's answering machine.

The two are close. It was Karen who helped Rhonda take steps to leave her job as a travel agent and become a flight attendant with United a year and a half ago. She was there to pin her sister's flight wings on her United uniform when Rhonda graduated from her flight attendant training in April 2000.

Karen then called Morrison to leave a message for her boyfriend, Bill, saying she was OK. He planned to camp out at her house, watching the news and fielding phone calls.

When she called home a second time, Bill told her the phone was ringing "off the wall" with people calling to see if Karen was home and if she was safe.

Finally, Rhonda had called. "So at that point I knew that she was OK," Karen said, which was "a huge relief."

She knows the chance that she'll be involved in an incident like Tuesday's hijackings is slim.

"But when something happens, it makes you want to re-evaluate the whole system and say how did they (the hijackers) make it look so easy?"

She also talked about whether she feels confident going back to her job with the airlines.

"Yes and no," she said. "I think it's still too early to make a ..." she sighed, "an honest opinion about that. Of course it's scares me because it was so tragic. But then I also realize that flying is the safest means of transportation."

Maybe by her next scheduled series of flights beginning Sunday, she'll be ready to fly again.

"How can you get on a jet today?" she asked. "I think the country needs a day of mourning."

Sadness to anger

And now comes the anger.

Tuesday, as the horrendous acts unfolded before our very eyes, we were shocked, frightened, and unbelieving.

Then, as a new day dawned and the smoldering wreckage of the twin towers of the World Trade Center and the Pentagon reminded us that Sept. 11 was not a dream, we were mournful, shedding tears for the victims and their families, for a country ravaged by an unknown evil, for a freedom, often taken for granted, that had been shaken and even stalled.

But today, the anger begins to rise like an eagle from smoldering ashes that represent so many things for those of us who call ourselves Americans.

We are angry that so many lives were lost so unnecessarily; we are angry that terrorists could have so easily and so painstakingly invaded our land, apparently using our country's resources for the very training they needed to make their diabolical plan work. We are angry that America has been desecrated, that the very things we hold dear have been threatened and blown apart, leaving gaping holes not only in the structures that represent much of what America stands for but in the hearts of all Americans.

We are angry, too, that America has been placed in a retaliatory position. As much as we want retaliation, demand it even, the actions made necessary by evil murderers aren't at the core of what America is all about.

And, we are angry at all the unknowns — who did this and why? How many will have died by the time the rubble has been removed and the body bags filled? What will the government do to defend America? How will they carry out those actions? The list goes on, the questions persist, and the anger builds with a trembling sensation that grows worse with each photograph we see, each new piece of information that unfolds, each new victim's face we see or name we hear.

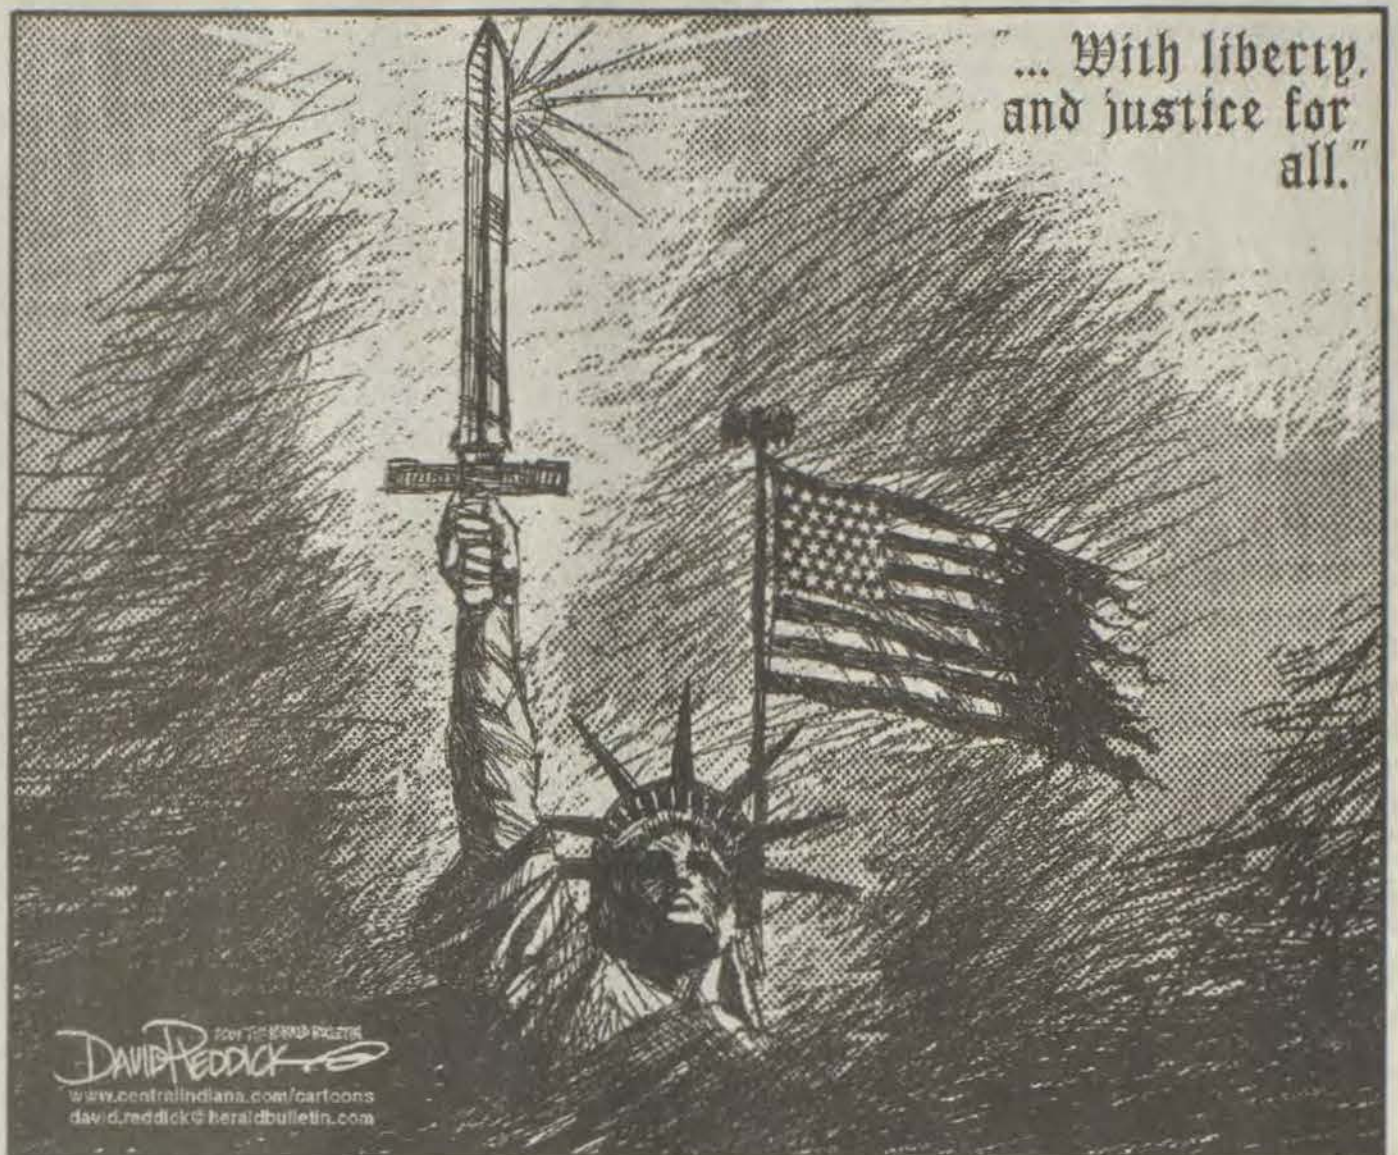

The anger is understandable. It is justified. But we should not allow our anger to overcome our sense of compassion for those directly impacted by these atrocious acts any more than we should allow our anger to overtake our common sense, the presence of mind that allows us to stop short of a knee-jerk reaction.

America has been victimized. As Americans, we feel victimized too, just as much a victim as one who has fallen prey to rape or assault. And that makes us angry.

Yes we were shaken, yes our very foundation was rattled, but it wasn't felled. And our resolve wasn't demolished. If anything, that was only made stronger, and will be made stronger still as the anger rising within us turns to determination and our rage turns to purpose.

America will not stand for this ravaging. Her people are behind her, flags waving, prayers lifted and faith strong.

What kind of world will our children inherit?

by TONI GARRARD CLAY
ATHENS (TX) DAILY REVIEW

My dearest one,
I've started to write several times today of the horror into which our country has plunged.
I've written angry words.
I've written sad words.
They were hollow words.
I erased them all and came home wondering why I could not express myself in the silent language I love best. Then, with your round, warm body fitted securely against my chest this evening, it came to me.

I will write you.

Oh, Madeline. What kind of world are you inheriting? Two days ago I watched you use six gleaming, tiny teeth to gnaw happily on a wooden block. Above you the television spoke of a world on fire.

Innocence and evil, I thought, and didn't know which to keep my eyes on. There was the happily bobbing head, gentle whiffs of hair curling softly at the nape of your neck. There were flames and rubble; screaming people; a panicked populace.

Those terrible visions aren't far away this time, in a country I am aware of only in a vague, political sense; in a land where the people speak a different language, eat different food and worship a different God. If that were so, I could watch the awful scenes with a clinical eye and the vague notion that things like that just happen in such countries.

Things like that happen in places like this now.

In the nine months you have graced this earth, I have wondered how your father and I will simultaneously protect you from the ugliness of this world, while equipping you to overcome it — to be in this world, but not of it. Violent crime, sexual gratuity, materialism, pettiness, harsh words, immodesty. All this I am prepared to do battle with on your behalf. But terrorism? Planes falling out of the sky? That's not the world I was ready to offer you.

Thankfully, you have no idea our country changed this week or even what a country is. While tons of glass, steel and concrete lay piled in our two most powerful cities, your universe remains centered around a living room, a bedroom, a crib, a pair of arms.

You will never know what it is to live in a country where the only scenes of a massive terrorist attack were conjured for movie screens. I doubt you will ever fly from one place to another with relative ease. You will never see the most famous skyline in the world as I have seen it.

I suspect you will take all of this in stride. What you did not know, you will not miss. Including, it seems, a false

Boycott price-gougers

Two hours after the disastrous terrorist attacks on the United States of America, some of our local gas stations raised their gas prices to over $2 a gallon!

Do you believe for an instant that the cost of gasoline ALREADY in the storage tanks at these gas stations suddenly skyrocketed?

I don't think so. Which is more despicable and evil — the cowardly taking of thousands of innocent lives, or the cold greed of profiting from the deaths of thousands of fellow citizens? You tell me.

In words similar to those voiced by one of our federal officials in the wake of this tragedy, "We know evil when we see it!"

Thankfully, other gas stations displayed a higher level of integrity by choosing not to raise their already inflated prices. Those are the ones that will receive my money from now on.

I encourage all citizens to remember those traitorous profiteers who used a devastating national tragedy as an opportunity to gouge the public and rake in excess filthy lucre. Woe to them all!

These people have placed themselves on the same side of this tragedy as those who committed the cowardly attacks. They have used the deaths of thousands of innocent American citizens as a vehicle to further their own self interests.

I think the public understands basic economic principle. A valid principle of free market capitalism is that businesses will get as much money for goods and services as the market will bear.

However, I believe these people have crossed the line from acceptable economic practice to unacceptable greed. It is not a matter of economics any more. It is a matter of principle!

Join me in boycotting the businesses owned by these despicable people!

Who else is to blame?

It's incredulous to me that all the politicians from both sides of the aisle can get up and make these flag-waving speeches and say such things as we are a beacon of freedom and democracy around the world. They say we are country that promotes freedom and democracy.

The news people working for the very same corporations that control these politicians keep asking the questions they know the answer to — "Why are these people all over the Arab world celebrating?" and "Why do they feel that way about us?" They never go ahead with the truth and answer the question. Instead, all we get is more chest thumping and flag waving.

This is not the time for blind patriotism but introspection. It's a time for reason and logic. We need to analyze how we got to this horrible day and who bears responsibility.

Is it all the fault of the Arab peoples and the terrorists willing to die to strike out at us? Is there blame that lies with these very same politicians that won't answer that tough question of why do they hate our guts and what role they played in building that hatred?

Being a historian I know why and they also know. They don't have the courage or the integrity to share the blame. Instead they will lead us down a path of more human misery and destruction wrought on both sides.

Lawmakers reviewing executive branch's service contracts

FRANKFORT — Members of a legislative committee have received a draft report that indicates the state's methods of contracting for services have limited accountability and efficiency, even though larger sums of money are being spent on service contracts.

The draft report, which was compiled by legislative staffers in response to lawmakers' requests, was the main topic of discussion at Friday's meeting of the General Assembly's Program Review and Investigations Committee. Lawmakers approved the study last year to evaluate whether the use of service contracts is an efficient and accountable method of delivering government services and to see how the extensive use of service contracts impacts state workers.

In compiling the draft report, members of the Program Review and Investigations staff examined a random sample of 353 service contracts. This examination included a review of contract documentation and interviews with agency managers to determine the contract awards and monitoring process used.

The major conclusions from the draft report include the following:

■ The Executive Branch is spending an increasing share of its total personnel resources on service contracts. In the 1992 fiscal year, personnel spending on service contracts equaled just over nine percent of total personnel costs. That figure grew to 17 percent by FY 2000.

■ In FY 2000 approximately $350 million was spent on service contracts in the Executive Branch. That same amount could have paid for approximately 8,600 additional state employees.

■ The greatest strength of the contracting system appears to be the integrity and professionalism of agency managers, which members of the Program Review staff reported to be uniformly high.

■ Inconsistency and weakness in the contracting system and procedures limit overall accountability and efficiency.

Sen. Katie Kratz Stine, R-Ft. Thomas, co-chair of the Program Review and Investigations Committee, said she's concerned that executive branch officials may not exercise proper discretion when determining whether or not service contracts are needed.

"There may be instances when a private contract can serve the state in an expeditious fashion ... (but) it sound like there may not be that cost-benefit analysis going on in determining when to use the private contracting," Stine said.

Stine also said the lack of adequate monitors over contracts once they're awarded "is creating the appearance of a bad scenario."

Members of the Program Review and Investigations Committee will revisit the issue of service contracts at their next meeting, when members of the state's Finance and Administration Cabinet are expected to testify.

Jessica Blair's first-grade class at Prestonsburg Elementary School drew pictures on red, white and blue poster boards to share their feelings about the devastating terrorist attacks this week. Blair said her class has discussed the effects of the tragedy in the classroom. "It was scary thing for many of them," said Blair, "but they say they feel safe here in school."

gained with each discovery of my ancestral roots a heightened sense of patriotism. Each discovery of an ancestor who fought in the Revolutionary War, the War of 1812, the Civil War, World War I and through World War II, the war that my father Ferdie Columbus Johns fought in and was wounded, gave me a very warm and comfortable feeling. This research also gave me much pride in the fact that I'm a sixth-generation Floyd Countian.

With the recent attack on America that took place in New York, I'm sure many of us have stopped to try to put things into perspective. We've spent many moments of silence in prayer and many moments numb in disbelief. The great sadness that is at the heart of all this madness and hatred is a difference of religion.

The men and women that fought for freedom in this country and abroad were for freedom to worship as we will. Our country was founded on the basis of Christianity, people that believe in Jesus Christ and his teachings. He is the common thread that should bind all the churches in Floyd County and America. Yet, many of our religious leaders and church members are distinctly divided from church to church, even though each will profess to be Christian.

Some religious leaders or pastors will go so far as to get up and leave a funeral service if a pastor from a different church takes the pulpit to speak. I've been in church early enough for Sunday school only to sit there for an hour listening to the members Catholic-bash. Why must you do this? Some of you will immediately answer to yourself, because we're the only church that truly serves Christ. It is very discouraging to citizens who may want to attend church but haven't. They look around and listen to their neighbors and co-workers criticize another church. How encouraging can this be? The Church of Christ doesn't agree with the Freewill Baptists.

The Freewill Baptists don't like the Catholics. The Regular Baptists don't approve of the Methodists, and on down the line. You get the message. I'm sure there are church members out there who don't have this attitude. The pastors should begin setting different examples.

In consideration of the tragedy in New York, I challenge a religious leader in Floyd County to have a Christian revival with speakers from all churches in the area participating. What a wonderful inspiration it would be to have all our pastors of different churches sitting in the front row together waiting to speak in support of Christianity, the idea that founded our great country. What a wonderful choir we could have for that evening if all the great voices from each church harmonized and sang in praise of Jesus Christ.

If all Christians in Floyd County would band together and take an interest in improving our county, we could have the greatest county and county government in the state. You may be saved and baptized and will go to heaven, but you work here is far from being done. How about it? Can we have that revival and show that we love and support each other?

sense of security enjoyed by most of my generation.

What kind of world are you inheriting? A flawed one obviously, one where very angry people hurt others, and we can't always stop them. How terrible, though, if that's the only message you receive. It would be only half the truth. My darling, it's also a beautiful place, a place where brave people run to help others, a place where hurting people are bathed in comfort and love.

Just as you will not remember the terrible visions that unfolded before a nation one Tuesday, you also will not remember playing in the grass on a courthouse lawn the following evening. That is where hundreds of strangers gathered to sing and mostly to pray. That is where, sitting snugly on your father's back, you placed a tiny pink hand against my cheek while the grownups asked a just and loving God to comfort those who grieve, and strengthen those who labor.

Your touch, Madeline, reminded me of what a beautiful world this can be. With that in mind, your father and I will try to teach you something very, very important:

Whenever possible in life, keep your eyes on the innocence.

Some things are just common sense. So when I heard about a telephone service offering high-tech solutions at affordable rates, I was more than a little interested. When I learned they also offered local telephone service, long distance, Internet and paging, together in a low-cost bundle, I was sold. So it's only natural they'd become my telephone service, too.

FBI: Penn. doctor questioned, cleared in terrorism probe

by DEBBIE WACHTER MORRIS
CNHI NEWS SERVICE

NEW CASTLE, Pa. — The FBI questioned and cleared an Arabic doctor of any involvement in the terrorist attacks on America this week, though the ordeal may have cost him a job in New Mexico.

The FBI and a host of other federal agencies had ransacked the apartment of Dr. Basem M. Hussein here, based on a sealed federal warrant.

The 36-year-old Neshannock Township neuroradiologist quit a new job in New Mexico, telling co-workers he had to return to Pennsylvania. The probe ultimately showed his innocence, the FBI said Thursday.

A spokeswoman for a health care provider company in Arizona said Hussein worked at its hospital in Shiprock, N.M., as a radiologist for only one week before quitting Tuesday.

When he left the hospital, "he indicated he had to leave the area to return home," said Jenny Notah, spokeswoman for Navajo Area Indian Health Services in Window Rock, Ariz., "but his reason was unknown to us."

The American Medical Association's website lists his home as New Castle.

Hussein started working for the North Navajo Medical Center Sept. 4 under a contract with a Houston company called Medical Staffing Network, and left his job the day hijacked planes hit the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.

It also was the same day federal authorities obtained a search warrant to enter his Neshannock Township apartment, following reports there were suspicious materials inside.

Federal sealed search warrants were issued and executed at Hussein's Pennsylvania residence and on his vehicle.

The FBI, assisted by other federal agencies, went to Hussein's apartment in The Meadows on Tuesday

Victims of past tragedies react to terrorist attacks

by JACLYN HACKENBERG
CNHI NEWS SERVICE

WOODWARD, Okla. — As the news of four terrorist hijackings in the skies over New York, Pennsylvania and Washington D.C. unfolded on television Tuesday morning, two women — both victims of violent attacks — said they could not help but relive past tragedies that changed their lives.

Dana Scott, sister of Columbine High School shooting victim Rachel Joy Scott, had just finished speaking to Woodward Middle School students on lessons learned from her sister's death when Principal Mark Park addressed the students and told them of the attacks.

A momentary, stunned hush filled the auditorium, followed by a clamor of student voices. Scott returned to the office of her sponsors, the Woodward Chamber of Commerce, with President Dale Steenbergen and watched newscasts of the attacks.

"I think when it really comes down to it, people need our prayers. I would just say to anybody to really pray hard for these families and for the rescue teams who are putting their lives at risk," Scott said.

A phone call from Scott's family in Colorado told her they were unable to contact an uncle who works on New York City's Wall Street. Scott said she hoped her uncle was unable to locate a phone or that all circuits were busy.

As newscasters speculated on the origin of the terrorist attacks, Scott said she knew only too well the feelings of the families who were waiting to hear from loved ones near the plane crashes at the World Trade Center towers and the Pentagon.

"It's just the feeling of 'I don't know.' We experienced that same thing at Columbine. It wasn't until hours later when we discovered that she (Rachel Scott) had been killed. It's very terrifying," Scott said.

When Rachel Scott, 17, was killed April 20, 1999, in Littleton, Colo., she was one of 13 victims of the nation's worst school shooting. Rachel's funeral broadcast was viewed by the Cable News Network's largest viewing audience to date, Scott said.

Scott was in Woodward Tuesday to encourage students to follow her sister's example and engage in random acts of kindness. Her sister's journals revealed that she wanted to start a chain reaction in people's lives by reaching out to others, she said.

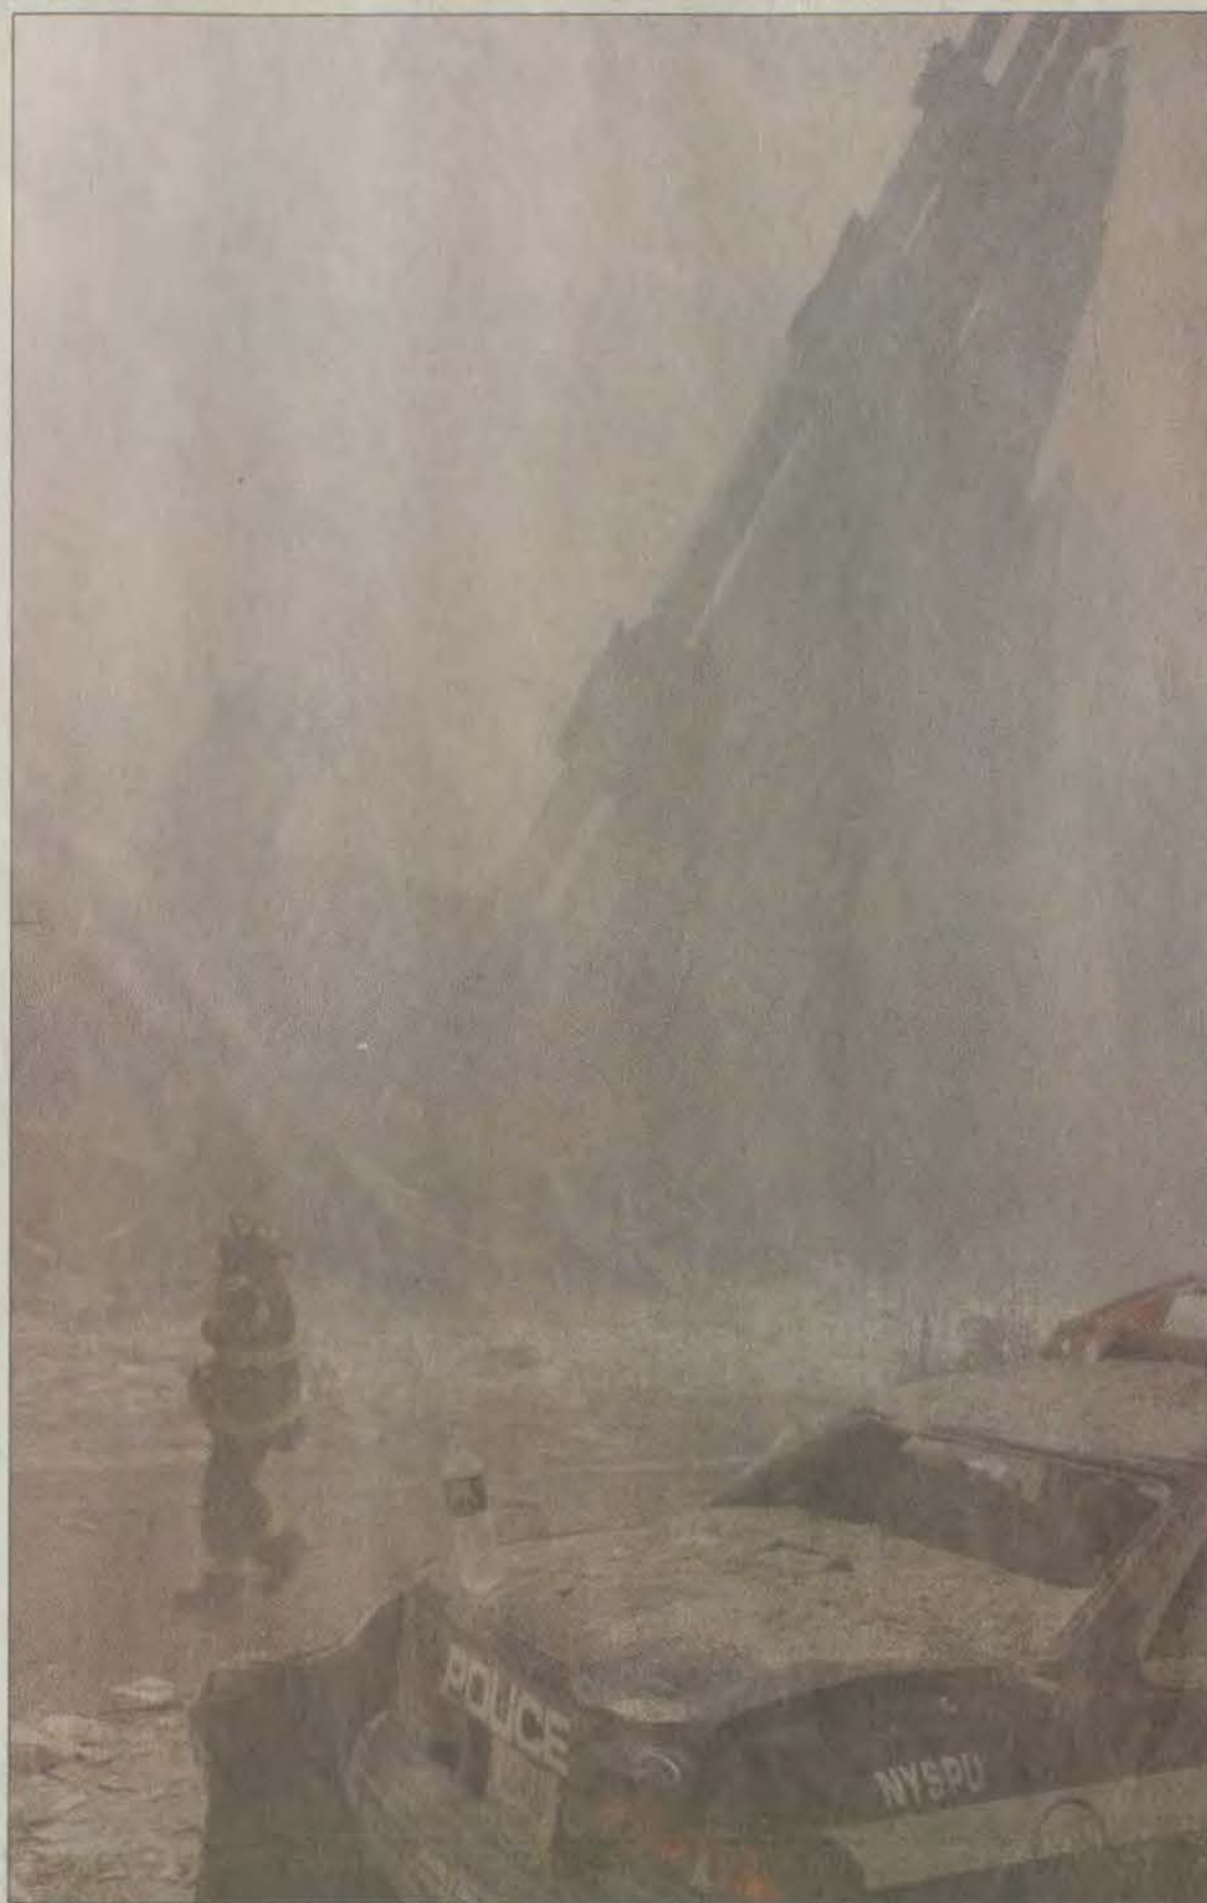

Scott now travels the nation to encourage youth to prevent bullying and violence by having a positive influence on their fellow students.

"Make a positive effect on the people around you because you never know what kind of a difference you can make in someone's life," Scott told the middle school students before Tuesday's terrorist attacks were announced.

Scott watched television broadcasters remark that Tuesday's attacks were the worst on American soil and reflected on her life-changing experience.

"If there's one thing Columbine taught us, it's

Transcripts support Flight 93 heroics

by PETE BOSAK
CNHI NEWS SERVICE

JOHNSTOWN, Penn. — Transcripts of the final minutes of Flight 93 publicized Thursday bolstered the notion that a struggle took place in the cockpit — and of apparent heroics in the skies above Western Pennsylvania.

Airline tower workers heard someone in the cockpit shout, "Get out of here," through an open microphone.

A second transmission from the plane is heard amid sounds of scuffling.

Then, someone again yelling, "Get out of here."

Next to be heard is a voice speaking in broken English:

"There is a bomb on board. This is the captain speaking. Remain in your seat. There is a bomb on board. Stay quiet. We are meeting with their demands. We are returning to the airport."

Television network CNN said an unidentified source who heard the tape claimed that transmission was in broken English.

The microphone then went dead, CNN reported.

United spokeswoman Liz

Meagher had no comment on the transcript.

CNN reported obtaining a partial transcript of chatter from the plane recorded by air traffic controllers as the jetliner approached Cleveland.

The recordings and cell phone calls indicate that passengers and crew knew they were in their final moments on earth.

But they apparently decided that, if they were going to die, so would their terrorists before they could reach Washington.

North Carolina Muslim leader supports U.S. response to terrorist acts

by TOM MAYER
EDITOR, THE DAILY SOUTHERNER

Daily Southerner: Does your Muslim organization condone Tuesday's terrorist actions against America, in the name of Allah, or for any other reason?

Akbar: As a member of the American Muslim Society, we completely deplore the actions of the bombings and the taking of innocent lives. That is not part of the religion of Islam. We are taught in our religion that we must protect innocent lives. Even in warfare, we are taught not to disturb plants or trees.

Daily Southerner: Members of Muslim factions have claimed responsibility for the attacks, and signs continue to point to Osama bin Laden as the mastermind behind the attacks. How can you reconcile their supposed faith-based actions with your religious views?

Akbar: We have to understand that in any religion there are fanatics, and they are misguided. There is the concept of the Jihad that a lot of people interpret as a holy war, and this is their justification. But the correct interpretation is a struggle before Allah, any struggle, even personal ones.

Daily Southerner: How do these terrorist acts fit into your concept of Islam and religion?

Akbar: In the Koran we talk about Scripture and how Scripture is fulfilled. The same goes for the Bible and the Torah. There are wars between Muslims and Jews in the Mideast. This might be God's judgment going on in all parts of the world.

Daily Southerner: How do you think these attacks on United States soil will affect non-Muslim American citizens and their view of your religion?

Akbar: It's so devastating here because the United States is seen as the superpower that is invulnerable to such attacks. We felt secure, but these attacks show we are just as vulnerable as any other people to loss of lives. Our condolences, our sympathy, our hearts, go out to the victims.

Daily Southerner: Is there any basis in the Islamic religion to justify terrorism?

Akbar: When Islam was first established it was out of tolerance. The root word of Islam means peace. There's Scripture in the Koran that says, "There's no compulsion in religion." That means you can't dictate to anyone how to worship. Muslims are obligated to protect churches and synagogues as well as their mosques. A lot of times you don't hear this about Muslims. The fanatics make the headlines.

Daily Southerner: Several mosques in the Raleigh, N.C., area have received threats of violence planned against them. Do you feel threatened being a Muslim in Edgecombe County?

Akbar: We've heard of threats or attacks on mosques and Muslims in the Raleigh area, but we have instructions to ride things out. Although we are Muslims, we don't condone this violence. I've had no personal threats against me, and I'll continue to move around as usual.

Daily Southerner: If it is discovered that a Muslim-faction or -based country is responsible for Tuesday's attacks, would you support a war against them?

Akbar: Yes. We are American citizens who happen to be Muslims. We must use all of our intelligence and resources to find who did this. You have to protect your own. This would be a matter of protecting your own. We must send a strong reaction.

Daily Southerner: If in fact a Muslim-based group is responsible for the attacks, what would you say to them if given the chance?

Akbar: As Muslim to Muslim, they need to really study the Koran and really look at the mercy and grace Allah gives all humanity.

Angry judge gives fighting father 10 years

by MARY MUSIC
STAFF WRITER

PRESTONSBURG — Formal sentencing was handed down Friday for a Weeksbury man previously found guilty of charges relating to his participation in an altercation between two juveniles.

After rendering a guilty verdict in July against Robert Darrell Bryant, 40, for several charges related to the altercation, the jury suggested a 10-year sentence. That recommendation was upheld by Circuit Judge John David Caudill on Friday.

Bryant, charged with first-degree unlawful imprisonment, a class D felony, third-degree unlawful transaction of a minor, and terroristic threatening, will return to the Floyd County Detention Center until the Department of Corrections chooses where he will carry out his sentence, Caudill said in court yesterday.

According to testimony given during the July trial, Bryant and his wife, Carol, ordered, instructed and induced their 13-year-old daughter, who is now 14, to assault another 14-year-old juvenile who was visiting a home in Weeksbury last June.

Witnesses testified that Bryant went into the home of Bonita Hunter, ordering the assault on the juvenile and restrained her against her will while physically blocking witnesses at the scene from assisting her. The victim was thrown on the ground outside the home and the altercation took place while several witnesses stood watching.

Testimony was also given by witnesses during the trial that Bryant threatened to kill the victim's uncle, Jeremiah Johnson, who attempted to help her during the attack.

Witnesses said that Bryant "backed" Johnson up with his cane and said that he would "cut his guts out" and "bust his brains" if he tried to stop the altercation.

The juvenile was able to get free from her assailant at one point during the altercation, according to testimony given, and ran back into the home while Bryant and his wife, Carol, continued to order their daughter to assault the juvenile.

Although the victim's injuries were not life-threatening, she sustained multiple injuries including severe bruising and abrasions to her back and was immobilized and transferred to Highlands Regional Medical Center.

Caudill handed down Bryant's formal sentence of 10 years imprisonment without hesitation after listening to arguments presented for consideration by Bryant's attorney, Jerry Patton.

Patton continuously objected to testimony which he felt was inadmissible during the trial and later made a motion for a mistrial, at which time Caudill emphasized that the court was "close" to calling.

At the sentencing hearing on Friday, Patton asked Caudill to consider those arguments before rendering a sentence against Bryant.

Caudill disagreed. "As far as I'm concerned, you convicted yourself, Mr. Bryant," said Caudill, speaking harshly to Bryant. "I've never heard such a tragic tragedy in my life."

Caudill's voice became louder as he told Bryant that he agreed with the jury, stating that it would be a "slap in the face" if he were to agree to a lighter sentence, as well as "dually depreciate the seriousness" of Bryant's "sad, terrible" acts.

Caudill suggested that during Bryant's imprisonment at the corrections facility, he should find "correction" in child rearing and morality as well.

In an interview after the hearing, Patton was reluctant to comment on the case. He did confirm, however, that he will file a motion for an appeal in the case next week.

"We know that the jury carefully considered all evidence in the trial and came back with the right verdict," said Assistant Commonwealth attorney Wayne Taylor. "We feel that the 10-year sentence is appropriate and we're very pleased with it. All of the victims and the complaining witnesses are also extremely pleased."

"All defendants and defense attorneys have right to appeal," continued Taylor. "We feel confident that the jury made the right determination here and the judge made the proper rulings on objections during the trial. We're confident that the verdict and the sentence will stand, and that's the right thing."

Court

The court made no changes to the proposal recommended by a three-member reapportionment committee. That committee drew two of the districts — 3 and 4 — so that their populations are near the ideal of 10,600 persons per district.

Districts 1 and 2, however, each vary from that ideal by more than 10 percent. Under the ordinance, District 1 will now have 11,950 people, while District 2 will have a population of 9,400.

State law requires fiscal court districts to be "compact, contiguous" and "as nearly equal as is reasonably possible."

The ordinance divides Floyd County into four districts containing the following precincts:

District 1

Cliff, Abbott, Depot, Jim Banks, Auxier, North Prestonsburg, Courthouse/Trimble Branch, Richmond, Porter, Cow Creek, Endicott-Buffalo and Allen-Dwale. Population:

11,950.

District 2

Lackey/Wayland, Garrett/Rock Fork, Bosco, Beech Grove, Maytown, John Possum, Mouth of Beaver, Middle Creek/Jack Allen and Rough and Tough. Population: 9,400.

District 3

Melvin, Weeksbury, Lee Hall, Jacks Creek, John Ant/Frasures Creek, Drift, Gearheart, Halbert, Martin, Arkansas and Clear Creek. Population: 10,200.

District 4

Head of Mud, Antioch, Tickey, Branham's Creek, Toler, Little Mud, Mouth of Mud, Betsy Layne, Ivel and Prater Creek. Population: 10,700.

All members were present for Friday's special meeting except District 1 Commissioner Gerald Derosset. Thompson said Derosset was absent because of a family illness.

Special week emphasizes safety on the farm

Achieving a feeling of safety and security is important to everyone these days. On the farm, taking precautions for a safe operation and being prepared for an emergency are necessary to prevent potential mishaps.

"National Farm Safety week is September 16-22, and focuses on what has been a top priority of my administration since Day One," said Kentucky Agriculture Commissioner Billy Ray Smith. "As a farmer, I have seen the horrible results of one too many shortcuts taken, of one disastrous moment of inattention."

"The cost is sometimes the life of a loved one. And even if a farming accident doesn't take a life, it often changes it forever—for the farmer, for the entire family."

Although mining is considered the most dangerous occupation on a national level, injuries and deaths due to farming accidents in Kentucky continue to outpace those resulting from mining accidents.

A number of simulated disaster-and-rescue operations will be presented by the Kentucky Department of Agriculture during National Farm Safety Week, demonstrating how equipment utilized daily by the Commonwealth's farmers can become a danger at the most unexpected of times, and how emergency crews go about their rescue operations.

The first of the simulated rescues will be presented as a part of the FFA Career and Safety Summit on Tuesday, September 18, at Western Kentucky University's L.D. Brown Agricultural Exposition Center in Bowling Green. The event runs from 8:45 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. CDT.

A simulated rescue will be held on Wednesday, September 19, as part of an agricultural safety show being held at J&G Equipment in Bardstown. Time for the rescue will be 6 p.m. EDT.

A third simulated rescue will be held in conjunction with a field day at Kentucky State University Farm in Frankfort.

Festivities will get underway around 9 a.m. EDT, with the demonstration slated for 11:45 a.m.

Coordinating the mock rescues, and presenting information, will be Dale Dobson, a lifelong LaRue County dairy farmer. Dobson has been actively working in the area of farm safety for a number of years. As the Department's farm safety coordinator, he tours the state discussing the dangers present on the farm as well as around the home.

"In my work, I try to demonstrate safety so that farmers and others in the public can more easily visualize all the various types of accidents that can happen," Dobson said. "These mock rescues give the audience an appreciation for the potential hazards that exist on the farm, as well as the job done by emergency workers."

For more information on the events, contact Teresa Lauder-milk with KDA's Division of Public Relations and Communications by phone at (502) 564-6676, ext. 242, or by email at teresa.laudermilk@kyagr.com.

An emergency planner developed by KDA could make the difference on the farm and at home, when seconds count. The planner is available on the Department's Web site www.kyagr.com, or in print by writing to 500 Mero Street, 7th floor, Frankfort, KY 40601.

Appalachia's population grows by nearly 2 million during 1990s

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Appalachia's population has grown by 1.9 million people since 1990, the Appalachian Regional Commission (ARC) reported Friday. Population in the 13-state Appalachian Region now stands at 22.8 million.

ARC based the new population total for Appalachia on 2000 Census data released by the United States Department of Commerce's Census Bureau earlier this year. The agency reviewed new Census figures for 406 counties designated by Congress as part of the Region.

The population gain represents a 9.1 percent increase since 1990 but falls short of the 13.2 percent increase for the United States as a whole during that time.

One positive population trend in Appalachia was the growth of rural Appalachian counties. Over the last decade 100 rural counties in Appalachia grew at a rate faster than the national rate.

The Appalachian areas of four states registered growth rates higher than the national rate: Georgia's Appalachian counties averaged a 42.7 percent growth rate; North Carolina's, 16.8 percent; South Carolina's, 15.8 percent; and Tennessee's, 15.5 percent.

The Appalachian areas of six other states had growth rates between 4 and 11 percent. Alabama's Appalachian counties averaged a 10.4 percent growth rate; Mississippi's, 8.9 percent; Kentucky's, 6.4 percent; Ohio's, 6.0 percent; Maryland's, 5.4 percent; and Virginia's, 4.0 percent.

Pennsylvania and West Virginia saw their Appalachian populations grow by less than one percent over the ten-year period. New York's Appalachian population declined slightly, by 1.4 percent.

Detailed demographic data on net migration patterns, poverty rates, and educational attainment by age, sex, race, and income will be available from the 2000 Census in the fall of 2002. ARC will analyze the new Census data to help Appalachian state and local officials understand the socioeconomic changes that have occurred in the Appalachian Region during the 1990s.

Rep. Susan Westrom, D-Lexington, co-chair of the Task Force on Senior Citizens & the Workforce, listens to testimony during the task force's inaugural meeting.

Terrorism

and Wednesday. The roads were blocked and about 30 apartments evacuated Tuesday night as precautions.

After investigating Hussein in New Castle and in New Mexico, the FBI declared last night he has been detained, questioned and released and the matter involving him "is now considered resolved."

Authorities had not labeled Hussein as a suspect or connected him with the incidents, and no charges were filed.

The FBI is the lead agency in cases involving Tuesday's attacks on the World Trade Center in New York City, the Pentagon in Arlington, Va., and the four related aircraft hijackings. One of the planes crashed in Somerset County in Pennsylvania with no survivors.

"An unprecedented, enormous investigation is ongoing," the FBI said. "Thousands of tips have been received from the public."

Hussein graduated in 1990

from the University of Ottawa, Faculty of Medicine, in Canada, and completed his residency training at Allegheny General Hospital in Pittsburgh. He worked at Jameson Hospital in New Castle for three to six months in 1999, ending his work there in January 2000.

Although he did not work long at the medical center in Shiprock, the staff who worked with him there indicated he is a quiet person who seemed genuinely concerned for the patients he served, Notah said. She added the staff had no information about his personal life.

A spokesman for Medical Staffing Network confirmed today Hussein is an independent contractor with the firm, but would offer no other comment.

Doug Beldon, the FBI spokesman in Albuquerque, could not be reached Thursday night or Friday morning for comment on the investigation.

The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette reported in today's edition that Beldon said Hussein was exonerated because he is innocent.

Debbie Wachter Morris is a reporter for the New Castle (Pa.) News. Staff writer Mitchel Olszak also contributed to this report.

Heroics

Doomed United Flight 93 slammed into the ground near Shanksville on Tuesday.

In all, 45 people died.

By cellular telephones, passengers learned of the World Trade Center attacks and told their wives they were going to fight.

"Somebody is a hero here," said U.S. Rep. John Murtha, D-Johnstown, the first national political figure to state the belief that passengers or crew prevented terrorists from reaching their goal of the White House, Capitol or Pentagon.

"I'm convinced these people are heroes who saved the White House or Capitol from attack," Murtha said in a telephone interview from Washington soon after an hour-long meeting with President Bush in the White House with colleagues from New York and Virginia.

"I believe they fought and dove that plane into the ground. At some point I'm going to suggest we place a plaque out there to honor their sacrifices."

Since the crash site is in a rural area, the congressman said he also will push for a plaque to memorialize the dead at John Murtha Johnstown-Cambria County Airport in Richland Township, where it would be viewed by many more people.

Flight 93 was one of four airliners hijacked Tuesday morning. Two leveled the World Trade Center in Manhattan, one crippled a portion the Pentagon, and Flight 93 nose dived into an abandoned strip cut between Stoystown and Shanksville, Somerset County.

Family of some Flight 93 passengers have come forward to back that theory — with heartbreaking cellular telephone calls with loved ones who vowed to fight after learning of the suicide airline impacts at the World Trade Center.

Jeremy Glick, 31, called his wife from the hijacked plane after terrorists had seized control. His wife conferenced the call to a 911 dispatcher who told Glick about the devastation in New York City, said Tom Crowley, Glick's uncle.

"Jeremy and the people around them found out about the flights into the World Trade Center and decided that if their fate was to die, they should fight," Crowley said.

Thomas Burnett, 38, called his wife, Deena, when the hijacking happened to tell her to call authorities. But in a second call, Mrs. Burnett told her husband about the World Trade Center attacks.

In the third and final call, his wife said, her husband told her he was among a group of passengers who planned to make, as it turned out, their final stand.

"I told him to please sit down and not draw attention to himself and he said no. He said no," Mrs. Burnett said.

Murtha said he is convinced a heroic fight happened onboard Flight 93 between terrorists and American civilians. Obviously, western Pennsylvania was not the terrorists' target.

"I personally think it was the Capitol because it is such a symbol of freedom," Murtha said.

The erratic flight pattern and nature of the crash — by eye-witness accounts — seems to bear that out.

The plane, which took off from Newark, N.J., bound for California, reached Ohio before turning around, back into Pennsylvania, before heading toward D.C.

It then turned and headed northwest toward Johnstown, coming within about 17 miles of the Johnstown airport before turning again and plowing into a Somerset County field. The plane rolled onto its side as it dove into the ground, witnesses told The Tribune-Democrat.

"I don't think anyone can imagine the fear they felt in the last few minutes of their lives," Murtha said after touring the crash scene by air Wednesday.

The congressman was heartened to learn investigators have found the "black box," or flight data recorder at the Somerset County crash scene. But Murtha is holding out hope they will recover the cockpit voice recorder, which he believes may hold valuable clues as to who is responsible for the attacks.

"I'm sure there would have been shouting," Murtha said. "In the struggle maybe even the culprits may have been screaming in whose name they've done this."

The congressman acknowledged evidence is leading investigators to Osama bin Laden, the accused mastermind of the U.S. embassy bombings.

Attack

that you never know when and where this can happen," Scott said.

From Fort Worth, Texas, Woodward native Pam Briggs said the day's events were forcing her to relive memories of what was until Tuesday the worst act of terrorism on American soil.

Briggs had just begun a workday on the first floor of the Alfred P. Murrah Building in Oklahoma City on the morning of April 19, 1995. The next thing she knew, she was pushing debris of the ruined building off her body and attempting to aid rescuers in locating victims.

Briggs had no idea she had a severe laceration to her forehead and a severed colon, she said. She spent four weeks in a hospital's critical care unit and had two major surgeries while rescuers found the bodies of 168 victims.

Watching Tuesday's terrorist attacks was like seeing the Oklahoma City bombing footage again, Briggs said.

"It's like reliving that day over again except this time I'm on the other side. I feel just like people on the other side of the U.S. are feeling. You feel so helpless and you just don't know where to start," Briggs said.

Because Briggs was in shock, she couldn't feel pain from her wounds or understand why rescuers would not allow her to get up and help victims of the bombing around her that day, she said.

"It's the same thing today. I'm still watching those people and there's nothing I can do. But I know they're experiencing the same kinds of emotions I was," Briggs said.

Briggs said she watched broadcasts of Tuesday's plane crashes and noted there were few survivors being shown, unlike the day she became a victim of terrorism.

"There's nothing they can do until the dust settles," Briggs said.

Benefits of olive oil

(NUE) - If you are looking for a way to reduce your risk of cancer, try a Mediterranean meal and dietary supplements of olive oil.

There is a low incidence of several types of cancer among Mediterranean populations, and olive oil consumption could be a contributing factor. People who live around the Mediterranean Sea, where olive oil is a major part of their daily diet, have much lower death rates from heart disease and certain cancers.

Surprisingly, those who eat a Mediterranean diet actually eat as much fat as people from other countries. But those who eat a Mediterranean diet get their fat calories primarily from olive oil, which is largely composed of monounsaturated fat, which can lower blood cholesterol.

Researchers believe constituents of olive oil, such as oleic acid, vitamin E, flavonoids, squalene and polyphenols, may help protect against colon, breast and prostate cancer because flavonoids and polyphenols are antioxidants which help prevent cell damage from oxygen containing chemicals called free radicals.

The high concentration of monounsaturated fats also has a positive impact on the prevention of breast cancer. A recent study showing that olive oil consumption could reduce the risk of cancer by up to 45 percent confirms prior studies indicating that the incidence of breast cancer among women who consumed olive oil was lower than that among women who did not.

For men, olive oil may contribute to a healthy prostate. Fish cooked in olive oil may be the answer for men concerned about prostate cancer. Research suggests that eating moderate amounts of oily fish might cut the risk of prostate cancer in half.

The study, published in The Lancet medical journal, found that Swedish men who ate fish fried in olive oil only occasionally or not at all were twice as likely to develop prostate cancer as those men who ate fish in moderate amounts or frequently.

A study by researchers at the University of Oxford shows olive oil is as effective as fresh fruit and vegetables in keeping colon cancer at bay. Dr. Michael Goldacre and a team of researchers at the Institute of Health Sciences compared cancer rates, diets and olive oil consumption in 28 countries including the United States, Brazil, Colombia, Canada and China. Countries with a diet high in meat and low in vegetables had the highest rates of the disease; olive oil was associated with a decreased risk of colon cancer.

The researchers suspect olive oil protects against colon cancer by influencing the metabolism of the gut.

To supplement your diet with olive oil, try softgel capsules in various formulas, such as those manufactured by OleoMed America, Inc., a company of the Pharm Group.

Medicaid committee to teleconference Sept. 21 meeting to be held in Frankfort

FRANKFORT— Lawmakers will hear from pharmacists and others on Medicaid's escalating drug costs at a meeting that will be teleconferenced statewide from Frankfort next week.

The Kentucky Medicaid Managed Care Oversight Advisory Committee (MMC-OAC) is scheduled to meet at 10:30 a.m. on Friday, Sept. 21, in room 131 of the State Capitol Annex in Frankfort.

Thirteen sites, including the Capitol Annex, have been confirmed as hosts of the teleconference which is scheduled to begin at 11 a.m.

Scheduled teleconference sites are:

- Pikeville Methodist Hospital, medical library.
- Prestonsburg Highlands Regional Medical Center, conference rooms A and B.
- St. Claire Medical Center in Morehead, AHEC conference room.
- James B. Haggin Hospital, televideo.

- Hazard Appalachian Regional Medical Center, auditorium.

- Middlesboro ARH, hospital classroom.

- Harlan ARH, 6th floor VTEL room.

- Whitesburg ARH, Clinic conference room.

- Morgan County ARHC, administration conference room.

- Williamson ARH, administration conference room.

- University of Kentucky Medical Center Auditorium, HB 611.

- University of Louisville, room to be announced.

Medicaid providers, patients, patient advocates, pharmaceutical industry representatives, Medicaid directors and others will share their experience with Medicaid and its pharmacy benefit component. Medicaid information technology and KASPER II, a national standard for drug diversion and Medicaid fraud, are also expected to be discussed.

Testimony at the meeting on Medicaid pharmacy benefit management is scheduled to include presentations by First Health Services Corporation representatives and Medicaid directors from both New Hampshire and Vermont.

Also scheduled are presentations on pharmaceutical access and affordability, pharmacists' perspectives of the Medicaid drug program and Medicaid pharmaceutical use and spending.

Providers, Medicaid recipients and others interested in the Medicaid program are also encouraged to speak at the meeting, said MMCOAC Co-Chairs Sen. Daniel Mongiardo, D-Hazard, and Rep. Paul Bather, D-Louisville. Providers' comments will help the committee determine which services are most useful in managing high-cost conditions, while patients' comments will help the committee learn what benefits are most helpful.

Medicaid pharmacy costs are skyrocketing. Pharmacy expenditures for Kentucky Medicaid recipients totaled $433 million in fiscal year 2000. By the end of March, fiscal year 2001 pharmacy expenditures had already reached $413 million.

The committee is compiling research from its meetings into a list of recommended legislation that may be considered by the 2002 General Assembly.

The committee is also working with the state Cabinet for Health Services, Cabinet for Families and Children, Department of Insurance, and Gov. Paul Patton's Executive Steering Committee on Medicaid to determine how Kentucky can improve its Medicaid service delivery.

For more information, or to register to speak at the Sept. 21 meeting, contact the Legislative Research Commission's Health and Welfare staff at 502-564-8100, ext. 580.

Public health practice reference issued to health departments

FRANKFORT — The Cabinet for Health Services' Department for Public Health has developed the Public Health Practice Reference, a set of clinical and service guidelines for local health departments.

These guidelines are essentially "our guarantee" to the citizens of what will be provided at local health departments, according to Dr. Rice Leach, Commissioner of the Department for Public Health.

"This is the basis of our accountability," Leach said.

The reference is a list of basic guidelines for providing quality care. It is divided into topical sections such as "Prenatal," "Adult Preventive Guidelines," and "Diabetes" for easy use. Each section includes a description of history, assessment, management and referral activities.

For example, the reference includes a list of what a local health department would do for a diabetes screening visit — such things as checking for relatives with diabetes as well as the patient's blood pressure and weight, counseling to be given and when to refer to a physician.

"This reference manual has been and continues to be a service tool for all 120 counties in Kentucky," said James R. Ratliff, director of the Gateway District Health Department and president of the Kentucky Health Department Association. "Each and every day public health departments across Kentucky quietly deliver needed services such as, health education, well baby exams, immunizations, school health services, nutrition services, family planning services, school inspections and onsite sewage disposal. This manual provides consistency and direction for health departments to achieve better outcomes for all Kentuckians."

Sharon Stumbo, deputy commissioner, Sarah Wilding, chief nurse and staff from the department as well as local health departments developed the reference. This group will recommend changes and updates in the reference and follow a defined process for dissemination of new information so that guidelines are consistent statewide.

The reference is being sent out to local departments on computer discs, making it easy to find topics. Future plans include putting the Public Health Practice Reference on the internet.

THINKING ABOUT BEING A MOM? DON'T FORGET TO FLOSS

Pikeville—If you are considering pregnancy, you should know that in addition to taking your vitamins and eating healthy foods, now is the time to step up your oral hygiene routine. Expectant mothers often experience increased gingivitis or pregnancy gingivitis beginning in the second or third month of pregnancy that increases in severity throughout the eighth month. In addition to the oral consequences, periodontal disease during pregnancy has been linked to an increased risk of giving birth to a premature and underweight baby.

An increase in estrogen and progesterone levels during pregnancy causes the gums to react differently to the bacteria in plaque and may cause swelling, bleeding or redness or tenderness in the gum tissue. "About half of women experience pregnancy gingivitis. However, women with no gingivitis prior to pregnancy are unlikely to experience pregnancy gingivitis," said Terry Wright, D.M.D., a local periodontist and member of the American Academy of Periodontology. "As many people are unaware of the status of their periodontal health, a visit to a dentist or periodontist for a periodontal evaluation before getting pregnant is a good idea."

Alterations in psychology and behavior during pregnancy tend to make some women pay less attention to personal care. However, if women actually make an effort to pay increased attention to oral hygiene during pregnancy, it can help minimize the effects of hormonal changes in the mouth, said Wright. In addition, it is important to continue with your regular dental cleanings and checkups to avoid periodontal infection.

Women who use oral contraceptives may be susceptible to the same oral health conditions that affect pregnant women. They may experience red, bleeding and swollen gums. And, women who use oral contraceptives should know that taking drugs sometimes used to help treat periodontal disease, such as antibiotics, may lessen the effect of an oral contraceptive. Always tell your dental professionals about any prescriptions that you are taking.

For more information, about periodontal disease, contact Dr. Terry Wright, D.M.D., (606) 437-1942, or 1-800-354-4973, or visit the American Academy of Periodontology's web site at www.perio.org.

Cawood Ledford ... yes, it was goood!

by BOB WATKINS
TIMES COLUMNIST

Tribute to a one-name guy. Testimonials to Cawood Ledford, some eloquent, flowed like rich Kentucky bourbon whiskey last week after The Voice left here to, in the words of one e-mail pal, "go work another game or two with Adolph (Rupp)."

Elegant Cawood left us at the mercy of Vitale screechings and other broadcast prima donnas who believe loud hyperbole and yelling is cool.

Part of Cawood's mystique and allure was he didn't care about being cool or important. Recognitions and awards were nice, but "... soon as possible let's get back to Booger Hollow," (in Harlan County).

There will never be another like him protege and successor. Tom Leach said last week. A gracious assessment, and probably true, yet Cawood would be the first to say "never is a very long time," then politely dismiss such grand praise knowing the same eulogy was said over Claude Sullivan two generations of radio listeners ago when he succumbed to cancer too.

It is appropriate however to

Correction

It was reported in a Wednesday article that Prestonsburg receiver Nicholas Jamerson scored against Whitley County on a 36-yard touchdown reception. It should have been reported that Chris Jervis pulled in the touchdown reception. Chris Spriggs caught Prestonsburg's three other passes for a total of 34 yards, an average of 11.3 yards per catch. Jervis had the single catch for 36 yards and a score.

Blackcats turn focus to Whitesburg, district

by STEVE LeMASTER
SPORTS EDITOR

To say Prestonsburg rolled to a victory in the Reno's Bowl Friday night would be a good observation. The Blackcats cruised to a victory over their Ohio counterparts. In quite convincing fashion the Blackcats claimed a 35-point victory.

Prestonsburg (4-1) won the coin toss Friday night and opted to receive the football. It didn't take the host Blackcats all that long to score as senior tailback Matt Slone found the haven't had." The game began following a memorial ceremony to remember those who perished in the events of September 11.

"I am proud of our team, campus, and students for the way they have handled a very difficult week," said McCorkle. "It is tough to have a candlelight vigil one night and play with enthusiasm the next. I think we handled it (a tragic situation) with a lot of character."

The Skyhawks marched 73 yards on seven plays in the game's opening drive and never looked back. Fullback Arthur Bryant concluded the march with a 14-yard run. Brent Harris' first of seven extra points made the score 7-0 at the 12:16 mark of the first quarter.

After forcing a KWC punt, UT Martin took just five plays to move 60 yards for the second TD. Justin Wall broke loose for a 35-yard scoring run to make the score 14-0 at the 7:00 mark.

A KWC miscue led the Skyhawks third score. A bad center snap gave UTM possession at the Panthers' 8-yardline. However, the KWC held the Skyhawks forcing a 23-yard field goal by Harris which made the score 17-0 with 3:51 left in the opening quarter.

Damien Harris scored on a 49-yard run on the first play of the second quarter as the primary starters gave way to reserves. Freshman Kendrick Edwards scored on a 4-yard run after the first of Boyd's interceptions gave UTM the ball at the KWC 27-yardline.

UT Martin's Jeremy Anderson blocked a KWC punt through the end zone for a safety to make the score 33-0 at the 5:37 mark of the first half. The first half scoring closed after Boyd intercepted a Panther pass at the KWC 32-yardline. Backup quarterback Duane Corlett scored on a 10-yard run with 33 seconds left. The Skyhawks scored on their first possession of the second half following a 44-yard punt return by Trent Findley. Shane Williams, the third Skyhawks' quarterback, broke loose for a 37 yard run to make the score 47-0.

The Panthers fought to get in the scoring column with a pair of TD's. Pete Howard threw seven yards to Bobby Cordell to conclude an 80-yard drive. Shawn Payne's PAT made the score 47-7. The Panthers next scored on a 34-yard pass from Keith Nelson to Ryan Denton. The score was 47-14 with the 8:35 remaining in the game. The game's final score came with 3:35 remaining. Anderson scored on a 6-yard run.

UT Martin finished the game with 363 yards net rushing. The Skyhawks had 104 yards returned on their six interceptions. KWC (0-3) completed 19-41-6 passes for 208 yards. Joe Almony was the Panthers top receiver with five catches for 55 yards.

The Skyhawks will be off until Sept. 29 when the Ohio Valley Conference schedule begins with a home game against Eastern Kentucky. KWC plays at Cumberland (Tenn.) next Saturday.

Newton and including Larry Ivy, current University of Kentucky Athletic Director and Tom Jurich, University of Louisville Athletic Director, discussed amateur sports and gambling at the Fall Conference on Compulsive Gambling Issues presented by the Kentucky Council on Compulsive Gambling (KYCCG).

The panel, which also included Deana Garner, agent, gambling and amateurism representative, NCAA, will begin this morning at 10:15 a.m. at the Holiday Inn Hurstborne, Louisville. The panelists will discuss the need to educate student athletes about the consequences of gambling, including the loss of eligibility; the NCAA and member institutions' position on gambling; and what programs are available to assess for gambling problems and to provide counseling.

Additional presentations at the KYCCG Fall Conference on Compulsive Gambling issues included an all-day seminar Thursday led by Dr. Robert Ladouceur, University of Laval, Canada, one of the foremost researchers and academicians in the area of compulsive gambling. Dr. Eric Drogin, University of Louisville, will cover liability issues for gambling counselors in his presentation this morning.

The Fall Conference on Compulsive Gambling Issues is sponsored by The Kentucky Lottery, Caesars Riverboat Casino, The Kentucky Thoroughbred Association, the State of Kentucky Division of Substance Abuse, and Turfway Park.

Commodores down Bulldogs in first-ever soccer meeting

by TONY MCGUIRE
SPORTS WRITER

The Perry County Central Commodores and the Hazard Bulldogs have been rivals since the county consolidated seven years ago. They have done battle on every imaginable venue, basketball, baseball, football, volleyball, and tennis to name a few. This year the two schools added the soccer field to the list of battle grounds. Perry Central has entered its second year of competition, while Hazard is in their first year.

On Thursday, the two schools meet for their first soccer match up. The students involved have competed before, but on mixed teams in the Hazard/Perry youth soccer league. The Commodores' experience with high school soccer showed on this night as Perry Central came away with the 6-2 victory.

Perry Central opened the scoring with two consecutive goals by Joe Utt. The first came off a header on a corner kick by Mike Sturgill, and the second was another header on a pass by Jeremy Standafer. The goals gave the Commodores a 2 to 0 lead midway through the first half. Neither team scored throughout the remainder of the first period.

Hazard opened the scoring in the second half with a passing shot by Michael Hall. The goal cut the Commodores lead to 2-1, but the hopes of a tie was short lived as Perry Central went back on the attack. Colby Mullins put the lead back at two with a shot straight up the middle that made it past the Bulldogs goalie. Adam Fields netted the next goal by weaving his way through the Hazard defense to take on the goalie one on one. The goal gave the Commodores a 4-1 lead.

The Bulldogs were able to take advantage of a little of confusion in the Perry Central back field which left Derrick Lewis alone on the left side. By the time the Commodore defense had made their adjustment Lewis had already let go with a long shot out of the corner. The shot found its target in the top left hand corner of the net, cutting the lead to 4-2.

The duo of Adam Fields and Colby Mullins teamed up for another set of goals later in the period. Fields goals was an excellent one on one shot that got past Hazard's goalie Trey Jolly. Mullins got his second score when a block shot rebounded into his area and he promptly kicked it back into the net. The goal was the final score of the evening as the Commodores came away with the 6-2 win.

Legends named SAL champs

TIMES STAFF REPORT

ASHEVILLE, N.C. - The South Atlantic League has announced that the remainder of the Championship Series between Lexington and Asheville has been terminated. The League also announced that the Lexington Legends would be recognized as the 2001 Champions. Lexington was leading the series 2-0 when the suspension of the series occurred.

All parties involved, the Lexington Legends, the Asheville Tourists, the Houston Astros and the Colorado Rockies have agreed to cancel the remainder of the series out of respect for the tragic events that occurred on September 11.

"We understand that due to the extraordinary circumstances of tragedy in our nation, the South Atlantic League Championship Series has been terminated with the Lexington Legends being declared the champions" said Alan Stein, the President of the Lexington Legends. "While we had hoped to complete the contest on the field, we certainly agree that this is a time for reflection and sharing our prayers with those families who have been so terribly affected by the events of September 11."

Lexington finished the season with a 96 and 48 record, the best in all of Minor League Baseball. The Legends played 6 games against Asheville winning 5. Lexington won 3-of-4 during the regular season in Asheville.

Football played as usually in Martin, Tenn.

TIMES STAFF REPORT

MARTIN, Tenn. — Football was played as scheduled in Martin, Tennessee, Thursday night as the UT-Martin Skyhawks scored a 40-point win over Owensboro's Kentucky Wesleyan College. The Panthers almost never had a chance once the game got started.

Tennessee-Martin scored on its first five possessions and was able to coast to a 54-14 college football victory over visiting Kentucky Wesleyan Thursday night.

The Skyhawks led 40-0 at halftime and reserves dominated play in the second half for UT Martin which picked up its first victory of the season. A total of 12 different running backs carried the football and seven Skyhawks scored touchdowns.

The Skyhawk defense came up with six pass interceptions, two shy of the school record. Junior defensive back Perez Boyd had three of the pickoffs, one short of tying the individual school record.

"It was a great win for the fact that we got to play everybody," said UT Martin head coach Sam McCorkle. "Our players had much needed fun on the field that they

Vote on Division I amateurism deregulation

SPECIAL TO THE TIMES

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. — At its September 7 meeting, the NCAA Division I Academics/Eligibility/Compliance Cabinet voted to ask the Division I Management Council to table the pre-enrollment amateurism deregulation proposals scheduled for consideration at the Council's October meeting.

The recommendation is the result of the Division I Board of Directors' request that the Cabinet's Agents and Amateurism Subcommittee present the proposals in a set of alternative packages to the membership. All of the packages include the new organized competition rule (No. 99-106), as well as the proposals that allow prospects to enter the draft (No. 99-107), sign a contract (No. 99-108) and compete with professionals (No. 99-109). The alternative packages would also allow prospects to accept prize money (No. 99-110) or to accept prize money and accept a salary for athletics participation (No. 99-111).

The new timetable for consideration of the pre-enrollment proposals will likely move them forward following the February 2002 Cabinet meeting.

The AEC Cabinet also approved a recommendation from the Agents and Amateurism Subcommittee to support Proposal No. 01-87, which would allow a student-athlete in the sport of basketball to be drafted and have 30 days after the draft in which to declare his or her intention to resume intercollegiate competition.

Also accepted by the Cabinet was a recommendation from its Subcommittee on Student-Athlete Reinstatement to sponsor legislation modifying the definition of a professional team. Under the proposed language, a team would be considered professional if it provides any of its players more than actual and necessary expenses for participation on the team. The current legislation, according to the subcommittee, results in violations of amateurism status where leagues or teams receive funding from professional teams even when the league or team does not pay its players, and fails to result in violations where an amateur team provides pay to its players but doesn't receive funding from a professional team.

A companion proposal also supported by the cabinet would amend the amateurism rules to make an individual ineligible for intercollegiate competition in a sport only if the individual ever competed on a professional team. The new proposal removes language from the bylaw, requiring that the athlete "knew (or had reason to know) that the team was a professional team."

The Subcommittee on Recruiting reviewed a number of proposals supported by the Men's Basketball Issues Subcommittee regarding the summer recruiting process for men's basketball and either supported them or proposed amendments. Specifically, the subcommittee and Cabinet supported portions of Proposal No. 01-52 that would:

■ Permit evaluations of prospects during a 20 consecutive-day period in July.

■ Reduce from 50 to 40 the number of evaluation days during the academic year.

■ Restrict evaluations in April to those approved, sponsored or conducted by the applicable high-school or two-year college association, and that such evaluations at sites other than the prospect's school may occur only on weekends.

■ Eliminate evaluation opportunities at sites other than the prospect's school during the fall contact period.

■ Permit a prospect to place collect or toll-free calls to an institution at the conclusion of the prospect's sophomore year in high school.

■ Permit an institution to correspond with a prospect at the end of the prospect's sophomore year in high school.

Three parts of Proposal No. 01-52 were not supported by the Cabinet (on the recommendation of the recruiting subcommittee.) Specifically, the Cabinet recommended only one contact during a prospect's in the country, reaching over 8 million homes in a seven-state area. The FSNS was scheduled to kickoff yesterday as Tennessee Tech visited future OVC member Samford, Eastern Illinois, which earned an at-large berth to the I-AA playoffs last season and was ranked 17th in the final Top 25 polls, is featured the next two weeks with a contest at traditional power Eastern Kentucky on September 22 and a home game versus Tennessee Tech on September 29.

The FOX schedule continues on October 20 as Tech travels to EKU. The last three games between the Golden Eagles and Colonels have been decided by six points or less, with two of them going into overtime. The November 17 finale between Murray State and EIU showcases two of I-AA's top returning quarterbacks in Racers' sophomore Stewart Childress (2,928 yds, 20 TD's) and Panthers' junior Tony Romo (2,583 yds, 27 TD's).

Tennessee State will also make a pair of appearances on national cable network BET (Black Entertainment Television) this season. On September 15, the Tigers will play rival Jackson State in the Southern Heritage Classic in Memphis. BET will also air the Circle City Classic from Indianapolis on October 6 as TSU takes on Howard University.

Several other OVC games will be shown in local markets on a tape-delayed basis.

Cawood

say there will never be another broadcaster with the same feel-the-flow, ad-lib skill, charisma and voice quality stirred into a kind delicious narrative only Kentucky fans can truly understand.

Cawood was to his profession what Larry Bird was to his. A one-name guy who was unpretentious, a perfectionist, devoted, then honored, and finally revered. And still, each was more than willing to exit by the side door leaving the applause and autograph signings to others.

A classic "Cawood moment" was ironically his last. It happened March 28, 1992 at the end of the Kentucky-Duke NCAA tournament game in Philadelphia. A contest Boston columnist Bob Ryan christened "best college basketball game ever played." Fitting then, the best radio man would be on hand to report it.

Little more than a heartbeat was left when Grant Hill ran along the baseline, stopped and threw an uncontested strike to Christian Laettner. You know the rest. What is notable is Cawood's narration.

"Laettner's got it. He spins and lets it go. Gooooooood!" Vanilla. Absolute vanilla. Vintage Cawood.

Gooooood! How appropriate, one of the last official words from Cawood would be this one. No groan or doomsday drone for his Kentucky audience, no excuse either. Much as Walter Cronkite reported the John F. Kennedy tragedy, Cawood kept his poise, did not allow himself a lapse into emotional garble on the radio. He left the obvious pain to listeners and would deal with his own later in private. His inflection while delivering the word "... goooood!" could have let one believe this was the Duke radio network. Quiet handling of a classic finish to a marvelous game. CBS Sports still uses the video clip for its NCAA promotions. Let us hope hereafter they dub in Cawood's call.

On another level, as much as Laettner's basket was a dagger thrust into hearts of UK fans, Cawood's report was a delicious echo for a shot taken by every little kid in this Commonwealth who ever had a hoops dream playing in the backyard, doing his own broadcast as the clock wound down "... 3-2-1 and here's the shot. It's goooood!"

This was the linkage that bound Cawood to listeners across generations.

Time and again, season after season in horse racing, football or basketball, Cawood glued us to the radio with his mellow baritone. It wasn't only the voice or inflection although his was unique enough. It was that his vocal chords were attached to his heart ... and to those of his listeners as well.

And finally, a talent Cawood had that will stay with me always ... he never yelled. The most exciting moments in sports came his way, but Cawood did not let his excitement outdistance his rich baritone pipes.

Travel on, Cawood. It's been goooood!

UK lettermen unhappy with Larry Ivy

More than a few ex-University of Kentucky football players are unhappy with director of athletics Larry Ivy and the athletic board's decision to "name the football field after a basketball coach," one by telephone last week. "and C.M. Newton didn't even coach basketball at Kentucky. The field should have been named for Jerry Claiborne."

Ivy's decision to honor his old boss (self-serving?) wasn't the only decision that rankles many former players and alumni. "A lot of us are still upset that Ivy decided to pay (Hal) Mumme a million dollars. They already waste thousands of dollars in the athletics department over there."

According to one former player, Mumme's picture is on display in the K House, campus gathering place on football Saturdays. "It's hanging in the men's restroom," an ex-Wildcat said.

Strange that Ivy has not explained publicly to UK ticket buyers and alumni supporters why the rush to pay off Mumme before the NCAA issued its findings. One of those clearly indicates the ex-Kentucky coach committed a rules violation when he solicited money from booster clubs to pay one of his staffers.

Claude Bassett's confessed misdeeds and the head coach's ultimate responsibility for his department aside, common sense tells us a typical contract for well-compensated athletic coaches includes the proviso violation of NCAA rules that bring embarrassment and/or lost revenues to the program and university will result in immediate termination and forfeit further compensation.

Are we to accept that UK actually negotiated a long-term contract for six figures without such a mutual agreement?

Instead, Ivy moved to pay Mumme a million dollars and then managed to have the football field named in honor of the man who hired him.

Bits & People

■ Bob Redman has become the winningest coach in Jefferson County history. Before last week's game with Lexington Catholic, the Male High coach had 226 wins in 26 years. Overall, Redman and Belfry's Phillip Haywood are tied with 226 coaching wins, 10 behind Bell County's Dudley Hilton. The leader on Kentucky's active list is Bob Schneider of Newport CenCath with 246 in 36 years.

■ Two-time defending Class 3-A champion Boyle County pushed its streak of consecutive wins to 34. Coach Chuck Smith's Rebels are one behind Ashland Blazer's 35 in a row (1929-31) and within striking distance of Beechwood's 37 (1996-98) and Paris's 38 (1981-83).

Whatever happened to Herbie Phelps?

About dedicating the playing surface at UK's Commonwealth Stadium as C.M. Newton Field...

Jack Wingo, Franklin, Ky. writes: "Last Saturday at Commonwealth Stadium there was a lot for UK fans to endure. A four-touchdown loss to UoFL was not the worst thing. Coming off a 2-9 season was not the worst thing. Nor is the fact that the NCAA is sending the grim reaper toward UK again. The worst thing in my opinion was that the father of the Curry-Mumme Era, one Charles Martin Newton had what should have been Cawood Leford Field dedicated himself."

endzone on an 11-yard run with 8:35 left to play in the first quarter. Aaron Neeley added the extra-point boot and the Blackcats led 7-0. After setting the tone early on, Prestonsburg was able to roll to a 41-6 victory. Prestonsburg Coach John DeRossett was both pleased and impressed with how his offense and defense came out and played in the second hold game of the season, the last before opening district play against Whitesburg next Friday night in Letcher County.

"Defensively, I don't know what the stats will say, but I don't think they Portsmouth

East had over 50 yards of offense, said DeRossett. "Looking at them on field, they looked good, with the Wing-T, but I thought we defended it really well. Offensively we had some penalties early that set us back but the game could have been over at halftime I think that made the game harder on Portsmouth East. We got a lot of people in the second half and were able to play JV the whole second half."

Portsmouth East got their only score of the ballgame in the fourth and final quarter when sophomore Chris Stiltner found the endzone on a fourth and three situation from Prestonsburg's three-yard line. The touchdown score came with just 47.8 seconds left in the game.

Leading 7-0, Prestonsburg made Portsmouth East cough up the football on their second play of the game, Junior Rudy Pennington recovered the fumble and the Blackcats went back to work by scoring less than two minutes later when Slone crossed into the endzone for his second score of the night. This time from 10 yards out. Neeley added the extra-point kick and Prestonsburg led 14-0 with 6:45 remaining in the first period.

The Blackcats held a 14-0 advantage at the end of the first quarter. The hosts were able to go up by two more scores before the half.

Slone galloped 21 yards for his third score of the night with 6:15 left in the second quarter. Another Neeley kick made it 21-0 'Cats.

Mikeal Fannin put Prestonsburg up by four scores when he dove over several defending Tartans for the score.

The visiting Tartans never really made a significant threat to score in the first half.

All the Portsmouth East offense could manage in their first drive of the second half was four plays and out. prestonsburg made good on their first drive in the second half when with 8:52 remaining on a third quarter clock, junior quarterback Joey Willis found split end Chris Jervis for a 36-yard touchdown strike. Neeley missed his first PAT kick on the ensuing try.

Blackcat defense lovers had called for a defensive score all night long and they got it when sophomore Nicholas Jamerson returned an interception 70 yards (unofficially) for a score. Neeley put the kick through to give Prestonsburg a 41-0 cushion heading into the final 12 minutes.

A good crowd of Blackcat fans and supporters made their way out to Friday night's game.

"I'd like to thank all of the fans that came out tonight," said DeRossett at the conclusions of Friday night's bowl game.

The Prestonsburg JV is back in action Monday when they host Paintsville. Up next for the Blackcats is Whitesburg on the road Friday night.

"The pre-season is over now," said DeRossett, eluding to upcoming district play. "We want everybody to get out and follow us over to Whitesburg. It's time for us to really get focussed."

Andrew Burchett remains a capable unit of five.

"I thought our offensive line did a good job," concluded DeRossett. "It was a good team-effort."

CAPTAINS OF FRIDAY NIGHT'S GAME

Prestonsburg - Chris Jervis, Adam Vanhoose, Austin Clark, Aaron Neeley.

Portsmouth (Ohio) East - Derrick Tabor, Matt Meadows.

GAME NOTES

■ Prestonsburg sophomore Nicholas Jamerson had a pair of interceptions, including the one he returned for a touchdown.

■ Prestonsburg senior Tony White was named Defensive Player of the Game for the Blackcats. White's heroic Friday night included a fumble recovery. Fellow senior Matt Slone was named Offensive Player of the Game for Prestonsburg.

■ Coming off a game in which he led his team in tackles against Whitley County, Prestonsburg junior Rudy Pennington played an outstanding game which included a fumble recovery. Josh Pennington (brother), who sustained a setback injury against Corbin in a pre-season scrimmage, also got in the defensive line Friday night, along with senior Adam Vanhoose.

■ Prestonsburg place-kicker Aaron Neeley was 4-of-5 on extra-point kick attempts.

junior year (rather than the maximum of two set forth in the proposal), recommended no calls to prospects until March of a prospect's junior year (rather than during the summer following a prospect's sophomore year as set forth in the proposal), and recommended providing paid official visits after January 1 during a prospect's junior year (rather than during any time of the prospect's junior year).

The Cabinet also supported Proposal No. 01-53 that would prohibit any contact during certified summer events between institutional personnel and prospects. However, the Cabinet did not support Proposal No. 01-55 that would permit the restricted coach in men's basketball to engage in off-campus evaluations.

In other action, the Cabinet agreed to sponsor legislation to eliminate the Initial-Eligibility Clearinghouse Committee. The work of that committee will be handled in joint meetings of the Cabinet's Subcommittee on Initial-Eligibility and the Division II Academic Requirements Committee.

Although no proposal was put forth, the initial- and continuing-eligibility subcommittees, meeting jointly, considered conditions under which graduation rates could be clarified by no longer counting transfers who leave in good academic standing against the school in which they originally enrolled and counting them in the graduation rates of the institution to which they transfer. The two subcommittees also continue to work on new academic eligibility models that, at a minimum, will result in graduation rates comparable to those yielded under current rules, and will minimize the disparate impact on minorities. The models are expected to be presented to the Division I Board of Directors in April 2002.

The Cabinet's next meeting is scheduled for February 20-22, 2002.

Martin heads MSU student government

Reprinted due to omission.

MOREHEAD — Brian S. Martin, a senior history and computer information systems major, is the new president of Morehead State University's Student Government Association (SGA). In this role, he will serve as student representative on the University's Board of Regents.

Brian S. Martin

Martin succeeds Rob Dickerson, a Fletcher, Ohio, graduate student who was elected to the SGA presidency this past spring. Dickerson accepted full-time employment, leaving him unable to fulfill his duties as president of the organization, and the presidency then moved to the vice-president.

Martin will be sworn in during a Board of Regent's meeting, scheduled for September 22. He will serve as a member of the group's Students Affairs and Student Life and External Relations committees.

In the coming year, the new president plans to make improved community relations a priority. His goal is to create a better informed campus community.

Martin has been involved in the Student Government Association for several years. He has served as Congressman and has served two years as chair of the Campus Improvement Committee. He was named the 2000-01 Congressman of the Year.

During his involvement with MSU, Martin has been a member of the Residence Hall Association, serving as representative for Mignon Tower during his freshman year, and Cartmell Hall during his sophomore year.

He is also active in the Theta Chi social fraternity where he currently holds the office of secretary.

Martin's rise to the student government presidency marks a milestone for the university. In the past, there have been resignations among the elected student government officials, but this is the first time the leadership has not changed during the academic year.

Martin is the son of Jerry and Linda Martin, of Grethel.

Pikeville College students, faculty and staff gather around the flag to pray for the victims of Tuesday's terrorist attacks on the nation. The college held a special prayer service on campus Sept. 11 and administrators and faculty were available throughout the day to talk with students about the tragic events. The college will participate in a blood drive in the next few weeks.

the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. MSU President Ronald G. Eaglin ordered campus flags to half-staff and sent a campus-wide message to faculty, staff and students encouraging them to "reflect in this time of prayer and coming together. We must be mindful of those who have been hurt in this tragedy."

To keep abreast of the latest events, the University made news available at numerous locations on the campus, especially in the Adron Doran University Center where a large screen television occupied one end of the Crager Room.

Students sat quietly, working on homework, eating lunch and talking in hushed tones with friends as they kept their eyes glued to the screen.

Normal class schedules are being maintained but faculty members have been encouraged to let students express their feelings about what President Eaglin described as "our national trauma." Counselors also are available to help individuals cope with the enormity of the situation, said Madonna Weathers, director of student development.

A trio of education majors—Sarah Barnett, Flemingsburg junior; Jill Porter, Flemingsburg junior; and Bobbi Clark, Morehead graduate student—worked on an interactive bulletin board display for their Media Strategies class. They offered comments, most translating to "unbelievable," as they cut out the designs for their project. Clark noted that she had friends that lived near New York City.

Crystal Mobley, a Mt. Sterling junior, heard about the tragedy as she drove to class. "I am amazed," she said. "It's unreal; I am scared of what else is going to happen." She had kept up with the days' happenings by checking out the news between classes.

A Cincinnati junior majoring in advertising and public relations, Tiffany Hadley, watched the television screen as she ate lunch. For her, the day was even more unsettling. While attending her government class, she learned there had been a plane crash. After class, she called her mother only to learn that her father, a retired military man, had been summoned to Wright-

Patterson Air Force Base. Like everyone else, she watched the news with a solemn face.

Hadley relayed a conversation from someone who had been in Manhattan earlier in the day. "It was chaotic, like in the movies," she said. "It's overwhelming."

One student group, Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, has accepted the challenge to provide financial assistance for those in need. The men will be collecting money in the student center as well as locations around the city. Checks made payable to the American Red Cross may be mailed to UPO 1329, MSU, according to James Armstrong, Morehead sophomore and the fraternity's president. Additional information is available from Brooks Rexroat, Williamsburg, Ohio, senior and the public relations officer, by calling 783-4490 or from Armstrong at 783-3301.

In a recent column I provided some information about the proposed Medicare endorsed prescription drug discount card program and promised updates as they became available.

Unfortunately, on September 6, a federal court blocked President Bush's plan to offer the cards to seniors nationwide. It seems the judge found the Bush administration may not have had the authority to develop the program without approval from Congress.

Tom Scully, Administrator of Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services did say in a September 6 press release that "we received 28 applications for the program, offering significant discounts and pharmaceutical benefits." He also stated "the decision intensifies the need for Congress to act quickly on the President's proposals for Medicare reform, including a prescription drug benefit."

Hopefully, there will be some plan offered in the near future.

Q I have heard that recent legislation has clarified the meaning of the word 'homebound' for Medicare patients that are receiving Medicare coverage of home health services. Is this correct?

A Yes. The Benefits Improvement and Protection Act signed into law on December 21, 2000 does define the term 'homebound' more clearly for Medicare guidelines. To qualify for the Medicare home health benefit, a Medicare beneficiary has to be confined to the home, under the care of a doctor, and receiving services under a plan of care set up and reviewed often by the doctor. Before the new law, homebound meant you could leave the home infrequently for short periods of time. Absences from home did require extra effort and were mostly for medical visits. The new law amends the existing to clarify that regular absences from home to receive health care treatment in an adult day care center do not disqualify an individual from home health care. It also adds that absence from the home to attend religious services is deemed to be an absence of infrequent or short duration and does not disqualify the individual from home health care.

State budget director outlines budget cuts

The Office of State Budget Director announced, recently, the details of the budget cuts being made for fiscal year 2002 in response to continued slow economy and General Fund revenue growth.

The Consensus Forecast Group (CFG) officially revised the General Fund revenue estimate for FY02 June 14, 2001. The Executive Branch is statutorily required to take administrative actions to ensure a balanced budget whenever the Consensus Forecast Group officially revises downward revenue estimates. In July, Governor Patton announced the "framework" of the budget adjustments that would be made in light of the revised revenue estimate for FY02. Governor Patton emphasized that:

- Education would be exempt from any budget cuts;

- The Medicaid Benefits Program would be exempted from General Fund budget cuts;

- State employee, would continue to receive their five-percent salary increment in FY02, and efforts would be made to ensure that no layoffs occur;

- No capital constructions projects would be deferred or cancelled.

Governor Patton also emphasized that any budget reduction actions taken by the Administrator would adhere to the Budget Reduction Plan approved by the 2000 Session of the Kentucky General Assembly, and as outlined in House Bill 502, the Appropriations Bill. Governor Patton indicated that the first three steps outlined in the Appropriations Bill would result in no budget savings in FY02. The Governor indicated that steps four, five, and six in the Budget Reduction Plan involved the identification of excess unbudgeted Agency Restricted Funds; potential General Fund lapses in FY02; and, the use of up to fifty percent of the Budget Reserve Trust Fund. Governor Patton indicated that the implementation of these three steps would still leave the budget approximately $100 million short of being in balance, and that step seven in the Budget Reduction Plan authorized the Administration to take whatever steps were necessary to ensure the fiscal integrity of the budget process. In July, the Governor indicated that non-exempt areas from the cuts would, on average, need to take an approximate 3.27 percent cut. State Budget Director James Ramsey emphasized that these cuts would not be across the board cuts, but would be based on a detailed analysis of programs and priorities.

The announcement details the final adjustments being made in steps four, five, six of the Budget Reduction Plan and the details of the Cabinet Agency cuts necessary to ensure a balanced budget. Ramsey commented that while his office had hoped to identify the details of the cuts more quickly, the last two months have been spent working closely with Cabinet Secretaries and their budget staffs, and with other constituency groups to ensure that the final cuts made, achieved the goals outlined by Governor Patton and minimized programmatic impacts.

A sure-fire way to assure that a new business will not F-A-I-L

Fail is the one word that keeps owners of small businesses awake at night. Don't lose any more sleep: All you have to know is what the word really spells. That way you can avert what happens so often to small businesses at a stunning rate.

For example, according to the Small Business Administration, here was the picture in 1997. The good news: There were 1.7 million new businesses. Specifically, there were 885,416 new employer firms and 798,917 other new incorporations. The bad news: In that same period, there were 857,073 businesses that ended up in "termination" (went out of business), or about 86 percent; 53,826 in bankruptcy (went out owing money), or about 5 percent; and 83,384 in "failure" (went out writing off debt), or about 8 percent.

So what does F-A-I-L really spell? Here are the four key factors involved in small business survival. If you understand these, you will know how to put together a successful business plan.

"F," which stands for "financing." Here are the two sides of the coin: external financing, which is money borrowed from an outside entity, such as a bank; and internal financing, which is the owner's funds.

On external financing, you have to contend with interest payments, principal payments, and, usually, with collateral. Collateral is often in the form of stocks, bonds or home equity. Here your risk is significantly increased because of the lending institution's requirements. If you miss a loan interest or principal payment, it may put your loan in default. It all depends on the loan agreement you sign—so be careful.

Your internal financing should be cash, not personal debt. In this case, a lack of repayment will not throw a loan into default—it's your ex-money.

Regardless of your method of financing, you should always have a reserve you can draw on, whether it be a line of credit or the sale of a liquid asset, such as stocks or bonds.

"A," which stands for "attitude." There is no room for an 8-to-5 attitude; entrepreneurs must have a 24/7 view of the workweek. There is no place for a "It's not my fault" or "It can't be done" excuse. When the going gets tough, the entrepreneur gets going. You must be a leader. Leadership is required to drive the numbers, communicate and sell a compelling idea, and develop positive employee and customer relationships. Don't fool yourself—you must be genuinely optimistic and cooperative to succeed in business.

"I," which stands for "income." Here you need to know only three things: Cash flow, cash flow, cash flow. When looking at your financial projections, don't be overly optimistic in estimating sale quantities, or sales prices, and underestimating expenses.

In addition, customers generally don't pay on time, and vendors usually don't let you extend payments. Knowing this will help you develop realistic scenarios for forecasting revenue and expenses. Read on.

"L," which stands for lack of planning. Don't jump in. Just because you don't like your supervisor and want to be your own boss, this doesn't qualify you for entrepreneur status. You must have the skills, interests and discipline to take four key steps;

1. Create a daily operating plan. What are the working hours, will there be partners, will you incorporate, how many employees, who will serve on a board of directors?

2. Those are just a few questions that need to be answered. Many small business owners do not take the time to do in-depth planning.

3. There are encouraging signs. Universities are incorporating entrepreneurial courses in their curriculum. In fact, this fall we will teach a new course at the University of Kentucky called "Media Management and Entrepreneurship." We know that in the end these aspiring communication entrepreneurs will know how to spell success.

4. Develop a marketing and communication plan. How are you going to get the word out to potential customers? And what will that word say exactly. You may have a great idea, but if it doesn't get explained to your target community, you have nothing.

5. Take your exciting idea for a business and hone it against the rock of reality. Do the market research to see who has been in the same kind of business and would be your competitors. Be realistic about whether you have all the skills necessary to turn your idea into reality.

6. Run the numbers. We have talked about financing and cash flow. When you run the numbers, consider three scenarios: a "best case," "most likely case" and a "worst case." Reality generally falls between "most likely" and "worst."

7. Develop a marketing and communication plan. How are you going to get the word out to poten-

Tapp bill would promote biodiesel in Kentucky

FRANKFORT—A bill pre-filed for the 2002 Regular Session by State Representative Gary Tapp would require that the formula for all diesel fuel sold in the Commonwealth contain at least two percent biodiesel until 2007 when the requirement goes to 5 percent.

"Everyone wins with this bill, it provides a common sense way to meet environmental needs and promotes using soybean and other agricultural products as a fuel. Our farmers win, our truck industry wins, we all win," Tapp stated.

National demand for diesel fuel growing at incredible rates. As a result of the demand the Environmental Protection Agency has taken a close look at the regulation of diesel emissions and the environmental and industrial impact. As a result they have enacted tough standards that will take effect in 2006.

GEICO Gecko announces 15th annual National safety belt poster contest for kids

The GEICO Gecko, featured in the auto insurer's national marketing, announced today the company's 15th annual National Safety Belt Poster Contest for public and private school students. The contest is open to students ages 6-to-15, as of September 1, 2001, and will be judged in two age groups: 6-to-11, and 12-to-15. The Gecko is now GEICO's spokesperson for the company's safety belt messages to youngsters.

"Using safety belts improves your odds of surviving an auto accident," says the GEICO Gecko. "Through this contest, we help spread the safety belt message and save lives."

Last year, more than 1,200 students from across the country entered the contest to promote auto safety and win prizes of up to $500 for themselves and their schools.

The theme of the poster must convey the importance of using safety belts, and entries must be postmarked by January 11, 2002. Children of GEICO employees are not eligible to enter. Because GEICO wants students to focus on the importance of safety belt use in their posters, we will not consider entries in which the GEICO Gecko appears because it will distract from the overall safety message.

For each age group, entries within each of six geographical regions are judged against other posters from the same region. First-, second- and third-place prizes of $125, $75 and $50 are awarded in each region for each age group. From the regional first-place winners, one grand-prize winner is chosen for each age group. Those artists each receive an additional $375, and their schools receive $500 worth of art supplies.

The grand-prize winning posters will be reproduced and mailed to all schools of participating students and will be displayed in GEICO offices nationwide. Submitted posters will not be returned.

A complete set of rules and an entry form can be found on GEICO's home page; go to www.geico.com, then go to the "Information Center" link. Or call 1-800-824-5404, ext. 2413.

GEICO uses television, radio, print media and direct mail to attract customers to call its 1-800-841-3000 number, and keeps its rates low by dealing directly with the customer. GEICO offers sales and claim services 24 hours a day, seven days a week, and is the largest direct marketer of auto insurance. It insures more than 4.7 million policyholders and more than 7.2 million automobiles. For more information, go to www.geico.com.

uid fuel derived from a variety of sources, including soybean and vegetable oils, recycled cooking oil, tallow or animal fats. Straight biodiesel can be used as a substitute for straight petroleum oil in internal combustion diesel engines. According to experts, biodiesel can also be used as a heating oil.

Tapp pointed to studies that compared conventional diesel fuel to biodiesel. Those studies found that biodiesel is cleaner, has a more favorable odor and often ranks higher and provides a more versatile fuel.

Bench scale testing shows that adding one percent biodiesel can improve the lubrication capabilities of diesel fuel by 65 percent.

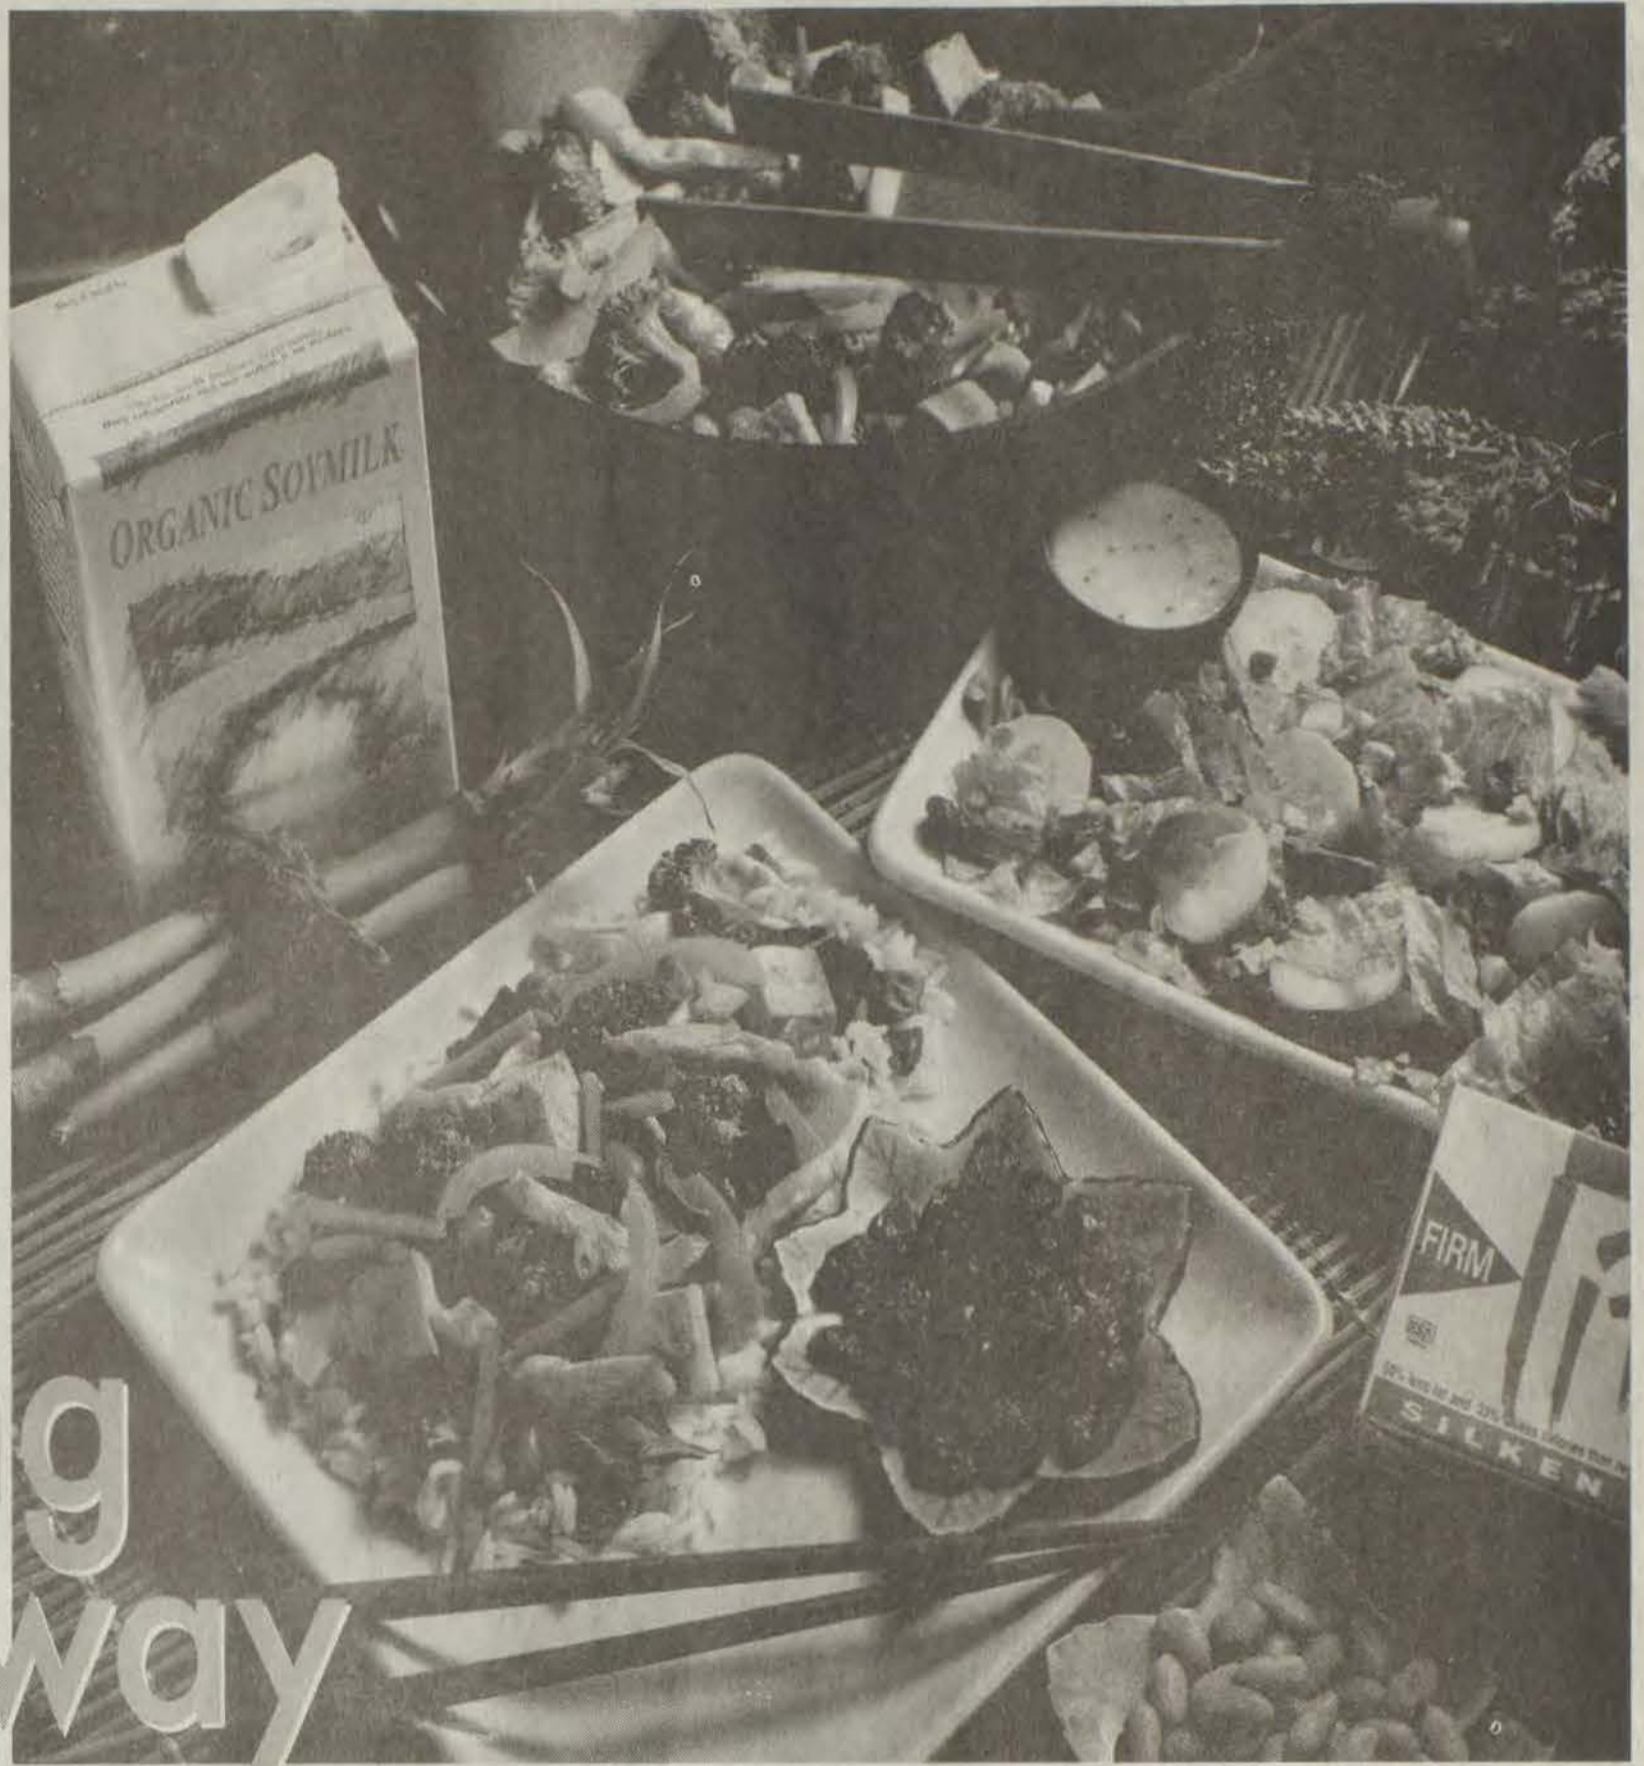

"The facts are in from the EPA, the American Society of Testing and Materials and organizations like the National Biodiesel Board. Biodiesel will make a difference," Tapp added.

Nutrition News

■ Tart cherries have significant levels of melatonin, a potent and beneficial antioxidant. That's one reason why a recent article stated: "The day when doctors say, 'Take 10 cherries and call me in the morning,' may not be far off."

■ Peanut butter is a low glycemic-index food. This type of food is recommended to help control diabetes and, along with a diet high in cereal fiber, may help reduce the risk of adult-onset diabetes in women, according to a Harvard School of Public Health study.

■ According to the Food and Drug Administration, 25 grams of soy a day are enough to reduce the risk of heart disease when part of a low-fat diet.

Royal Stir-Fry and Chinese Romaine Salad

to GOOD HEALTH

Maintaining good health is one of the most important things we can do for ourselves. We're fortunate today that so much is known about portion sizes, carbohydrate and fat intake, antioxidants and the array of essential vitamins and nutrients we all require to stay healthy. Sometimes eating right is as easy as preparing simple and satisfying meals that are rich in good-for-you ingredients.

Try tempting your family with an exotic stir-fry or sensational salad that showcases dried cherries, peanuts and soy, and you're already contributing to their health and well-being. Take a look at just those three ingredients—all nutritional powerhouses.

Tart cherries are rich in antioxidants, which help fight cancer and heart disease and may even relieve the pain of arthritis and headaches. This ruby-red fruit is naturally low in calories and sodium, contains no fat or cholesterol and has great eye-appeal for kids.

Peanuts are a good source of folate (B vitamin folic acid), which may help reduce the risk of some birth defects when women get sufficient amounts before conception and during the earliest weeks of pregnancy. In addition to folate, both peanuts and peanut butter are good sources of protein, vitamin E, niacin, phosphorus and magnesium.

Soy (in beverages or tofu) is a complete protein that actually helps lower cholesterol levels. And thanks to the revolutionary aseptic process and package, the same technology used for kids' drink boxes, you can keep additive- and preservative-free soy in its many forms on your cupboard shelf, unrefrigerated, for six months or more.

So whether you're making a main course, salad, between-meal snack or, yes, even dessert—let good health be your guide in the kitchen, and use ingredients packed with flavor and essential nutrients.

HERE IS A PLEASANT LITTLE GAME that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 5 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner and check one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

Is Tax Rebate Backfiring?

As the Internal Revenue Service continues to mail out advance payments on a credit for 2001 taxes, I've received a number of letters from readers who for one reason or another won't be receiving anything — and they're pretty unhappy about that. Anne P. of Franklin Square, N.Y., is a 77-year-old widow who doesn't feel it's fair that only those folks who paid taxes last year will receive the rebate. "(I) worked for 50 years and paid taxes for those years, (but I'm) on a limited income. I did not pay taxes in 2000, and was informed I will receive nothing ... Was all the surplus accumulated in the year 2000? I am livid ... and think this is unfair."

strive to boost wages and cut costs for those who need the assistance the most.

Well, that's my soapbox. Let me know if you agree.

Emeril LIVE

Heavily-battered Emeril may emerge as a TV sleeper hit

by JOHN CROOK

A bizarre little tempest in a teapot swept through an otherwise placid summer press tour of the nation's TV critics last July in California. The topic was Emeril, an NBC sitcom vehicle for superstar chef Emeril Lagasse that premieres Tuesday, Sept. 18. The show, from Designing Women creator-producer Linda Bloodworth-Thomson, features Lagasse as a TV superchef much like himself and a supporting cast that includes proven players such as Robert Urich and Lisa Ann Walter. It's neither the best nor the worst of the season's network newbies, yet some critics have reacted as if Emeril is a bigger threat to America than the West Nile virus. One gentleman even became so worked up that he asked NBCWest Coast president Scott Sassa to "explain how a show like Emeril gets as far as it has." As press conferences go, these Emeril moments were unusually surreal and bore the distinct whiff of writers desperately trying to drama after long days of business-as-usual sessions. And within a day or two, the conventional wisdom on Emeril began to change as cooler heads prevailed. The show is now considered by some to be a potential sleeper hit, a show that flies under the radar of TV critics but clicks with viewers.

That's a common phenomenon in network television. As recently as last year, the assembled critics quietly dismissed the CBS sitcom. Yes, Dear in a session that was, hilariously, the antithesis of the rancorous Emeril dispute. In the case of the CBS show, the critics turned the session into a friendly little chatfest with its cast members, asking them about virtually anything except their show itself, a turkey most writers agreed would be pulled before Thanksgiving. What the critics found tired and derivative, however, the nation's viewers found friendly and accessible — and Yes, Dear quickly emerged as one of the few new sitcom hits of the season. Back in the summer of 1987, ABC unveiled a family sitcom that was sweet enough to rot your brain, let alone your teeth. Just weeks before its premiere, the original actor cast in the leading role was replaced by a mid-string stand-up comic. Critics smelled blood in the water and predicted an instant flop, yet Full House subsequently enjoyed a healthy run until 1995 — and continues to be a pretty strong draw in syndication. NBC's Providence? Just kill me, kill me now, many critics wrote. CBS' Touched by an Angel?

Hell on Earth, the reviews said (although it bears mentioning here that the original Touched pilot was completely scrapped after new executive producer Martha Williamson protested that angels "couldn't be fairies flapping their wings and granting wishes," giving a vivid idea of what that show originally looked like). Part of the Emeril flap has less to do with the beleaguered Bloodworth-Lagasse sitcom than it does with a perception by critics that Sassa has been "dumbing down" NBC — home of such esteemed critical favorites as Cheers, Frasier, Hill Street Blues, Friends and many other smart hits — with shows such as Fear Factor and Spy TV, in an all-out bid for higher ratings among viewers 18-49. "When CBS was the Tiffany network in the early '60s, it ran Petticoat Junction, Green Acres and The Beverly Hillbillies," Sassa responds. "When NBC ran Hill Street Blues and St. Elsewhere, it also had ALF, it had a talking car (and) The A-Team. You have a mix of programming out there." As for Emeril itself, which is being retooled to de-emphasize the title character's life away from the workplace, NBC Entertainment President Jeff Zucker acknowledges that he is taking a calculated risk in green-lighting a show built around a personality who never has done any acting before. "Hey, I could have put in any of four other sitcoms in that time period that I know you would have hated," Zucker says quietly. "Is this a risk? Yes, but I think it may be worth it."

Emeril's fan base is huge. "Emeril is a doll," confirms Walter, who saw her own critically admired ABC sitcom, Life's Work, score a near-miss during the 1996-97 season. "Every time he makes a personal appearance anywhere, it's like a rock concert, and he'll bring all those people to the show. "He may not be a trained actor, but he's done, like, a thousand episodes of his TV show (on the Food Network), so he knows his way around a camera, and we're there to help him with the acting part. "Hey, I've been the underdog all my life, and I welcome it," Lagasse says. "When I opened my first restaurant, people were second-guessing and criticizing every decision I made. "All I know is, I've signed on with some really good, smart people here, and I'm going to do everything I can to justify their faith in me."

Jeff Zucker is giving me a wonderful opportunity, and I'd be nuts to say no to it."

The pack chasing Jeff Gordon in the Winston Cup standings may have to resort to smoke and mirrors at the Magic Mile. That's the moniker for New Hampshire International Speedway, the 1.1-mile oval that houses today's New Hampshire 300. It is the second NASCAR event at NHIS this season, following the July 22 New England 300, a race that saw pole-sitter Gordon finish second to Dale Jarrett. Since then, Gordon has taken complete control of the points race, prompting Ricky Rudd to say, "Gordon is so good right now that we are going to have to be flawless from here on out and hope for a little luck."

The 53rd Annual Primetime Emmy Awards

Just like last year, the featured race at the Emmys is the Jed and Tony Show. Last year, as you recall, The West Wing and The Sopranos went in tied with 18 nominations each, but the White House trounced the mob, taking home nine trophies. This year, The Sopranos leads with 22, followed by The West Wing with 18 again. Among comedies, Will & Grace leads the pack with 12 nominations, with Frasier and Sex and the City nipping at its heels with 11 and 10, respectively. Ellen DeGeneres hosts the festivities.

The death of Jackie Aprile sets a scramble for underworld power in motion in this repeat. When the dust settles, Junior (Dominic Chianese) is the one in command of the mob empire. How long he lasts in that position becomes a viable question, since Tony (James Gandolfini) isn't happy about the way in which the new ruler has decided to do business.

The formation of such objects and what can ultimately happen to them is also considered.

The title creatures — many of them computer-generated in this case — overrun the streets of Manhattan in this new suspense TV movie. Madchen Amick (Twin Peaks) co-stars as a PR executive determined to get relevant information out.

Most say the Baltimore

Ravens won the Super Bowl despite a sub-par quarterback. The challenge now is a repeat attempt without their star running back. The Ravens, at home tonight against the Minnesota Vikings, must do without Jamal Lewis, who tore a knee ligament in training camp. That means some how replacing the 1,364 rushing yards Lewis gained in his rookie season with a more pass oriented attack under new quarterback Elvis Grbac. Baltimore's defense is still the league's best, but it should face a stiff test vs. Daunte Culpepper, Randy Moss and the Vikings' offense.

Third Watch

As the drama's third season premieres, problems caused by the heat of a summer's day are compounded by a power outage that hits Manhattan in "Blackout." A store owner (Ranjit Chowdhry) struggles to protect his property, while Yokas and her husband (Molly Price, Chris Bauer) are stranded in a subway car. Also, Bosco (Jason Wiles) helps an injury victim.

pregnant, and that's what a particularly frantic Phoebe (Lisa Kudrow) believes.

8:30 p.m. NBC

Inside Schwartz

The life of an aspiring sportscaster (Breckin Meyer, Rat Race) plays out like an athletic event in the series premiere episode, "Pilot." The hero's personal life is often interrupted by referees—and actual sports stars—who use their own terminology to describe what's happening at any given moment in Adam Schwartz's personal life. Richard Kline (Three's Company) portrays his father.

9 p.m. A&E

One-on-One With David Frost

The British talk show personality doesn't do many of these recurring specials, so his subjects have to merit extensive profiling and candid conversation. Michael Douglas gets that treatment here, as Frost speaks with him about being the son of another famous actor (Kirk Douglas) and the husband of one of the world's most celebrated beauties (Catherine Zeta-Jones).

10 p.m. CBS

The Agency

The folks you'll meet in the "Pilot" of this new drama are concerned with national security, but the folks playing them may be concerned about their job security, given that they're up against the venerable ER. Ronny Cox leads the ensemble cast as Alex Pierce III, director of the Central Intelligence Agency. Rocky Carroll, Paige Turco, Gil Bellows, David Clennon and

Will Patton also star in the freshman series, which promises lots of suspense and plenty of soul-searching as the agents struggle to keep the nation safe and still do the right thing.

10 p.m. NBC

ER

Mary McDonnell (Dances With Wolves) and Michael Gross (Family Ties) begin recurring roles as Dr. Carter's (Noah Wyle) parents in this season premiere, where they are reunited at the funeral of a relative in "Four Corners." Dr. Greene (Anthony Edwards) is confronted with his actions at the end of last season while treating an injured talk show guest (Jessica Townsend).

8 p.m. HBO

Movie: The Perfect Storm

Billy Tyne (George Clooney), captain of the fishing boat Andrea Gail, hasn't had very good luck lately. But he is hoping the final run of the season will change that. It does; the haul is excellent. But to get it back to shore before it spoils, the crew must go directly through the mother of all storms. Mark Wahlberg, Michael Ironside, Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio and John C. Reilly also star in this fact-inspired 2000 adventure, whose incredible special effects more than make up for its weak character development.

8 p.m. NBC

Providence

A drive-by-shooting victim at the end of last season, Jim (Mike Farrell) struggles to recover in "Dad," the first episode of the drama's new season. He exhibits significant personality changes in the wake of being wounded, and Syd (Melina Kanakaredes) realizes at-home care isn't enough for his recovery. Joanie (Paula Cale) fervently disagrees.

8:30 p.m. CBS

Danny

The former narrator of The Wonder Years, Daniel Stern is both heard and seen in this new comedy series. He plays a newly divorced man struggling to get used to his single status, especially since his ex-

A DOG'S TALE

by SARA HOPSON BLAIR

Let me bring you up to speed.

Last week I wrote about the stray, sick puppy that wandered into our front yard and how my husband and I had been hesitant to take on the responsibility of a pet. In the meantime, my friend Cinder, and her daughter, Devon, had taken it upon themselves to have the pup treated by a vet so therefore we felt compelled to at least make the attempt to keep the dog. The following day, the dog disappeared, so here's the rest of the story.

Jean and I began looking furtively for the stray dog. She wasn't at any of the homes behind ours, and we couldn't see her anywhere along the main highway. It was as if she had vanished into thin air.

"She was just here," Jean commented. "I just saw her before I came back into the house."

After searching a while longer, we came back in and sat down just as the phone rang.

"Yes, this is Sara Blair," I replied. The caller on the line said that she was from the Country Hills Veterinary Clinic, and they were calling to see how my little pup was doing.

"It's funny you asked. We can't find her!" I announced.

That's when the caller informed me that my neighbor, Etta Lou Cantrell, had brought the puppy back to their office. "We thought it was strange because we had seen this same puppy yesterday," the lady said.

I thanked the caller and told her that someone would be there to pick the puppy up later.

"Where was she?" Jean asked.

"My neighbor took her back to the vet clinic," I said as I hung up the phone.

Jean laughed and said, "Surie, that little thing's been to the doctor more than you have, and you've had cancer."

"Yeah, right," I laughed.

That afternoon I called my friend Katie and asked her if her daughter Amy could pick the pup up for me. "She's the cutest thing, Katie," I told her. "And she needs a good home."

"You're not getting Amy to take another dog into this house," Katie argued. "We've got more animals than we can feed now. Don't even mention it to her."

After I explained that I didn't have a way to get the puppy home, Katie agreed to go with Amy to get the pup just to make sure I didn't coerce Amy into taking the puppy home anyway. When they brought the puppy back, Amy doctored her torn ear, pulled off ticks, and played with her for a while. We then put her back on the front porch while we all went back inside.

"Why don't you let me bathe the puppy," Amy stated.

"Oh, you've already done enough," I assured her.

"No, I'd like to do it," she insisted.

"Okay," I relented. "I'll go get her for you."

When I went outside to get the pup, she was gone. I looked behind the house, up the hollow, and on the highway. We'd only been in the house a few minutes so I knew she couldn't have gone far. After a thorough search, I thought about calling the vet again when I heard Amy's voice.

"She's all the way to the top of the hill beside the highway!" Amy yelled. "I'll get her. And when I bring her back you have to keep her in the house because the flies will bother her wound."

By this time, I was starting to wonder whether or not we were really supposed to have the pup. Was it an omen that she showed up on our doorstep, or did the little thing just wander in and decide it didn't want to stay?

Ronnie and I then started doing all the things people do with pets and proceeded to spoil her rotten. We bought her a bed, toys, a water and food feeder, and lots of doggie treats. We even made her a new home on the screened-in back porch, but we soon learned that she liked OUR house and OUR toys better than hers.

"Have you seen my house slippers?" Ronnie asked one morning.

"Yeah, they're in the hallway," I answered.

"What are they doing in the hallway?" he asked.

"That's where the puppy put them," I replied.

I truly wish I could repeat what Ronnie said, but I wouldn't want anyone to get a jaded opinion of him. Just know that he talked to the puppy like you would a dog. Needless to say, the puppy took little notice of Ronnie's remarks because Ronnie's house shoes no longer remotely resemble shoes at all. Also, strewn along our cluttered hall and stairway is torn newspaper, an old pair of pantyhose, an empty tin of Skoal she found outside on the road, 10 rawhide chews, the top from a can of hairspray, a shredded hand puppet, a piece of telephone wire, and a plastic coke bottle.

The puppy now has a name, Jeni, and according to my veterinarian cousin, Jan M. Ball, it is no longer a stray. She told me that one time a man brought his dog in to be spayed and asked how much it would cost. When Jan told him the price, he replied, "But it's just a stray!" Jan asked, "Does it have a name?" When he replied that it did, Jan remarked, "Then it's not a stray."

As I type, Jeni is laying at my feet - chewing on the computer cord.

World rhythms welcomes Chinese Dance Company

The Kentucky Center for the Arts announces the appearance of Lily Cai Chinese Dance Company to the World Rhythms Series in the Brown Theatre, Friday, October 26, at 8 p.m., with a student matinee at 10 a.m. The student matinee is an interactive presentation, with study guides available, designed to offer children an understanding of the depth and breadth of the world's performing arts.

Based in San Francisco, the Lily Cai Chinese Dance Company melds ancient Chinese forms with modern dance in an artistic and innovative marriage of styles, set to both authentic and original music. Under the leadership of Cai, a former principal dancer with the Shanghai Opera House, this Isadora Duncan award-winning company has performed for both the United Nations' 50th Anniversary Celebration, and opened for the Grateful Dead.

The company also features Ruth Chen, a 1988 graduate of the KCA's Governor's School for the Arts program. Chen is thrilled to be coming back to Louisville, she says, "returning to 'my hometown' to share the mysterious beauty and elegance of Chinese Dance."

Single tickets are $15. Tickets can be purchased at the Kentucky Center for the Arts Box Office, or charge by phone at (502) 584-7777 or 1-800-775-7777, or visit the web at www.kentuckycenter.org. Tickets are also available by calling Ticketmaster at (502) 361-3100, at www.ticketmaster.com or at any Ticketmaster outlet. In addition, group discounts of 20 percent are available by calling Kristen Hughes at (502) 562-0152. Student matinee tickets are $5, and reservations can be made by calling Jennifer Webb at (502) 562-0151. (One chaperone can attend free for every 10 student tickets purchased.)

Critter Corner...

by DR. CAROL COMBS-MORRIS

Almost everyone has heard the term "Red Mange", and most people know that it is a very bad skin disease of dogs, but unless they have had a dog affected by this condition, nearly no one knows exactly what it is.

"Red Mange" is a slang term for Demodex; an inflammatory skin condition caused by the presence of large numbers of a parasitic mite called Demodex canis. I don't really like to use the term "mange" with this disease, because it is too easily confused with Scabies, a skin disease caused by a totally different mite, Sarcoptes canis. I'll make comparisons between the two disorders throughout this article.

One of the first steps in diagnosing any skin disease in an animal is doing a skin scraping. This entails literally scraping across the surface of the skin with a dull scalpel blade, depositing the debris in a drop of oil on a microscope slide, and looking for the mites. Demodex mites have a very characteristic appearance - they look sort of like little "cigars with legs", so if you see them they are easy to identify. Trouble is, they live so deep in the skin, burrowed down into the hair follicles, that they can be hard to find. Sarcoptes mites are easier to find, since they live closer to the surface, and they look more like little fat bugs. (Actually there are several other mites that can cause skin disorders - parasitologists tell them apart by number and length of legs, shape of mouth parts and so on. Since they are all short, fat, and can be eliminated by the same type of chemical treatments, I tend to lump them all together.)

According to veterinary dermatologists, Demodex canis is a normal resident of dog skin, and causes no problems. I personally take this with a grain of salt, since they don't seem to show up as incidental findings in scrapings done for some other reason, but I'll defer to the experts on that one. In general, Demodex occurs in two forms, Localized and Generalized. When I was in school, the jury was still out as to whether these were two different diseases, or two manifestations of the same disorder. Apparently thinking now leans toward them being variations of the same disease, depending on the body's response to the presence of mites.

Localized Demodex is also called Juvenile-Onset Demodex, and both terms are descriptive. This form is seen in dogs less than a year old, and the lesions are generally confined to hairless patches on the head and face. (These hairless patches usually do not itch, as opposed to intense itchiness of Sarcoptes mange.) The appearance of localized Demodex can be very subtle, and owners may not even notice anything wrong. Up to 90% of these cases will disappear spontaneously by the time the pup reaches one year of age.

Current thinking says that pups acquire this form during the first week of life by direct contact with their affected mother. The mother dog may not have an obvious problem, but the stress of pregnancy and whelping can cause a suppressed case of generalized Demodex to become active. The disorder may gain a foothold on the pups, but as their immune systems mature, they get better at fighting it off. By adulthood they have often beaten the mites back into submission.

Localized Demodex in a young pup may be treated with a special type of ointment, or your vet may adopt a wait-and-see approach before any treatment is started. I waffle back and forth between the two options, depending on how many and how big the patches are, and the age of the puppy.

Generalized Demodex is the bad guy. These dogs may present almost completely hairless, with thickened, inflamed skin and a characteristic odor. Secondary bacterial infection of the damaged skin gives the disease its nickname of "Red Mange". This form can be extremely itchy, and the resultant scratching compounds the problem as the dog's nails drive the infection even deeper.

This form of the disease is also believed to be due to an inability of the dog's immune system to keep the mites at bay. This is a more serious concern in an adult dog, because it points to something worse than just an immature immune response.

There is believed to be an inherited immune deficiency in some dogs that makes them more prone to generalized Demodex. In others the immunity may not be up to par due to some source of stress, such as cancer or chronic malnutrition. Researchers really just don't know for sure. This theory makes sense, though, because we typically see generalized Demodex in two types of dogs: purebreds and strays that were subjected to lots of stress prior to their adoption.

An old superstition says that "red mange is in the blood" - as with many old sayings, it contains a grain of truth. The mites aren't actually in the blood, but the tendency toward the disorder is likely inherited.

For this reason, dogs with Demodex, especially the generalized form, should NOT be bred. Breeding dogs who have recovered from the localized form is controversial, due to the uncertainty whether any given case is truly a recovery or a temporary remission.

I always prefer to err on the side of spay/neuter, not being able to justify adding more animals, and potentially sick animals at that, to the already overcrowded pet population.

Although I'm not sure we can say with certainty that Demodex is every truly cured, it is certainly a treatable disease. Next time, we'll discuss some of those treatment options.

Kentucky Folklife Festival's rich, diverse musical heritage celebrated in CD

As visitors wander among the rich fare of the Kentucky Folklife Festival in Frankfort—dance, food, crafts, storytelling, demonstrations, celebrations, marble-playing, riverboat rides, etc.—there is the constant refrain of music.

From bluegrass to blues, from the sweet sound of the dulcimer to the plink of the banjo, and twang of a dobro, music has been a centerpiece of the festival since its inception in 1997. This year, to celebrate that musical heritage and the artists who stirred people to sing and dance, the Kentucky Historical Society is releasing "Live From the Old Capital Stage: Selections from the Kentucky Folklife Festival, Volume 1."

The 18-song CD, which goes on sale officially September 21, features performances digitally recorded between 1998 and 2000, on the Old Capitol Stage in Frankfort. All of the traditional performers brought to the festival stage their unique interpretation of the rich and varied musical history of Kentucky.

"The selections in this compilation showcase the depth and breadth of talent living in and hailing from the commonwealth," said Doug Boyd, oral history/Folklife archivist for the Kentucky Historical Society. "These are exciting performances by amazing artists," said Boyd, who worked with folklife specialist Brent Bjorkman to select and master the CD recording.

Artists featured on the CD include Kentucky dulcimer and singing legend Jean Ritchie; Homer Ledford and Cabin Creek; Lee Sexton; the Northern Kentucky Brotherhood; Tanita Gaines and her band, The Accused; Zoe Speaks; and thumb-picker and 2000 National Heritage Award winner, Edie Pennington.

Sam Bush, the extremely popular mandolin and fiddle master from western Kentucky, is also featured. Described as one of "acoustic music's brightest lights," he is perhaps best known as the leader of the late, yet wildly influential New Grass Revival.

The headliner for the 2001 Kentucky Folklife Festival, Bush made his recording debut in 1969 at 17, after holding title as the National Junior Fiddle Champion for three consecutive years. At 19, he founded New Grass Revival, a band that for almost 20 years challenged the hardcore notions of traditional bluegrass instruments by fusing styles that included gospel, rock, pop, reggae, jazz, and country and bluegrass.

"The music on this CD reflects a broad range of musical styles," said Boyd. "Ritchie and Davenport play very traditional Kentucky music, while the Northern Kentucky Brotherhood perform gospel a capella. Pennington plays his distinct 'Mulhensberg County sound, and Gaines and The Accused speed up the tempo with 'Proud Mary.'"

LEAD STORIES

■ Two women undergoing C-section births at Evanston (Ill.) Hospital on July 31 received the necrotizing fasciitis ("flesh-eating") bacteria when a surgeon passed gas in the operating room. The Chicago Tribune reported only that the bacteria were present in a surgeon's intestines and not in a throat culture, and probably entered the patients through the air, but Chicago's Channel 5 News' experts carried out the logic and named flatus as the culprit. (The two women, their babies, and the surgeon have been treated and are out of danger.)

■ Prosecutors and six Tampa-area juries have found Oscar Ray Bolin to be a vicious murderer, but in August, the state Supreme Court ruled, for the sixth time, that he's entitled to a new trial, that damaging testimony from his ex-wife ought not to have been used against him. The court said Bolin had not waived his privilege not to have his wife's words used against him (even though he wrote police a six-page letter reading in part, "if there's anything that you really want to know about, then you'll halt (sic) to ask Cheryl Jo (the ex-wife), because she knew just about everything that I was ever a part of (and) she knew about all 3 of these homicide (sic) which I'm charged with"). (The wife died before the trials, but her videotaped interview was played in court.)

■ Several insurance companies in France have begun offering policies to compensate parents of kids who get bullied in the schoolyard, according to an August Associated Press report. No company yet covers stolen lunch money, but eyeglasses that get slapped off a kid's face and trendy designer clothes that inspire muggings are covered.

One Born Every Minute

■ Recent Scams: Two inmates at Cook County (Ill.) jail managed to swindle as many as 12 people ($9,000 from one woman) by calling them at random, collect (even though a message broke in automatically every 60 seconds identifying the call as coming from jail), and promising to cleanse the callees' nonexistent criminal records for a fee. (The men were indicted in July.) And a former Atlantic City, N.J., man sued boardwalk fortune-teller Sole Mio Balaam Nicola after he had given her $200,000 over a 13-year period, closed his real-estate business, left his wife and moved from the area, all in order to comply with various curse-avoidance behaviors she sold him. (The lawsuit was settled in May.)

Not My Fault

■ In June in Seattle, federal judge Marsha J. Pechman reinstated sexual-assault convict William

Bergen Greene's main defense (which had been rejected by a Washington state judge): that he did not attack his female mental health counselor in 1994 but rather one of his other personalities (a 4-year-old boy, "Tyronne") did. Judge Pechman said the trial judge was insufficiently respectful of the science of multiple-personality disorders, and she was persuaded to that opinion by Greene, himself, who argued his own appeal.

■ High Court Judge Griffith Williams ruled in July that Christina Coles, 21, of Kent, England, was entitled to compensation (amount to be determined) to help raise her daughter Rebecca, now 3, to be paid by the driver of a car that hit Coles' car in 1995. Coles apparently demonstrated that Rebecca would never have been born except that the collision caused Coles a memory loss, which contributed to why Coles forgot to take her birth-control pills. Furthermore, Judge Williams issued the ruling even though he found that Coles was 75 percent at fault for the original collision.

■ In June, a jury in Broward County, Fla., found that a 28-year-old man who was speeding and whose blood-alcohol reading was twice the presumed-impaired limit was nonetheless only 10 percent responsible for the single-car accident that killed him. The man's car ran off an access ramp on Florida's Turnpike and smashed into a metal pole because, the jury determined, the 10-inch drop-off on the left lane caused the car to swerve (which was 45 percent each the fault of the state and the construction company). (The amount of damages due his family were to be determined later.)

I Don't Think So

■ Actor Bethany Halliday filed a lawsuit in May against the British opera company D'Oyly Carte because it allegedly pulled back an offer it had made to her earlier to play a blushing teen-age virgin in "The Pirates of Penzance." D'Oyly Carte said that whatever interest it had in Halliday at one time no longer existed when she showed up pregnant and would be three months from delivery when the show opened. (The character she was to play is so sheltered that she screams in fright every time she sees a man.)

■ The Arizona Fish and Game Commission told new resident Wallace Burford in June that they were declining his formal request to compensate him $328.21 because one of the state's 250,000 wild coyotes had eaten his cat. Burford's suggestion was also rejected: that the commission feed wild coyotes so they aren't so hungry for cats all the time.

People With Issues

■ Stephen T. Harris, 39, was arrested in July and charged with public indecency for apparently deliberately (according to the surveillance camera at Lowes Home Improvement in Plainville, Conn.) unzipping his pants and slightly wetting the back of the pants leg of a man who was shopping at the store. After doing it once and not being noticed by the man, Harris apparently returned and did it twice more. No motive was given in the police report, nor was there evidence the men knew each other.

Least Competent Criminals

■ Trevor Blair Roszell, 35, pleaded guilty in Edmonton, Alberta, in August to impersonating a police officer. The person he had tried to impress with several items of police paraphernalia was, it turned out, herself an undercover officer who was at the time portraying a prostitute. Furthermore, "Officer" Roszell then tried to convince the woman to give him a freebie since he, too, was on the job.

Update

■ Earlier this year, News of the Weird reported the astounding "fact" that, according to federal lawsuits filed in San Francisco, at least three business executives (of the 88 victims) in the Alaska Air 261 crash in January 2000 had secret mistresses in rural Mexico or Guatemala, with whom they had fathered children (and whose "great aunts" or other distant relatives had filed wrongful-death lawsuits against Alaska Air). However, in court-ordered mediation in July, Miami lawyers Edgar Miller and David Russell were ordered to pay $225,000 to the estate of one of the executives because a judge found the San Francisco claims to be bogus. Miller and Russell claim they were duped by the "relatives," but the mediating judge said they played a larger role.

Also, in the Last Month ...

■ The Athens, Greece, daily newspaper Adesmeytos, noting that so many people had left town for a national holiday, reported to readers that there was absolutely no news worthy of putting on the front page of its Aug. 13 edition. High school physics teacher Jim Schmitt is undergoing rabies vaccination after a bat flew into his mouth briefly during an early-morning run on Aug. 23 (Eau Claire, Wis.).

■ A California prisoner on a highway work detail was using a Port-a-Potty (on wheels) when a truck driver inadvertently drove off with it to another site and had pulled it along for a while at 40 mph before anyone heard the inmate's screams (Morro Bay, Calif.). ## Three artists on display at MSU

An exhibit of three contemporary artists' work will be on display in the main gallery of Morehead State University's Claypool-Young Art Building from now until September 21.

The artists, who use a diverse range of materials, include Dana Saulnier, assistant professor of art at Miami University in Ohio; John Keech, professor of art at Arkansas State University; and Priscilla Hollingsworth, associate professor of art at Augusta State University in Georgia.

A painter, Saulnier's work questions themes of the figure in traditional landscape painting. He has received seven awards for his art in the last three years.

An installation artist, Hollingsworth works primarily with ceramics. Her art represents forms found in nature, as well as people's habit of accumulating objects.

Keech also paints, but his medium is Plexiglas that is illuminated from behind. He will give a lecture about his artwork on Thursday, September 20, at 12:40 p.m., in 111 Claypool-Young Art Building. His talk is free and open to the public.

Serving the community as well as the University's service region, the gallery is open, Monday through Friday, 8 a.m.-4 p.m. There is no admission charge.

Additional information is available by calling Jennifer Reis, art gallery coordinator, at (606) 783-5446.

to Old Kentucky," by Bush; "The Road Rules," by Rob McNurlin and the Beatnik Cowboys; "That Home Far Away," by The Rigsby Boys; "The L&N Don't Stop Here Anymore," by Ritchie; "Take Me Up to Renfro Valley," by Dale Ann Bradley and Coon Creek; "Pretty Polly," by Carrie Norris; "Pike County Breakdown," by Ledford and Cabin Creek; and "Whiskey Before Breakfast," by The Reel World String Band.

"This is a phenomenal collection of music," said Bob Gates, director of the Kentucky Folklife Program. "These artists come to the festival to present their distinct musical styles, and their recorded performances reflect their passion for their music. But add to it that it was all recorded live on stage at the historic Old State Capitol during Folklife festivals in Frankfort, and it makes it much more special and significant."

Proceeds from the sale of the CD, which sells for $12, will help fund future Kentucky

Folklife Festivals. "Live From the Old Capitol Stage: Selections from the Kentucky Folklife Festival, Volume 1," is available in the Stewart Home School 1792 Store, in the Kentucky History Center, 100 W. Broadway, in historic downtown Frankfort. It will also be available during the Kentucky Folklife Festival in the festival store, and the main information tent. For more information, on purchasing the CD, call 502-564-1792, ext. 4462.

For more detailed information on artists appearing on the Volume 1 CD, visit the Kentucky Folklife Festival web site at www.kyfolklife.org. The Kentucky Folklife Festival highlights the continuing work of the Kentucky Folklife Program, an interagency program of the Kentucky Historical Society (www.kyhistory.org) and the Kentucky Arts Council (www.kyarts.org) in the Education, Arts & Humanities Cabinet. The program documents, conserves and promotes the state's living cultural heritage.
